The materiality and propriety of the complaint's several allegations are determined under Rule 12 (f) by the nature and character of plaintiff's action. In this case, plaintiff's complaint sets forth a private cause of action for the recovery of damages and injunctive relief arising out of an alleged conspiracy of the defendants violative of the Clayton Act, whereby the plaintiff partnership was directly injured in the operations of the Ritz Theatre in Greenville, South Carolina. Covering practically fifty pages, it assuredly is not a "short" statement of plaintiff's right of action. It includes four "counts", though counsel for plaintiff stated upon argument of this motion that to some extent at least these counts overlapped. It deals with every phase of the motion picture business and extends back to the birth of the industry. Many of the allegations refer to events that admittedly long antedated the period when the plaintiff partnership acquired the theatre, in the operation of which it claims its damages and right of action arose.

[Statutory Right of Action]

The right of action asserted by the plaintiff is statutory. This statutory authority restricts the right of action to violations of the anti-trust laws by the defendants, directly injuring the plaintiff. As the opinion in Westor Theatres v. Warner Bros. Pictures (D. C. N. J. 1941) 41 F. Supp. 757, 763, aptly states it, "An individual plaintiff is not entitled to sue by reason of violations resulting in injury to other persons or to the public." Similarly, in American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co. (C. C. A. N. Y. 1908) 66 F. 261, aff. 213 U. S. 347, 29 S. Ct. 511, 53 L. Ed. 826, the Court, in reviewing the complaint in a private suit under the Clayton Act, said: "It is then of first importance to ascertain what actions of the defendants have injured the plaintiff. If the complaint contains allegations of actions which have not had that effect, it is unnecessary to consider them, however much they may contravene the other provisions of the statute". Needless to add, there are no such limitations upon suits filed "for the common good" by the United States, which may seek to correct violations resulting in injury to any and all persons and to the public in general. Carbonic Gas Co. v. Pure Carbonic Co. (D. C. N. Y. 1933) 4 F. Supp. 992, 993.

Measured by these standards, it is obvious that many of the allegations of the complaint are subject to a motion to strike. In large part, it would seem that the complaint was prepared on the theory of a suit "for the common good", embracing the broad allegations that could only be appropriate to such an action, and but incidentally as a private suit limited to those acts for which direct injury accrued to the plaintiff. Necessarily, many allegations appropriate enough in the first type of action are immaterial in the latter type and, if included, may well be highly prejudicial to the defendants. See, Hennepin Theatre Corp. v. Paramount Pictures (D. C. Minn. 1941) 1 FRD 621.

We shall consider and determine separately the several allegations challenged by the motion.

1. In paragraphs 26 and 27 of the plaintiff's first count,[1] the plaintiff sets forth two anti-trust actions filed by the Government against certain of the defendants in this action, or their corporate predecessors, to enjoin the inclusion in their film license contracts of uniform compulsory arbitration and identical credit system provisions. According to the complaint itself, both such actions resulted in final decrees dated July 21, 1931, entered under the mandates issued pursuant to Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30 and United States v. First National Pictures, 282 U. S. 44. Since the entry of such decrees, the complaint itself alleges that these prohibited contract provisions have not been inserted in their film license contracts by the defendants. All of this occurred before the plaintiff claims in its complaint that it began to operate the Ritz Theatre. Patently, the plaintiff could not have been injured by two conspiracies effectively terminated by Court decree long before the plaintiff engaged in business.

This precise issue was presented in Quittner v. Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Assn. (D. C. N. Y. 1931) 50 F. (2d) 266. In that case, which was, also, a "private suit" under the antitrust laws, the plaintiff sought to allege the institution and determination of the same suits which are embraced in paragraphs 26 and 27 of the instant complaint. In striking such allegation, the Court said:

> "* * * In the allegations under attack in paragraphs seventeenth to twenty-third, inclusive, there is nothing to show that the rules and regulations of the uniform contract were in any way invoked against the plaintiffs: nor is there any allegations indicating that the plaintiffs suffered any injury or sustained any damage as the result of the adoption or use of the contract, or the rules and regulations involved in the Paramount and First National cases. In the absence of such allegations, these paragraphs have no proper place in the complaint. Keogh v. Chicago and N. W. R. Co., 260 U. S. 156, 164, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183; Locker v. American Tobacco Co. (C. C. A.) 218 F. 447, 448; Sullivan v. Associated Billposters & Distributors of U. S. (D. C.) 272 F. 323, 328; Jack v. Armour & Co. (C. C. A.) 291 F. 741; Hart v. B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange (C. C. A.) 12 F. (2d) 341, 345, 47 A. L. R. 775."

I am of opinion and so hold that these paragraphs set forth irrelevant matter which should be stricken from the complaint.

2. In paragraph 23 (b) and 39,[2] the plaintiff refers to alleged restraints in the production of motion pictures. The plaintiff, however, is engaged solely in the exhibition of motion pictures. It is impossible for me to see how various intercorporate loans made in connection with the production (as distinguished from the distribution or exhibition) of motion pictures, generally many years before the plaintiff began to operate the Ritz Theatre, "directly" injured the plaintiff. The motion to strike, directed at these allegations, is accordingly sustained. See, Sager Glove Corp. v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. (C. C. A. Ill. 1945) 149 F. (2d) 1, 3.

3. In paragraphs 45 (a), 45 (b), 47 (a) and 48 (a) of the first count,[3] the complaint includes allegations of anti-trust violations directed against the operations of the Majestic, Bijou and Ritz Theatres, prior to the time when the plaintiff allegedly took over the management of the Ritz Theatre. In paragraphs 38, 38 (h) and 40 of the first count, paragraph 2 (c) of the second count, paragraph 2 (b) (2) of the third count and paragraphs 2 (a) (2) and 2 (b) (1) of the fourth count,[4] the plaintiff refers to "other exhibitors" and their complaints against the defendants, or certain of them. All of these allegations are challenged by the motion to strike.

In my opinion the motion is well taken. The plaintiff is not concerned with the conduct of the defendants towards "other exhibitors" and this is especially true where such conduct preceded its entry into the film exhibition business, and would require the Court to "transform one lawsuit into many little unrelated lawsuits." Best Foods v. General Mills (D. C. Del. 1944), 3 FRD 459, 461; International Tag and Salesbook Co. v. Amer-

[1] Covered by Section 3, Count 1, of Defendants' motion to strike.

[2] Covered by Sections 1 and 7, Count 1 of Defendants' motion to strike.

[3] Covered by Sections 9, 10 and 11, Count 1, of Defendants' motion to strike.

[4] Covered by Sections 4, 5, 6, and 7, Count 1, Section 1, Count 2, Section 9, Count 3, and Sections 1 and 2, Count 4, of Defendants' motion to strike.

ican Salesbook Co. (D. C. N. Y. 1943), 6 FRD 45; Hughes Tool Co. v. Motion Picture Assn. (D. C. N. Y. 1947) unreported.

4. In paragraphs 23 (c) (1) to (14), inclusive, and 29 to 37, inclusive, of the first count,[5] the plaintiff sets forth various specifications of discriminations charged to have been employed by the defendants but not alleged to have been invoked against the plaintiff. In its succeeding thirty-eighth paragraph, the plaintiff restates such of those discriminations as it contends injured it in its business. As has already been pointed out the plaintiff is not concerned with discriminations which did not injure it. So far as the specific discriminations alleged in the thirty-eighth paragraph to have injured the plaintiff are included in paragraphs 29 to 37, the latter allegations are repetitive. The allegations of paragraphs 23 (c) (1) to (14), inclusive, and 29 to 37 are either irrelevant, as stating discriminations which were not employed against the plaintiff, or repetitive of the summarization in paragraph 38 of alleged discriminations asserted to have directly injured plaintiff. In either event the challenged paragraphs should be stricken. By such ruling, the plaintiff is in no way prejudiced, since paragraph 38 fully covers all matters on which it can found its action.

5. Paragraph 28 of the first count,[6] refers to intercorporate developments of the defendants which are unnecessary to plaintiff's cause of action. While I do not deem the inclusion of such paragraph as prejudicial to the defendants, I see no reason to retain it in the complaint when such retention may well confuse the jury. This paragraph will accordingly be stricken.

6. In paragraphs 43 of the first count and 2, 2 (c) (1), 2 (c) (2), 2 (c) (3), 2 (d), 2 (e), 2 (f) (1), 2 (f) (3) and 2 (g) of the third count,[7] the plaintiff refers, inter alia, to theatres in other cities, allegedly connected with the defendant Paramount Pictures and stated generally to be operated under common booking and buying agencies with those theatres operated in Greenville by interests identified with such defendant. In the absence of evidence of the geographical location and unitary business operations of all such theatres, it is not easy to determine the relevancy of these allegations, which are embraced in defendants' motion, simply on the face of the pleadings. Other allegations of the complaint are sufficiently broad for the plaintiff to offer evidence of this general character, if it chooses to do so, and this Court could then consider the relevancy of such evidence in the light of all the accompanying circumstances. But if such evidence should be deemed irrelevant on trial, these allegations in the complaint could have worked serious prejudice to the defendants. I can see no real harm accruing to plaintiff by striking these allegations but reserving a ruling on the propriety of evidence of this character until the actual trial. Assuredly, the allegations are evidentiary at best and would be open to attack on that ground. I shall, therefore, sustain the motion to strike these allegations but reserve the right to determine the relevancy of evidence along the lines of such allegations at the trial.

7. In paragraph 41 of count 1[8] the plaintiff describes an action filed by the United States against certain of the defendants which is reported in United States v. Paramount Pictures (D. C. N. Y. 1946) 66 F. Supp. 323. Since the filing of this complaint, however, the decree of the Expediting Court referred to in this paragraph has been reviewed by the Supreme Court which handed down an opinion on May 3, 1948. Patently, the plaintiff would wish to amend the paragraph even should the Court rule that this allegation is properly in the complaint. I am, therefore, striking this paragraph without prejudice to the right of the plaintiff hereafter to move to amend its complaint to set forth the present status of this suit. Until such motion is made, I shall reserve my decision upon the propriety of including in the complaint allegations with reference to this action.

For the reasons above set forth, it is hereby ORDERED that the defendants' motion to strike is granted.

Let the plaintiff file an amended complaint in conformity with this opinion and order, and the defendant shall have twenty days after the service of such amended complaint upon their counsel of record in this cause within which to answer or further plead in the cause.

---

[5] Covered by Sections 2 and 3, Count 1, of Defendants' motion to strike.

[6] Covered by Section 3, Count 1, of Defendants' motion to strike.

[7] Covered by Section 8, Count 1, and Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11 and 12, Count 3, of Defendants' motion to strike.

[8] Covered by Section 7, Count 1, of Defendants' motion to strike.

[¶ 62,283] American Linen Company, a corporation, et al. v. Los Angeles Towel Service Company, a California corporation, et al.

In the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles. No. 542586. July 21, 1948.

California Unfair Practices Act

Statutory Cause of Action—Exclusive Remedy—Clerk May Not Issue Subpoena Duces Tecum.—In an action instituted under the California Unfair Practices Act, in which it is charged that the defendant corporation is selling below cost in violation of the Act to the injury of plaintiff competitors, the defendant may not be compelled, under a subpoena duces tecum issued by the Clerk of the Court, to produce its books and papers as an aid in sustaining the charge. Where a statute creates a new right and provides a remedy for its enforcement, that remedy is exclusive. The statute expressly provides that the books and records of a party to the cause may be required to be produced, but does not provide for the issuance of a subpoena by the Clerk. Further, since the Act requires a court order for a mere inspection of documents, it would appear that nothing short of a court order would be sufficient to cause the production of books and records upon a hearing in court or the taking of a deposition. The Clerk, short of such an order, is without authority to issue a subpoena duces tecum.

See the California Unfair Practices Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8068.90.

This is an action instituted under the Unfair Practices Act against the defendant corporation by some of its competitors. The gist of the complaint is that the defendant is "selling below cost" in violation of the Act to the damage of the plaintiffs. The particular question here for decision is whether the defendant under a subpoena duces tecum issued by the Clerk of the Court may be compelled to produce its books and papers as an aid in sustaining the charge. The defendant declined to produce the documents called for by the subpoena upon the ground, among others, that no proper foundation therefor had been laid in the affidavit of the plaintiffs—the basis for the issuance of the subpoena. The objection, as it was phrased by the defendant, does not question the right of the Clerk to issue a subpoena duces tecum in an action based upon the Act. Instead, the contention is that the basic affidavit is not sufficiently specific and otherwise is inadequate under the provisions of C. C. P. § 1985. While, as indicated, the defendant by his objection does not raise the point that the Clerk was wholly without jurisdiction, if that be the fact, to issue a subpoena duces tecum in an Unfair Practice Act case, nevertheless, the Court may not order compliance with the subpoena if jurisdiction was lacking. As the Court is of the opinion that jurisdiction was lacking, it is unnecessary to discuss the details of defendant's objection as it was made.

Initially, it needs to be pointed out that the cause of action made the basis of this suit did not exist at common law. In that connection it is also necessary to recall that where as here a statute creates a new right or liability and additionally provides a remedy for its enforcement that remedy is exclusive. (People v. Graycroft, 2 Cal. 243; Globe Newspaper Co. v. Walker, 210 U. S. 356; 1 C. J. 989; 1 C. J. S. 974.) "The reason for the rule is that the statute, by providing a particular remedy, manifests an intention to prohibit other remedies, and the rule, therefore, rests upon a presumed statutory prohibition." (Dollar Sav. Bank v. U. S., 19 Wall (U. S.) 227, 239.) "Remedy" in the sense it is used in the principle stated may embrace all preliminary proceedings leading up to the rendition of the judgment, such, for instance, as who may be called as witnesses and the manner and method of summoning them; the manner and method of inspection and production of books and papers and other matters dealing with the production of evidence. (Redfern v. Redfern, 236 N. W. 399, 401, Iowa.) Three sections of the Act in question deal expressly with these topics. (§§ 17083, 17084 and 17085, Bus. and Prof. Code.) Section 17083 incorporates the provisions of Chapter 3 (§§ 2002-2056) of Title III, Part IV of the Code of Civil Procedure, but expressly expands § 2021 so as to include all witnesses and not merely the particular type of witness therein named. In addition, the section (17083) expressly provides that the books and records of a party to the cause, or of a witness therein, may be required to be produced at the trial or at the taking of a deposition. However, the section does not state whether the Court by its order or its Clerk through the issuance of a subpoena may cause the books and records to be produced. At all events, the section does not incorporate Chapter 2—wherein is found Code of Civil Procedure section 1985—the section under which the Clerk issued the subpoena duces tecum—as does the Act with respect to Chapter 3.

The next section of the statute (17084) provides that any party to the action may apply to have an inspection and a copy or permission to take a copy "of entries of accounts in any book, or of any documents, papers or memoranda in any such party's possession or under his control containing evidence relating to the merits . . ." But this may be achieved, by the terms of the section, only by an order upon an application to the court, upon notice. If then a mere inspection of documents cannot be had except by court order, it would seem apparent that nothing short of a court order would be sufficient to cause the production of books and records upon a hearing in court or upon the taking of a deposition. That this is the true construction of the language of the Act is implied by the next section of the Act (17085), which provides that if "it appears to the court that an extensive examination of books . . . records . . . is or may be material or relevant . . . the court may in its discretion, upon application . . . or upon its own motion order a reference in the manner and form provided in . . . the Civil Code of Procedure."

The foregoing sections of the Act seem to make it indubitably clear that the books and records of a party to an action under the Act may not be ordered produced, except on an order of court, and hence, that the Clerk, short of such an order, is without authority to do so notwithstanding the provisions of C. C. P. § 1985. In support of that contention based strictly on the terms of the Act and well-established principles of law, it is not amiss to observe that the terms of the Act are drastic and so quite necessarily the legislature felt that there should be a safeguard for innocent traders against any one of his competitors who might seek to use the Act as an instrumentality to personally profit from a disclosure of the details of his business, the names of his customers and other important business facts not otherwise available.

In coming to the conclusion reached, the Court is not unmindful of the fact that the California Act is the pattern almost in haec verba for the statutes of more than 44 states and that no decision so far has passed upon the question herein raised by the court on its own motion. Nevertheless, the law is clear and the mere fact that in this state, in case after case, C. C. P. § 1985 has been assumed to be applicable for the purpose of producing books and records is of no moment. The law is otherwise.

For the reasons stated the defendant rightly refused to produce its books and records. The citation is discharged.

[¶ 62,284] United States v. American Bosch Corporation, and Donald P. Hess.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 20-164. June 4, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Amended Final Judgment—Sales and Patent Agreements—Performance Enjoined.—An amended consent judgment entered against a manufacturer of fuel injection equipment, automotive electrical equipment and accessories, and magnetos for the operation of aircraft and other engines, cancels a sales agreement, a patent agreement, and two manufacturing agreements between defendant manufacturer and a German manufacturer. Defendant is directed to grant to any applicant unrestricted licenses to manufacture, use and sell certain patented products, without any conditions except that a reasonable and non-discriminatory royalty may be charged after the war. Defendant is enjoined from enforcing any general marketing agreement with the German manufacturer to effect the transfer of any patent rights, except with the approval of the Court, or from enforcing any individual agreement without filing a copy with the Attorney General.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1270.176, 1560.40.

For plaintiff: John F. Baecher, Acting Assistant Attorney General; Sigmund Timberg, Robert A. Nitschke, Special Assistants to the Attorney General; Maurice Silverman, Special Attorney; David L. Bazelon, Assistant Attorney General, Director, Office of Alien Property.

For defendants: Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine.

Amended Final Judgment

The complainant, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on December 29, 1942; the defendants having appeared and filed their answers to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; all parties hereto by their attorneys herein having severally consented to the entry of a final judgment herein on December 29, 1942, and to the entry of this amended final judgment, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by any party in respect of any such issue;

NOW, THEREFORE, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein; and upon consent of all parties hereto, it is hereby

ORDERED AND DECREED as follows:

I

That this Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all the parties hereto; that the petition states a cause of action against each of the defendants under the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies" and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and under Section 74 of the Act of August 27, 1894, entitled "An Act to Reduce Taxation to Provide Revenue for the Government and for other Purposes" and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

II

(Whenever an agreement is defined below the definition shall be taken to include all amendments, renewals or extensions of the particular agreement defined)

As used in this judgment the term:

A. "American Bosch" means American Bosch Corporation (formerly known as American Bosch Magneto Corporation and as the United American Bosch Corporation), a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York and having its principal place of business in Springfield, Massachusetts.

B. "Robert Bosch" means Robert Bosch, G. m. b. H. (formerly known as Robert Bosch Aktiengesellschaft), a corporation or association organized and existing under the laws of Germany and having its principal place of business in Suttgart, Germany.

C. "CAV-Limited" means CAV Limited, a corporation or association organized and existing under the laws of Great Britain and having its principal place of business in Acton, England, and its predecessor corporation, CAV-Bosch, Limited.

D. "Lavalette" means Ateliers de Construction Lavalette, S. A., a corporation or association organized and existing under the laws of France and having its principal place of business in Paris-Saint-Ouen-France.

E. American Bosch, Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited, and Lavalette, in each case includes its successors, subsidiaries, affiliates and assigns and its directors, officers, agents, and employees and all persons acting or claiming to act under, through, or for them, or any of them.

F. "Sales Agreement" means the agreement dated November 3, 1930, between Robert Bosch and American Bosch, a copy of which is attached hereto as "Exhibit 1".

G. "Bosch Patent Agreement" means the agreement dated May 22, 1931, between Robert Bosch and American Bosch, a copy of which is attached hereto as "Exhibit 2".

H. "Manufacturing Agreement No. 1" means the agreement dated January 1, 1934, between Robert Bosch and American Bosch, a copy of which is attached hereto as "Exhibit 3".

I. "Manufacturing Agreement No. 2" means the informal agreement, entered into in or about November 1939 between Robert Bosch and American Bosch, relating, among other things, to electric windshield wipers, generators and regulators.

J. "Necessary operative techniques" means the knowledge of all of the technical processes necessary to put into operation a patented process or to manufacture a patented product.

K. "Bosch products" means any and all devices and equipment for the feed, distribution and injection of fuel in connection with internal combustion engines, including fittings and accessories commonly called fuel injection equipment, automotive electrical equipment and accessories, magnetos for the operation of aircraft engines and other engines or any such product, by whomsoever manufactured or distributed.

III

The Sales Agreement, the Bosch Patent Agreement, Manufacturing Agreement No. 1, and Manufacturing Agreement No. 2, are hereby cancelled, and American Bosch and Donald P. Hess and all persons acting under, through or for any of them, are hereby individually enjoined and restrained from the further performance of any of their provisions, provided that this injunction against further performance of such agreements shall not affect rights of American Bosch to manufacture, use, or sell under any existing patent or patent application, manufacturing right, design, or necessary operative technique heretofore received from Robert Bosch, provided further that American Bosch and Donald P. Hess and all persons acting or claiming to act under, through, or for them or any of them be, and they hereby are, enjoined and restrained from enforcing or claiming as an exclusive right, whether as an exclusive right to territory, product, or otherwise, any such right heretofore received from Robert Bosch.

IV

Defendant American Bosch is hereby ordered and directed:

A. In connection with:

(1) All United States letters patent issued on or before March 6, 1946, and owned or controlled by it on that date;

(2) All applications for United States letters patent filed on or before March 6, 1946 and owned or controlled by it on that date and all patents issued pursuant to such applications; and to grant to any applicant therefor, absolutely unrestricted licenses or sub-licenses to manufacture, use, and sell without any conditions except that a reasonable and nondiscriminatory royalty may be charged. Where such royalty is charged provision may be made for the inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor who shall report to the licensor only the amount of royalty due and payable and no other information. A list of the patents and applications subject to this Section IV, including all divisions, continuances, renewals, reissues, and extensions thereof, is attached to this judgment as "Exhibit A".

(3) All divisions, continuances, renewals, reissues, or extentions of the patents and applications described in Clause (1) and in Clause (2),

B. To file with the Attorney General of the United States, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, copies of all applications for licenses under the terms of this judgment, immediately upon receipt thereof, and of all licenses issued, and to furnish the Attorney General of the United States, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, with full information as to the status of all negotiations between applicants and American Bosch with regard to the failure to grant a license or sub-license where an applition therefor has been pending for a 90-day period. In case of failure by American Bosch to agree with the applicant for a license as to any of the terms thereof, or in case of dispute between American Bosch and the Attorney General of the United States, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, with regard to whether or not the terms of a license are in accordance with the provisions of this judgment, American Bosch shall issue the license or sub-license applied for in a form approved by this Court.

C. To take such steps as may be necessary to list and keep current the patents and applications subject to this Section IV, including all divisions, continuances, renewals, reissues, and extensions thereof, with the United States Patent Office for inclusion in its "Register of Patents Available for Licensing or Sale".

V

A. Defendants American Bosch and Donald P. Hess, and all persons acting or claiming to act under, through, or for them, or any of them, be and they are hereby enjoined and restrained from:

(a) Entering into, carrying out, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, or enforcing, directly or indirectly, any combination, conspiracy, contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program, with Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited, Lavalette, or any other corporation, association, firm, or person engaged in the business of manufacturing Bosch products:

(1) to allocate or divide markets, customers, or fields of business;

(2) To refrain from production or distribution;

(3) To restrict or limit production or distribution;

(4) To limit, restrict, or prevent importation into or exportation from the United States, its territories or possessions;

(5) To exclude any manufacturer or distributor from any market or from any class of business or field of business;

(6) To fix, maintain or adhere to prices, terms or conditions for sales in the United States, its territories and possessions, or for imports therein to or for exports therefrom;

(7) To effect the transfer to or from third persons of any rights under patents, patent applications, or patents hereafter acquired, United States or foreign, of any necessary operative techniques, or of any manufacturing rights, designs, or know-how;

(b) Selling or otherwise distributing Bosch products through:

(1) Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited, Lavalette, or any other corporation, association, or person, which is engaged in the business of manufacturing Bosch products outside the United States, except that the defendants American Bosch and Donald P. Hess and all persons acting or claiming to act under, through, or for them, or any of them, may sell or otherwise distribute Bosch products through any corporation, association, or person engaged in the business of manufacturing such products outside the United States, other than Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited, and Lavalette, on a non-exclusive basis within the territory in which it manufactures such products (but any such excepted corporation, association, or person shall be considered a common distributor to which subparagraph (2) immediately following shall be applicable), or

(2) A common distributor, i.e., any corporation, association or person acting, with authority to act, or claiming to act for any corporation, association, or person referred to in subparagraph (1) above, except upon compliance with the following conditions:

(i) No common distributor may be made any defendant's exclusive distributor of Bosch products for any foreign territory;

(ii) No defendant may refuse to sell, on nondiscriminatory terms, any Bosch products being sold by a common distributor to any person desiring to resell such products in the territory assigned to a common distributor;

(iii) No defendant may refuse to sell or otherwise distribute Bosch products in the territory assigned to a common distributor through any qualified person, or refuse to permit such person to hold himself out as an authorized seller or distributor of American Bosch products, unless at least one other person not a common distributor has been made an authorized seller or distributor for such territory;

(c) Selling to Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited or Lavalette unless American Bosch shall offer to sell to other foreign concerns or persons on prices, terms, and conditions at least as favorable as those offered to such persons;

(d) Acting as agent for Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited, or Lavalette;

(e) Forwarding any order or inquiry to Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited or Lavalette, or forwarding any order or inquiry relating to Bosch products to any other corporation, association, firm, or person doing business outside the United States and also engaged in manufacturing Bosch products or in distributing Bosch products manufactured by someone other than American Bosch;

(f) Assigning or granting to Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited or Lavalette, or any other manufacturer or distributor of Bosch products located outside of the United State, any exclusive licenses for any country of the world in or to any trademark or tradename;

(g) Instituting or threatening to institute or maintaining any suit or proceeding for infringement or to collect royalties or damages for infringement alleged to have occurred prior to the date of this judgment of any United States letters patent or patent applications heretofore described in Clauses (1), (2) and (3) of Section IV(A);

(h) Interfering with or preventing, by suit for trademark infringement or other action based on trademark or tradename rights, Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited, Lavalette or any other corporation, association, firm or person whomsoever which manufactures, sells or distributes Bosch products, from shipping such products into, or disposing of them in, the United States under any name or designation rightfully attached to such products in the territory from which exported, provided such parties take appropriate steps to prevent confusion of such products with those produced by American Bosch;

(i) Entering into any individual contract or agreement with Robert Bosch,

CAV-Limited, or Lavalette, without filing within thirty days after the execution thereof, copies with the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division. The failure of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division to take any action following receipt of any information pursuant to this paragraph shall not be construed as an approval of the matter and things so filed, and shall not operate as a bar to any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, in this or any other case, that may later be brought or pending pursuant to any law of the United States, based on things and matters so filed.

B. American Bosch is hereby ordered and directed, upon bona fide request or demand for any Bosch products manufactured by it and bearing a trademark or tradename under which Robert Bosch, CAV-Limited, Lavalette, or any other corporation, association, firm, or person producing Bosch products can assert any right in any foreign country or area, in good faith to take such steps and do such things as will eliminate any interference, because of the trademark or tradename used therewith, with the importation of any Bosch products into such country or area. Such steps may include, without limitation, the making available of Bosch products which do not bear, to the defendants' knowledge, infringing trademarks or tradenames, the preparation and dissemination of appropriate trade literature, and changes in the methods of packaging and handling.

VI

Defendant American Bosch is hereby ordered and directed:

A. To file within 30 days after the execution of or entrance into any contract or agreement for the distribution of Bosch products outside the United States, a copy thereof with the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division. The failure of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division to take any action following receipt of information pursuant to this Section shall not be construed as an approval of the matters and things so filed, and shall not operate as a bar to any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, in this or any other case, that may later be brought or pending, pursuant to any law of the United States, based on things and matters so filed.

B. To maintain for a period of 10 years complete and intact, in an orderly classification and not in storage, permitting prompt and selective examination of particular documents or categories of documents, all its books and records, correspondence, memoranda, reports and other writings relating to the distribution of Bosch products outside the United States.

VII

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division and on reasonable notice to the defendants, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) access, during the office hours of the defendants, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of the defendants, relating to any matters contained in this judgment; (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of defendants, and without restraint or interference from the defendants, to interview officers or employees of the defendants, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters; (3) the defendants, on such request, shall submit such reports in respect of any such matters as may from time to time be reasonably necessary for the proper enforcement of this judgment; provided, however; that information obtained by the means permitted in this paragraph shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of securing compliance with this judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VIII

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, for the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

IX

This amended final judgment supersedes from the date hereof the final judgment entered in the Court on December 29, 1942; but this amended final judgment shall not be construed to make proper or lawful any acts which occurred prior to the date hereof which were enjoined, restrained or prohibited, or the non-performance of any acts prior to the date hereof which were ordered or directed to be done, by said final judgment of December 29, 1942.

[¶ 62,285] United States v. United States Pipe and Foundry Company, James B. Clow & Sons, Glamorgan Pipe and Foundry Company, Lynchburg Foundry Company, McWane Cast Iron Pipe Company.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil Action No. 10772. July 21, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Lease-License Agreements—Acts in Restraint of Trade Enjoined. —A consent judgment entered against five manufacturers of cast iron pressure pipe and of machinery for the manufacture of such pipe terminates certain lease-license agreements, and enjoins defendants from conditioning licenses, disclosures of technical information, or sales or leases of machines for the manufacture of pipe upon the requirement that the other party to the agreement shall agree: to accept a license under any other patent owned by any defendant; to pay royalties under any unused patent; to manufacture pipe of specified kinds and sizes; not to manufacture pipe on machines not leased or sold by any defendant; to cross-license any patent owned or controlled by said other party, to any defendant; to maintain or adhere to prices or price ranges, or other terms of sale, for pipe; to maintain any restrictions as to quantity of pipe produced, or as to the exportation of pipe from the United States, or which limit the market or territories in which pipe may be sold or distributed in the United States. The defendants are enjoined from entering into any agreement to restrict, allocate or limit production of pipe; to allocate customers, markets or fields; to fix, determine, maintain or adhere to prices or other terms or conditions of sale of pipe; or to attempt to limit the manufacture of pipe to any specified standards, grades or qualities. A defendant is enjoined from acquiring or holding any interest in the assets or capital stock of any other person engaged in manufacturing and selling pipe or machines for the manufacture of pipe, where such acquisition substantially lessens competition or tends to create a monopoly. That defendant is ordered to dedicate certain patents to the public, and to grant licenses of certain other patents on a reasonable royalty basis.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.10, 1530.40, 1530.50, 1590.

For plaintiff: Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; Sigmund Timberg, Special Assistant to the Attorney General; Isaiah A. Matlack, Acting United States Attorney; Victor H. Kramer, Morton H. Steinberg, Special Assistants to the Attorney General; Herbert Maletz, Special Attorney.

For defendants: J. W. Brennan, John A. Hartpence.

Final Judgment

Plaintiff, the United States of America, having filed its complaint herein the 23rd day of October, 1947; and all parties hereto by their attorneys herein having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment herein without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party in respect of any such issue:

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of all parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

[Jurisdiction]

I.

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all of the parties to this judgment, and the complaint states a cause of action against the defendants, and each of them, under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against unlawful Restraints and monopolies", as amended, commonly know as the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. Secs. 1, 2).

[Terms Defined]

II.

As used in this judgment, the following terms have the meaning assigned respectively to them below:

A) "USP" means the defendant, United States Pipe and Foundry Company;

B) "Lease-license agreements" means each, every and all agreements, letter contracts and contracts, existing and in full force and effect as of the date of this judgment, between defendant USP and other defendants, whereby licenses have been granted to manufacture, use and sell pipe under USP patents and whereby USP machines have been leased, or licenses granted for the manufacture and use thereof;

C) "Pipe" means centrifugally cast cast-iron pressure pipe for use in the conveyance of liquids and gases under pressure;

D) "USP machines" means machines and apparatus covered by one or more of USP patents, for the production of pipe;

E) "Patent" or "patents" means United States Letters Patent and all reissues and extensions thereof.

F) "USP patents" means the United States Letters Patent and applications therefor, listed in Exhibit A attached hereto and made a part hereof, all of which are owned by USP.

III.

The provisions of this judgment applicable to any defendant herein shall apply to each of its subsidiaries, successors, and assigns, engaged in the production of pipe, and to each of its officers, directors, agents, and employees, and to each person acting, or claiming to act, under, through or for such defendant.

[Agreements Terminated]

IV.

The lease-license agreements, as defined in this judgment, are, and each of them is, hereby terminated; and the defendants are hereby jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from any further performance in whole or in part of such lease-license agreements, and from any further performance of any of the obligations assumed under or in furtherance of any such agreements. The defendants are hereby jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly, maintaining, reinstating or enforcing such lease-license agreements.

[Acts Enjoined]

V.

The defendants herein are individually and jointly restrained from conditioning:

1) a license or immunity granted under any patent;

2) a disclosure made of technical information or data; or

3) a sale or lease made of machines;

for the manufacture of pipe, upon the requirement that the other party to such transaction shall agree:

a) to request or accept a license or immunity under any other patent owned or controlled by any defendant;

b) to pay royalties under any patent or patents which are unused by said other party;

c) not to challenge the validity of any patent or patents owned or controlled by any defendants;

d) to manufacture only pipe of specified kinds and sizes or to manufacture only pipe covered by specified patent or patents or the production of which is covered by specified patent or patents;

e) to adopt and to use trademarks or trade names owned or controlled by any defendant;

f) to maintain standards, grades or qualities of pipe prescribed or suggested by any defendant;

g) not to manufacture pipe on machines not leased or sold by defendant;

h) to buy or lease from any defendant any other machines for the manufacture of pipe;

i) not to buy or lease machines, for the manufacture of pipe, manufactured by other than any defendant;

j) to cross-license or assign any patent, or patents, or to disclose technical information or data, owned or controlled by said other party, to any defendant;

k) to maintain or adhere to prices or price ranges, or other terms and conditions of sale, for pipe;

l) to maintain or adhere to any restrictions as to quantity of pipe produced;

m) to maintain or adhere to any restrictions which limit the exportation of pipe from the United States, its territories, or possessions, or which limit the market or territories in which pipe may be sold or distributed in the United States.

VI.

The defendants are severally and jointly restrained from entering into, executing, maintaining or adhering to, any contract, agreement, understanding or arrangement with any manufacturer of pipe:

a) to restrict, allocate or limit production of pipe;

b) to allocate customers, markets or fields for the manufacture, sale or distribution of pipe in the United States, its territories or possessions;

c) to fix, determine, maintain or adhere to prices or other terms or conditions of sale of pipe;

d) to prohibit or restrict the sale of pipe for export from or import into the United States, its territories or possessions;

e) to limit or attempt to limit the manufacture of pipe to any specified standards, grades or qualities;

f) to provide for the inspection of any records, files or other documents and papers of any manufacturer of pipe except that an independent public accountant may be employed for the purpose of determining amounts of royalties or rentals due.

VII.

Defendant USP is hereby enjoined and restrained from hereafter acquiring, or holding after such acquisition, any interest in the assets or capital stock of any other person engaged in manufacturing and in selling pipe, or machines for the manufacture of pipe, where such acquisition substantially lessens competition or tends to creat a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of pipe.

[Title To Be Conveyed]

VIII.

Defendant USP is hereby ordered and directed to convey, within sixty (60) days from date of entry of this judgment and without further consideration, or conditions, legal title to any USP machines, now in possession of any other persons under lease-license agreements with defendant USP, to such other persons.

[Dedication To Public]

IX.

Defendant USP is hereby ordered and directed to dedicate to the public, within thirty (30) days from the date of entry of this judgment, all of the USP patents listed in Exhibit A.

[Licenses To Be Made Available]

X.

Upon the grant of a license or immunity under any patent, for the manufacture of pipe, acquired by any defendant within a period of three (3) years from the date of entry of this judgment, a license or immunity under such patent shall be available to any other applicant on non-discriminatory terms.

[Inspection for Compliance Purposes]

XI.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General, and upon reasonable notice to any defendant herein made to the principal office of such defendant be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this judgment, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of such defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding such matters. Upon written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, on reasonable notice to any defendant herein made to its principal office, such defendant shall submit such reports as might from time to time be reasonably necessary to the enforcement of this judgment, provided however that no information obtained by the means provided in this Section XI shall be divulged by the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment or as otherwise required by law.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

XII.

Jurisdiction of this action is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to the Court any time for, and for the Court to make, such further orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, for the modification thereof, or for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for punishment of violations thereof.

Exhibit A

Patent No.	Inventor	Title	Date
1,833,025	Langenberg, F. C.	Method for Hardening the Inner Surface of Cylindrical Metal Bodies	Nov. 24, 1931
1,834,128	Langenberg, F. C.	Method and Apparatus for Improving the Texture of Hollow Metal Bodies	Dec. 1, 1931
1,845,127	Clark, S. B.	Conveyor Mechanism	Feb. 16, 1932
1,849,072	Clark, S. B.	Runner Trough for Centrifugal Casting Machines	Mar. 15, 1932
1,856,863	Clark, S. B.	Pipe Annealing Furnace	May 3, 1932
1,856,874	Langenberg, F. C.	Manufacture of Centrifugal Pipe Molds	May 3, 1932
1,856,890	Stokes, D. B.	Pipe Joint Packing	May 3, 1932
1,890,498	Daniel, R. E. Haughton, R. K. Clark, S. B.	Runway for Pipes	Dec. 13, 1932
1,897,631	Clark, S. B.	Method for Casting Pipes	Feb. 14, 1933
1,899,383	Clark, S. B.	Centrifugal Pipe Casting Apparatus	Feb. 28, 1933
1,903,220	Lemert, L. J.	Flange Protector	Mar. 28, 1933
1,939,703	Hunt, H. S. Arnold, P. L.	Feeding Device for Finely Divided Material	Dec. 19, 1933
1,949,433	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Method and Apparatus for Casting Pipes Centrifugally	Mar. 6, 1934
1,953,180	Langenberg, F. C. Reddick, H. G.	Cast Iron Annulus and Method of Manufacturing the Same	Apr. 3, 1934
1,954,892	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Centrifugally Cast Cast Iron Pipe	Apr. 17, 1934
1,963,146	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Method of Casting Centrifugal Pipes	June 19, 1934
1,963,147	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Centrifugal Pipe Casting Apparatus	June 19, 1934
1,963,148	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Centrifugal Pipe Casting Machine	June 19, 1934
1,963,149	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Centrifugal Pipe Casting Apparatus	June 19, 1934
1,963,150	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Centrifugal Pipe Casting Machine	June 19, 1934
1,971,376	Hunt, H. S. Arnold, P. L.	Apparatus for Coating Centrif. Pipe Molds	Aug. 28, 1934
1,971,385	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Cast Iron Pipe	Aug. 28, 1934
1,979,141	Clark, S. B. Langenberg, F. C.	Pipe Joint and Pipe Joint Gasket	Oct. 30, 1934
1,982,044	Clark, S. B.	Pipe Joint	Nov. 27, 1934
1,982,762	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Method for Casting Metallic Annuli	Dec. 4, 1934
1,986,985	Stuart, H. W. Hunt, H. S. Arnold, P. L.	Coated Metallic Centrifugal Pipe Mold	Jan. 8, 1935
1,988,470	Arnold, P. L.	Centrifugal Pipe Casting Apparatus	Jan. 22, 1935
1,988,471	Arnold, P. L.	Centrifugal Pipe Casting Apparatus	Jan. 22, 1935
2,018,025	Langenberg, F. C. Hunt, H. S.	Method of Centrifugally Casting Pipe	Oct. 22, 1935
2,027,453	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C.	Centrifugal Pipe Casting Apparatus	Jan. 14, 1936

Patent No.	Inventor	Title	Date
2,032,576	Hering, E.	Pipe Joint	Mar. 3, 1936
2,128,327	Russell, N. F. S. Langenberg, F. C. Hunt, H. S.	Method and Apparatus for Coating Molds	Aug. 30, 1938
2,162,829	Stuart, H. W. Hunt, H. S.	Mold Coating Mechanism for Metallic Centrifugal Pipe Molds	June 20, 1939
2,165,051	Hering, E.	Flexible Pipe Joint	July 4, 1939
2,165,052	Hering, E.	Flexible Pipe Joint	July 4, 1939
2,239,530	Langenohl, Max Projahn, Heinrich	Lining Composition for Centrifugal	Apr. 22, 1941
2,246,063	Projahn, H.	Method of Producing Refractory Linings	June 17, 1941
2,255,896	Projahn, H.	Production of Centrifugal Castings	Sept. 16, 1941
2,262,184	Ireton, S. R. Jr.	Method and Apparatus for Coating Molds	Nov. 11, 1941
2,267,896	Bridewell, W. G. Jordan, F. M.	Centrifugal Casting Apparatus	Dec. 30, 1941
2,267,958	Szwed, V. A.	Centrifugal Casting Apparatus	Dec. 30, 1941
2,278,555	Myers, W. S.	Centrifugal Casting Apparatus	Apr. 7, 1942
2,289,681	Projahn, Heinrich A. von Frankenberg	Mold for Centrifugal Casting	July 14, 1942
2,313,926	Daniel, R. E.	Centrifugal Casting Apparatus	Mar. 16, 1943
2,346,861	Montgomery, W. A.	Method and Apparatus for Grinding Molds	Apr. 18, 1944
2,349,646	Arnold, P. L.	Apparatus for Radially Contracting Tubular Metal Bodies	May 23, 1944
2,437,626	Tinsley, C. R.	Method for Reclaiming Used Metal Molds	Mar. 9, 1948

Application Serial Number	Inventor	Title	Filing Date
585,467	Koch, R. H.	Slurry Distributing System	Mar. 29, 1945
729,219	Koch, R. H.	Apparatus for Lining Hollow Bodies with Mortar	Feb. 18, 1947
22,375	Kurtz, R. W.	Centrifugal Casting Apparatus	Apr. 21, 1948

[¶ 62,286] Harry Norman Ball, Trustee v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., Pennware Theatre Corporation, A. N. Notopoulos, R. K. O. Radio Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation.

In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 9233. Filed July 21, 1948.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Refusal to Lease Films—Conspiracy to Destroy Value of Theatre—Plaintiff Entitled to Damages and Injunctive Relief.—A theatre owner who charges a former lessee of the theatre and several motion picture distributors with a conspiracy to destroy the value of the theatre by depriving it of first-run films in violation of the antitrust laws is entitled to damages and injunctive relief where the evidence indicates that the concert of action could not possibly have been sheer coincidence. It is not necessary to find an express agreement in order to find a conspiracy. It is enough that a concert of action is contemplated and that the defendants conformed to the arrangement. The lower court, in dismissing the complaint, failed to accept the clear implications arising from defendants' acts and conduct. The dissenting opinion states that the majority fails to give the findings of fact made by the trial judge their required effect.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1220.273.

For plaintiff: Joseph W. Henderson, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

For defendant: Bernard G. Segal, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; John G. Buchanan, James H. Beal, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

[Nature of Action]

McLaughlin, C. J.: This is a conspiracy suit under the Sherman and Clayton Acts.[1] Plaintiff-appellant is the owner and operator of the Penn motion picture theatre in Ambridge, Pennsylvania. The defendants-appellees are Pennware Theatre Corporation, formerly lessee of the Penn Theatre and later owner and operator of the State Theatre, also in Ambridge; A. N. Notopoulos and Paramount Pictures, Inc., each owning fifty per cent of the Pennware stock; R. K. O. Radio Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, producers, distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures. It is alleged that the appellees conspired to deprive the Penn Theatre of showing first run pictures as it had been doing for some years previously. The case was partly heard below by Judge Schoonmaker, who died before the case was completed. The trial was finished before the succeeding Judge under a stipulation which provided that "all proceedings before Judge Schoonmaker * * * shall be deemed to have been before such assigned Judge." The succeeding judge found no conspiracy. This appeal is from his decree dismissing the complaint.

Appellees urge that under Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure we should not set aside the findings of fact of the court below unless clearly erroneous. The same rule provides that "due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses * * *", but it is to be remembered half the witnesses, presenting the main portion of plaintiff's case, had been heard by Judge Schoonmaker. Nor does the rule operate "to entrench with like finality the inferences or conclusions drawn by the trial court from its fact findings." Kuhn v. Princess Lida of Thurn and Taxis, 3 Cir., 119 F. 2d 704, 705. Finally, if the mass buying power of appellees[2] was unlawfully employed, then, under the particular facts, the findings were not only inadequate but erroneous. United States v. Griffith, — U. S. —, opinion filed May 3, 1948, pp. 9, 10, slip opinion.

[Facts]

In August of 1943, appellant for himself and his family group purchased the Penn Theatre. At the time, Pennware was lessee thereof, its lease expiring on April 30, 1944. Pennware's capital stock was owned one-half by Atlantic States Theatre Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Paramount Pictures, Inc., and one-half by A. N. Notopoulos, who operates a chain of motion picture theatres in the area. For at least the ten years preceding the expiration of the lease, Pennware had been licensed to exhibit all of Paramount Film Distributing Corporation's feature motion pictures first run at the Penn Theatre and one-half of the feature motion pictures first run of R. K. O., Loew's and Twentieth Century-Fox. Negotiations for renewal of the lease failed to produce an agreement between the parties and the lease was not renewed. Meanwhile Pennware was busy reconverting a garage property into a theatre which was thereafter named the State.

Pennware had vacated the Penn Theatre by April 30, 1944. Under its lease it was entitled to remove its furnishings and equipment. Appellant contends that in doing this Pennware deliberately did what it could—which is said to have been considerable—to wreck the theatre. While the negotiations for the renewal of the lease were proceeding, appellant talked with Mr. Goldenson, vice president of Paramount Pictures, Inc., in charge of his company's theatre interests. Ball tried to persuade Goldsenson that in the event the parties could not agree on a renewal of the lease, it would be unfair for Paramount to move its product from the Penn Theatre or to do anything to get the other film companies to do likewise. According to Ball, Goldenson said that after the Pennware lease was terminated, the product which the Penn Theatre had enjoyed would be given over to the new theatre Paramount, Pennware and Notopoulos were building; none of the first run Paramount product would go to the Penn Theatre unless the lease was renewed; and, as to the other producers, he would use the power of Paramount to see to it that their product went to the new theatre they were building.

---

[1] Sherman Anti-Trust Act (Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C. Sections 1-7). Clayton Act (Act of October 15, 1914, c. 323, 38 Stat. 730; 15 U. S. C. Sections 12-27).

[2] Unquestionably here involved even if each distributor were assumed to have acted independently of the others as the court below found.

Following the termination of the lease with Pennware and the removal by the latter of its property, appellant had his theatre repaired and re-equipped. This was completed by June 23, 1944. He was, however, then or thereafter unable to obtain any first run pictures either from Paramount or from any of the other distributor appellees, and this despite the fact that he was willing to agree to terms which would have been far more favorable to the distributors than those which they had received previously from Penn Theatre showings. All the first run of the pictures of the appellees which, under the Pennware regime, had been displayed at the Penn Theatre was transferred to the State Theatre at the request of Pennware. In such action, according to Finding Number 32 of the District Court, "each distributor acted independently without consulting any other distributor and without concert of action. No representative of Paramount had any active part in obtaining such licenses." And then the District Court found that "In obtaining licenses for first run exhibition of motion pictures in the State Theatre, neither Pennware nor Notopoulos combined or conspired with any of the defendants in restraint of trade or commerce." The Conclusions of Law reiterated this thought.

[Implication of Conspiracy]

In so holding we think the lower court failed to accept the clear implications arising from appellees' acts and conduct. " 'The picture of conspiracy as a meeting by twilight of a trio of sinister persons with pointed hats close together belongs to a darker age.' " William Goldman Theatres v. Loew's, Inc., 3 Cir., 150 F. 2d 738, 743. As held in that case, conspiracy may be inferred when the concert of action "could not possibly be sheer coincidence". "Acceptance by competitors, without previous agreement, of an invitation to participate in a plan, the necessary consequence of which, if carried out, is restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act." Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 227. That conspiracy cannot be explained away by allegations of "normal processes of competition; * * * theatres * * * less attractive; * * * service * * * inferior;" or because the new theatre operators are "not as efficient business men as the defendants". United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 183. In United States v. Paramount, et al., — U. S. —, opinion filed May 3, 1948, the court says at page 5 of the slip opinion: "It is not necessary to find an express agreement in order to find a conspiracy. It is enough that a concert of action is contemplated and that the defendants conformed to the arrangement." Most of the present appellees are among the defendants in the Paramount litigation who are there characterized as having shown "a proclivity to unlawful conduct." The second of the recent United States Supreme Court opinions in motion picture matters, United States v. Griffith, supra, concerned a chain theatre owner similar to Notopoulos, the court holding that he is legally presumed to be tending toward monopoly if his chain ownership is influential in obtaining business. That case also reiterates that specific intent is not necessary in such a situation as is before us. Says the court, page 5 of the slip opinion, "It is sufficient that a restrain of trade or monopoly results as the consequence of a defendant's conduct or business arrangements." Schine Chain Theatres v. United States, — U. S. —, is the last of the group of motion picture opinions handed down by the Supreme Court on May 3rd last. Petition for clarification was denied on June 1, 1948. Again, the special facts there are not our case, but generally the pattern is very similar, and it is noteworthy that the District Court was specifically sustained "in drawing the inference of unlawful purpose from the ambiguous episodes" in connection with the question of the use of monopoly power. (p. 7 of the slip opinion.)[8]

[Unanimity of Action]

There is the distinction, more apparent than real, that in the Interstate case there were no witnesses to deny plaintiff's allegations. Here the defense witnesses explain their refusal to deal with Ball by saying they preferred to patronize their old and reliable customer Notopoulos, who, as Para-mount's partner, incidentally could have been designated as having an even closer relationship to the defense group than that simply of a trustworthy purchaser of their pictures. In any event Ball was ready to meet and better the terms offered by Notopoulos. It is also suggested that the State Theatre had a finer location and more seats. Without going into detail, the question of location is at least arguable. The two theatres were on Merchant Street, the main business thoroughfare of Ambridge, and within a few blocks of each other. The larger seating capacity of the State would hardly appear overwhelming in view of Ball's cash propositions and longer playing time. Appellees urge, as another ground for discarding the Interstate decision, the presence there of an "extraordinary and unexplained unanimity of action by the distributors." The Interstate facts differ considerably from the ones at bar, but it would be difficult to describe more exactly the gravamen of the instant offense than as set out in the above quoted language from appellees' brief.

[8] And see United States v. Columbia Steel Co., et al., — U. S. —, opinion filed June 7, 1948, which holds, page 28 of the slip opinion: "When a combination through its actual operation results in an unreasonable restraint, intent or purpose may be inferred; even though no unreasonable restraint may be achieved, nevertheless a finding of specific intent to accomplish such an unreasonable restraint may render the actor liable under the Sherman Act."

[Cases Cited]

Appellees suggest that the Goldman opinion has no bearing primarily because half of the pictures of the defendant distributors other than Paramount are shown in the two Warner theatres in Ambridge. This does not affect the illegality of the conspiracy, if conspiracy there be. United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 16; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 237; United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, 229; William Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., supra, page 744. They say further that each appellee simply did not know the others were shunning the Penn, and that statement is incredible. They all knew Paramount's vital interest in the State. This was Paramount's ordinary theatre arrangement throughout the United States with which the other distributors were constantly dealing. Cf. United States v. Paramount, supra. They, experienced, shrewd business people as they claim to be and as, in fact, they are, had to know the picture bookings and entire situation at the State. Ball's testimony tends to support this when, among other things, he says he informed R. K. O. that the others had declined to sell to him, and he read a letter he states he sent to Fox during the negotiation period informing the latter of Paramount's plan "to cause the run of the product to be taken from the [Penn] Theatre." The record fails to reveal a convincing basis for accepting the actions of appellees as merely an amazing coincidence. The District Judge was unjustified in so explaining it.

There is no serious attempt to distinguish the Crescent Amusement opinion by appellees. Instead they rely on two other decisions, Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Corp., D. C. Md., 30 F. Supp. 830, affd. 4 Cir., 113 F. 2d 932, and Schad v. Fox, 3 Cir., 136 F. 2d 991. Westway concerned a peculiarly local situation in Baltimore. It was a suit by an owner of a new theatre. His neighboring competitors sought clearance protection in their already existing contracts with their distributors, and this was allowed. It was held not an unreasonable restraint of trade because it amounted to the protection of existing customers as permitted at common law. No evidence tending to show conspiracy was observed by the court. As seen, the comparison between the matter before us and Westway is neither close nor controlling where, as here, the conspiracy of appellees is so apparent.

While the doctrine of Goldman v. Loew's, supra, has superseded any possible inference to the contrary in the Schad decision as the law of this circuit, on its facts the Schad case, which has to do with an isolated exhibitor-distributor agreement, has no bearing here. The Crescent Amusement opinion, supra, clearly outlines the distinction at page 183, saying: "We may assume that if a single exhibitor launched * * * a plan of economic warfare he would not run afoul of the Sherman Act. But the vice of this undertaking was the combination of several exhibitors in a plan of concerted action."

When an industry is so powerful that it can and actually does refuse to permit the existence of an individual enterprise such as appellant's within its confines (and that's what the shutting off of first runs from Penn probably amounts to) that industry is going beyond its freedom to trade as it chooses. It comes into sharp conflict with the salutory provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Acts. It is acting unlawfully in restraint of trade. We think that is what happened here. The appellees representing all branches of this tremendous industry are engaged in a conspiracy against the appellant that is both horizontal and vertical. Cf. United States v. Paramount, supra. Collaterally, much could be said about the fairness of appellant's own actions, but careful study of these develops no excuse for the stoppage by appellees of Penn Theatre's first runs. The second and third runs tendered were from the evidence unreasonable, and they were themselves part of the violation of the restraint of trade acts. United States v. Paramount, supra.

[Reversed and Remanded]

The decree of the District Court will be reversed and the cause remanded to that court with directions to enter a decree in favor of the appellant and for the injunctive relief presently sought. The amount of appellant's damages and the form of the decree are for the court below.

[Dissenting Opinion]

GOODRICH, J.: The reason for this dissent is that the majority does not give the findings of fact made by the Trial Judge the effect which, it seems to me, Rule 52 requires. If those findings are accepted there is nothing to the plaintiff's case. I think on this point there is no dispute among the parties, their counsel, or the members of the Court.

There is no disagreement among us in rejecting the "cloak and dagger" requisites to prove conspiracy. Nor is there any doubt that the fact that this plaintiff failed to get first run pictures from any of the distributors is certainly a circumstance to be considered in the question whether there was an agreement among them to act together to freeze the plaintiff out, or at least a knowing participation in such a scheme. Nor could I quarrel with the majority's allusion to the Supreme Court opinion in which reference is made to the "proclivity to unlawful conduct" by some of the defendants here. The mistake which it seems to me the majority makes, is to substitute its judgment for that of the Trial Court in saying what conclusions are to be drawn from all the evidence. This is not a case where a plaintiff sets out a set of facts and circumstances and the question is whether they will warrant a finding of conspiracy on the part of the defendants. The defendants fully presented their side of the case which completely contradicts the facts relied upon by the plaintiff. The simple question of fact is whether those witnesses told the truth or whether they lied.

The majority opinion quotes the plaintiff as claiming that one of the defendants, in removing fixtures from the theatre which the plaintiff had bought maliciously wrecked it. The plaintiff did make that charge, but it was vigorously denied by witnesses who were the very people who did the job and the Trial Court's finding on the point is squarely against the plaintiff. He said:

> "26. Pennware caused its furnishing[s] and equipment to be removed from the Penn Theatre from April 27, 1944 [sic] to April 30, 1944. The removal was accomplished in a careful and workmanlike manner, without malice, or any intent to delay operation of the Penn Theatre by plaintiff (R. Notopoulos Exhibits Nos. 7-12, and 14-25, R. 1079, 1086, 1116)."

But this is not the only instance in which an important finding is ignored. It is still the law that if one is not engaged in public utility or a similar activity he may pick and choose his customers as he pleases. If one of these defendants decided he did not want to do business on the plaintiff's terms, there was nothing to compel him to do so. Of course, if he agrees with other people not to do business with the plaintiff or knowingly enters into a plan not to do business with the plaintiff, an entirely different kind of question is presented, and if such is found and the subject-matter is interstate commerce there is a violation of the Sherman Act. No one doubts this, least of all the defendants themselves.

Now on this point the trial judge made specific, direct, clear, and forthright findings of fact. Here they are:

> "32. In licensing Pennware for first run exhibition of motion pictures in the State Theatre, each distributor acted independently without consulting any other distributor and without concert of action. No representative of Paramount had any active part in obtaining such licenses."
>
> "33. In obtaining licenses for first run exhibition of motion pictures in the State Theatre, neither Pennware nor Notopoulos combined or conspired with any of the defendants in restraint of trade or commerce."
>
> "34. Loew's, R. K. O. and 20th Century Fox each had knowledge that Paramount Pictures, Inc., had an interest in the Pennware Theatre, but had dealt only with Notopoulos, or his sons in licensing pictures to that theatre. When each of them decided to license the State Theatre, as opposed to the application of plaintiff for the Penn Theatre, it did not know of the intention of the others to license the State Theatre. In concluding to license the Pennware Theatre each considered the fact that that theatre was managed by an experienced exhibitor of moving pictures, whose credit had been good over a number of years, and who had a theatre equally located and considerably larger than the Penn Theatre, and which promised greater revenue, while the Penn Theatre was to be operated by a stranger in Ambridge whose ability and credit was unknown. Neither Loew's, R. K. O., nor 20th Century Fox, in their respective decisions to license the State Theatre were influenced by Paramount Pictures, Inc., or its power in the moving picture industry."

The very able and experienced trial judge did not pull these conclusions out of thin air. The defendants took their case seriously. They called top executives of their respective companies and by direct testimony traced the course of dealings in the licensing of motion pictures in general and in particular as to this plaintiff and the former occupant of the Penn Theatre in Ambridge. All that testimony made categorical denials of any arrangement, express or implied, intimation, or understanding among the defendants with regard to selling or not selling to the plaintiff. A conversation outlined at some length in the majority opinion about how Paramount was alleged to have threatened to use its power to crush the plaintiff was discussed in the defendant's testimony, too. All of the defendants' witnesses say that the words came from the mouth of the plaintiff and that at least one of the witnesses said at the time that the plaintiff was building up, or endeavoring to build up, lawsuit material for himself.

Each defendant-distributor was informed of the other defendant-distributors' conclusion not to furnish first run pictures to the plaintiff, but according to their testimony this information came from the plaintiff himself. Furthermore, it came at a time when their decision not to furnish plaintiff with first run pictures had already been communicated to him. In other words, the testimony which is in the record does not show that one powerful distributor acted with knowledge of what the others had done, but rather supports the conclusion, made by the trial judge, that each acted independently and got his information about the others' action from the plaintiff, himself, after his own decision had been made.[1]

The view, stoutly maintained by the defendant-distributors, that each made his own decision with regard to the offerings to be made to the plaintiff, finds corroboration outside the direct testimony of the motion picture officials on this point. For instance, there was ample evidence that Mr. Notopoulos and his Pennware Corporation had been good customers of the various distributors for a good many years. His bills were promptly paid, the kind of theatre run by him through his corporation was a good thing, sales managers thought, for their business. The new theatre which Pennware Corporation occupied following the termination of the lease on the plaintiff's theatre was a larger building than the former building is. There is dispute as to which location was the better. There was no dispute, however, that the distance between the two was short and that the busi-

[1] Three of the defendant-distributors by oral testimony stated that their decisions to sell to Pennware rather than Ball were made by certain dates which were previous to the time Ball's witnesses had stated they communicated the information as to what the others were going to do to a particular distributor. Friedman, witness for plaintiff, stated that he told the officials of Loew's early in May, 1944. The official to whom Friedman stated that he made the statement denies any knowledge of it. That person, however, says that one of Notopoulos' sons told him in April, 1944, but the testimony of another witness shows that Loew's had reached its decision previous to that after discussing the matter among themselves in January, February, March, and the early part of April, 1944.

As to R. K. O.'s knowledge, Ball said he informed its officials of the others' action in June, 1944, but the officials of R. K. O. stated that the matter had been tentatively settled on April 3, 1944 and on May 8, 1944 the top executives communicated their decision to members of their organization. Twentieth Century-Fox, on the other hand said that its decision was made on April 17, 1944 and that it had notice of what the others had decided to do only through a letter sent to it by Ball under the date of May 1, 1944.

Plaintiff's testimony attempts to establish that Pennware had an understanding with Paramount that it would take the first run product to State. This agreement, according to plaintiff, was made even before Pennware's lease on the Penn had expired. Paramount, however, says its decision was made on May 17, 1944 and that it was not aware of what the other distributors had done or would do. Under either version we must accept the fact that the Trial Judge found that Paramount made its decision without the knowledge of what the others had done.

ness section of the community was not such as to exhaust anyone in the walking from one end to the other of the whole area.

The above pieces of evidence are not related to prove that the defendants were circumspect in this case and the plaintiff was wrong. That, of course, is not a determining factor. They are cited to show that the case presented a conflict in evidence and that the defendants presented testimony on very vital points. I earnestly urge that where a question is that of the credibility of people who testify in a case it takes a very, very strong set of circumstances to reject a conclusion reached as to truth telling by the trier of the fact. When his conclusion as to which witnesses to believe and which witnesses not to believe is backed up by circumstances which show that his conclusion is a rational one, it seems to me that so far as a case turns upon questions of fact the answers given to these questions by the trier of the fact should be accepted. We should not substitute a hunch, however judicial, for facts advertently found.

[¶ 62,287] J. T. Miller v. Minneapolis Underwriters Association, Inc., et al.

In the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota. No. 71. Filed June 11, 1948.

Minnesota Trusts and Combinations Act

Restraint of Trade—Insurance Underwriters' Association—By-Laws and Practices Thereunder.—In an action to adjudge a forfeiture of the corporate franchise of an association of underwriters, and to enjoin its officers from enforcing certain by-laws, on the ground that such by-laws and certain practices thereunder violate the Minnesota Trusts and Combinations Act by so unreasonably restricting competition in the insurance business as to constitute a conspiracy and boycott in restraint of trade, it is held that a mere showing of a purported violation of a criminal statute, without a showing that plaintiff, a nonmember of the association, has been injured, is insufficient to entitle plaintiff to injunctive relief. It is further held that although the attorney general in seeking to vacate a corporate charter may proceed either by civil action under the Minnesota Trusts and Combinations Act or by quo warranto, any other person, in the absence of express statutory authorization, must rely exclusively on quo warranto as a remedy. Since no such authorization exists, the judgment for defendants must be affirmed.

See the Minnesota Trusts and Combinations Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8435.

For plaintiff: Willard C. Lindsay, Russell Smith, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

For defendants: Stanley V. Shanedling, Mark J. Woolley, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Walter H. Bennett, New York, N. Y.

MATSON, J.: Action to adjudge a forfeiture of the corporate franchise of the Minneapolis Underwriters Association, Inc., (hereinafter called the association) and to enjoin its officers from enforcing certain by-laws of the association on the ground that such by-laws and certain practices thereunder violate M. S. A. 623.01 by so unreasonably restricting and restraining competition in the insurance business as to constitute a conspiracy and boycott in restraint of trade. The appeal by plaintiff, a nonmember of the association, from a judgment for defendants presents the question whether the trial court's findings, conclusions, and judgment are sustained by the evidence.

The association, organized in 1883 and incorporated in 1923, is a voluntary, nonstock, nonprofit membership corporation composed of fire insurance agents in the city of Minneapolis. Its membership is not open to insurance companies but is limited to their agents. Out of a total of 254 companies writing insurance in Minneapolis, 173 are stock companies and 81 are mutuals. The agents (inclusive of approximately 150 firm agencies) of 159 stock companies are members of the association and write from 70 to 80 per cent of the premium volume of all fire insurance written in Minneapolis. The balance of the insurance is written by nonmember agents, who represent 81 mutual and 14 stock companies. The number of agent members is not indicative of the number of licensed agents represented in the association, because any agent member may have in his employ, or affiliated with him, other individual sales agents who are registered as solicitor members. Plaintiff, who is not a member of the association, is the general agent for several insurance companies and as such employs numerous subagents.

We are particularly concerned with three provisions of the by-laws of the association, namely, (1) the "Maintenance of Rates Rule," whereby all members are required to write insurance at the rates promulgated by a statutory bureau known as the Minneapolis Fire Underwriters Inspection Bureau; (2) the "In-or-Out Rule," whereby members are prohibited from representing any company whose agents are not all members of the association; and (3) the "Non-Intercourse Rule," whereby members agree not to place insurance on Minneapolis property with any agent or company except in compliance with the by-laws, and further agree not to accept brokerage risks except from fellow members. For a first violation of the by-laws a member is subject to a fine, and for a second violation to both fine and expulsion from membership.

The Minneapolis Fire Underwriters Inspection Bureau (hereinafter called the bureau), referred to in the "Maintenance of Rates Rule," is a rate-making bureau legally established pursuant to the Minnesota fire insurance rating bureau law (M. S. A. 71.01 to 71.06), and any rates established by such bureau, in order to prevent discriminatory and unjust rates, are at all times subject to review and revision by the state insurance commissioner. In establishing rates, the bureau, under a credit and debit system, classifies the risks according to the presence or absence of fire protection and fire prevention facilities. The basic premium rate may be increased by charging against a particular risk certain debits for a deficiency of minimum fire protection safeguards. On the other hand, another risk may receive a reduction in the basic rate by virtue of credits allowed for the presence of fire protection facilities. Among the insurance agencies, inclusive of the members of the association, there is considerable competition in securing for their respective customers all credits to which they are justly entitled, as well as in avoiding unjustifiable debits.

The rating bureau statute expressly provides that any insurer may deviate from the bureau rate, but if the deviation is downward, then such insurer must maintain the lower rate for a minimum period of one year with respect to the class of property involved. An insurance agent is not compelled to join the association, but if he elects to do so he thereby subjects himself to the by-laws, which are designed to compel all members to charge the rates fixed by the bureau, and not to deviate therefrom without first obtaining permission from the association. In order to meet competition from a deviating nonmember, the association may, in so-called "relief cases," give a member express permission to broker a specified line of insurance at a variation rate with a nonmember agent who represents a deviating company. With the exception of such relief cases in which permission to deviate has been granted, it is the practice of the association to require the members not only to charge the bureau rate, but also not to place, or to renew, any insurance with a nonmember. Aside from the relief case exceptions, it appears that on certain occasions members have refused to become agents for companies represented by plaintiff, a nonmember, and that by reason of the by-laws, members have refused to place or continue insurance with plaintiff's (as well as with other) companies. It has been the regular practice of the association to remind individual members of their obligations whenever a threatened violation of the by-laws has come to light.

1. Plaintiff is not entitled to injunctive relief. The entire case has been tried on the theory established by plaintiff's pleadings, which simply allege that defendants by certain acts of conspiracy and boycott have brought about a restraint of trade for the purpose of stifling competition in the insurance business and in order to maintain maximum insurance premium rates in violation of §§ 623.01 and 623.02. The basic antitrust section, namely, § 623.01, is a criminal statute, and has been so recognized. Campbell v. Motion Picture M. O. Union, 151 Minn. 220, 186 N. W. 781. Here, we have nothing more than a purported violation of a criminal statute. We have no allegation or showing that plaintiff's property or plaintiff's rights of a pecuniary nature have been actually injured or threatened. An inference might be drawn that certain practices of the association have been detrimental to plaintiff, but such an inference cannot supply the positive proof of the actual or threatened injury required for a granting of injunctive relief. It is not the province of a court of review to draw inferences as to the showing that could have been made, but which in fact was not made upon the trial below. Equity will not enjoin purely criminal acts, but on the other hand the criminality of an act will not bar injunctive relief if there is otherwise ground for it. Higgins v. Lacroix, 119 Minn. 145, 137 N. W. 417. Although equity will not enjoin a criminal act, it does have jurisdiction to enjoin an act which actually injures or threatens to injure property or rights of a pecuniary nature, and such jurisdiction is not destroyed by the fact that the act is accompanied by, or is itself, a violation of the criminal law. Glover v. Malloska, 238 Mich. 216, 213 N. W. 107, 52 A. L. R. 77. The criminality of the act neither gives nor ousts jurisdiction in chancery.[1] An injunction will be granted against a criminal act on the ground of actual or threatened injury to the property rights of an individual only if the complainant clearly shows facts and circumstances justifying the relief desired. 28 Am. Jur., Injunctions, § 150.

Obviously, § 613.70 is not involved on this appeal. The general rule, with certain exceptions not here applicable, is that litigants are bound in this court by the theory upon which the action was tried below. Skolnick v. Gruesner, 196 Minn. 318, 265 N. W. 44.

2. The remaining issue relates to plaintiff's attempt to vacate or annul the association's corporate charter pursuant to § 623.02, which provides that every domestic corporation violating, directly or indirectly, any provision of § 623.01 "shall forfeit all of its corporate franchises." Section 623.02 further provides:

> "* * * The attorney general and the several county attorneys shall begin and conduct, in the district court, all actions and proceedings necessary to enforce the provisions of this section, and any citizen may do so." (Italics supplied.)

Defendants contend, however, that both sections of the statute, as part of the same criminal chapter, involve criminal proceedings, and that plaintiff as a private citizen cannot begin or conduct a criminal prosecution. Whether a private citizen may be authorized to conduct a criminal action need not be determined. It is sufficient to point out that defendants are in error as to the nature of the proceedings for declaring a forfeiture of a corporate charter under § 623.02. The preceding section, 623.01, is a criminal statute, and we have so held. State v. Minneapolis Milk Co., 124 Minn. 34, 144 N. W. 417; State v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 115 Minn. 207, 132 N. W. 268, L. R. A. 1915A, 892, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 820. The fact that the succeeding section, 623.02, is part of the same criminal chapter is not controlling as to the nature of the proceedings thereby authorized. It is true that the forfeiture of a corporate charter thereunder is a consequence of violating a criminal statute, but it is not a penal consequence. See, State v. Harris, 50 Minn. 128, 134, 52 N. W. 387, 388; State ex rel. Connolly v. Parks, 199 Minn. 622, 625, 273 N. W. 233, 235. An action to adjudge a vacation or annulment of a corporate charter is a civil remedy employed by or in behalf of the state to cancel or recall a franchise privilege which the domestic corporation proceeded against has abused. In this respect the statute is merely declaratory of the common law. The action is no more criminal than is an action for damages resulting from the commission of a crime. State v. Standard Oil Co., 61 Neb. 28, 84 N. W. 413; State v. Central Lbr. Co., 24 S. D. 136, 123 N. W. 504; Ames v. Kansas ex rel. Johnston, 111 U. S. 449, 4 S. Ct. 437, 28 L. ed. 482; 36 Am. Jur., Monopolies, Combinations, etc., § 218; see, 12 Minn. L. Rev. 422, 41 Harv. L. Rev. 244; High, Extraordinary Legal Remedies, § 597. In holding that actions for the termination of a corporate charter have not been recognized as criminal proceedings since the early days of the common law, the supreme court of Missouri in State ex inf. Hadley v. Delmar Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 34, 71, 98 S. W. 539, 543, said:

> "* * * The violation of a corporation's contract with the State by misuser or usurpation may be evidenced by the fact of the violation of some statute, criminal in character, but in this kind of proceeding we try the right of the corporation to further hold its franchises, not the question of finding its guilt or innocence under the statute and fixing punishment permitted by the statute. It is the only way the State has of preventing the abuse of the confidences it has reposed in these corporate creatures which are of its own making."

[1] State v. Sportsmen's Country Club, 214 Minn. 151, 7 N. W. (2d) 495; State v. Preuss, 217 Minn. 100, 13 N. W. (2d) 774; Fitchette v. Taylor, 191 Minn. 582, 254 N. W. 910, 94 A. L. R. 359; Town of Linden v. Fischer, 154 Minn. 354, 191 N. W. 901; Campbell v. Motion Picture M. O. Union, 151 Minn. 220, 186 N. W. 781; State v. Vaughan, 81 Ark. 117, 98 S. W. 685, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 899, 118 A. S. R. 29, 11 Ann. Cas. 277; Annotations, 52 A. L. R. 79, 40 A. L. R. 1154, 91 A. L. R. 320, 94 A. L. R. 363; 28 Am. Jur., Injunctions, §§ 148, 150, 155; 3 Dunnell, Dig. & Supp. § 4483a.

3. It is undoubtedly true that if a domestic corporation is indicted and convicted for a violation of § 623.01 such criminal conviction may be made the basis for charter forfeiture proceedings under § 623.02. See, State v. Minneapolis Milk Co., 124 Minn. 34, 144 N. W. 417. An action for cancellation of a corporate charter is, however, so distinctly a civil proceeding that, in absence of a statutory requirement to the contrary, a criminal conviction for the violation of the antitrust statute is neither a condition precedent to the commencement of the action nor to a judgment of forfeiture. In establishing a basis for charter forfeiture, a violation of the antitrust statute, § 623.01, may be determined independently of any criminal prosecution or conviction. State ex inf. McAllister v. Blattner Bros., (Mo.) 226 S. W. 253; State ex rel. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1, 116 S. W. 902 (affirmed, 224 U. S. 270, 32 S. Ct. 406, 56 L. ed. 760, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 936); 41 C. J., Monopolies, § 262; Ferris, Extraordinary Legal Remedies, § 142. The primary purpose of the proceeding is to establish an abuse of the corporate franchise privilege, irrespective of whether a crime has been committed, as a basis for adjudging that such abuse constitutes a forfeiture of the charter. See, State ex rel. Hahn v. Minnesota Cent. Ry. Co., 36 Minn. 246, 258, 30 N. W. 816, 817.

4. Clearly, plaintiff was and is qualified to begin and conduct charter forfeiture proceedings. Has he, however, pursued the right remedy? Section 623.02 gives him the right to begin proceedings, but does not designate the form of action. Obviously, the right to begin the necessary proceedings does not dispense with the need for selecting the proper remedy. In Dennistoun v. Davis, 179 Minn. 373, 229 N. W. 353, this court pointed out that although the attorney general in seeking to vacate a corporate charter may proceed either by civil action under § 556.07 or by quo warranto, any other person, in the absence of express statutory authorization, must rely exclusively on quo warranto as a remedy. See Ray v. Homewood Hospital, Inc. 223 Minn. 440, 443, 27 N. W. (2d) 409, 411. The civil actions authorized by §§ 556.07 and 301.57 are available only to the attorney general, and it should be noted that, in absence of these two sections, aside from any revocation of a corporate charter as part of a direct criminal proceeding, the attorney general himself would be limited to a writ of quo warranto. In failing to use the only remedy available to a private relator, plaintiff's action must fail. See, 2 Dunnell, Dig. & Supp. § 2130; 5 Id., §§ 8060, 8065, and 8074.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

Affirmed.

Mr. Justice Oscar R. Knutson, not having been a member of the court at the time of the argument, took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

[¶ 62,288] Alden-Rochelle, Inc., et al. v. American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 18-6. July 19, 1948.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Musical Compositions—Licensing of Performing Rights—Suit for Damages and Injunctive Relief.—In an action brought by the operators of 200 motion picture theatres against an association of composers, authors and publishers for engaging in activities in restraint of trade, in violation of the antitrust laws, it is held that it is unlawful for the owners of a number of copyrighted works to combine their copyrights by any agreement. The combination of the members of the association in transferring all their non-dramatic performing rights to the association is a combination in restraint of trade and commerce. The power of the association, as a monopoly, to demand higher license fees, coupled with the combination of the members' copyrights, constitutes an unlawful restraint of trade. Plaintiffs are not entitled to damages, inasmuch as it is found that they were not injured by the antitrust violations. No private right of action arises unless a plaintiff is injured in his property or business by such violations. The threatened use of the power which the association has unlawfully acquired to demand unfair and exorbitant license fees furnished sufficient grounds for the exercise by the court of its ordinary equitable powers to prevent any threatened injury to plaintiffs.

See the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2024.49, 2024.62, 2036.15.

For plaintiffs: Weisman-Celler, Quinn & Allan, New York, N. Y.

For defendants: Schwartz & Frohlich, New York, N. Y.

[Nature of Action]

LEIBELL, D. J.: Two claims are asserted in this suit by each of the 164 plaintiffs who operate 200 motion picture theatres. Both claims are based on violations of the Federal anti-trust laws by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (Ascap) and its members and officers. The first claim is a private right of action for treble damages, which is specifically conferred by statute [Title 15 U. S. C. § 15] on any one who has been injured in his property or business by conduct of another which violates the provisions of the anti-trust laws. The second claim is a suit for injunctive relief [Title 15 U. S. C. § 26] against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the anti-trust laws.

The complaint was filed in this Court on April 9, 1942. Between July 1943 and August 1946 the litigation was dormant. A pre-trial hearing was had before Judge Knox in December 1947, and an order was made after the hearing which was very helpful when the case was tried early in March 1948. Counsel filed their briefs and proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law late in April. After reviewing the record, considering the arguments of counsel and the cases cited in their briefs, I have concluded that Ascap has violated the anti-trust laws, but that plaintiffs have failed to prove that they have been injured thereby and have sustained damages. Plaintiffs have shown, however, that the power which Ascap had acquired in violation of the anti-trust laws and which Ascap attempted to use in August 1947 in a way that would have increased, many times, the license fees charged exhibitors for the right to perform publicly for profit musical compositions synchronized on films, is a constant threat which may cause loss or damage to the plaintiffs and plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction. The court's findings of fact and conclusions of law are being filed herewith. For a complete understanding of the factual situation, referred to only generally in this opinion, the findings of fact should be consulted.

§ 1 of the Copyright Law (Title 17 U. S. C. § 1) enumerates the exclusive rights which a person who owns a copyrighted work receives under the statute, including the right [§ 1(e)] "to perform the copyrighted work publicly for profit if it be a musical composition; and for the purpose of public performance for profit, and for the purposes set forth in subsection (a) hereof [to print, reprint, publish, copy and vend the copyrighted work] to make any arrangement or setting of it or of the melody of it in any system of arrangement or any form of record in which the thought of an author may be recorded and from which it may be read or reproduced". In Buck v. Jewell-LaSalle Realty Co., (1931) 283 U. S. 191, Mr. Justice Brandeis held that the acts of a hotel proprietor, in making available to his guests, through the instrumentality of a radio receiving set and loud speakers installed in his hotel and under his control and for the entertainment of his guests, the hearing of a copyrighted musical composition which had been broadcast from a radio transmitting station, constituted a performance of the composition within the meaning of the act, even though no detailed choice of selections was given to the hotel proprietor who had to accept whatever program was transmitted. "Intention to infringe is not essential under the Act."

Origin and Activities of Ascap

The defendant Ascap is a voluntary association which was organized in 1914 for the purpose of licensing the public performance of musical compositions, of which its members owned the copyrights. Acting alone, the individual authors and composers were unable to detect infringement of their copyrights by those who performed their compositions publicly for profit. Even the corporate publishers of musical compositions could not do so. It was felt that an organization, with branches throughout the United States, could "police" the public performances of musical compositions by bands and orchestras, in hotels, theatres and places of amusement. If infringements were detected, Ascap would endeavor to get the infringer to take a blanket license covering all the works of Ascap's members, for a reasonable annual fee; and if the infringer refused to take a license, Ascap would have a suit filed for infringement.

So that Ascap might act for all its members most effectively, each member assigned to Ascap the non-dramatic performing rights of his copyrighted musical compositions. The sums that Ascap collected were kept in a common fund and a division of the proceeds, less expenses, was made at regular intervals. The division was one-half to the publisher members, and one half to the composer and author members.

Ascap is governed by a board of directors of 24 members. Prior to 1941 they were self-perpetuating, but since then 12 members are selected by the publishers and 12 by the composers and authors. The 12 who represent the publishers determine how the publishers' share of the fund shall be divided among the publishers; the 12 directors who represent the composers and authors perform a like service in allotting their respective shares to the composers and authors. From their determination there is a right of appeal to a Board of Appeal; and from its decision an appeal may be taken to the full board of directors.

The division of the publishers' share among the publisher members is based upon the popularity, earning capacity, seniority and the number and quality of the compositions in a publisher member's catalog. Popularity or vogue is determined by a survey of the compositions played over certain broadcasting chains in a given period.

The composers and authors are classified into a number of groups and grades, 19 in all. Many elements are considered in fixing a composer's classification. Length of membership, quality of compositions, popularity or vogue, earning power for the Society and the like, are duly weighed and the classification determined in the manner provided by the Articles of Association.

When silent pictures were shown in theatres the music was supplied either by a piano player or by an orchestra, which varied in size according to the size and importance of the theatre. The theatre owners refused to pay any royalties or license fee for performing the musical compositions played in the theatres. Ascap brought a number of suits for infringement. In 1923 theatre owners took a blanket license for each theatre and paid Ascap an annual fee based on seating capacity. The form of the license and the fees paid were the result of negotiations between Ascap and trade organizations of theatre operators.

When motion pictures with sound were introduced in 1928, new problems were presented to Ascap and its members. The so-called "talkies" showed the action of the members of the cast and reproduced their speech. Music was employed as part of the background for some of the scenes. At first the sound part of talkies was recorded on phonograph discs which were so operated that they synchronized with the pictures projected on the screen. Later, the speech of the actors, the music and sound effects, were recorded on the "sound track" of the film, which paralleled the pictures, so that when the pictures were projected on the screen the sound was heard by the audience. The Columbia Encyclopedia explains this as follows: "The sound track method (now commonly used)" is one "by which the sound is recorded on a strip of sound cells attached to the film itself and projected with the aid of the photo-electric cell". The development and application of this invention are described as follows: "In 1926 the first successful efforts were made to add sound to sight; in 1927 sound effects and bad music gave way to steadily improving spoken dialogue, and 'The Jazz Singer' with the well known Al Jolson, made a sensation with its spoken sequence; in 1928 the first all talking picture, 'The Lights of New York' appeared."

After the introduction of music on films, motion picture producers began acquiring the catalogs of music publishers, many of them members of Ascap. Ascap's writer members were requested by producers, as the need arose, to license the recording of specific musical compositions on films. From all of this the following arrangements evolved. A member of Ascap, on request, licensed a motion picture producer to record, i. e., to synchronize his musical compositions on the film, but expressly excepted the performing rights of the musical composition. Motion picture producers rented their films to the exhibitors (theatre operators) with a provision in the contract that the film would be exhibited only in a theatre for which Ascap had issued a license to perform publicly for profit the musical composition of Ascap's members. The exhibitor in order to show the film had to obtain a license from Ascap. His contract with the producer barred him from altering or deleting any part of the rented film. Licenses were issued by Ascap to exhibitors in blanket form, good for at least one year, and covering all music of which Ascap held the performing rights. The license fee was based on the seating capacity of the theatre. The charge per theatre per annum was very reasonable. On the basis of 25 compositions per film and 6 shows a day for every day in the year, the charge averaged about one mill per musical composition performance in a 500 seat house. The form of the license, which was in effect during the period in suit, was worked out at conferences of various organizations representing the exhibitors with representatives of Ascap in 1933 and 1934. Over 17,000 motion picture theatres have been licensed by Ascap. Ascap has also issued about 13,000 licenses covering the performing rights of the copyrighted music of its members to hotels and places of entertainment.

The motion picture producers through their ownership of a number of music publishing corporations who were members of Ascap, shared in the funds collected by Ascap from all sources, including the licensing of motion picture theatres. The producer publishers drew down 37 per cent of the 50 per cent of the net proceeds of Ascap's licenses, allotted to publisher members by Ascap. For the 10 years of 1937 to 1947 the total amount of Ascap's annual distributions varied between three million and seven million dollars. Almost every film contained some Ascap music and frequently the majority of the musical compositions on a film were Ascap music. The motion picture producers employed talented composers to write the background music for their motion pictures. These musical compositions were never printed and sold, but as a rule they became the property of the producer's music publishing subsidiary. The Ascap catalog, including foreign societies for which Ascap has acted, is estimated to include a million musical compositions.

A "per piece" license would be commercially impracticable. Exhibitors frequently contract for films before they are produced. The "cue sheets" for the film are made available when the picture is released for exhibition purposes. They list the musical compositions included in the picture. The extra labor and great expense of getting "per piece" licenses for the musical compositions on a film is evident when we consider the film needs of an average neighborhood house, which exhibits two double feature shows weekly. Each feature contains parts or selections from about 20 musical compositions. 80 per cent of the musical compositions on films is Ascap music. That would require 64 "per piece" licenses a week, not including licenses for music which is used on newsreels and short subjects. Exhibitors naturally prefer a blanket license good for a year, covering all musical compositions controlled by Ascap. For a "per piece" license Ascap charges $10.00, plus. For a yearly blanket license the cost to the average neighborhood theatre is less than $100.00. Not a single theatre ever requested a "per piece" license from Ascap.

The motion picture producer, when he obtains from an Ascap member the right to record his musical composition on the film, bargains for that right only and does not obtain the right to perform publicly for profit the composition thus recorded. The producer may pay as little as a few hundred dollars or, in rare cases, as much as $25,000 for the right to record the musical composition—the right to synchronize it with the picture on the film. When the producer acquires that right from one who is not a member of Ascap he insists upon buying also the right to perform the musical composition publicly for profit. The exhibitors complain that the producer should follow the same course when he acquires the film recording rights from a member of Ascap. If he did so, then the exhibitors would not need any license from Ascap.

The producer does not acquire the performing rights from Ascap members, because they are prohibited by their arrangement with Ascap from licensing the performing rights to motion picture producers. The major producers also have a financial interest in the license fees Ascap collects, because those producers own music publishing corporations which are publisher members of Ascap, and thus they share in the one-half of Ascap's net receipts which are allotted to the publisher members.

Ascap's Violation of the Anti-Trust Laws

Almost every part of the Ascap structure, almost all of Ascap's activities in licensing motion picture theatres, involve a violation of the anti-trust laws. Although each member of Ascap is granted by the copyright law a monopoly in the copyrighted work, it is unlawful for the owners of a number of copyrighted works to combine their copyrights by any agreement or arrangement, even if it is for the purpose of thereby better preserving their property rights. Straus v. Amer. Publishers Assoc., 231 U. S. 222; Ring v. Spina, 148 F. 2d 647; Watson v. Buck, 313 U. S. 387 at p. 404; Interstate Circuit Inc. v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208. The result of such a combination "is to add to the monopoly of the copyright in violation of the principle of the patent cases involving tying clauses" (U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, decided by the United States Supreme Court May 3, 1948).

That Ascap is a monopoly, within the language of § 2 of the anti-trust laws, was clearly established at the trial. In United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, at p. 424, the court expressed the view that a ninety per cent share of the market was enough to constitute a monopoly although it was "doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four per cent would be enough; and certainly thirty-three per cent is not". In the same case Judge Learned Hand held that "In order to fall within § 2 (of the Sherman anti-trust act) the monopolist must have both the power to monopolize and the intent to monopolize. * * * Alcoa meant to keep and did keep that complete and exclusive hold upon the ingot market with which it started. That was to 'monopolize' that market, however innocently it otherwise proceeded". In the case at bar it was shown that Ascap in the course of 34 years has built up a monopoly of the music that is used in the production of motion pictures, and in so doing it has violated § 2 of the anti-trust laws. "The authorities support the view that the material consideration in determining whether a monopoly exists is not that prices are raised and that competition actually is excluded but that power exists to raise the prices or to exclude competition when it is desired to do so". American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 328 U. S. 781 at p. 811. Ascap has that power.

The combination of the members of Ascap in transferring all their non-dramatic performing rights to Ascap, is a combination in restraint of interstate trade and commerce, which is prohibited by § 1 of the anti-trust laws. It restrains competition among the members of Ascap in marketing the performing rights of their copyrighted works. And by barring a member from assigning the performing rights to the motion picture producer at the same time that the recording right is assigned, the channels in which the films may be marketed is narrowed to those exhibitors who have a license from Ascap covering the performing rights of the Ascap music synchronized on the film. That result is accomplished through an unlawful combination with the motion picture producers in violation of § 1 of the anti-trust laws. The arrangement by which the producers consent that there be specifically reserved to Ascap the right to lisense the performing rights, is supplemented by a provision in the contract between the distributor of the motion pictures and the exhibitors which limits the public exhibition of the film for profit to theatres which have an Ascap license. The producers and Ascap's members thus combine the monopoly of the copyright of the motion picture with the monopoly of the copyright of the musical compositions, which constitutes an unlawful extension of the statutory monopoly of each and violates the anti-trust laws, as a combination in restraint of trade.

The fact that Ascap is a membership association gives it no immunity. "Arrangements or combinations designed to stifle competition cannot be immunized by adopting a membership device accomplishing that purpose". Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1 at p. 19. Nor is Ascap shielded by its purpose to prevent the infringement of the copyright of its members. The purpose of the Fashion Guild to prevent "style piracy", i. e., the copying of "original creations", did not take it outside the scope of the anti-trust laws. Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, 312 U. S. 457. "The necessities or conveniences of a patentee do not justify any use of the monopoly of the patent to make another monopoly". Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661 at p. 681.

Many of the cases which have held that patent owners may not combine their patents so as to extend the monopoly of the one patent by the monopoly of the other, state the legal principles which prevent two copyright owners from doing a similar thing.

The leading cases, which hold that such a combination of patents constitutes an illegal restraint of interstate commerce, are reviewed in a recent decision, United States v. Line Material Co., et al., 333 U. S. 287. There Mr. Justice Reed wrote for the Court as follows, p. 315:

"The mere fact that a patentee uses his patent as a whole or part consideration in a contract by which he and another or other patentees in the same patent field arrange for the practice of any patent involved in such a way that royalties or other earnings or benefit from the patent or patents are shared among the patentees, parties to the agreement, subjects that contract to the prohibitions of the Sherman Act whenever the selling price, for things produced under a patent involved, is fixed by the contract or a license, authorized by the contract."

The combination of the authors, composers and publishers in the Ascap organization, their obligations to the association, the rights they conferred on Ascap and the reservations they made in their arrangements with the motion picture producers, have given Ascap the power to fix the prices at which the performing rights are sold to the exhibitors. The members share in the license fees collected through the unlawful combination. By pooling their rights and pooling the license fees derived therefrom, each in some way shares in the copyrighted work of the others. This has all the evils of "block booking" which was analyzed and condemned in U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, 66 F. Supp. 323 at pp. 348-349; and in the opinion of the U. S. Supreme Court May 3, 1948.

That Ascap was moderate in its demands in 1934 and considerate in the prices it fixed after negotiation with the exhibitors, does not detract from the fact that as a monopoly Ascap had the power to increase those prices to an unreasonable figure by demanding higher license fees, to the financial gain of its members. Ascap showed to what extent that power could be exercised when in August, 1947, it attempted to increase the license fees as much as 200 per cent to 1500 per cent. This price fixing power coupled with the combination of the members copyrights constitutes an unlawful restraint of trade.

Where the power to fix prices is created by an agreement among those who control a substantial part of an industry and who should do business on a competitive basis in a free market, the reasonableness of the prices or the good intentions of the combining units would not absolve them from the charge that they have violated the anti-trust laws. United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U. S. 392. In the Trenton Potteries case the court said: "The power to fix prices, whether reasonably exercised or not, involves power to control the market and to fix arbitrary and unreasonable prices. * * * Agreements which create such potential power may well be held to be in themselves unreasonable or unlawful restraints, without the necessity of minute inquiry whether a particular price is reasonable or unreasonable as fixed". The above was quoted in the opinion of Mr. Justice Douglas in U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150 at p. 213. See also Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. U. S., 309 U. S. 436.

Damages

The right to perform a copyrighted musical composition publicly for profit has some intrinsic value. It is one of the rights that a copyright owner receives under § 1(e) of the Copyright Law. As the result of negotiations in 1933-4, Ascap and the exhibitors who acted through their trade organizations, arrived at a schedule of rates which were very reasonable and were based on the seating capacity of the theatre operated by the exhibitor. The contract was a blanket contract covering all Ascap music on films shown at the theatre.

In 1947 Ascap tried to increase those rates, using one filled capacity house at the highest established admission prices as the annual charge for the license. This new proposed rate, when applied to some theatres, meant an increase of 1500 per cent; for other theatres the increase was about 200 per cent. The exhibitors protested and a new set of rates, based on the old formula of a per seat basis, was approved. This resulted in an average increase of about 25 per cent or 30 per cent over the old 1934 rates, the increase to be effective as of March 1948.

At the trial, plaintiffs did not attempt to prove that the 1934 rates, which cover the period of this suit, were excessive. Nor did plaintiffs attempt to prove that a proper rate would be. Plaintiffs' position was that they should not have been obliged to obtain a license for the public performance rights from Ascap; that the copyright owner of the musical compositions when he sold the synchronization rights to the motion picture producer should have included the public performance rights in the deal; and that if that course had been followed the exhibitor would not have been required to pay anything more to the producer than he pays as the rental for the film. Plaintiffs argue that copyright owners who are not members of Ascap include the public performing rights when they license a motion picture producer to record a musical composition on a film; and that the producer does not have to pay the copyright owner any additional amount for the performing rights of the musical composition. The second half of this statement is disproved by the testimony of Harry Fox.

The acquisition of the synchronization rights from the copyright owners of musical compositions is generally arranged by Mr. Fox, who has operated an agency for that purpose since 1937. He testified that when he is asked by a producer to obtain the rights for a musical composition which is to be incorporated in a motion picture he gets in touch with the owner of the copyright. Apparently he has the records and the organization to do that work. If the copyright of the musical production is owned by a person who is not a member of Ascap, Fox tells the owner that both the synchronization rights and the right to publicly perform the music on the film are to be acquired by the producer. When the producer wants the performance rights as well as synchronization rights, the figure is a little higher. There is no separate figure fixed for the performance rights and another figure for the synchronization rights, in making the deal. Fox tells the copyright owner that he has to include the right to perform with the synchronization rights; and the owner of the copyright usually takes that into consideration in fixing a lump sum price. In most cases the owners consider the performance rights as having some value.

If the owner of the copyright is a member of Ascap, Mr. Fox does not include the performance rights in acquiring the synchronization rights for the producer. The producers know, of course, that the performing rights have a value distinct from the synchronization rights, because of their ownership of music publishing corporations, which are members of Ascap, and through which the producers derive considerable revenue from Ascap's separate licensing of the performance rights to the exhibitors. If the producer lost that source of revenue and also had to pay the copyright owner for the performing rights, the producer would try to pass that extra cost on to the exhibitor. Mr. Brandt who operates 73 of plaintiffs' theatres, admitted that the producer might use this as another argument to get increased rentals; but he expressed the opinion that if the exhibitor did not have to pay a license fee for the performing rights, he would not have to pay any increased film rental to the producer. Brandt based his belief on his feeling that the exhibitors were already paying as much as they could carry. But the load the exhibitors carry includes the amount they pay to Ascap. It is not at all likely that the producers would absorb the cost of the performing rights.

Unquestionably it would be a simpler and a proper arrangement for the owner of the copyright to deal directly with the producer on both the synchronization rights and the performing rights, and thus have the motion picture producer acquire both rights at the same time, so that he in turn could rent the film without requiring the exhibitor to obtain the performance rights from Ascap. But that in some way the value of the performing rights would be claimed by the copyright owner and eventually would be passed on to the exhibitor, I have no doubt at all. The ultimate result would be that the exhibitor would not be separately charged for the performance rights, as he now is through Ascap, but he would be charged for those rights in the total rental he would pay for the film.

The charges made the exhibitor for the performing rights in the formula used from 1934-1947 were in my opinion fair and reasonable. The license fee negotiations were between the two organized groups; Ascap on the one hand and the exhibitors' trade associations on the other. The amount charged was paid, year after year, for 13 years, although the contracts contained 30 day cancellation clauses. Plaintiffs submitted no proof that the performing rights were worth any less than the amount charged under the blanket contract of Ascap. I am satisfied that plaintiffs were not injured by Ascap's violations of the anti-trust laws for the period covered by this lawsuit.

Even if the court should presume injury to plaintiffs from Ascap's violations of the statute, there would still be no evidence before this court on which it could approximate plaintiffs' damages. Plaintiffs got something under the Ascap contracts. What they got, the performing rights, had some value. Plaintiffs admit that a copyright owner could separately grant the performing rights. The exhibitors themselves agreed with Ascap as to what their value was. Plaintiffs can not recover unless they were led to pay "more than the worth" of the performing rights. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390. They must show that they were injured. Twin Ports Oil Co. v. Pure Oil Co., 119 F. 2d 472; Northwestern Oil Co. v. Socony Vacuum Co., 138 F. 2d 967.

To apply the principle of forfeiture plus a 200 per cent penalty, for which plaintiffs in effect contend, would be to go far beyond any sanctions the Supreme Court has approved in a private right of action for a violation of the anti-trust laws. The anti-trust laws have been liberally construed. In prosecutions and civil proceedings instituted by the government, the Supreme Court has condemned monopolies and contracts and combinations in restraint of trade. In suits on a private right of action brought by a person claiming that he has been injured by another's violations of the anti-trust laws, the high court has applied a very liberal rule as to the quantum of proof on the issue of damages and has held that the amount thereof need only be approximated, although they should not be the subject of speculation or guesswork. Bigelow v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures, 327 U. S. 251. In the case at bar there is no evidence which affords a sufficient basis for approximating plaintiffs' damages, assuming plaintiffs have been injured. No standards of comparison are given to determine if there was any overcharge. No experts were called on the question of the value of the performing rights. Sheldon v. Metro Goldwyn Corp., 309 U. S. 390 at p. 404. In the case at bar the judge is both court and jury. The same rules that should guide a jury in estimating damages should be followed by the judge. In Bigelow v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures (supra at p. 264) Chief Justice Stone wrote:

> "In such a case, even where the defendant by his own wrong has prevented a more precise computation, the jury may not render a verdict based on speculation or guesswork. But the jury may make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data, and render its verdict accordingly."

The Supreme Court in applying the equitable principle of "unclean hands" has ruled that the aid of the Court should be denied a holder of a patent in an infringement suit when he has misused his patent and has violated the anti-trust laws. The patent owner is barred from enforcing his patent rights, as long as he continues in his violation of the anti-trust laws. B. B. Chemical Co. v. Ellis, 314 U. S. 495; Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co., 314 U. S. 488. The court has also recognized the right of the alleged infringer to counterclaim for damages, based on the private right of action section (§ 15) of the anti-trust laws. Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661 at p. 671. But there is no case that has come to my attention where it has been held that the licensee of a patent is entitled to recover back threefold from the owner of the patent the license fees or royalties he has paid, because the patent owner violated the anti-trust laws in his use of the patent.

Plaintiffs assert that the amount of their damages and the total of the license fees paid are the same, just as a matter of "coincidence".[1] They add that the "coincidence" is due to the fact (a further assumption on their part) that if they did not have to pay Ascap for the performing right they would not have to pay any one for them, and they would get the performing rights for nothing.

Plaintiffs also argue that since Ascap violated the anti-trust law, the license which Ascap granted to the exhibitor was illegal, that therefore the defendant Ascap was never entitled to collect any license fees, and further that the license fees represent the amount of plaintiffs' damages. This argument overlooks the fact that Ascap acquired legal title to the performing rights by assignment from each of Ascap's members. If Ascap had as such assignee collected for each member a "per piece" license fee for the performing rights, and in effect acted only as a collecting agency, there would have been no violation of the law. The blanket licenses were a violation of the anti-trust law and were issued pursuant to an illegal combination. Apart from the statute, the license agreements were not inherently vicious and unlawful. The license agreements were unenforceable because of their statutory illegality. The exhibitor got something of value and received what he paid for. The license fees paid were received on completed transactions.

[1] Plaintiffs have paid about $300,000 in license fees for the period in suit.

Unless an exhibitor has been injured in his business or property by Ascap's violations no actionable wrong has been done to him. The conduct of Ascap may be a public wrong for which penalties and other remedies are afforded the government under the statute. But no private right of action arises unless a plaintiff is injured in his property or business by the violations of Ascap. True, the cases hold that "The constant tendency of the courts is to find some way in which damages can be awarded where a wrong has been done" and that "difficulty of ascertainment is no longer confused with right of recovery" (Straus v. Victor Talking Mch. Co. supra.) "While the damages may not be determined by mere speculation or guess, it will be enough if the evidence show the extent of the damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference, although the result be only approximate". Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., 282 U. S. 555. That relates to the damages flowing from the injury.

None of the cases hold that those who have paid a monopolist a price for its product, may claim that the extent of their damage is the full amount paid. The amount of any overcharge may be recovered, but the purchaser should offer some evidence from which the trial court may reasonably approximate the overcharge. The fact that the thing sold is something intangible, a right instead of merchandise, does not alter the requirement of the anti-trust laws that the plaintiff must show that he has been injured. The burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that part of his case by a fair preponderance of the evidence. When it comes to proving the extent of his damage the burden a plaintiff carries in an anti-trust action is lighter; all he need prove are the basic facts from which the court may reasonably approximate the amount of the damages. A plaintiff does not satisfy that burden by offering no proof at all, except what he paid the violator.

Injunctive Relief

The conduct of Ascap in notifying the theatre exhibitors in August 1947 that the rates for an Ascap license would be increased to such an extent that some theatres would be required to pay 15 times as much as the license fees under which they had been operating since 1934, is an indication of the power that Ascap has unlawfully acquired by its own arrangements with its members and by their arrangements with the motion picture producers. The threatened use of that power to demand unfair and exhorbitant license fees furnishes sufficient grounds for the exercise by the court of its ordinary equitable powers to prevent any threatened injury to plaintiffs. The Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. § 26) "does not go farther than to give an injunction to private persons against threatened loss" (Mr. Justice Holmes in Fleitman v. Welsbach Co., 240 U. S. 27 at p. 29). To avail himself of § 26 a plaintiff must show threatened injury for which he is without adequate remedy and for which a court of equity is able to provide a remedy. (Dissenting opinion of Chief Justice Stone in Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U. S. 439 at p. 475). The Clayton Act "gives to private parties a right to relief by injunction in any court of the United States against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the anti-trust laws, under the conditions and principles regulating the granting of such relief by courts of equity" Duplex Co. v. Deering, 254 U. S. 443 at pp. 464-5. It has been held that prior to the passage of the Clayton Act in 1914, "a private party could not maintain a suit for injunction" under the Sherman Act. Duplex Co. v. Deering, 254 U. S. 443, 465.

In the case at bar Ascap and various groups or organizations of exhibitors in February 1948 arrived at a new set of rates which represented an average increase of 25 per cent to 30 per cent over the 1934 rates. The August 1947 demands were abandoned by Ascap. Plaintiffs have been offered the same type of contract (a long term contract) that other exhibitors accepted in February 1948. Does this remove the need for injunctive relief? I have concluded that it does not. Plaintiffs are entitled to have this court exercise its equitable powers to prevent a recurrence of what happened in August 1947 and to have their rights adjudicated and protected by a decree of the court, because the unlawful arrangements between Ascap and its members, and between the members and the motion picture producers, is a continuing one and is a clear violation of the anti-trust laws.

The Defense of "Unclean Hands"

Defendants have pleaded as a special defense that a great number of the plaintiffs are themselves a monopoly and therefore are barred from equitable relief on the doctrine of "unclean hands". Brandt, who owns a majority interest in 53 theatres also buys films for 90 other theatres. The Supreme Court has condemned combinations of exhibitors and has pointed out the evil practices of such combinations and the unlawful advantages they have been able to obtain through their practice of group buying. U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co. et al., 323 U. S. 174; U. S. v. L. C. Griffith et al. (decided by the Supreme Court May 3, 1948); Schine Chain Theatres Inc. et al. v. U. S. (decided by the Supreme Court May 3, 1948). Brandt's testimony indicates that he has obtained some of those advantages. But the alleged anti-trust violations of a plaintiff in this case cannot properly be said to have an "immediate and necessary relation to the equity that he seeks in respect of the matter in litigation". Equity applies the doctrine of unclean hands "only for such violations of conscience as in some measure effect the equitable relation between the parties in respect of something brought before the court for adjudication." Keystone Co. v. Excavator Co., 290 U. S. 240 at p. 245. The methods employed by plaintiff exhibitors, who negotiated for the films with the distributors, are only remotely related to the issue in this litigation, which concerns the defendants' practices in licensing the exhibitors to perform publicly for profit the music that is synchronized on the film. The special defense of "unclean hands" is therefore dismissed.

Attorneys' Fees

I have concluded that plaintiffs have not shown any injury from defendants' violations of the anti-trust laws and that, even if we presume injury, plaintiffs have not proved any thing from which the court could approximate the damages. It follows that plaintiffs are not entitled to a money judgment and therefore cannot be awarded "a reasonable attorney's fee" under 15 U. S. C. § 15. "The court cannot properly award it except as an incident to the successful prosecution of a law action for recovery of damages based on a violation of the anti-trust laws". Allen Bradley Co. v. Local No. 3, 51 F. Supp. 36 at p. 40. In Decorative Stone Co. v. Building Trades Council, 23 F. 2d 426, it was held that "the allowance of an attorney's fee * * * is incidental to the statutory right to damages, and was properly denied in the equity proceedings", brought under 15 U. S. C. § 26. Even though plaintiffs have made out a case for equitable relief under 15 U. S. C. § 26 they may not recover "a reasonable attorneys' fee" because they have failed to establish their claim for damages under 15 U. S. C. § 15.

Plaintiffs' claims for money damages and for a reasonable attorney's fee under § 15 are denied. Plaintiffs' claims for injunctive relief under § 26 are granted to the extent indicated in the Court's Conclusions of Law.[3] Settle a judgment and decree accordingly.

---

[3] "XXVII. Plaintiffs are entitled to injunctive relief under Title 15 U. S. C. § 26, as follows:

(a) Directing ASCAP to divest itself with all reasonable speed of all rights of public performance for profit through the exhibition of motion picture films, as musical compositions which have been synchronized with motion picture films, and to assign said performance rights to the owners of the copyright of said musical compositions;

(b) Restraining ASCAP from obtaining the right of public performance of any musical composition synchronized with motion picture films when such musical composition is performed publicly for profit in conjunction with the exhibition of such motion picture films;

(c) Restraining ASCAP's members from refusing to grant to motion picture producers the right to publicly perform for profit through the exhibition of motion picture film, all musical compositions which they allow motion picture producers to synchronize with motion picture film;

(d) Restraining ASCAP's members from licensing, except to motion picture producers, the right of public performance for profit through the exhibition of motion picture films, of musical compositions synchronized with motion picture films;

(e) Restraining ASCAP and its members from conspiring with motion picture producers for the purpose of including a clause in contracts issued by producers to exhibitors directly or indirectly requiring exhibitors to obtain a license from ASCAP as a condition to the exhibition of the licensed pictures."

[¶ 62,289] Mayer Bros. Poultry Farms v. Ely Meltzer, individually and as president of the Poultry Shochtim Union of Greater New York, Local 370, an unincorporated association, and George Latterman, impleaded, etc.

In the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, First Department. Nos. 1172, 1173, 1174. June 30, 1948.

Norris-LaGuardia Act

Restraint of Trade by Labor Union—State Regulation Affecting Interstate Commerce—Concurrent Federal and State Jurisdiction.—A secondary boycott against poultry slaughtered in another locality is an unlawful restraint of trade. The Norris-LaGuardia Act, as read in connection with the Sherman and Clayton Acts, does not preclude all state antitrust regulation, but rather leaves exclusively to the state courts the granting of injunctive relief from restraint of trade by labor organizations. The Norris-LaGuardia Act does not prevent a New York court from issuing an injunction, permissible under the New York Anti-Injunction Act, against unlawful restraint of trade by a union, merely because such restraint occurs in interstate commerce.

See the Norris-LaGuardia Act, Vol. 1, ¶ 706, and the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1280.275.

For plaintiff: Newman & Bisco, Allan Rogow, George B. Balamut and Judson W. Pearl, New York, N. Y.

For defendants: Ashe & Rifkin, David I. Ashe, New York, N. Y.

[Statement of Case]

Van Voorhis, J.: The plaintiff, in the state of New Jersey, is engaged in the business of slaughtering, freezing, packaging and selling kosher poultry, according to allegations in the complaint. It is further alleged that during the latter part of 1947, plaintiff changed its policy of disposing of its frozen poultry through caterers, and other institutional buyers, and prepared to sell exclusively to retail kosher butcher stores and frozen food stores. This entailed packaging its products in individual packages, for eventual purchase and consumption by the public. Plaintiff took steps to enter and develop the New York City market, including the leasing of office space in the City of New York, contracting for advertising, hiring a sales manager and salesmen for said territory, obtaining trucking service, and arranging with retailers for the installation of suitable freezing units to preserve the frozen poultry while awaiting sale in their stores. The complaint alleges that a substantial expenditure of money was made for these purposes, that its frozen poultry actually was sold to numerous kosher retail butcher stores and frozen food stores, and that there was general retailer and consumer acceptance of its products in this city. Defendant has picketed the retailers handling plaintiff's products, in an endeavor to monopolize the market for the benefit of operatives in New York City by excluding all poultry that has been killed elsewhere, and is alleged to have been so successful in doing so that all kosher butcher shops and retail stores in the City of New York have either discontinued or refused to handle plaintiff's poultry.

This action has been brought for an injunction, to restrain the defendant union from interfering with the plaintiff's business by preventing the kosher retail butcher shops and retail food stores in New York City from buying its frozen poultry.

[Issues on Appeal]

Three appeals by plaintiff are before this Court: (1) from an order dismissing the complaint on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant union; (2) from an order dismissing the complaint on similar grounds as against the individual defendants Ely Meltzer and George Lederman; and (3) from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction for the relief demanded in the complaint. The order dismissing the complaint as against the individual defendants should be affirmed without further comment. The rest of this opinion is concerned with whether the complaint was rightfully dismissed as against the union, and whether plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction against defendant union should have been granted.

The defendant union is known as Poultry Shochtim Union of Greater New York, Local 370 (hereinafter described as the defendant), which is affiliated with Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, A. F. of L. "Shochtim" is the plural of "shochet", who is a Hebrew religious official, certified in writing by one or more rabbis as being qualified to slaughter animals in accordance with the ritual requirements and precepts of the Hebrew Orthodox faith.

Plaintiff's poultry is slaughtered and frozen in New Jersey by a duly authorized shochet, and is conceded to be kosher. There is consequently no religious question in this case. It has been stated that in order to conform to the Talmud, meat and poultry must be slaughtered in the same city in which it is consumed, but manifestly no such tenet is recognized by the Orthodox Hebrew community, nor does such a contention appear to be urged seriously in the affidavits. It is not contended that the mere circumstance that meats or poultry are frozen deprives them of the religious sanction to which they are otherwise entitled.

[Absence of Labor Dispute]

There is no labor dispute between these parties. The controversy involves no existing nor prospective agreement concerning employment, wages, hours or working conditions. The defendant is not seeking to enroll plaintiff's employees as members of its union, which would be impossible, in any event, inasmuch as defendant's membership[s] are required to be New York City operatives, whereas plaintiff's poultry is slaughtered in New Jersey. There is no question concerning the handling of nonunion products nor of inter-union rivalry. Plaintiff's employees are members of locals affiliated with the same parent union as the defendant. The shochet who slaughters plaintiff's poultry in New Jersey is a member at large of the same parent union. It is not necessary to consider whether, or to what extent, it would alter the result if some of these circumstances were absent. This is not a labor dispute under the broadest construction of that term.

The purpose of defendant's activities which are sought to be enjoined, as alleged in the complaint and moving affidavits and admitted in an affidavit by defendant's president, is to keep away from the New York City market all frozen kosher poultry slaughtered elsewhere. Plaintiff's frozen products had been making inroads in this area, and were evidently resulting in reductions in prices to consumers and in the quantity of poultry slaughtered in New York City. Defendant's aim is to limit this market to poultry which is slaughtered in this city, so as to obtain better wages due to a more favorable economic climate than would otherwise prevail.

The defendant contends that since wages may indirectly be affected, this is a legitimate labor objective. It is true that the pay of the shochtim from their employers varies with the quantity of animals which they kill, and that their remuneration is affected by the number of fowl that they slaughter. This is not different in principle from the basis on which any pieceworker is paid, and it does not transform into a labor matter every economic question affecting the volume of the employer's business. The defendant's contention overlooks the fact that there is no dispute concerning wage scales. It does not appear that any demands for a higher rate of pay have been made against the employers of defendant's members, let alone against plaintiff.

[Private Embargo]

A private embargo to prevent foodstuffs from entering New York City is not a lawful objective, and is not made so by using procedures which would be legitimate if directed toward the accomplishment of other purposes. The effectiveness of this embargo is attested by the number of kosher retail stores enumerated in plaintiff's moving affidavits which have discontinued buying plaintiff's products, since defendant has been picketing their places of business. The effect of the picketing was drastically to curtail the sales of all of the wares of these stores, and not merely their sales of plaintiff's poultry. Many of their regular customers would not cross a picket line, regardless of the nature or justice of the dispute. It is uncontradicted that these and other stores were told that they must return all of plainitff's products, and accept and sell no more of them. The effect was what had been planned and expected. The stores which had taken plaintiff's products returned or disposed of them, and discontinued all future purchases. Word spread throughout the trade to prospective customers that if they handled plaintiff's products they would be similarly treated. Moving affidavits by retailers have been submitted verifying these facts.

Except under the police power, even the legislatures of the states are not permitted to erect embargoes, which is a prerogative of the Congress alone, and even that is forbidden except against foreign trade (Constitution of the United States, Article I, sections 8, 10). If the courts were to tolerate the erection of effective barriers of this sort by employers or employees whenever either shall think it to be to their economic interest to do so, what has been done in this case respecting poultry could be done with regard to other kinds of food or merchandise. In the case of foodstuffs alone, the disastrous consequences of such embargoes need not be left to the imagination, in a community which is as independent upon outside sources of supply as the City of New York. That is the interest of the consuming public in this issue. The law does not ignore these realities.

The complaint has been dismissed, and a temporary injunction refused by Special Term upon the ground that, regardless of whether a labor dispute exists, as defined by state law, the Supreme Court of the United States has held in Bakery Drivers Local v. Wohl (315 U. S. 760) and the Court of Appeals in People v. Muller (286 N. Y. 281), that peaceful picketing unaccompanied by false statements, is protected under all circumstances by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States guaranteeing the right of freedom of speech. On appeal, respondent further relies upon Allen Bradley Co. v. Union (325 U. S. 797). That case held that it is in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act for labor unions, and their members, to further their own interests as wage earners by combining with manufacturers, and other employers, to exclude out-of-state competition. The injunction which had been granted by the District Court was limited, however, so as not to enjoin the union from doing this by itself without complicity with an employer or employers. These cases require further discussion of these problems.

[Allen Bradley Case Distinguished]

Allen Bradley Co. v. Union bears considerable resemblance to the present case in so far as the facts are concerned. It is urged that the refusal by the Supreme Court of the United States to enjoin alone from engaging in the activities which were prohibited if performed in combination with non-labor groups, precludes the issuance of an injunction against the defendant union and its members in the case at bar. We have arrived at a different conclusion.

In the first place, there was no controversy over this point in the Allen-Bradley case, since the only activities there sought to be enjoined were carried on by the union in conjunction with employers; in the decision of the issue it was not necessary to consider what would have been the result if the union had acted alone, and the employers had stood aside as silent co-beneficiaries, participating only in the fruits of the enterprise.

In the second place, the Allen-Bradley suit was brought under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as modified by the Clayton Act, and as further modified by the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The Supreme Court recognized that after the adoption of the Clayton Act, but before the Norris-LaGuardia Act, secondary boycotts were held to be in violation of the Sherman and the Clayton Acts. (Loewe v. Lawler, 208 U. S. 274, 303-304; Duplex Co. v. Deering, 254 U. S. 443; Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Assn., 274 U. S. 37.) The opinion in the Allen Bradley case continues:

> "Again the unions went to Congress. They protested against this Court's interpretation, repeating the arguments they had made against application of the Sherman Act to them. Congress adopted their viewpoint, at least in large part, and in order to escape the effect of the Duplex and Bedford decisions, passed the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 47 Stat. 70." (325 U. S. at p. 805).

It thus appears that the anti-trust laws, as at present interpreted by the United States Supreme Court, have been limited and restricted by the Congress in their effect so as to remove from their scope the type of restraint of trade represented by the secondary boycotting which has been held to be in restraint of trade in the Loewe, Duplex and Bedford decisions. This exclusion from the impact of these Federal statutes, the first of which was enacted to give the Federal courts jurisdiction to apply the common law doctrines against monopoly and restraint of trade where interstate commerce was involved (United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271, C. C. A. 6, per Wm H. Taft, J.), does not have the effect of abrogating such rules in so far as they have been adopted and remain in force in the several states.

The secondary boycott decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, before the adoption of the Norris-LaGuardia Act emphasize that such activities are in restraint of trade, and would have continued to be held so by the Federal courts under the anti-trust laws, unless their jurisdiction under said acts over that phase of the subject had been withdrawn. This withdrawal has left in force the statute and common law of the states upon the same subject, which in many instances antedated the adoption of the Sherman Act, and the power of the state courts to enforce their own law remains, even in cases involving interstate commerce, where the Federal Government has not occupied the entire field (Standard Oil Co. v. Tennessee, 217 U. S. 413, 421). In that case the court overruled the following contention (p. 431):

"It is said that as the only illegal purpose that can be attributed to this agreement is that of protecting the defendant's oil against interstate competition, it could not be made the subject of punishment by the State; that the offense, if any, is against interstate commerce alone."

[State Regulation Not Excluded]

The question whether state jurisdiction has been ousted is accustomed to arise where a state has imposed a burden upon interstate commerce (e. g., State of Missouri ex rel. Barrett v. Kansas Natural Gas Co., 265 U. S. 298), not where, as here, the state law prevents burdens from being laid upon commerce, whether interstate or intrastate (S. C. Highway Dept v. Barnwell Bros., 303 U. S. 177, 189; Parker v. Brown, 317 U. S. 341). An intention of Congress to exclude states from asserting their police power must be clearly manifested (Allen Bradley Local v. Board, 315 U. S. 740).

The present case involves interstate commerce, inasmuch as the frozen poultry is imported into New York City from New Jersey; but the circumstances that it comes from without the state is coincidental, inasmuch as the barrier which the defendant has established applies equally to poultry slaughtered in Westchester County, for example, or in any of the other counties in this State.

In Leader Theatre Corp. v. Randforce Amusement Corp., 186 Misc. 280, aff'd 273 App. Div. 844, there was occasion to consider the statute of section 340 of the General Business Law, outlawing contracts or combinations for monopoly or in restraint of trade, in the light of the Federal anti-trust laws. It was states at the Trial Term, per Botein, J. (pp. 283-4):

"It is now well established that States, under their police power, can enact and implement legislation which affects interstate commerce, when such commerce has significant local consequences (see S. C. Highway Dept. v. Barnwell Bros., 303 U. S. 177; Duckworth v. Arkansas, 314 U. S. 390; Parker v. Brown, 317 U. S. 341; U. S. Underwriters Assn., 322 U. S. 533, 548). Of course, State legislation which conflicts with Federal legislation (e. g., McGoldrick v. Gulf Oil Corp., 308 U. S. 414; Cloverleaf Co. v. Patterson, 315 U. S. 148, or which discriminates against interstate commerce, is unconstitutional (The Federalist, No. 41; Di Santo v. Pennsylvania, 273 U. S. 34; Hartford Indemnity Co. v. Illinois, 298 U .S. 155; Robbins v. Shelby Taxing District, 120 U. S. 489, 494; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622). And State legislation purporting to affect interstate commerce is likewise ineffective if such state legislation has been specifically precluded by Congressional action. * * * More particularly, the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained the applicability of a State antitrust act while the Sherman Act was in effect, although that State act affected interstate commerce (Standard Oil Co. v. Tennessee, 217 U. S. 433). Indeed, the joint applicability of the Sherman Act and State antitrust legislation has scarcely ever been questioned (Paine Lumber Co. v. Neal, 212 F. 259, affd. 214 F. 82, affd. 244 U. S. 459; Straus v. Am. Publishers' Assn., 231 U. S. 222)."

[Interpretation of State Act]

It is not deemed that Section 676-a of the New York State Civil Practice Act was intended to have the effect of amending the substantive state law (common or statute) respecting restraint of trade and kindred subjects which, in the Allen Bradley Co. case, the United States Supreme Court ascribed to the Norris-LaGuardia Act (47 Stat. 70, 15 U. S. C. §§ 101-115) as amending the Federal antitrust laws. That there is a difference in the judicial construction of the two acts is illustrated by Bakery Drivers Local v. Wohl, where the Court of Appeals (284 N. Y. 788) held that the situation there presented did not fall within Section 876-a, which was recognized by the United States Supreme Court to be a final adjudication upon construction of the state statute (315 U. S. 769, 775), but it was nevertheless held to be a labor matter as a Federal question.

In Marsich v. Eastman Kodak Co., 244 App. Div. 295, aff'd without opinion 269 N. Y. 621, it was stated by the Appellate Division (pp. 296-7):

"A Federal decision contrary in principle is not binding upon a State court in respect of a State statute or of a domestic doctrine not involving a Federal question. (People ex rel. Central Park, etc., R. R. Co. v. Willcox, 194 N. Y. 383, 386, per Cullen, Ch. J.; Johnston v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 242 id. 381, 386, per Pound, J.; People ex rel. Rice v. Graves, 242 App. Div. 128.)

"In considering the matter here involved, as was said in a similar situation, 'We may eliminate the Federal Anti-Trust Laws' (Barns v. Dairymen's League Co-operative Assn., Inc., 220 App. Div. 624, 635), and, as a consequence, the decisions thereunder. The enforcement of rights under such Federal statutes may be had in the Federal courts only. (Barns v. Dairymen's League Co-operative Assn., Inc., supra, p. 635; Eastman Kodak Co. v. Powers Film Products, Inc., 189 App. Div. 556, 560.)

"Federal cases interpreting Federal statutes, or relating to interstate situations, are not controlling when there are State decisions relating to the State statute invoked which may, in some respect, place upon a State statute an interpretation different from that placed by the Federal courts upon a different though somewhat similar Federal statute."

[Secondary Boycott]

The New York courts have held repeatedly that labor unions engaged in the conduct of secondary boycotts may be enjoined even where, unlike the present case, they were conducted in aid of a legitimate primary labor objective (Auburn Draying Co. v. Wardwell, 227 N. Y. 1; Canepa v. Doe, 277 N. Y. 52; Opera on Tour, Inc. v. Weber, 285 N. Y. 348; Scharf v. Doe, 247 App. Div. 882; Chapman v. Doe, 255 App. Div. 893; Gulf Oil Corp. v. Smallman, 270 App. Div. 129; Jacobs v. Eisen, 272 App. Div. 946; Brennan v. Eisen, 188 Misc. 672, aff'd 272 App. Div. 799; Elizabeth Arden Sales Corporation v. Hawley, 176 Misc. 821, aff'd 261 App. Div. 953).

The following cases held secondary boycotts to be in violation of Section 722 (2) of the Penal Law: People v. Bellows, 281 N. Y. 67; People v. Fleishman, 36 N. Y. S. (2d) 559; Miller v. Tobin, 189 Misc. 296.

To a limited extent, under facts different from those involved herein, secondary boycotts have been allowed in People v. Muller, 286 N. Y. 281 and Goldfinger v. Feintuch, 276 N. Y. 281, but we believe, without reversing the general rule (Enterprise Window Cleaning Co., Inc., v. Slowuta, decided May 10, 1948, App. Div., First Department.

In the present instance, unlike most of the other secondary boycott cases, no question is involved of picketing other firms for handling goods of non-union manufacture, nor is any other kind of labor dispute at issue affecting the manufacturer. It is not disputed that plaintiff's frozen poultry has been slaughtered by an employee who is a member at large of defendant's parent union, and who would be ineligible for membership in defendant union due to his place of occupation in New Jersey.

[Freedom of Speech]

It remains to consider the effect of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution (which has been held to include the First Amendment) respecting free speech. Picketing was held to be akin to free speech in Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U. S. 88 and in Carlson v. California, 310 U. S. 106, in striking down a state statute and a municipal ordinance prohibiting all picketing in every kind of labor dispute. These were held to infringe labor's form of utterance to make its position known in legitimate labor matters. In A. F. of L. v. Swing, 312 U. S. 321, it was ruled that the constitutional guaranty of freedom of discussion is violated by the common law policy of a state limiting peaceful picketing by labor unions to cases in which the controversy is between the employer and his own employees, and in Bakery Drivers Local v. Wohl, 315 U. S. 769, the constitutional guaranty was applied to what was held to have been in reality a labor dispute, although one which fell outside of the definition of Section 876-a of the New York Civil Practice Act. In none of these cases were the facts at all similar to those at bar. In none of them, as here, was the United States Supreme Court dealing with an unlawul objective, one which is not a labor objective at all.

It is clear that, although partaking in some respects of the nature of free speech, the other aspects of picketing were not ignored. Thus in the Wohl case, in the prevailing opinion it is said (p. 775):

"A state is not required to tolerate in all places and all circumstances even peaceful picketing by an individual."

Likewise in his concurring opinion, Justice Douglas said (p. 776):

"Picketing by an organized group is more than free speech, since it involves patrol of a particular locality and since the very presence of a picket line may induce action of one kind or another, quite irrespective of the nature of the ideas which are being disseminated. Hence those aspects of picketing make it the subject of restrictive regulation."

Ludwig Teller in an article entitled "Picketing and Free Speech" (1942), 56 Harvard Law Review 180, says (198):

"The Allen Bradley case, in which the Supreme Court sustained the Wisconsin court's injunction restraining picketing of employees' homes, cannot be reconciled with the identification of picketing with free speech."

He adds (p. 203): "Freedom of speech has never been conceived of as a means of carrying on economic warfare by private groups, one against the other," and further adds (p. 201) that often "the picket depends upon the observance by union members of the rule—either formally embodied or tacitly understood—forbidding the crossing of picket lines."

These conclusions have recently been upheld in carefully considered opinions by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts (Colonial Press, Inc. v. Ellis, 321 Mass. 497 [13 LABOR CASES ¶ 63,914]; Seavall v. Demers, — Mass. —, 76 N. E. (2d) 12).

In Carpenters Union v. Ritter's Cafe, 315 U. S. 722, the court expressly recognized that picketing is a form of economic pressure and not alone the exercise of free speech.

The matter is summed up by E. Merrick Dodd in an article entitled "Picketing and Free Speech: a Dissent" in 56 Harvard Law Review, 513, 518:

"The right to free speech is not absolute; and the right to indulge in conduct which is speech and something more is still less absolute, as Mr. Justice Frankfurter indicated in Carpenters & Joiners Union of America, Local No. 213 v. Ritter's Cafe. But a prohibition of picketing is under some circumstances an infringement of the right of free speech."

[Unlawful Purpose]

Controlling features in this case are that the purpose of defendant's picketing to erect an embargo against importation of frozen kosher poultry into New York City is an unlawful objective; that no labor controversy of any kind is involved; that the information on the signs carried by the pickets, informing customers of the retail stores and butcher shops handling plaintiff's goods that poultry is used which has not been slaughtered by members of defendant's union, while technically accurate, is actually misleading as indicating that there is a labor dispute whereas none exists; that these signs are not displayed for the purpose of publicizing any legitimate grievance of the union, but rather as a verbal act in a conspiracy to accomplish an unlawful purpose. "No conduct has such an absolute privilege as to justify all possible schemes of which it may be a part." Holmes, J. in Aikens v. Wisconsin, 195 U. S. 194, 205 Justice Holmes continued by saying: "The most innocent and constitutionally protested of acts or omissions may be made a step in a criminal plot, and if it is a step in a plot neither its innocence nor the constitution is sufficient to prevent the punishment of the plot by law."

No charges of a criminal nature are made against this defendant, but the reasoning applies that the means do not justify the end. To identify the cherished constitutional protection of the right of free speech with immunity to impose private embargoes on foodstuffs entering New York City, would be as unwarranted as to assume that free speech allows license to shout "Fire!" in a crowded theatre, to cite Justice Holmes' famous example.

["Respective Interests"]

Section 876-a of the Civil Practice Act does not apply. The only portion of it which is contended to reach this suit is the part which refers to controversies "arising out of the respective interests of employer or employee, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the relation of employer and employee." Apart from the illegality of the objective as a secondary boycott, Section 876-a does not apply where the controversy has no relation to terms or conditions of employment, or relates to something which could not even properly be the subject of collective bargaining (Opera on Tour, Inc. v. Weber, 285 N. Y. 348; Baillis v. Fuchs, 283 N. Y. 133).

[Amended NLRA]

We have not taken into account any effect upon this case of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, commonly known as the Taft-Hartley Act, except to note that in providing for the institution of injunction proceedings thereunder by the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, it was clearly not intended to divest the state courts of jurisdiction which they had in cases of this kind before its adoption.

[Rulings]

The order granting the motion to dismiss the complaint against defendant Union should be reversed with $10 costs and disbursements to the appellant and said motion denied, and the order denying plaintiff's application for a temporary injunction for the injunctive relief demanded in the complaint should be reversed with $10 costs and disbursements to the appellant and the said application for a temporary injunction should be granted. The order dismissing the complaint against the individual defendants should be affirmed, with $10 costs and disbursements to said defendants-respondents.

PECK, P. J., GLENNON and DORE, JJ. concur.

[Dissenting Opinion]

SHIENTAG, J. (dissenting): I dissent and vote to affirm the order below dismissing the complaint as to the defendant Union and denying the motion for a temporary injunction on the authority of Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union, 325 U. S. 797 [9 LABOR CASES ¶ 51,213]; Bakery & Pastry Drivers and Helpers Local v. Wohl, 315 U. S. 769 [5 LABOR CASES ¶ 51,136]; People v. Muller, 286 N. Y. 281 [4 LABOR CASES ¶ 60,638]; Exchange Bakery & Restaurant v. Rifkin, 245 N. Y. 260; Goldfinger v. Feintuch, 276 N. Y. 281 [1 LABOR CASES ¶ 18,057]; Nann v. Raimist, 255 N. Y. 307; Stillwell Theatres, Inc. v. Kaplan, 259 N. Y. 405. The complaint does not charge violence or that the picketing is accomplished by false statements. There was a "labor dispute" within the meaning of Section 876-a of the Civil Practice Act for there is here involved a "controversy arising out of the respective interests of employer and employee regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the relation of employer and employee."

In any event the defendants were not engaged in an unlawful labor objective. The case of Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union, 325 U. S. 797 [9 LABOR CASES ¶ 51,213], supra, is authority for that proposition. It is true that that case involved the application of the Sherman anti-trust law but practically all of the contentions here made by the appellant concerning the absence of a labor dispute, the legality of the labor objective and the restraint upon interstate commerce were urged in that case. Mr. Justice Roberts, who refused to concur in the court's opinion, pointed out that the effect of the Labor union's conduct was to set up a "wall" of exclusion but that view was rejected by the rest of the court. The labor objective not being unlawful, the peaceful picketing and non-misleading appeal to the consuming public come within that area of freedom of speech which is guaranteed by the federal constitution (A. F. of L. v. Swing, 312 U. S. 321 [3 LABOR CASES ¶ 51,112]). Unlike Carpenters & Joiners Union v. Ritter's Cafe (315 U. S. 722 [5 LABOR CASES ¶ 51,137]) we are confronted here with a limitation upon speech in circumstances where there exists an "interdependence of economic interest of all engaged in the same industry" (p. 727); the retail establishments here being picketed have a direct connection industrially with the controversy.

Moreover, there is here present the "human relationship" and the "actual employment" which were absent in Opera on Tour v. Weber, 285 N. Y. 348, 357 [4 LABOR CASES ¶ 60,474]; and unlike that case we have here a "controversy arising out of the respective interests of employer and employee whether they stand in such relationship or not." (p. 357) The object of the picketing and of the appeal to the consuming public in this case is to prevent loss of jobs, wages and welfare benefits to members of the respondent union already employed in the industry. The members of defendant union do not receive a steady weekly wage but are paid according to the number of pounds of poultry slaughtered by employee members with all the earnings pooled each week and then divided among all members of the union.

The economic and social soundness, the wisdom or the practical expediency of the position taken by the union in this industrial controversy are not for this court to determine. (Cf. United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U. S. 219, 232 [3 LABOR CASES ¶ 51,110].) The consuming public, which is interested, should be afforded the opportunity of deciding these questions and a peaceful and truthful appeal to that public, by way of picketing the retail establishments directly involved in the dispute, is not unlawful; rather is it protected by the fundamental law of the land.

The complaint does not allege (although the affidavits in support of the application for a temporary injunction do) that the frozen kosher poultry slaughtered outside of the state is slaughtered by a member of a recognized union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor of which defendant union is itself an affiliate. A deficiency in the complaint (and appellants did not avail themselves of the right to amend accorded below) may not be supplied by the injunction affidavits. Moreover, assuming that the complaint did contain the allegation referred to, that precise question was passed upon adversely to the appellants' contention in the case of Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union, 325 U. S. 797 [9 LABOR CASES ¶ 51,213]. That case by the modification of the injunction there involved ruled upon the issues here presented. Whether or not it be called dictum, it was something more than a passing observation by the court. The ruling expressly permitted the union to do the very things here complained of by the appellant. (See also United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U. S. 219 [3 LABOR CASES ¶ 51,110]; Gundersheimers, Inc. v. Bakery Union, 119 Fed. (2d) 205 [4 LABOR CASES ¶ 60,372]; Donnelly Garment Co. v. Dubinsky, 154 Fed. (2d) 38 [10 LABOR CASES ¶ 63,018]; Nann v. Raimist, 255 N. Y. 307; Stillwell Theatres, Inc. v. Kaplan, 259 N. Y. 405; Sachs Quality Furniture, Inc. v. Hensley, 269 App. Div. 264 [9 LABOR CASES ¶ 62,665]).

It is urged that the Federal Taft-Hartley Act prohibits the peaceful picketing and persuasion here resorted to and specifically that Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union 325 U. S. 797 [9 LABOR CASES ¶ 51,213], supra, has in effect been superseded by that Act. It is unnecessary for this Court to determine that question in the instant case. We have no law corresponding to the Taft-Hartley Act in this State. True, interstate commerce is here directly affected but the state courts have no jurisdiction to issue injunctions for violation of the Taft-Hartley Act. We do have jurisdiction over actions for damages for violation of certain provisions of that Act. However, this complaint is not framed under that statute. Primarily it is an action in equity for injunctive relief and, if the plaintiffs base their claims to that relief on the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, they should resort to the procedure therein specified and apply to the tribunals which are therein given sole jurisdiction.

The complaint was properly dismissed with leave to amend and the application for an injunction pendente lite properly denied.

[¶ 62,290] Lyophile-Cryochem Corporation, Essdee Patents, Inc., Tabor-Olney Corporation v. Cutter Laboratories, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division. No. 26970-R. Filed August 9, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Patent Infringement Suit—Cross-claim for Declaration of Rights—No Unlawful Monopoly.—In an action for infringement of patents, it is held that plaintiffs' patents are valid and have been infringed, and that the plaintiffs have not used the monopoly granted by the patent improperly to create a monopoly upon or to control the supply of unpatented substances and apparatus. Contracts which involve consolidation of patents for mutual advantage and a division of spheres of activity, which assigns to one of the subsidiaries the role of holding the patents and dealing in the licenses, and to the others the production of the materials under the processes of the pooled patents, are legitimate exercises of the rights conferred by the patent monopoly. Defendant is not entitled to injunctive relief.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1270.201.

For plaintiffs: Naylor and Lassagne, Theodore H. Lassagne, San Francisco, California; Frank E. Barrows, Roger T. McLean, New York, N. Y.

For defendant: Mellin and Hanscom, Oscar A. Mellin, LeRoy Hanscom, Jack E. Hursh, San Francisco, California.

Decision on Counterclaim and Cross-Claim

YANKWICH, D. J.: The counterclaim and cross-claim of the defendant, Cutter Laboratories, Inc., seeking a declaration of rights against the plaintiff, heretofore tried, argued and submitted, is now decided as follows:

[Validity and Infringement]

I

On stipulation of counsel, declaration is ordered in favor of the defendant that the Barr Patent, Letters Patent No. 2,353,986, is invalid.

II

Declaration is ordered in favor of the plaintiffs that Reichel Reissue Patent No. 20,969 and Florsdorf Patent No. 2,345,548 are, and each of them is, valid and infringed as found by the verdict of the jury returned and filed on July 31, 1948. The court adopts the verdict of the jury as to the claims submitted to them, and finds that the other claims in said two patents not submitted to the jury are also valid. The court makes no finding as to the infringement of any of these claims, as no such issue was framed as to them.

[No Unlawful Monopoly]

III

The court finds that the plaintiffs have not used and are not now using the monopoly granted by the Letters Patent or either of them improperly to create a monopoly upon or to control the supply of unpatented substances and apparatus, and have not used and are not now using the said patents or either of them contrary to the public interest and/or contrary to law; and orders declaration to that effect.

[Equitable Relief Denied]

IV

The court finds that the defendant is not entitled to injunctive or any other equitable relief against the plaintiffs or any of them.

Counsel for the defendant are directed to prepare findings and decree on the counterclaim and cross-claim, under local Rule 5 (e).

Comment

A study of the so-called "patent pooling" agreements confirms me in the impression I received at the trial that these agreements are not in unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce under the Sherman Anti-Trust Law (15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 1); and do not tend to substantially lessen competition, or to create a monopoly under the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 14).

I have had occasion in two recent opinions filed in my own district on June 7th and 21st, 1948 (U. S. v. Standard Oil [CCH Trade Regulation Reports, ¶ 62,261, 62,269]) to review the latest decisions of our highest courts interpreting these statutes. Those opinions and others on the same subject written in past years by me and referred to therein, contain a detailed examination of the leading cases on the subject of monopoly arising from the misuse of patents or other practices. So I need not elaborate here. For our purpose, it is sufficient to state that the contracts under consideration fall into that group of agreements among owners of patents, which our highest courts have sustained as legitimate exercises of the control incident to the patent monopoly, (See, Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 1931, 283 U. S. 163; Transwrap Corporation v. Stokes & Smith Co., 1947, 329 U. S. 637; Sbicca-Del Mac v. Milius Shoe Co., 8 Cir., 1944, 145 F. (2) 389, 399). For they merely involve consolidation of patents for mutual advantage and a division of spheres of activity, which assigns to one of the subsidiaries the role of holding the patents and dealing in the licenses, and to the others the production of the materials under the processes of the pooled patents. They are clearly what I have designated as "contracts in the nature of joint ventures" entered into for mutual benefit and protection. They are legitimate exercises of the rights conferred by the patent monopoly. More, the evidence in the record shows conclusively that not only were the products manufactured under the process to be supplied to other laboratories, but that their trade was actually solicited. Indeed, the contracts themselves called for the granting of licenses to outsiders. To illustrate: The agreement of February 2, 1941, between Sharp & Dohme and Stokes contains the following clause:

"4. The parties agree as prospective shareholders of the new corporation to cause said corporation to grant licenses to others on such terms as, consistently with the maintenance of the strength of its patent rights and the good reputation of the products made pursuant to the patents, shall encourage maximum sales of the products and minimize sales resistance, and such licenses shall not be unreasonably withheld."

And the contracts with the subsidiary denominated "X" contain similar clauses.

There is no restraint upon the use of unpatented materials or attempts to control the materials which go into the process of the type which the courts have condemned. (Ethyl Gasoline Corporation v. United States, 1940, 309 U. S. 436; United States v. Masonite Corporation, 1942, 316 U. S. 265; Mercoid Corporation v. Mid-Continent Company, 1944, 320 U. S. 661). So the contracts involved here cannot and did not result in any of the evil practices which the anti-trust laws denounce, or which the courts have disapproved. Hence, the rulings above made.

[¶ 62,291] United States v. St. Louis Dairy Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, Eastern Division. Criminal No. 25,713. Filed July 19, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Conspiracy to Fix Prices—Verdict Against Corporate Defendants—Motions for Acquittal, New Trial, and In Arrest of Judgment.—Motions of Defendant dairy companies for acquittal or for a new trial, and in arrest of judgment, upon a verdict of guilty in a suit charging a conspiracy to fix fluid milk prices, are overruled. It is held that the conceded fact that representatives of the defendants conferred over a period of years on the subject of the price of milk and as to price changes to be made by them, before the changes were made, the uncontroverted testimony that one of the defendants could not sell at a higher price than the other without losing business, which situation furnished a motive for the concerted action to fix prices, with the result that defendants' price increases were identical in every instance, constitute sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that the defendants had some unity of purpose, or some common design, and the conclusion that a conspiracy has been established is justified. The acquittal of the agent who committed the alleged wrongful act does not operate ipso facto as a discharge of the principal. The acquittal of agents, even if they had been the only persons through whom the corporations could have acted, should not operate without more to set aside the verdict against the corporations.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1240.195, 1630.585.

For plaintiff: Drake Watson, United States Attorney, New London, Mo.; George B. Haddock, Special Assistant to the Attorney General; and John R. Niesley, Walter D. Murphy and Joseph R. Cannon, Special Attorneys, Department of Justice, all of Washington, D. C.

For defendants St. Louis Dairy Company and Basil M. Lide: Jacob M. Lashly of St. Louis, Mo.

For defendants Pevely Dairy Company, Arthur Kerckhoff, Richard D. Kerckhoff, Elmer M. Kerckhoff, Daniel M. Kerckhoff and Alexander Kerckhoff: James A. Finch of Cape Girardeau, Mo.; E. C. Hartman and William H. Allen, both of St. Louis, Mo.

Memorandum on Separate Motions of Defendants St. Louis Dairy Company and Pevely Dairy Company for Judgment of Acquittal and in the Alternative For a New Trial, and Motion of Defendant Pevely Dairy Company in Arrest of the Judgment.

HULEN, J.: The two corporate defendants and certain of their officers by indictment were charged with conspiracy to fix uniform and non-competitive retail and wholesale prices for fluid milk sold by the corporate defendants in the St. Louis area, under Section 1, Title 15, U. S. C. A., commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act. Trial by jury resulted in acquittal of all individual defendants. The corporate defendants were found guilty. Defendants assert:

(1) There is no substantial evidence to support the verdict.

(2) The guilt of the corporations could have been established only through the defendant officers and the officers having been acquitted the conviction of their principals cannot stand.

(3) The Government proved two separate conspiracies, if any, and therefore the record cannot support a single continuing conspiracy as charged.

The indictment charged that—during a period of ten years immediately preceding its return the defendants continuously engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to fix uniform and non-competitive retail and wholesale prices for fluid milk sold and distributed by the defendants in the St. Louis area; the conspiracy consisted of a continuing agreement and concert of action among the defendants that the defendants would charge uniform and non-competitive retail and wholesale prices for fluid milk sold by them, and neither corporate defendant would make any change in price until an agreement had been reached between them that the other would make an identical change. Changes in price during 1946, 1947 and 1948 are specifically mentioned in the indictment.

There is little dispute in the testimony. The Government would draw an inference of guilt and the defendants an inference of innocence from the record. The Government's evidence in substance was that in 1938 the defendant dairies "were losing money"—their "sales were deteriorating rapidly"—when a Mr. Gee, sales manager for defendant St. Louis Dairy Company, and Mr. Wasser, sales promotion agent for defendant Pevely Dairy Company, commenced a regular course of conduct of conferring with each other on the subject of change by them in the retail price of milk, wholesale and retail, in the St. Louis area. These conferences, at intermittent times, continued to 1941. The parties last named testified that when either of their principals had decided on a price change he (Wasser or Gee) would meet with the representative of the other defendant dairy to notify him of "proposed price changes". In "every instance" where this was done the corporate defendant to whom the information was conveyed "increased its price exactly the same amount." The corporate defendants changed, by increase, their price on retail and wholesale milk in exactly the same amount, even to a fraction of a cent, simultaneously on April 8, 1938, August 7, 1939, February 9, 1940, December 1, 1940, and July 1, 1941. The defendants decreased their price in exactly the same amount, retail and wholesale, simultaneously on June 12, 1939. Defendant Pevely Dairy increased its price on retail and wholesale sales one cent on September 1, 1941, and defendant St. Louis Dairy made the same change on the following day. The record does not show prices or dates on which prices were changed of either defendant prior to April 8, 1938. During the period defendants operated under the Emergency Price Control Act there were some changes by defendants in the price of milk from January 19, 1943 to June 19, 1946. The jury was instructed to disregard these price changes. During the year 1946 there were three price changes by the two corporate defendants. They follow a different pattern from the price changes prior to the period of the Emergency Price Control Act. On July 3, 1946 defendant Pevely Dairy increased its price one cent. Defendant St. Louis Dairy followed with a like increase on the next day. On July 9, 1946 St. Louis Dairy raised its price a cent and a half and Pevely Dairy followed with a like increase the next day. On October 4, 1946 defendant Pevely Dairy raised its price two cents and defendant St. Louis Dairy followed with the same increase the next day. For the year 1947 the price change pattern reverts to that of the time prior to "O. P. A." The two defendants made a reduction in retail and wholesale price of milk in exactly the same amount, to a fraction of a cent, simultaneously on January 20, 1947. The two defendants made an increase of exactly the same amount, to a fraction of a cent, simultaneously on August 1, 1947. The two defendants made an increase of exactly the same amount, to a fraction of a cent, simultaneously on September 16, 1947. Commencing on January 27, 1948 Pevely Dairy increased its price to 22½ cents on retail and 20½ cents on wholesale price of milk and on the following day defendant St. Louis Dairy made the same increase.

Witness Gee was asked the following question:

"On every time, every occasion that either of these dairies, Pevely or St. Louis, has increased the price, the other dairy has immediately put into effect a corresponding increase in price, hasn't it?

His answer was:

"Yes, but that is confined to our two dairies."

The two defendants set the price of milk in the St. Louis area and when the defendants raised their price "the other companies raised almost immediately or within several days usually * * *".

The witness Wasser was asked why he communicated the proposed price changes to the sales manager of the defendant St. Louis Dairy. His answer was:

"Because I knew it was impossible for us to sell at a higher price than our competitor, and I wanted to tell him what our price was, what the increase was, hoping that their company would increase their price, too."

"Q. And your hope was never disappointed, was it?

"A. I don't think so.

"Q. As a matter of fact, you wanted a stable market, didn't you?

"A. We all want that.

"Q. In fact, you wanted to avoid any competition in price, didn't you?

"A. Well, it was impossible for us to get a higher price than our competitor."

Neither Wasser nor Gee testified to a specific agreement with the agent of the other corporate defendant for a price change. Gee testified he never agreed with Mr. Wasser to a price change. Mr. Wasser testified that Mr. Gee never assured him that his principal would go along with the price change. The corporate defendants sell and distribute over sixty per cent of the fluid milk consumed in the St. Louis area.

St. Louis Dairy Company, on page 3 of its brief, states its position on the Government's case as follows:

"The foregoing facts upon which the government rests exclusively, by themselves, would support two logically permissible inferences: one of conspiracy and one of normal, law-abiding, business-like conduct on the part of defendants. Either inference perhaps would have been legally permissible, had the evidence in the case been limited to those facts."

The evidence of the defendants consisted of a mass of company records and exhibits together with testimony of a number of witnesses to the effect that the basic costs which must be met in fixing the price of milk are uniform as to both defendants and that price increases offered as a part of the Government's case were dictated and forced by economic considerations over which the defendants had no control. A Federal milk order fixes the minimum price handlers such as defendants must pay in the St. Louis division. (See Bailey Farm Dairy Co. v. Marvin Jones, et al., (C. C. A. 8th, 1946) 157 F. 2d 87.) Generally the defendants in the St. Louis division pay the minimum. Some milk purchased by the defendants in the Chicago division is at a higher price. Labor contracts of the defendants are uniform for the employees covered by them. Each of the defendants allocates to the milk division a certain proportion of the administrative expense and overhead; in turn a certain proportion of this overhead and administrative expense is allocated to fluid milk and in turn used in determining the cost of fluid milk and whether there is a profit or loss in the sales of fluid milk. Both defendants objected to the Government inquiring into its general overhead and administrative expense and sought to confine the Government's inquiry to the overhead and administrative expense allocated to fluid milk. Defendant Lide took the stand. The other individual defendants did not.

Defendants argue, "The inferences which the government relies upon are conclusively rebutted by the whole evidence in this case". Did the evidence of the defendant, together with the evidence of the Government, conclusively as a matter of law answer the Government's case and entitle defendants to a directed verdict?

I.

Argument at hearing and brief offered in support of the pending motion are presented on the premise the Government's case consisted of circumstantial evidence and the jury's verdict resulted from basing inference upon inference. The trial and verdict do not leave us with that impression. That conspiracy cases are difficult to prove of course does not relieve the Government of responsibility of meeting the requirement that guilt of accused must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, but the character of the offense is such it is seldom susceptible of proof by direct evidence. In Cooper v. United States, 9 F. 2d 216, l.c. 224, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals said:

"It is practically always established by circumstantial evidence, and this method in no sense amounts to the building of one presumption upon another." (Emphasis added.)

We cannot escape the impression defendants would now have the Judge substitute his conclusions on the evidence for those of the jury. That is not the province of the Judge. The jury having found the defendants guilty we understand that our duty on the pending motion is to view the evidence and inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom which are most favorable to the Government and determine if there is substantial evidence to support the verdict. A different jury might have drawn different inferences from the testimony. With the trial of this case in its present stage the reasonableness and plausibility of explanations offered by the defendants, the weight to be given to their evidence, the credibility of the various witnesses, and whether their testimony shall be believed, in whole or in part, is not our duty. That is for the jury. (Cravens v. United States, 62 F. 2d 261, l.c. 274.) In this case we have the conceded fact representatives—those in charge of sales—of the two defendants conferred over a period of years on the subject of price of Grade A milk and price changes to be made by them, before they were made. We have the uncontradicted testimony—confirming a fundamental law of economics—that one of the defendants could not sell at a higher price than the other without losing business as a pure matter of competition. This situation furnished a prime motive for the two defendants to seek concert of action in price changes and prices charged. Witness Wasser testified, "It was impossible for us to get a higher price than our competitors". With this situation before them sales representatives of the two defendants conferred, with the result, "in every instance", increases in price were exactly the same with the two defendants and, with rare exceptions, on exactly the same date. It was said in Smith v. United States (C. C. A. 8th, 1907) 157 Fed. 721, l.c. 728:

> "The effects and results of a conspiracy can be observed and proved, but rarely can one get a glimpse or make proof of the secret conferences which inaugurate it. For these manifest reasons proof of a criminal combination to do an unlawful act can rarely be made except by light reflected from its consequences or results."

One of the defendants argues the Government case can receive no aid from the testimony of Wasser and Gee. This defendant argues that since the witness Gee testified that he never "agreed" with Wasser to a price change and the witness Wasser testified he never was "assured" St. Louis Dairy would go along with the price change, the Government is bound by such testimony. This defendant states its position thus:

> "* * * the Government, having called Gee and Wasser as witnesses and having adduced from them positive testimony that they made no sort of conspiratorial agreement, cannot sustain its case upon the theory that the jury could reject the last mentioned testimony of these witnesses and infer the existence of a fact directly contrary thereto."

First let it be determined if the Government is required to offer proof of a formal agreement between the defendant corporations to fix prices as charged in the indictment. In American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 147 F. 2d 93, l.c. 107, the law is stated as follows:

> "No formal agreement is necessary to constitute an unlawful conspiracy. Almost always, the crime is a matter of inference, deduced from the acts of the persons accused, which are done in pursuance of an apparent criminal purpose. Stack et al. v. United States, 9 Cir., 27 F. 2d 16; Pearlman v. United States, 9 Cir., 20 F. 2d 113. The agreement may be shown by a concert of action, all the parties working together understandingly, with a single design for the accomplishment of a common purpose. Marino v. United States, 9 Cir., 91 F. 2d 691, 113 A. L. R. 975. It is the common design which is the essence of the conspiracy or combination; and this may be made to appear when the parties steadily pursue the same object, whether acting separately or together, by common or different means, but always leading to the same unlawful result. United States v. Harrison, 3 Cir., 121 F. 2d 930; Allen v. United States, 7 Cir., 4 F. 2d 688. Often, if not generally, direct proof of a criminal conspiracy is not available, and the common purpose and plan are disclosed only by a development and collocation of circumstances. Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60, 62 S. Ct. 457, 86 L. Ed. 680; United States v. Manton, 2 Cir., 107 F. 2d 834; and it is settled that the essential agreement, combination, and conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act may be implied from, or found in a course of dealing or other circumstances, as well as through an exchange of words. United States v. A. Schrader's Son, Inc., 252 U. S. 85, 40 S. Ct. 251, 64 L. Ed. 471; United States v. Pullman Co., supra, 50 F. Supp. 123, at page 134."

The Supreme Court in Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, l.c. 227, ruled the question:

"It is elementary that an unlawful conspiracy may be and often is formed without simultaneous action or agreement on the part of the conspirators. Schenck v. United States, 253 F. 212, 213, aff'd, 249 U. S. 47; Levey v. United States, 92 F. 2d 688, 691. Acceptance by competitors, without previous agreement, of an invitation to participate in a plan, the necessary consequence of which, if carried out, is restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act. Eastern States Lumber Assn. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600; Lawlor v. Loewe, 235 U. S. 522, 534; American Column Co. v. United States, 257 U. S. 377; United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U. S. 371."

Speaking for the Eighth Circuit, Judge Gardner, in Galatas v. United States, 80 F. 2d 15, l.c. 22, announced the law as follows:

"The agreement need not be in any particular form, but it is sufficient that the minds of the parties met understandingly. A mutual implied understanding is sufficient so far as the combination or confederacy is concerned; and, in fact, the agreement is generally a matter of inference, deduced from the acts of the persons accused, which are done in pursuance of an apparent criminal purpose. It is not necessary to prove that the defendants actually agreed in terms to adopt the unlawful purpose and to pursue it by common means. A conspiracy is rarely susceptible of proof by direct evidence, but must be proved by circumstantial evidence. It may be deduced from the conduct of the parties and the attending circumstances."

From these authorities we conclude that where the circumstances are such as to warrant the jury in finding that the conspirators had some unity of purpose, or some common design and undertaking, or some meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement, the conclusion that a conspiracy is established is justified. See Marx v. United States (C. C. A. 8th, 1936) 86 F. 2d 245, l.c. 250. See also Shannabarger v. United States, 99 F. 2d 957.

As we view the record the finding of the jury is not in conflict with the testimony of the witnesses Gee and Wasser, if the testimony isolated by defendants has probative value. It has elements of conclusions and opinions of the witnesses. Neither of the witnesses testified or was asked to testify what was said at the conferences between them. The jury was left to draw inferences as to what was said and done on the occasion of the conferences from the admitted reason for calling the conferences, and as well what the parties hoped to accomplish and to avoid. Wasser testified as to why the conferences were called, "Because I knew it was impossible for us to sell at a higher price than our competitor, and I wanted to tell him what our price was, what the increase was, hoping that their company would increase their price, too." This witness testified that he wanted a stable market and that his company could not get higher prices than its competitor. Certainly from this explanation of the reason for calling the meeting the deduction could be made by the jury that it was to arrive at uniformity of action on prices, in view of what invariably took place thereafter. The witness said he went into the conference "hoping that their company would increase their price" and that he hoped to accomplish a stable market and to avoid competition in price. When this evidence is considered in the light of each defendant's repeated assertion through the trial that if it raised its price without the other defendant doing likewise it would lose business, and that each conference was followed by a simultaneous raise in price by the defendants to the exact fraction of a cent, we think a fair and reasonable inference from the testimony was that the parties acted in concert by virtue of a mutual understanding to fix prices on milk.

One would be naive indeed to conclude, as defendants urge, that when a representative of one of the defendants initiated a conference with the other to discuss prices, under such circumstances as we set out, that the agent initiating the conference did so solely to tell his competitor's agent "We are going to raise our price on Grade A milk one and one-half cents commencing thirty-six hours hence. Goodbye." Such a message could have been transmitted by telephone, by telegram, by an errand boy. But here the sales representatives of the two corporate defendants had to meet personally —one of the meetings was held in a public park. The meetings were prearranged.

In Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Association v. United States, 234 U. S. 600; 58 L. ed. 1490, the Court had before it certain reports circulated by lumber dealers listing the names of wholesalers who make sales direct to consumers. Nothing was said in the reports regarding trading with the wholesalers by the retailers among whom they were circulated, but the Court said:

> "True it is that there is no agreement among the retailers to refrain from dealing with listed wholesalers, nor is there any penalty annexed for the failure so to do; but he is blind indeed who does not see the purpose in the predetermined and periodical circulation of this report * * *."

Like terms could be applied to the conferences between the agents of the two corporate defendants to discuss the retail price of milk. The conferences continued until the defendants received information of a grand jury investigation. A Federal grand jury was investigating their conduct. There is no direct evidence of similar conferences thereafter. It would be strange if there was any. After "O. P. A." control was lifted we find the same pattern followed by the defendants as to uniformity of prices and dates of changes of prices that was the practice during the period when there is direct evidence of conferences between the agents of the two corporate defendants.

Of all the dairies in St. Louis only the two defendants could fathom with such minute exactitude as to date and amount when and in what amount the two defendants would make a price change. During the period when conferences were being held they synchronize precisely. During 1946 one day separates the price changes made by the defendants, with the defendants alternating in taking the initiative on price change. This practice ended with the year 1946. In 1947 the practice is again that of the period when representatives of each of the defendants were holding conferences on the subject. We think the comment of the Court in Davis v. United States, 107 Fed. 753, l.c. 755, is applicable:

> "The evidence shows a detail of facts and circumstances in which the alleged conspirators are involved, separately or collectively, and which are clearly referable to a preconcert of the actors, and there is a moral probability that they would not have occurred as they did without such preconcert, that is sufficient if it satisfies the jury of the conspiracy beyond a reasonable doubt."

Defendants present the proposition that the Government's circumstantial evidence case was "conclusively" rebutted as a matter of law by defendants' evidence as to the cost of doing business and declaration that prices and price changes for Grade A milk were forced by economic reasons. The jury could have believed the testimony offered by defendants as to the cost to defendants of putting fluid milk on the market, that they had substantially the same expenses in the cost of milk and labor charges and that economic factors did call for the various changes in price of milk shown by the evidence, and still have found the defendants guilty of conspiracy to fix prices as charged in the indictment. They are not inconsistent findings. If defendants did jointly fix prices by unlawful action, the fact (if it be a fact) that the prices as so fixed were reasonable and dictated by economic factors could not excuse such conduct. Any such concert of action between the two corporate defendants to fix prices for fluid milk in the St. Louis area under the circumstances of this case is banned by the Sherman Act. Concededly the defendants control milk prices in the St. Louis area. They control by selling a major portion of fluid milk consumed. They possess the power to make their control effective. Under these circumstances the danger of severe consequences of agreements to fix prices, by destroying price competition, was one of the results which the Sherman Act was intended to prevent. Such agreements are proscribed by the Act and cannot be excused by collateral consideration, such as reasonableness of the prices, if urged in justification of the practice. (United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U. S. 392.)

Defendants' evidence was offered to support their position that cost of putting fluid milk in the hands of the consumer necessitated their raising prices at the same time to avoid loss of business. If the price changes and prices charged by the defendants were solely the result of these factors and not unlawful combine between the defendants, such is a good defense. If the price changes and uniformity in prices resulted from both factors the jury was authorized to render a verdict of guilty.

Defendant St. Louis Dairy presents the proposition—the record conclusively shows that only its President, Mr. Lide, had authority to determine and fix prices, there is no evidence that Mr. Lide engaged in the conspiracy charged, the defendant corporation can only be liable for acts done by its agents acting in the scope of their authority, and regardless of what others may have done their acts are not binding on the corporation. Whether this argument would confine the issue too narrowly we do not feel called on to determine. Mr. Gee testified that he always took part in the meetings "when determinations are being made" as to change in prices of fluid milk by the St. Louis Dairy, that he "advised" with Mr. Lide "in regard to the necessity of a price change, and that he with two others was responsible for operating the business during Mr. Lide's absence." True this witness testified—"The final decision rests with Mr. Lide" of prices to be charged by the St. Louis Dairy Company, but he testified that in every instance where he had a consultation with the representative of Pevely Dairy Company on the subject of proposed price changes a price change was made by both corporate defendants in exactly the same amount, on exactly the same date, except in the instances we have noted.

As we understand the law for the purpose of determining legal liability and responsibility a corporation has an existence separate and apart from that of the persons constituting its officers and agents and it may be guilty of violations of law apart and separate from the guilt or innocence of its officers. In this case the jury were informed in substance that in determining the guilt or innocence of the corporate defendants they should look to the acts done and declarations made by the corporate officers, agents and employees, and that a corporation is bound by and legally responsible in a criminal case for acts performed or things done by an officer, agent or employee of the corporation when such officer, agent or employee is acting within the scope of his authority and the acts of such officer, agent or employee are performed for the corporation employing him and are the duties delegated to him. See New York Central & H. R. R. Co. v. United States, 212 U. S. 481, 53 L. ed. 613; and Egan v. United States, 137 F. 2d 369, l.c. 379. The guilt or innocence of the corporate defendants was a jury issue of fact.

II.

Defendant St. Louis Dairy points to the "acquittal of the agent who committed the alleged wrongful action in issue (and urges that it) operates ipso facto as a discharge of the principal, whose liability could be established only through that particular agent by virtue of the principle respondeat superior". Argument under this heading is presented on the theory that acquittal of defendant Lide and the five Kerkhoffs establishes innocence of the corporate defendants since the individual defendants were the only ones authorized to fix the price of milk. We call attention to our comments under the last heading without reiteration as applicable to defendant's claim now being considered. What was there said may have served as the basis, in view of the instruction on reasonable doubt, for the jury to acquit defendant Lide. As to the five Kerckhoff defendants, they were not in charge of the business of Pevely Dairy Company during the time conferences were being held by representatives of the two corporate defendants. As to their participation in the business of Pevely Dairy Company subsequent thereto they were identified in the evidence as a group constituting a board. There was no evidence that each of the five Kerckhoff defendants was ever present at any one board meeting. Again, the jury, operating under instruction on reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence, may have voted their acquittal because of the circumstances referred to. Able counsel representing the individual defendants, as well as the corporate defendants, made eloquent and forceful appeals to the jury and, among other things, admonished the jury that a conviction of the individual defendants would be a stain on their records and reputations. The arguments may have been persuasive. If the jury, yielding to this line of argument, acquitted the individual defendants, their action cannot serve also as an acquittal of the corporate defendants whom they convicted. The law appears to be plain. See United States v. General Motors Corporation, 121 F. 2d 376, cert. den. 314 U. S. 618; and American Medical Association v. United States, 130 F. 2d 233, aff'd 317 U. S. 519. We quote from the opinion in the General Motors case:

> "The question on review should not be whether the verdict against the corporations is consistent with the acquittal of the individuals. Rather it should be whether the conviction is consistent with the evidence. In other words, we believe that the acquittal of the officers and agents, even if they had been the only persons through whom the corporations could have acted, should not operate without more to set aside the verdict against the corporations. Nor do we attach significance to the argument that the problem of inconsistent verdict in the instant case presents a different problem than that when the verdicts upon two counts are inconsistent. See Dunn v. United States, 284 U. S. 390, 393, 52 S. Ct. 189, 76 L. ed. 356, 80 A. L. R. 161; United States v. Meltzer, 7 Cir., 100 F. 2d 739, 741. In fact we believe that the same rule is applicable, that consistency in a verdict is not required, and that the language in the Austin-Bagley case supra tends in that very direction." (Emphasis added.)

Defendant St. Louis Dairy Company cites in its brief, in support of its position under this heading, a large number of civil cases. Regardless of what the rule may be in the various jurisdictions in civil cases they are not applicable in this case. For that reason we do not discuss them:

III.

Finally, defendant St. Louis Dairy Company urges that the evidence showed two separate conspiracies, if any, therefore the record cannot support the charge of a single conspiracy as set forth in the indictment.

The charge contained in the indictment is a continuing conspiracy commencing in 1938 to return of the indictment. The record would support a finding the conspiracy ended with the alleged cessation of conferences between the two defendant dairies in 1941 although the case was not submitted on that theory directly. During the period when Office of Price Administration regulations governing prices were in effect the statute of limitations did not run on violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act. (See Act of Oct. 10, 1942, c. 589, 56 Stat. 781.) On the point of one continuing conspirary there was substantial evidence on which to base the verdict, in our opinion, in the pattern of prices charged up until the return of the indictment that defendants took up their unlawful concert of action following ending of "O. P. A." where "O. P. A." left it, when price control became effective. The price changes during the "O. P. A." were withdrawn from the jury as not constituting any evidence in support of the charge. This action by the Judge in and of itself did not sever the conspiracy. We see no merit in defendant's contention in this respect.

Whether or not the case should have been submitted to the jury is not to be determined by dismembering the evidence and viewing it in parts, but the evidence must be considered as a whole (United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525; 57 L. ed. 333). The evidence offered by the defendants as to cost of doing business consisted principally of defendants' company records, exhibits made from company records, and opinions based upon or reflected by records. Such records are not documentary evidence carrying assurance of verity. It was the exclusive province of the jury to determine the weight to be given this evidence. Also the weight to be given testimony that prices and changes in prices of milk made by the defendants was due solely to economic reasons operating on each defendant independently and not resulting from concert of action between them, was for the jury. It is our opinion the evidence in this case is not as consistent with the innocence of the defendants as with their guilt. Taking the record as a whole we conclude the jury was justified, under the instructions, in finding that the facts evidencing conspiracy were consistent with the guilt of defendants and inconsistent with their innocence.

ORDER

Motion of Pevely Dairy Company for judgment of acquittal and in the alternative for a new trial is overruled, and motion of Pevely Dairy Company for a judgment in arrest of the judgment is overruled, and motion of defendant St. Louis Dairy Company for judgment of acquittal and in the alternative for a new trial is overruled.

[¶ 62,292] General Foods Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. No. 9646. July 27, 1948.

On Petition for Review of Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Combination To Fix Prices—Dismissed for Want of Jurisdiction.—Petition for review of an order requiring a corporation engaged in the sale of salt to file a special compliance report concerning its pricing practices and those of its subsidiaries in the sale of salt is dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See the Federal Trade Commission Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 6125.493, 6380.30, 6380.62.

Petition for review of Federal Trade Commission order requiring compliance report in Dkt. 4320 dismissed.

For petitioner: Edward R. Adams & William Simon, Chicago, Ill., and Lester E. Waterbury, New York, N. Y.

For respondent: W. T. Kelley, General Counsel, Walter B. Wooden, Associate General Counsel, and Joseph S. Wright, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.

Before J. EARL MAJOR and OTTO KERNER, Circuit Judges.

[Petition for Review Dismissed]

On motion of counsel for the respondent, it is ordered and adjudged by this Court that the above entitled petition for review of an order entered by the Federal Trade Commission on June 1, 1948, be, and the same is hereby, dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

[¶ 62,293] Opinion of the Attorney General of Louisiana.

Addressed to Tom Gillen, Jr., Director of the United States Brewers Foundation, Inc., Louisiana Division, 613 Louisiana National Bank Bldg., Baton Rouge, Louisiana, by Bolivar E. Kemp, Jr., Attorney General, June 24, 1948.

Louisiana Constitution

Restraint of Trade—Constitutional Provision.—Refusal of brewers and wholesalers to sell beer to retailers who raised the price of beer above the amount of an imposed state tax under the guise that the increase in price was necessitated by the tax involves a serious question in its relation to the Federal Sherman Antitrust Law and Article 19, Section 14 of the Louisiana Constitution, which prohibits monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade and price fixing.

See the Louisiana Constitutional Provisions, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.

[Question]

Your letter of even date is gratefully acknowledged.

A request is therein made for an opinion on the question of whether or not brewers and wholesalers may lawfully refuse to sell beer to retailers who have raised the price of beer above the amount of the tax imposed by the Legislature on each bottle of beer on the pretext and under the guise that the increase in price was necessitated by the tax.

[Statutes Involved]

Under the facts mentioned in your letter, there is no merit in the repersentation that retailers were forced to raise the price of beer above the amount of tax as a result of the levy; however, we must caution you that the proposal made by your Foundation may involve a serious question in its relation to the Federal Sherman Anti-Trust Law, as amended, and Article 19, Section 14 of the Louisiana Constitution which prohibits monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade and price fixing.

[¶ 62,294] Opinion of the Attorney General of Minnesota.

Addressed to Mr. James W. Clark, Commissioner, Department of Business Research and Development, by J. A. A. Burnquist, Attorney General, Charles E. Houston, Assistant Attorney General, August 6, 1948.

Minnesota Fair Trade and Trusts and Combinations Acts

Fair Trade Price—Wholesale Price Plus Stipulated Amount.—A contract between a wholesaler and a retailer that the retailer will not sell a branded article at retail for less than the wholesale price plus 55 cents is within the meaning of Section 325.08 of the Minnesota Statutes, which specifies that certain contracts relating to the resale of commodities shall not be deemed in violation of law because they contain an agreement not to resale "at less than the minimum price stipulated." The Attorney General concluded that such contract did not constitute a violation of Section 623.01 of the Minnesota Statutes prohibiting trusts and combinations in restraint of trade even though several competing manufacturers propose to establish similar contracts.

See the Commentary on Resale Price Maintenance, Vol. 2, ¶ 7075, the Minnesota Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8424, and the Minnesota Trusts and Combinations Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8435.

[Facts]

In your letter of August 4 to the Attorney General, you advise him that it has been proposed by several competing manufacturers of trade-marked commodities that each manufacturer establish a fair trade contract which stipulates a minimum retail price based on the following formula: Wholesale price plus 55 cents equals the contractual minimum resale retail price. You comment that wholesale prices vary according to brands and that the minimum retail prices established by such formula would vary with each fair trade contract.

Question

Are fair trade contracts in violation of M. S. A., Secs. 325.08 and 623.01, if minimum resale retail prices are based on the foregoing formula?

Opinion

M. S. A., Sec. 623.01, prohibits agreements in restraint of trade. It is directed against understandings which, among other things, tend in any way to control prices of articles of trade sold within the state, or which prevent competition in the purchase and sale thereof. I have not attempted to state fully the provisions of this section, but to give a general view of its purpose.

Sec. 325.08 specifies certain contracts relating to the resale of commodities under a trade mark or brand. This section says that the contracts which are there described shall not be deemed in violation of law because they contain the agreement specified in that section. It thus appears that if a contract conforms to Sec. 325.08, it is contemplated that in the performance of such contract, neither of the contracting parties is to be considered as violating Sec. 623.01, that is, having made a contract in restraint of trade.

This appears to make the problem stated in your letter to be in substance this: If a wholesaler and a retailer agree that a certain branded article sold by the wholesaler to the retailer shall be resold by the retailer at a price not less than the wholesale cost to the retailer, plus fifty-five cents, does such agreement offend against Sec. 623.01?

It appears that the answer to that question is "yes," unless the making of such contract is justified by the provisions of Sec. 325.08. In other words, does the formula mentioned meet the language of Sec. 325.08 (1), "That the buyer will not resell such commodity at less than the minimum price stipulated by the seller"? A contract under which the parties agree that the goods shall not be resold at a price less than that which will be determined by a formula is a stipulation fixing the minimum price.

The effect of the proposed formula is that every sale of a branded article involves a certain increase in price.

The conclusion follows that such a contract would not offend against the provisions of Sec. 623.01 because of Sec. 325.08.

[¶ 62,295] Opinion of the Attorney General of Minnesota.

Addressed to Mr. James W. Clark, Commissioner, Department of Business Research and Development, by J. A. A. Burnquist, Attorney General, Charles E. Houston, Assistant Attorney General, August 6, 1948.

Minnesota Unfair Trade Practices Act

Fair Practice—Cash Prizes for Winners in Photograph Contest.—Advertising cash prizes for winners in a photograph contest sponsored by a retail store, in the absence of evidence showing that competitors are or will be destroyed, is no violation of Section 325.04 of the Minnesota Statutes.

See the Minnesota Unfair Trade Practices Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8428.

You have for consideration these

Facts

A retail store advertises in newspapers announcing a children's photograph contest. Cash prizes are advertised to be awarded to winners in the contest. It is limited to children of the age under fourteen years. The parents select the photograph after having examined many proofs and, I understand, that prizes are awarded in accordance with standards prescribed by the store.

[Statutory Provision]

M. S. A., Sec. 325.04, provides, among other things, that "Any retailer * * * who * * * advertises the intent to give away any * * * article * * * for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition" is guilty of unfair discrimination.

It is the claim of the retailer that nothing is being done for the purpose of or with the effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition. I have no evidence before me and I am not informed of any evidence to the effect that such claims of the retailer are untrue.

You have the

Question

Do these facts show an offense against the provisions of Sec. 325.04?

Opinion

As a matter of law, I am unable to say that the facts above stated show a violation of Sec. 325.04.

No attempt is made herein to consider facts not stated. The retailer has clearly stated his position of his purpose. No evidence is submitted of a contrary purpose, or an effect resulting from the conduct showing that competitors are or will be injured or destroyed. That part of the statute is its essence.

[¶ 62,296] United States v. Morton Salt Co. United States v. International Salt Company.

In the District Court of the United States, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. Nos. 48 C 698, 48 C 699. Decided August 19, 1948.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Compliance Reports.—Motion for summary judgment is denied in a proceeding to enforce an order by the Commission requesting manufacturers of salt to file special reports as to compliance with a previous cease and desist order modified by the Circuit Court of Appeals. There is no reference whatever to compliance reports in Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Section 5 provides for the finality of a cease and desist order as soon as the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission Act over it has been transferred to the Circuit Court of Appeals. With reference to Rule XXVI, which provides for filing of reports showing compliance with the Commission's orders, the Court comments that nowhere does Section 5 confer upon the Commission authority to make rules, and no rule-making paragraph of any statute can confer upon an administrative body authority to substantially alter the explicit provisions of a statutory enactment such as Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Commission may investigate any violation which it has reason to believe such salt manufacturers are committing, notwithstanding the reservation of jurisdiction by the Circuit Court of Appeals. In order to accomplish this, the Commission may (1) file a new complaint against defendant alleging in what manner it considers such manufacturers are violating the Act; (2) initiate penalty proceedings under Section 5(l) for alleged violations of the former decree in the Circuit Court of Appeals; or (3) bring contempt proceedings into the Circuit Court of Appeals.

See Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2212.5336, 2212.5355, 2212.545, and Federal Trade Commission Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 6125.344, 6125.493, 6125.601.

Penalty Provisions Under Section 6 of Act.—Section 6(a) and 6(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act provide for economic investigations by the Commission from time to time as to the organization, business, conduct, practice and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, and for the filing of annual or special reports. The penalty applicable for failure to file these reports has no relation to failure to comply with an order requiring information as to the manner in which a cease and desist order is being observed. A special report requested of salt manufacturers to observe compliance with a previous cease and desist order modified by the Circuit Court of Appeals is not one required by the Act and is clearly not the kind of report set out in Section 6(a) and 6(b).

See the Federal Trade Commission Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 6126.

Penalties Under Section 10 of Act.—In a proceeding to enforce an order by the Commission requesting manufacturers of salt to file special reports as to compliance with a previous order modified by the Circuit Court of Appeals, judgment in the amount of $100 per day for failure to file reports is denied. Section 10 of the Federal Trade Commission Act provides that corporations shall be subject to the forfeiture only for failure to file annual reports and special reports when required by the Commission, in conformity with Section 6, but has no relation to the jurisdiction conferred by Section 5.

See the Federal Trade Commission Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 6130.

Motion for summary judgment denied in Dkt. 4319.

For plaintiff: Otto Kerner, Jr., Chicago, Ill.

For defendants: Ashcraft & Ashcraft and Charles H. G. Kimball for International Salt Co.; L. M. McBride, E. H. Baker, Jr., Harvey Wienke & James T. Welch, and McBride & Baker for Morton Salt Company.

PHILIP L. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Memorandum

[Defendants Requested to File Special Reports]

PHILIP L. SULLIVAN, Judge: These actions are before the Court upon complaint filed by the United States which seek the enforcement of an order of the Federal Trade Commission dated September 2, 1947, requiring the defendants, and other corporations named in that order, to file special reports with the Federal Trade Commission within thirty days from the date of service. The complaint also seeks judgment against defendants for forfeiture in the sum of $100.00 per day for each day from and after April 1, 1948, that defendants have failed to file with the Federal Trade Commission the reports required by the order of September 2, 1947.

[Motions for Summary Judgment Filed]

Each defendant has answered and filed a motion for summary judgment. The Government also has filed its motion for summary judgment. All parties are agreed that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact involved in the case.

Since the issues of law raised by the pleadings in the two actions are identical, the Court is considering both cases as one.

[Nature of Suits]

The suits grow out of the order of the Federal Trade Commission dated September 2, 1947, requiring these two defendants among others to file special reports with the Commission, the order reciting that it was issued in the public interest pursuant to the authority granted the Commission by subsections (a) and (b) of Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and pursuant to Rule XXVI of the Commission's Rules promulgated under subsection (g) of Section 6, claimed to implement the authority granted the Commission by subsection 6(b) "To require, by general or special orders, corporations engaged in commerce * * * to file with the Commission in such form as the Commission may prescribe annual or special, or both annual and special, reports or answers in writing to specific questions, furnishing to the Commission such information as it may require as to the organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations, partnerships, and individuals of the respective corporations filing such reports or answers in writing." The default order of February 27, 1948, charging that defendants had failed to comply with the order of September 2, 1947, then followed.

[Basis for Jurisdiction]

Jurisdiction is founded on Section 9 of the Act which vests this Court with jurisdiction to command corporations to comply with any order of the Commission made pursuant to the Act, and on Section 10 which vests this Court with jurisdiction of suits of the United States for the recovery of forfeitures if corporations fail to file required reports within the time fixed by the Commission for filing the same.

[Facts of Prior Proceeding]

Defendants in their answers have set out certain matters relating to a prior proceeding against them by the Commission under Section 5 of the Act, and it is agreed by both sides that the facts therein are as follows:

The Commission on September 18, 1940, issued its complaint under Section 5 of the Act charging defendants, and others, with engaging in an unlawful conspiracy to fix prices on, and to control the production of salt in connection with the sale and distribution of that commodity in interstate commerce. Answers were filed by the defendants therein admitting the alleged conspiracy. On November 10, 1941, the Commission issued its order to cease and desist, requiring the defendants to discontinue the conspiracy alleged in the complaint and admitted in the answers. A petition for review of the Commission's order was filed by the defendants in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, which court rendered its opinion on March 8, 1943, reported as Salt Producers Association v. Federal Trade Commission, 134 Fed. (2d) 354. On April 20, 1945, the Circuit Court of Appeals entered its decree modifying the Commission's order in certain respects, affirming it as modified and directing compliance therewith. On August 10, 1943, the Commission issued its modified order to cease and desist, as required by Section 5(i) of the Act, incorporating the changes directed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, and caused the same to be served on all of the defendants. In August, 1943, the respondents named in the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals filed reports with the Commission showing the manner and form in which they were complying with the court's decree.

On September 2, 1947, the Commission alleges that it believed it was in the public interest to make a further investigation of the manner and form of compliance, and in aid of that investigation, pursuant to Sections 6(a) and 6(b) of the Act in aid of enforcement proceedings in Docket No. 4320 under Section 5 of the Act and pursuant to the Commission's Rule XXVI, issued its order requiring the defendants and others to file special compliance reports with the Commission within thirty days from the date of service, which was had on September 4, 1947. Later the Commission by letter order extended the time until November 1, 1947. The Government urges that the reports were not filed and that separate notices of default, as it insists is provided for in Section 10 of the Act, as a prerequisite to subjecting defendants to the $100.00 a day forfeiture for failure to file, were issued by the Commission on February 27, 1948, and served on each defendant on March 1, 1948. The Commission alleges that the thirty days specified in Section 10 and in the notices expired on April 1, 1948, and insists that defendants' failure to file the required reports continued, and that each defendant notified the Commission in writing that it would not comply with the order, and therefore these suits were filed to compel them to do so and to obtain judgment in favor of the United States for $100.00 per day from each for each day they are in default.

[Defendants' Contentions]

In their answers the defendants set out that pursuant to the requirements of the final decree of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, defendants filed their reports of compliance with the Federal Trade Commission, and that the Commission received said reports without making any objection thereto. That the order of September 2, 1947, does not require them to file an annual or special report within the meaning of Section 10 of said Act. That the procedure sought to be pursued by the Federal Trade Commission is not reflected or set forth in any Rule of said Federal Trade Commission, and has not been published in the Federal Register, as required by Section 3 of the Administrative Procedure Act, and that pursuant to the order of September 2, 1947, each defendant has filed an additional compliance report, by stating that it is complying in the same manner set out in its original compliance report.

[Commission's Purpose in Present Suits]

The Commission insists that the present suits in this court have nothing whatsoever to do with the prior proceeding under Section 5 of the Act, except in so far as the Commission's authority to investigate compliance with the decree and modified order to cease and desist have been questioned.

The Commission insists that these suits are not for the purpose of enforcing compliance with the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals or the Commission's modified order to cease and desist, nor have the defendants been charged with a violation of that decree or modified order. That the Commission is only seeking by an investigatory process authorized by law, to obtain the facts as to the manner and form in which defendants have complied with that decree and modified order.

Defendants urge that there is no published rule or statement of procedure of the Commission which specifies, outlines or even refers to the use of Sections 6(a) and 6(b) or Section 10 of the Federal Trade Commission Act in aid of decrees entered under Section 5 of the Act, nor is there any reference in the Commission's Rules and Statements of Procedure to the procedure followed in the present proceedings. The former proceedings referred to as Docket No. 4320 when the matter was before the Federal Trade Commission, and as Case No. 7909 when it was in the Circuit Court of Appeals, were brought by the Federal Trade Commission under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and when the matter was on appeal before the Circuit Court of Appeals, that court, in its decree, reserved "jurisdiction of this cause to enter such further orders herein from time to time as may become necessary effectively to enforce compliance in every respect with this decree and to prevent evasion thereof. * * *"

[Section 5(l) Quoted]

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act itself provides for enforcement proceedings with respect to decrees entered thereunder, and subsection (1) thereof reads:

> "(1) Any person, partnership or corporation who violates an order of the Commission to cease and desist after it has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States."

[Applicability of Sections 6 and 10]

A careful reading of the legislative history of the Act shows that Section 6 is only to be invoked in support of general economic surveys and not in aid of enforcement proceedings under a Section 5 decree. The Section 10 penalty provisions, on which the present proceeding is based, can be invoked only in connection with general economic survey proceedings under Section 6, and not in connection with enforcement proceedings under Section 5.

[Enforcement Proceedings Under Section 5 of Act]

Where an appeal has been taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals, as was done in Docket No. 4320, Section 5 gives to the Circuit Court of Appeals sole jurisdiction of enforcement proceedings thereunder, and that court in order to enforce compliance with its decree specifically reserved jurisdiction of the cause, subject only to the Commission's right to pursue contempt proceedings in the Circuit Court of Appeals, or to collect the civil penalty provided by Section 5 (1).

[Requirements of 1947 Order]

The Commission's order of September 2, 1947, here involved, required these defendants to "file additional reports showing in detail the manner and form in which it has been and is now complying with said modified order to cease and desist." On October 31, 1947, these defendants advised the Commission in writing that they were complying in the same manner as set forth in their original compliance reports filed in 1943, to which original reports no objection had ever been made by the Commission. The September 2, 1947 order also required the defendants, as a part of their additional reports, to submit a complete statement "of the prices, terms and conditions of sale of salt, together with books or compilations of freight rates used in calculating delivered prices, price lists and price announcements distributed, published or employed in marketing salt from and after January 1, 1944."

[Section 6 (a), (b) of Act Quoted]

Sections 6 (a) and 6 (b) provide for economic reports. Section 6 (a) provides: "That the Commission shall also have power

> (a) To gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks and common carriers subject to the Act to regulate commerce, and its relations to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.

(b) To require, by general or special orders, corporations engaged in commerce, excepting banks, and common carriers subject to the Act to regulate commerce, or any class of them, or any of them, respectively, to file with the commission in such form as the commission may prescribe annual or special, or both annual and special, reports or answers in writing to specific questions, furnishing to the commission such information as it may require as to the organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations, partnerships, and individuals of the respective corporations filing such reports or answers in writing. Such reports and answers shall be made under oath, or otherwise, as the commission may prescribe, and shall be filed with the commission within such reasonable period as the commission may prescribe, unless additional time be granted in any case by the commission."

[Cases Cited]

A reading of the legislative history of Sections 6 (a) and 6 (b) convinces me that these sections are designed for the purpose of compelling corporations to make annual reports, and giving the Commission authority within its discretion to require special reports when it deemed that advisable, but is not related in any way to the enforcement of the law. The Federal Trade Commission Act, Section 10, provides that corporations shall be subject to the forfeiture of $100.00 a day only for failure to file annual reports and special reports when required by the Commission, in conformity with Section 6, but has no relation to the jurisdiction conferred by Section 5. At least two courts have in effect specifically denied the existence of any relationship between Section 5 and Section 6 of the Act. Federal Trade Commission v. Miller's National Federation, 47 Fed. (2) 428, where the court said:

"The power of investigation conferred upon the Commission by Section 6 is different in character from the jurisdiction conferred by Section 5. Section 6 contemplates an investigation for the collection of facts for the information of Congress in aid of the exercise of its legislative function, or for the President in aid of recommending necessary legislation."

And in Federal Trade Commission v. Claire Furnace Co., 274 U. S. 160, where the Supreme Court makes the same distinction, quoted in this memorandum infra.

[Federal Trade Commission Act Coverage]

When Congress enacted the Federal Trade Commission Act the duties and powers of the new Commission seem to have been divided into two categories. The first category continued the power of investigation and publicity with respect to corporations formerly lodged in its predecessor, the Bureau of Corporations, and now contained in Sections 6 (a) and 6 (b) of the present Act. However, Congress added a new section, Section 10 providing for a forfeiture of $100.00 a day for failure to file the reports provided for in Sections 6 (a) and 6 (b). The second category into which the duties of the Federal Trade Commission were divided was provided by Section 5 which prohibits unfair methods of competition and provides the method for its enforcement and penalties. Subsection (a) of Section 5 provides that unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts or practices in commerce are declared to be unlawful, and also provides that the Commission has power to prevent the use of such unfair methods. Subsection (b) sets out the jurisdiction and procedure by which the Commission may prosecute acts involving unfair methods of competition. Subsection (c) provides the appellate procedure available to respondents against whom a cease and desist order has been entered. Subsection (d) provides that "The jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States to affirm, enforce, modify, or set aside orders of the Commission shall be exclusive." Subsections (g), (h), (i) and (j) set out the points of time at which a cease and desist order of the Commission becomes final.

[Extent of Jurisdiction Under Section 5]

I find nothing in Section 5 which gives the Commission power to modify or attempt to enforce, independently of the Circuit Court of Appeals, its original cease and desist order of 1943. Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act is self-sufficient for enforcement proceedings with respect to decrees entered thereunder, and therefore the remedies available to the Commission are contempt proceedings in the Circuit Court of Appeals or penalty proceedings under Section 5 (1) of the Act.

[Cases Cited]

The United States contends that the Commission's order of September 2, 1947 indicates that the purpose of the Commission's investigation was to determine the manner and form of compliance with the Commission's modified order to cease and desist of November 10, 1941. That the Commission's order of September 2, 1947 only asked that the defendants file reports indicating the manner and form of defendants' compliance with the modified order of the Commission to cease and desist and with the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals. Defendants did file an additional compliance report with the Commission setting out that they were complying in the same manner as set forth in their original compliance reports filed in 1943. What defendants did not file is the documentary evidence requested by the Commission and not covered by Section 10 at all. Section 10 provides that only upon the failure of a corporation to file the annual or special reports referred to therein shall the penalty provision become operative. United States v. National Biscuit Company, 25 Fed. Supp. 329.

Federal Trade Commission v. Claire Furnace Co., 274 U. S. 160, was a bill in equity brought by various coal, steel and related industries to enjoin the Federal Trade Commission from enforcing order issued by the Commission requiring those companies to furnish monthly reports of production, balance sheets and other voluminous information in detail. Without questioning appellee's right to seek relief by injunction, the Federal Trade Commission answered, admitting the issuance of the orders, claiming authority therefor under Sections 6 and 9, Federal Trade Commission Act. The cause was heard on a motion to strike the answer, the court holding the answer insufficient, and granted the injunction. The Supreme Court said:

> "Appellees were not charged with practicing unfair methods of competition (Section 5, Act of September 26, 1914) or violating the Clayton Act * * *. Orders under such charges can be enforced only through a Circuit Court of Appeals * * *.
>
> "The action of the Commission here challenged must be justified, if at all, under the paragraphs of Sections 6 and 9, * * * and the only methods prescribed for enforcing orders permitted by any of these paragraphs are specified in Sections 9 and 10. They are applications to the Attorney General to institute an action for mandamus, and proceedings by him to recover the prescribed penalties."

[Provisions of Sections 6 (a), 6 (b) of Act]

Sections 6 (a) and 6 (b) of the Act provide for economic investigations by the Commission from time to time as to the organization, business, conduct, practice and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, and for the filing of annual or special reports. The penalty applicable for failure to file these reports has no relation to failure to comply with an order requiring information as to the manner in which an order to cease and desist is being observed, and the supplemental compliance report here involved is not one required by the Act and is clearly not the kind of report set out in Section 6 (a) or Section 6 (b).

[Investigation of Violations by Commission]

Defendants concede, and I agree, that notwithstanding the reservation of jurisdiction by the Circuit Court of Appeals in its decree, the Commission may investigate any violations which it has reason to believe defendants are committing. In order to accomplish this the Commission may file a new complaint against defendants, alleging in what manner it considers that defendants are violating the Act. Or penalty proceedings under Section 5 (1) may be initiated by the United States for alleged violations of the former decree in the Circuit Court of Appeals. Or contempt proceedings may be brought in the Circuit Court of Appeals.

[Purpose of Commission's Investigation]

The Commission insists that this is not a Section 5 proceeding, nor is it an attempt on the part of the Commission to enforce the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals or the Commission's modified order to cease and desist; that it is purely an investigation to determine whether the defendants are complying with the former decree and the Commission's order. It seems to me, however, that the Commission is attempting indirectly to use the power given to it under Section 5 in order to secure the information it seeks under Section 6 (a) and 6 (b).

[Extent of Commission's Power Under Section 6 (g)]

The Commission insists that under Section 6 (g) it has the power to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act. That under this authority it has promulgated Rule XXVI providing for the filing of reports and supplemental reports showing compliance with the Commission's orders. Defendants challenge this authority on the ground that nowhere in the Act is any statutory authority given to the Commission to require either compliance or supplemental compliance reports. The Commission also insists that Rule XXVI has nothing to do with Section 5 compliance reports, but is only in aid of economic survey reports under Section 6 (b).

[Substance of Rule XXVI]

Subparagraph (a) of Rule XXVI provides for an original report of compliance with the Commission's cease and desist order. Subparagraph (b) sets out the right of the Commission to require from time to time, further supplemental reports of compliance. Subparagraph (c) provides how the reports shall be signed. Defendants urge that no court has ever declared this rule to be lawful, valid and enforceable; and that not until the present time, almost thirty-four years after the enactment of the Federal Trade Commission Act, has the Commission made an attempt to enforce subparagraph (b) thereof in a Section 5 proceeding. Nowhere in Section 5 can I find any reference whatever to compliance reports. Section 5 provides for the finality of a cease and desist order as soon as the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission over it has been transferred to the Circuit Court of Appeals, but nowhere does Section 5 confer upon the Commission authority to make rules, and no rule-making paragraph of any statute could confer upon an administrative body authority to substantially alter the explicit provisions of a statutory enactment such as Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[Motion for Summary Judgment Denied]

For all of the reasons set out herein I am of the opinion that plaintiff's motion for summary judgment for a mandatory injunction commanding defendants to file the reports requested by the Commission's order of September 2, 1947, and for judgment against the defendants in the amount of $100.00 a day for each day from and after April 1, 1948, should be denied.

[Motions for Summary Judgment Allowed—Complaint Dismissed]

Defendants' motions for summary judgment that defendants are not liable for the $100.00 a day penalty are allowed, and the complaint herein is dismissed for the reason that I believe this Court is without jurisdiction to entertain the same.

[¶ 62,297] Swiss Watch Dial Co., Inc. v. International Dial Co., Inc., Aaron Goodkind, individually and doing business as Arctic Watch Co., Norman Flaxman and Irving Marcus, individually and doing business as Norman Watch Co., a co-partnership.

In the United States District Court, Southern District of New York. Civ. 43-787. February 4, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Allegation—Advertising and Circularization No Bar to Claim.—Application by the defendants for injunctive relief is denied in a counterclaim based upon an alleged violation of the Federal Antitrust Laws by plaintiff manufacturer allegedly attempting illegally to extend the monopoly of a patent, and engaging in unfair competition, by circularizing the watch trade, and advertising, in a magazine published throughout the United States, that it is the only one which has the right to make rhinestone watch dials, and that the trade may avoid legal headaches by buying dials from plaintiff. There is no allegation of any contract, combination, conspiracy or monopoly in restraint of trade among the several states or elsewhere. Mere advertisement and circularization of the watch trade does not constitute a violation of the Sherman or Clayton Act.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1660.315.

For plaintiff: Henry L. Burkitt, New York, New York.

For defendants: Peter Fries, Jr., for defendants International Dial Co., Inc. and Aaron Goodkind, individually and doing business as Arctic Watch Co.

[Motion to Dismiss Counterclaim]

BRIGHT, JOHN: Plaintiff's motion to dismiss the counterclaim pleaded by the defendants International Dial Co. Inc. and Aaron Goodkind, individually and doing business as Arctic Watch Co. is granted. As I read it, the counterclaim attempts to plead claims for violation of the federal antitrust laws, in that plaintiff is attempting illegally to extend the monopoly of a patent, and for unfair competition, both based on the allegation that plaintiff has circularized the watch trade, and advertised in a magazine published throughout the United States, that it is the only one which has the right to make rhinestone watch dials, the edge of which is reduced in thickness so that the case, movement and dial may be fitted together under Patent No. 2,427,961, and that the trade may avoid legal headaches by buying dials from plaintiff. It is asserted by defendants that plaintiff has violated sections 1 through 7 and 14 and 15 of Title 15 U. S. C. Section 1 makes illegal every contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, among the several states, with certain exceptions not here material. Section 2 provides that every person who shall monopolize or conspire with other persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 3 declares illegal every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in any Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, or between such Territory and another, or between such Territory and any state or said District. Section 4 invests the several district courts with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1-7 and 15; and makes it the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States to institute proceedings for that purpose. Section 5 permits the bringing in of additional parties in litigation under section 4. Section 6 authorizes the forfeiture, seizure and condemnation of property owned under any contract, combination or conspiracy, the subject of and mentioned in section 1, while in transit from one state to another. Section 7 merely defines person or persons. Section 14 makes it unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, to sell, lease, or contract for sale any merchandise, patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale, on an agreement or understanding not to use or deal in the goods of a competitor where such understanding lessens competition or tends to create a monopoly. Section 15 permits any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws to sue in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides, is found or has an agent, and to recover threefold damages. It is difficult to see how any of sections 3 through 7 to 14 have any reference to the allegations set out in the counterclaim. There is no allegation of any contract, combination, conspiracy or monopoly in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or elsewhere. The mere advertisement or circularization of the trade in the manner mentioned, in my judgment, would not constitute a violation of the Sherman or Clayton Acts. It might be a defense to the plaintiff's cause of action based on an infringement of a valid patent, but the determination of that is not now necessary. The allegations in the counterclaim do not seem to me to state any claim under the antitrust laws; and inasmuch as there is no diversity of citizenship, I cannot see how, under the facts stated in the counterclaim, this court has jurisdiction of the claim of unfair competition.

[Application for Injunctive Relief Denied]

For the reasons stated above, the application by the said defendants for injunctive relief based upon the allegations in the counterclaim must be denied.

Settle order on notice.

[¶ 62,298] United States of America v. United Shoe Machinery Corporation.

In the United States District Court, District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 7198. March 3, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Production of Documents.—In a civil action by the Government under the Sherman Act, plaintiff's motion for production of documents dating back approximately 27 years is allowed. In a civil action under the antitrust laws there are at least two reasons why the reach into the past might be longer than would be appropriate in a criminal proceeding under the antitrust laws. One consideration is that in a civil case the three-year statute of limitations is inapplicable. Another consideration is that in an equity proceeding the evidence is to be presented to a judge sitting alone and experienced in giving appropriate weight to stale as well as recent conduct whereas in a criminal proceeding the evidence sought is to be presented initially to a grand jury and ultimately to a petit jury. However, plaintiff's motion to obtain defendant's copies of plaintiff's own documents is denied. The mere fact that defendant has already incurred expense and labor in preparing a selection from plaintiff's documents, lists and files of patents, does not make the fruit of that labor available to plaintiff in order to simplify plaintiff's preparation for trial.

See Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1610.341.

For plaintiff: James M. Malloy, Boston, Mass.; Grant W. Kelleher, Special Asst. to Atty. General, C. Worth Rowley, Alfred Karstead, Edward M. Feeney, Roy N. Freed, Special Attorneys, Boston, Mass. Tom C. Clark, Attorney General, John F. Sonnett, Asst. Atty. General, Holmes Balbridge, Special Asst. to Atty. General Washington, D. C.; William T. McCarthy, U. S. Attorney, Boston, Mass.

For defendant: Walter Powers, Boston, Mass., John L. Hall; Claude R. Branch, Boston, Mass., Charles P. Curtis, Jr. Boston Mass.

[Motions Before Plaintiff]

WYZANSKI, JR., D. J.: There are before me defendant's motion for a more definite statement and for a bill of particulars and plaintiff's motion as amended, for production of documents.

[Motion for Bill of Particulars Denied]

I deny in toto defendant's motion for a definite statement and for a bill of particulars. My consistent practice in civil cases has been narrowly to restrict the granting of motions for a more definite statement and for bills of particulars. Like the majority of courts whose opinions are cited in the report prepared by the Advisory Committee on Rules of Civil Procedure, I have viewed Rule 12 (e) strictly. Under the standards which I have heretofore consistently applied, I am satisfied that plaintiff's bill states with sufficient particularity the conduct which defendant is alleged to have pursued in violation of law.

[Parties' Concession as to Rule 34 Set Forth]

With respect to plaintiff's motion, as amended, for production of documents under Rule 34, I start with the concession made by both parties at the bar: (1) it is a matter of judicial discretion whether a court grants a motion under Rule 34 prior to defendant's answer and (2) there is a conflict in the lower Federal courts as to whether Rule 34 and particularly the word "designated" as used in that rule is satisfied when the demanding party indicates merely the categories of documents which he desires to have furnished by his opponent.

[Interests of Justice]

So far as concerns my discretion to allow such a motion at the present time, I conclude that the interests of justice will be furthered by allowing the motion forthwith. Expedition is of the essence of justice in this case. The reasons were sufficiently set forth in the Attorney-General's original certificate and require no elaboration.

[Cases Cited]

So far as concerns the conflict in the interpretation of Rule 34, I am mindful that the early view in the Southern District of New York and the view prevailing even now in many districts was perhaps best phrased by Judge Woolsey in United States v. American Optical Company, 2 F. R. D. 534 (S. D. N. Y.). In that civil action by the government under the Sherman Act he denied the government's motion for production of documents because it did not point with sufficient precision to each specific document sought. In his opinion the touchstone in a motion under Rule 34 was whether it was possible for "the defendant to go to his files and, without difficulty, to pick the document or other item requested out and to turn to the plaintiff saying 'Here it is.'" Such definiteness of description, however, no longer appears to prevail in the Southern District of New York where Woolsey J. once sat with such distinction. The latest authoritative decision is by Judge Rifkind in United States v. United States Alkali Export Associa- tion, 7 F. R. D. 256 (S. D. N. Y.). In that anti-trust proceeding Judge Rifkind upheld a motion for discovery of the category type similar to the pattern followed by plaintiff in the case at bar. I am pursuaded that in the instant litigation the sounder course is to follow the broader rule announced by Judge Rifkind and built on the analogies of Brown v. United States, 276 U. S. 134, 143, and Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 543-544. Compare also the breadth of administrative subpoenas sustained in Oklahoma Press Publishing v. Walling, 327 U. S. 186, 210, footnote 46. The categories of documents here requested seem to me to be sufficiently clearly defined. All of them are on their face material to the issues raised by the complaint. There is no insuperable difficulty in identifying them (as distinguished from the expense and labor of collecting them). Their prompt assembly and production would expedite this case. And an attempt to state more specifically each document requested would primarily serve dilatory purposes.

[Demand for 1920 Documents Reasonable]

The demand that the documents in the various categories be produced as far back as 1920 seems to me reasonable in view of the nature of the controversy. It does not indeed cover so long a period as Judge Caffey allowed the government in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 44 F. Supp. 97 (S. D. N. Y.). The propriety of Judge Caffey's ruling is revealed by the scope of the opinion finally written by Judge L. Hand in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. (2d) 416 (C. C. A. 2). I am aware that I have allowed plaintiff to reach into a period earlier than Judge Sweeney permitted in a grand jury matter involving the investigation of this same defendant. However, in a criminal case under the anti-trust laws there are at least two reasons why the reach into the past might be shorter than would be appropriate in a civil proceeding under the anti-trust laws. One consideration is that in a criminal case there is a three-year statute of limitations inapplicable in civil cases. Another consideration is that in a criminal case the evidence sought is to be presented initially to a grand jury and ultimately to a petit jury whereas in an equity proceeding like the present one the evidence is to be presented to a judge sitting alone and experienced in giving appropriate weight to stale as well as to recent conduct.

[Question as to Limitation of Documents]

I have considered whether to limit defendant's obligation to production of such documents as are now available in Massachusetts. I have concluded that my order ought not to be so limited, although I should expect that after random sampling of files outside of Massachusetts the government might be content with some rather than all the required documents outside of Massachusetts.

[Documents Should Be Available to Plaintiff]

Paragraphs 4 (a), (b) and (c) of the motion seek to reach defendant's copies of plaintiff's own documents, the originals and copies of which are still available in plaintiff's own patent office. There is no reason why plaintiff if it desires these publicly available documents which originated with the plaintiff's own patent office should not be required to procure such documents at its own expense and labor. The mere fact that defendant has already incurred expense and labor in preparing a selection from plaintiff's documents, lists and files of patents does not make the fruit of that labor available to plaintiff in order to simplify plaintiff's preparation for trial. Of course, if the government cooperates by accepting random sampling of defendant's non-Massachusetts files, as I proposed in the previous paragraph, then defendant might voluntarily furnish plaintiff the matters referred to in paragraphs 4(a), (b) and (c) of the motion.

[Record of Time Spent on Research Ordered]

In order that the Court can know that compliance with this order has been prompt, full and ungrudging, I direct that defendant shall instruct each of its employees affected by the order to produce (not including its officers or counsel) to keep a detailed record of the hours each such employee spends in finding for and producing to plaintiff (not in conferring with defendant's counsel or officers about, or in considering the value or effect of) the documents required to be produced by this order.

Ordered that defendant's motion for a more definite statement and for a bill of particulars is denied.

Ordered that paragraphs 4 (a), (b) and (c) of plaintiff's motion, as amended, for production of documents is denied.

Ordered that the remaining parts of plaintiff's motion, as amended, for production of documents is granted.

Ordered that each of defendant's employees affected by the aforesaid order to produce shall keep a detailed record of the hours expended by him in finding for, and producing to, plaintiff the documents required under the aforesaid order.

[¶ 62,299] American Machine and Metals, Inc. v. De Bothezat Impeller Company, Inc.

In the District Court of the United States, Southern District of New York. Civil No. 40-166. August 12, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Allegations—Motion to Strike Denied.—Reformation of an agreement entered into by plaintiff and defendant, under which plaintiff received from defendant patents and equipment for making fans and like products, and for which plaintiff was to pay defendant license fees based on plaintiff's net sales, is being sought by defendant as a result of plaintiff's desire to exercise the contract's right of termination clause. Plaintiff alleges that if the contract is reformed, the agreement would be invalid as an unlawful restraint of trade. Defendant interprets the agreement as barring plaintiff from ever competing with defendant, if plaintiff terminates the agreement. Whether the agreement in defendant's interpretation is violative thereof is not clear. Since it presents a substantial question of law, motion to strike this allegation from plaintiff's reply is denied.

See the Sherman Antitrust Act, Vol. 1, ¶ 1660.315.

For plaintiff: Alphonse Kenison; Leonard P. Moore, Charles Pickett, Edward R. Neaher and Chadbourne, Wallace, Parke & Whiteside of Counsel.

For defendant: Perkins, Malone & Washburn; Watson Washburn, of Counsel.

Memorandum

[Nature of Litigation]

RYAN, J.: Defendant moves pursuant to Rule 12 (f), Fed. R. Civ. P., for an order striking, from plaintiff's amended reply to defendant's counterclaims, defenses comprising twenty-three separate paragraphs of the reply—(in effect, everything but the denials therein).

[Facts]

A summary statement of this litigation will suffice. Plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement on April 3, 1934 under which plaintiff received from defendant patents and equipment for making fans and like products and for which plaintiff was to pay defendant license fees based on plaintiff's net sales. The contract contains a right of termination clause which plaintiff now desires to exercise. Defendant claims that if plaintiff terminates the contract plaintiff will not be permitted to continue the manufacture of fans and ventilating equipment. Plaintiff seeks a declaration of the rights of the parties, under this clause, to avoid the possible accrual of damages. He has been seeking such a declaration since serving defendant on February 14, 1947.

[Cases Cited]

It has been established that these pleadings alone set forth a cause of action for declaratory judgment, (American Machine and Metals, Inc. v. DeBothezat Impeller Co., C. C. A. 2, March 10, 1948), and that the pleadings in conjunction with defendant's affidavits present a justiciable controversy. American Machine and Metals, Inc. v. DeBothezat Impeller Co., S. D. N. Y., May 10, 1948, (Hulbert J.).

[Defendant's allegations]

Defendant has now answered by various denials and has alleged six separate defenses and counterclaims.

[Plaintiff's Allegations]

By its reply, plaintiff has alleged various denials in addition to numerous separate defenses. It is to strike out these defenses that defendant moves.

[Rule Quoted]

Rule 12 (f) reads:

"Upon motion made by a party . . . or upon the court's own initiative at any time, the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter." To expedite the administration of justice is the function of this rule, Pursuant thereto the court will delete allegations not responsive [Morgan v. Patillo, 1 F. 2d 326, (S. D. Fla., 1924], or relevant [Kraft v. R. H. Macy & Co. 3 F. R. D. 54 (S. D. N. Y., 1943)]. An entire defense should not be stricken unless it grossly violates the requirements of Rule 8. [Cf. Shultz v. Mfrers & Traders Trust Co. 1 F. R. D. 53 (W. D. N. Y., 1939)].

[Cases Cited]

Motions to strike out are not to be freely granted, [Sinaiko Bros. Coal & Oil Co. v. Ethyl Gasoline Corp., 2 F. R. D. 305 (S. D. N. Y., 1942); Contogeorge v. Spyrou, 7 F. R. D. 223 (S. D. N. Y., 1946)], and no deletions will be made unless it is clear that the allegations are without the issues. [Kraus v. General Motors Corp., 27 F. Supp. 537 (S. D. N. Y., 1939); Irving Berlin Inc. v. Anziano, 4 F. R. D. 33 (S. D. N. Y., 1944)]. Moreover, the movant should show that he will be prejudiced if the attacked allegations are left in the pleadings. [Eastman Kodak Co. v. McAuley, 2 F. R. D. 21 (S. D. N. Y., 1941); Huber Inc. v. Pillsbury Flour Mills, Inc., 30 F. Supp. 108 (S. D. N. Y., 1939)]. Finally, a motion to strike a defense will be denied if the defense presents a bona fide question of law or fact which should be heard on its merits. [Milkman v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 36 F. Supp. 116 (E. D. N. Y., 1941)].

[Specific Paragraphs To Be Stricken]

Against all six counterclaims plaintiff alleged that defendant had not set forth the grounds for federal diversity jurisdiction. But, plaintiff has withdrawn this defense. It is ordered, therefore that paragraphs 5, 12, 20, 24, 28 and 31 be stricken from the amended reply.

[Absence of Prejudice]

It is to be noted that at no time has defendant alleged that it would be prejudiced were the attacked allegations permitted to remain in the amended reply. While the court will not reiterate this on the consideration of each allegation, it is none the less an important factor.

[Impertinent Allegations To Stand]

Plaintiff has not moved against defendant's pleadings, stating that it has refrained from so doing to avoid further delay. The court may on its own motion delete impertinent allegations. [Rule 12 (f), supra; Gunder v. New York Times Co., 37 F. Supp. 911 (S. D. N. Y., 1941)]. This, however, is not customary. In light of plaintiff's expressed desire the court will refrain from determining whether any of defendant's pleadings should be stricken.

[Reformation of Agreement Discussed]

Defendant's first separate defense is that it is entitled to a reformation of the 1934 agreement. By reply, plaintiff alleges this is not a legal defense to a complaint seeking a declaratory judgment. Defendant asks that plaintiff's allegation be stricken. We have a substantial question of law raised by plaintiff which cannot be decided on a motion to strike. As to this allegation, defendant's motion to strike out is denied.

[Conversion of Equipment]

Defendant's second separate defense is that plaintiff converted defendant's equipment "leased" to plaintiff by the agreement. By reply, plaintiff alleges that neither is this a legal defense to a complaint seeking a declaratory judgment. It is not apparent that this defense would bar plaintiff's plea for a declaratory judgment. Defendant suggests it would render plaintiff's position "inequitable" and that it should be refused its plea, but offers no direct authorities. Why the alleged conversion by plaintiff should prevent its securing a judicial interpretation of the disputed contract is at the least a substantial legal query. Motion denied as to this allegation of plaintiff's reply.

[Allegations as to Marketing of Products]

Defendant's third, fourth and sixth defenses all sound in contract and are alleged in this order: that plaintiff breached its agreement by failing to use the name "De Bothezat" in the marketing of the products involved; that plaintiff has refused to furnish a duly certified audit detailing his receipts for 1946 and 1947, as required by paragraph nine of the 1934 contract; and, finally, that plaintiff has failed to use its best efforts to promote the sale of the products. Plaintiff alleges that these are not legally sufficient defenses to a complaint seeking a declaratory judgment. Plaintiff is seeking an interpretation of a contract clause. Defendant's theory apparently is that these alleged actions of plaintiff as well as those set out in defendant's other defenses raise an equitable bar to the relief sought by plaintiff. There is a serious legal issue present which cannot be determined on a motion to strike. Motion denied as to these allegations.

[Concessions to Plaintiff Alleged]

Defendant's fifth separate defense alleges that defendant made certain concessions to plaintiff—evidenced by exhibits 2-13 annexed to the complaint,—in reliance upon plaintiff's representations. Again he suggests that this renders the granting of plaintiff's plea "inequitable" and again plaintiff replies that this is not a legally sufficient defense. Here also is an issue of law, sufficient to prevent our striking this allegation from plaintiff's reply.

[Counterclaims and Defenses Listed]

Now as to defendant's counterclaims and plaintiff's defenses thereto—

(1) the first counterclaim is grounded on reformation.

a.) As a defense plaintiff alleges that the pleading is legally insufficient on its face because it does not allege mutual mistake or fraud and mistake, the requisites of a reformation claim [Metzger v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 227 N. Y. 411].

Defendant's pleading is not ideal. Rule 9 (b) requires that a litigant plead the facts of fraud or mistake. [Martin v. Clayton, 6 F. R. D. 214, 215 (S. D. N. Y., 1946)]. This defendant has not done. However, plaintiff indicates that it understands the theory of defendant's claim. The functional requisites the federal rules as epitomized by Judge Clark in Dioguardi v. Durning, 139 F. 2d 774 (C. C. A. 2, 1944) are stated. Therefore, paragraph "4" of plaintiff's reply is ordered stricken.

b.) As a further defense to defendant's first counterclaim, plaintiff alleges the bar of the New York Statute of Limitations of 10 years (N. Y. C. P. A. Sec. 53). This raises a question of fact and law as to when the alleged claim of defendant arose and as to the statute applicable. Motion denied on this allegation.

c.) As a further defense, plaintiff alleges that if the contract is reformed as defendant requests, then, the agreement would be invalid as an unlawful restraint of trade. Defendant interprets the agreement as barring plaintiff from ever competing with defendant, if plaintiff terminates the agreement. The Supreme Court has circumscribed the permissible scope of patent monopolies. [Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488; Scott Paper Co. v. Marcellus Mfg. Co., 326 U. S. 249]. Whether the agreement in defendant's interpretation is violative thereof is not clear. Since it presents a substantial question of law, motion is denied as to this allegation.

d.) As a further defense to defendant's first counterclaim, plaintiff alleges that the oral contract proposed by defendant would be invalid under the Statute of Frauds [N. Y. Pers. Prop. Law, Sec. 31]. The contract states that the right to terminate could not be exercised within one year. Hence, argues plaintiff, defendant's alleged oral agreement could not be performed within one year, and is invalid. This, too, presents issues of contract interpretation and validity which do not lie within the scope of a motion to strike. Motion denied as to this allegation.

(2). Defendant's second counterclaim alleges that plaintiff converted the property "leased" to plaintiff under the 1934 agreement.

a.) As a defense, plaintiff alleges that the conversion claim is insufficient on its face because there is no allegation that the property converted belonged to defendant. However, plaintiff does have due notice of the alleged right of defendant despite the technical inadequacy of the pleadings. Therefore, the motion is granted as to paragraph "11" of plaintiff's amended reply—which is now ordered stricken.

b.) As a further defense, plaintiff alleges that defendant's claim in conversion is barred by the New York Statute of Limitations (N. Y. C. P. A. Sec. 49, subd. 7) of three years. The matter submitted shows a clear issue of fact as to when defendant had knowledge of plaintiff's alleged conversion. The motion is denied as to this allegation.

(3). Defendant's third counterclaim alleges that plaintiff breached its agreement by failing to use the name "De Bothezat" in the marketing of the products involved.

a.) As a defense, plaintiff alleges that this allegation is legally insufficient on its face because it states merely a conclusion of law and is not sufficiently specific. While defendant's pleading is technically insufficient in the light of the requirements and spirit of the federal rules, the allegations are sufficient. If the plaintiff requires more details to prepare its case, these can be obtained by other privileges of federal pre-trial procedure. Paragraph "19" is ordered stricken from plaintiff's amended reply.

b.) As a further defense, plaintiff alleges that so much of the claim as did not accrue within six years next before the filing thereof is barred by the Statute of Limitations. A substantial issue, as to what part if any of the claim accrued within the six years arises. Motion denied on this allegation.

(5). For its fifth counterclaim defendant alleges it made concessions to plaintiff relying on representations made by the latter, and that termination by plaintiff would be "inequitable" unless prior thereto he pay defendant the aggregate amount of these concessions.

a.) As a defense, plaintiff raises the same procedural objection that it raised against defendant's first counterclaim—to wit, that defendant must allege mutual mistake or fraud and mistake to have legal efficacy in the alleged oral representations. For the same reasons as there expressed, we find the allegations of defendant state a claim. It is ordered that paragraph "27" be stricken from the amended reply.

(6). For its sixth counterclaim, defendant alleges that "plaintiff has failed to use its best efforts to promote the sale of said products, to defendant's damage in the amount of $500,000."

a.) As a defense, plaintiff alleges that so much of the claim as did not accrue within six years before the filing thereof is barred by the Statute of Limitations. That this raises a substantial issue is apparent. Motion denied as to this allegation.

[Motion Granted in Certain Respects]

Motion granted to the extent above indicated and in all other respects denied.

[¶ 62,300] United States v. General Cable Corporation, General Electric Company, The Okonite-Callender Cable Company, Incorporated, and Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corporation.

In the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York. Civil No. 40-76. August 25, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—License Agreements—Acts in Restraint of Trade Enjoined.—A consent judgment against four manufacturers of fluid filled cable and accessories enjoins the manufacturers from entering into any agreement to (1) allocate customers or divide territories or markets for the manufacture of their products; (2) fix prices or conditions of sale for their products; (3) exclude any person from the manufacture of fluid filled cable and accessories; (4) restrict the importation or exportation of fluid filled cable; (5) refrain from competition in the manufacture of or in obtaining rights to patents and technological information relating to fluid filled cable or accessories; (6) determine the terms or conditions upon which licenses or immunities under any patent, invention or technological information relating to their products shall be available to others; or (7) suppress commercial development or exploitation of patents, patent applications, inventions or technological information relating to fluid filled cable or accessories. The judgment also provides that (a) each defendant grant to any applicant a non-exclusive license to manufacture any of the patents listed in Schedule A, provided that a reasonable and non-discriminatory royalty may be collected, and that inspection of the books and records of the licensee, who may report only the amount of royalty due, is allowed; (b) the party to whom application is made for a license shall include in such license, a non-exclusive grant of immunity from suit under foreign patents corresponding to any of the United States patents listed in Schedule A; (c) upon application for a license, a defendant to whom such application is made shall advise the applicant of the royalty it deems reasonable for the patents to which application pertains; and (d) each license granted shall provide that the licensee may dispute the validity or scope of the patents under which the license is granted, and this judgment shall not be construed as importing any validity or value to any of such patents. Each of the defendants is enjoined from licensing or offering to license any patent or patents relating to fluid filled cable or accessories on condition that the licensee accept a license under other patents of a defendant or of any other persons.

See the Sherman Antitrust Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1270.151, 1530.10, 1530.50, 1530.90, 1590.

For the plaintiff: Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General, John F. X. McGohey, United States Attorney, Sigmund Timberg, J. Francis Hayden, John D. Swartz, Robert A. Nitschke, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

For the defendants: Greenman, Shea, Lane & Sandomire, by Frederick Greenman for General Cable Corporation; Cahill, Gordon, Zachry & Reindel by Jerrold G. Van Cise for General Electric Company; Francis Meagle for the Okonite-Callender Cable Company; Debevoise, Plimpton & McLean, by Edward C. McLean, for Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corporation.

Final Judgment

[Previous Action]

The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on January 30, 1947; the defendants, General Cable Corporation, General Electric Company, The Okonite-Callender Cable Company, Incorporated, and Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corporation, having appeared and filed their answers to the complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; and the plaintiff and said defendants by their attorneys having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment herein, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without an admission by any party in respect of any such issue in this or any other litigation;

Now, therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of all parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

[Basis for Action]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all the parties hereto; and the complaint states a cause of action against each of the defendants under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, as amended, and commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act.

II

[Definition of Terms]

For the purpose of this judgment:

(a) The term "fluid filled cable" shall mean all cable and cable systems for transmitting electric current for power purposes comprising one or more conductors within an enclosure or enclosures also containing a fluid (liquid or gas or both) subjected, directly or indirectly, throughout the length of the cable to controlled pressure.

(b) The term "accessories" as used herein shall mean all parts and all devices (including but not limited to normal joints, fluid-stop joints, fluid-containing reservoirs which are ordinarily of variable capacity, shipping devices, terminals and other necessary fittings), in so far and to the extent that they are incorporated or sold for incorporation in any such cable, cable system, or any part thereof, or are essential to and used or sold for use in the manufacture, shipment, installation, operation, repair and maintenance of such cable, cable system or any part thereof.

(c) The term "patents" shall mean letters patent and application for letters patent, and reissues, renewals, and continuations thereof.

III

[Extent of Application of Provisions]

The provisions of this judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to each of its subsidiaries, successors, and assigns and to each of its officers, directors, agents, nominees, employees, or any other person acting under, through or for such defendant.

IV

[List of Acts Prohibited]

Each of the defendants is hereby enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any defendant or Societa' Italiana Pirelli or Compagnie Internationale Pirelli or Protona, A. G., or with any other manufacturer of fluid filled cable, or with any of their subsidiaries, successors, assigns, officers, agents or employees, or with any person acting under, through, or for any of them, to:—

(a) allocate customers or allocate or divide territories or markets for the manufacture, use, sale or distribution of fluid filled cable or accessories;

(b) fix, determine, maintain, or adhere to, prices or terms or conditions of sale for fluid filed cable or accessories;

(c) exclude any person from or restrict any third person in the manufacture, use, sale or distribution of fluid filled cable or accessories;

(d) restrict or prevent the importation into or exportation from the United States, its territories or dependencies of fluid filled cable or accessories;

(e) refrain from competition in the manufacture, use, sale or distribution of, or in obtaining rights to patents and technological information relating to, fluid filled cable or accessories;

(f) determine or prescribe the terms or conditions upon which licenses or immunities under any patent, invention, or technological information relating to fluid filled cable or accessories shall be available to others;

(g) suppress commercial development or exploitation of patents, patent applications, inventions or technological information relating to fluid filled cable or accessories.

V

[Terminated Agreements]

The agreement listed in paragraph 19 of the complaint herein is herewith declared to be terminated, and all agreements listed in appendices A and B and paragraph 22 of the complaint herein are hereby cancelled, provided that whatever non-exclusive rights may exist in the defendants under the General Electric-Pirelli Agreement of 1933 to make, use and vend (arising out of that Agreement or any sublicense thereunder) may be retained by the defendants and shall continue, subject to the other paragraphs of this judgment. Each defendant is enjoined and restrained from adopting, adhering to, furthering or continuing any course of conduct for the purpose or with the effect of maintaining, reinstating or reviving any of said agreements.

VI

[Granting of Licenses]

(a) Each defendant is hereby ordered and directed to grant to any applicant, including any other defendant, upon written request therefor, a non-exclusive license to manufacture, use and sell under any one or more of the patents listed in Schedule A attached hereto and made a part hereof, or any United States patent or patents issued or applied for during a period of five years from the date of entry of this judgment relating to fluid filled cables or accessories, as to which such defendant has power to license, without any condition or restriction whatsoever except that (1) a reasonable and non-discriminatory royalty may be charged and collected and (2) where such royalty is charged, provision may be made for inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor who may report to the defendant licensor only the amount of royalty due and payable and no other information.

(b) Upon the request of any applicant for a license under the provisions of subsection (a) of this paragraph VI, the party to whom such application is made shall include in such license, to the extent that it has power to do so, a non-exclusive grant of immunity from suit under foreign patents corresponding to any of the United States patents listed in Schedule A attached hereto, or otherwise required to be licensed under subsection (a) of this paragraph, for any products manufactured, used or sold pursuant to said license.

(c) Upon any application for a license in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a) of this paragraph VI a defendant to whom such application is made shall advise the applicant of the royalty it deems reasonable for the patents to which the application pertains. If within sixty (60) days from the date such application is received by such defendant, such defendant and the applicant are unable to agree upon what constitutes a reasonable royalty the applicant for a license may apply forthwith to his Court for a determination of a reasonable royalty, and such defendant shall, upon receipt of notice of filing such application, promptly give notice thereof to the Attorney General. In any such proceeding the burden of proof shall be upon such defendant to establish the reasonableness of the royalty requested by it, and that such royalty is non-discriminatory. Pending the completion of any such court proceeding, the applicant shall have the right to make, use and vend under the patents to which its application pertains, without then payment of royalty or other compensation, but subject to the following provisions: Such defendant may, with notice to the Attorney General, apply to the Court to fix an interim royalty rate pending final determination of what constitutes a reasonable royalty, if any. If the Court fixes such interim royalty rate, a license shall then issue providing for the periodic payment of royalties at such interim rate from the date of the making of such application by the applicant; and whether or not such interim rate is fixed, any final order may provide for such readjustments including retroactive or diminished royalties as the Court may order after final determination of a reasonable and non-discriminatory royalty.

(d) Each license granted pursuant to this paragraph VI shall provide that the licensee may at any time, without revoking or surrendering its license, dispute the validity, scope or enforceability of any of the patents under which the license is granted, and this judgment shall not be construed as importing any validity or value to any of such patents.

(e) If at any time or times hereafter any of the defendants shall grant to any other defendant a license under any patent included within the provisions of this paragraph VI, then at each such time and in each such event the defendant so licensing another defendant is hereby ordered and directed to grant to each applicant therefor a similar license.

VII

[Licensing of Patents for Fluid Filled Cable]

Each of the defendants herein is hereby enjoined from licensing or offering to license any patent or patents relating to fluid filled cable or accessories on condition that the licensee accept a license under other patents of said defendant or of any other person.

VIII

[Availability of Webb-Pomerene Act]

Nothing in this judgment shall prevent any defendant from availing itself of the benefits of the Act of Congress of April 10, 1918, commonly called the Webb-Pomerene Act.

IX

[Steps Taken To Secure Compliance With Judgment]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General and on reasonable notice to any of the defendants made to the principal office of such defendant, be permitted subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any matters contained in this judgment and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference from the defendants, to interview officers or employees of such defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. Upon written request of the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General said defendant shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this judgment as may from time to time be reasonably necessary to the enforcement of this judgment. Information obtained by the means permitted in this paragraph shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment in which the United States is a party or as otherwise required by law.

X

[Jurisdiction of Cause Retained by Court]

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained by the Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, for the amendment, modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

Schedule A

I. Pirelli patents as to which all defendants have certain rights.

No.	Date	Inventor	Title
1,869,308	July 26, 1932	Emanueli	Process for Impregnating Insulating Materials
1,875,732	Sept. 6, 1932	Holttum	Sealing Device for Use with Electric Cables & Other Apparatus
1,883,648	Oct. 18, 1932	Emanueli	Multicore Oil Filled High Tension Electric Cable
1,895,982	Jan. 31, 1933	Emanueli	Device for Reducing the Current in the Lead Sheaths of Cables
1,895,983	Jan. 31, 1933	Emanueli	Apparatus for Degasifying Liquids
1,900,600	Mar. 7, 1933	Emanueli	High Tension Electric Cable
1,906,600	May 2, 1933	Hofner	Method of Jointing Oil Filled Cables with Hollow Conductors
1,906,636	May 2, 1933	Schlecker	Process of Locating Leaks
1,933,008	Oct. 31, 1933	Emanueli	Manufacture of Electric Cables for High Tension
1,933,112	Oct. 31, 1933	Held	Multicore High Tension Electric Cables
1,944,637	Jan. 23, 1934	Emanueli	Apparatus for Locating Oil Leaks in Cables
1,947,929	Feb. 20, 1934	Emanueli	Restrictor
1,956,723	May 1, 1934	Kunst	Joint for Oil Filled Cables
1,957,995	May 8, 1934	Emanueli	High Tension Cable
1,962,059	June 5, 1934	Emanueli	High Tension Electric Cable
1,964,907	July 3, 1934	Emanueli	Electric Cable
1,973,068	Sept. 11, 1934	Held	Oil Filled Cable
1,973,111	Sept. 11, 1934	Schlecker	High Tension Electric Cable
1,979,149	Oct. 30, 1934	Emanueli	Stop Joint for Liquid Filled Cables
1,979,150	Oct. 30, 1934	Emanueli	Feeding Joint
1,981,535	Nov. 20, 1934	Zapf	Oil Filled High Voltage Cable
1,981,536	Nov. 20, 1934	Zapf	High Tension Electric Cable
1,999,701	Apr. 30, 1935	Kunst	Oil Filled Electric Cable
2,006,236	June 25, 1935	Emanueli	Feeding Reservoir for Oil Filled Cables
2,011,389	Aug. 13, 1935	Zapf	Oil Filled Cable Installation
2,030,943	Feb. 18, 1936	Schrottke	Pressure Compensator for Oil or Compound Filled Cables
2,039,587	May 5, 1936	Emanueli	Fluid Filled Electric Cable System
2,040,204	May 12, 1936	Emanueli	Means for Maintaining Fluid Pressure in Sheathed Electric Cables
2,043,033	June 2, 1936	Capdeville	Underground Electric Cable
2,049,835	Aug. 4, 1936	Emanueli	Method of Joining Fluid Filled Electric Cables
2,064,650	Dec. 15, 1936	Emanueli	Apparatus for Degasifying Liquids
2,072,742	March 2, 1937	Emanueli	Stop Joint for Oil Filled Cables
2,081,880	May 25, 1937	Emanueli	High Tension Electric Cable
2,082,649	June 1, 1937	Nageli	Method of and Means for Exerting an Artificial Pressure on the Insulation of Electric Cables
2,115,574	Apr. 26, 1938	Gasser	Method of Eliminating Gas Pockets in Liquid Filled Cables
2,120,889	June 14, 1938	Emanueli	Stop Joint for Fluid Filled Cables
2,122,281	June 28, 1938	Emanueli	High Tension Electrical Apparatus
2,132,259	Oct. 4, 1938	Emanueli	Electric Cable
2,133,129	Oct. 11, 1938	Brigg & Gibson	Pressure Actuated Signaling Device
2,133,382	Oct. 18, 1938	Emanueli	High Tension Electric Cable
2,133,398	Oct. 18, 1938	Puritz	Electric Cable and Method of Repairing the Same
2,133,399	Oct. 18, 1938	Puritz	Electric Cable and Method of Repairing the Same
2,244,392	June 3, 1941	Emanueli	Device for Supervising the Pressure in Fluid Filled Cables
2,261,265	Nov. 4, 1941	Maass	Flexible Container
2,268,704	Jan. 6, 1942	Emanueli	Electric Cable

II. Other patents as to which General Cable Corporation has rights.

1,836,570	Dec. 15, 1931	Boyle	High Voltage Cable
1,837,375	Dec. 22, 1931	Saurman & Webb	Terminal Structure
1,868,962	July 26, 1932	Atkinson	High Voltage Bushing
1,878,094	Sept. 20, 1932	Atkinson	Oil Cooled Terminal
1,878,169	Sept. 20, 1932	Myers	Terminal
1,884,311	Oct. 25, 1932	Simmons	Laminate Insulation
1,920,903	Aug. 1, 1933	Haanen & Meurer	High Tension Cable
1,929,509	Oct. 10, 1933	Miller	Apparatus for Building Cable Joints
1,943,086	Jan. 9, 1934	McKnight	Electrical Cable and Method of Manufacture
1,943,087	Jan. 9, 1934	Potter and McKnight	Electrical Cable and Method of Manufacture
1,948,964	Feb. 27, 1934	Gay	Cooling System for Electrical Cables

No.	Date	Inventor	Title
1,958,984	May 15, 1934	Beaver	Means for Coating and Impregnating Sheet Material
1,965,540	July 3, 1934	Atkinson	Cable Installation
1,971,626	Aug. 28, 1934	Simmons	Cable Installation
2,010,530	Aug. 6, 1935	Atkinson	Electrical Installation
2,016,004	Oct. 1, 1935	Gay	Electrical Cable Installation
2,016,247	Oct. 1, 1935	Simmons	Electrical Installation
2,019,297	Oct. 29, 1935	Faucett	Electrical Cable
2,025,670	Dec. 24, 1935	Pettee	Reservoir
2,042,421	May 26, 1936	Atkinson & Hagen	Electrical Installation
2,050,990	Aug. 11, 1936	Atkinson	Cable
2,050,991	Aug. 11, 1936	Atkinson	Cable and Method of Making
2,060,745	Nov. 10, 1936	Pettee	Insulating Joint for Cables
2,067,169	Jan. 12, 1937	Beaver & Davey	Electric Cable
2,068,624	Jan. 19, 1937	Atkinson	High Voltage Bushing
2,071,102	Feb. 16, 1937	Atkinson & Simmons	Oil Filled Cable
2,075,019	Mar. 30, 1937	Buck, Roper & Thoms	Stop Joint for Electric Cable
2,093,114	Sept. 14, 1937	Sonnenfeld	Electric Cable and Method of Installation
2,098,922	Nov. 9, 1937	McKnight	Apparatus for Making Cable
2,118,546	May 24, 1938	Beaver & Davey	Joints for Electric Cable
2,125,869	Aug. 9, 1938	Atkinson	Electrical Conductor
2,147,402	Feb. 14, 1939	Faucett	Electrical Cable
2,163,783	June 27, 1939	Fisher	Cable Installation
2,197,544	April 16, 1940	Atkinson	Electric Cable
2,208,832	July 23, 1940	Beaver & Davey	Electric Cable
2,237,402	April 8, 1941	Beaver et al.	Electric Cable and Joint
2,240,745	May 6, 1941	Atkinson	Electric Cable
2,250,239	July 22, 1941	Sonnenfeld	Electrical Power Cable
2,254,958	Sept. 2, 1941	Beaver et al.	Fluid Tight Joint
2,310,201	Feb. 9, 1943	Cox	Cable Terminal

PENDING APPLICATIONS

SN763,001	July 23, 1947	Atkinson & McGrath	Cable with Flow Limiting Covering
SN763,002	July 23, 1947	Atkinson & Garner	Weathertight Reel
SN765,708	Aug. 2, 1947	Bronovicki	Pulling Eye and End Cap

III. Other patents as to which General Electric Company has rights.

1,819,881	Aug. 18, 1931	Eby	Semistop Joint for Fluid Filled Cable
1,819,882	Aug. 18, 1931	Eby	Insulated Cable Joint
1,822,737	Sept. 8, 1931	Karapetoff	Ployphase Intersheath Cable
1,822,738	Sept. 8, 1931	Karapetoff	Ployphase Intersheath Cable
1,823,731	Sept. 15, 1931	Eby	Variable Capacity Reservoir
1,830,533	Nov. 3, 1931	Eby	Terminal for Fluid Filled Cables
1,833,798	Nov. 24, 1931	Shanklin	Oil Filled Lead Covering Electric Cables
1,834,864	Dec. 1, 1931	Phillips	Joint for High Tension Electric Cables
1,835,922	Dec. 8, 1931	Zeiss et al.	Method and Means for Drying Out and Impregnating Joints for Cables
1,853,882	Apr. 12, 1932	Roper	Differential Method of Indicating Trouble on Oil Filled Cable
1,853,883	Apr. 12, 1932	Roper	Differential Indicating Means
1,872,818	Aug. 23, 1932	Roper	Impregnated Paper Insulated, Lead Covered Cable
1,888,075	Nov. 15, 1932	Eby	Terminal for Oil Filled Cables and Method of Evacuating Same
1,892,551	Dec. 27, 1932	Hayman et al.	End Cap or Head for Electric Cables
1,893,376	Jan. 3, 1933	Piercy	High Tension Power Transmitting Electric Cable
1,895,396	Jan. 24, 1933	Pfannkuch	Joint for High Tension Cables
1,896,841	Feb. 7, 1933	Eby	Fluid Stop Joint for Sheathed High Tension Cables
1,899,591	Feb. 28, 1933	Segar	Laminated Material
1,902,487	Mar. 21, 1933	Calvert	Oil Filled High Tension Cable
1,904,423	Apr. 18, 1933	Eby	Indicator for Reservoirs for Liquor Filled Cables
1,905,691	Apr. 25, 1933	Eby	Joints for High Tension Underground Cables
1,917,129	July 4, 1933	Kirch	Temperature Indicator
1,919,935	July 25, 1933	Eby	Fluid Filled High Tension Terminal
1,931,373	Oct. 17, 1933	Clark	Dielectric Material for Electrical Devices
1,931,455	Oct. 17, 1933	Clark	Dielectric Material for Electrical Devices
1,933,312	Oct. 31, 1933	Clark	Electric Cable System
1,933,313	Oct. 31, 1933	Clark	Cable System

No.	Date	Inventor	Title
1,933,347	Oct. 31, 1933	Shanklin	Underground Oil Filled Cable
1,933,348	Oct. 31, 1933	Shanklin	Semibalanced Pressure System for Fluid Filled Cables
1,935,595	Nov. 14, 1933	Clark	Liquid Composition and Electrical Apparatus Containing Same
1,936,470	Nov. 21, 1933	Merrill	Insulating Spacer
1,944,730	Jan. 23, 1934	Clark	Composition for Dielectric Use
1,950,182	Mar. 6, 1934	Kirch	Multiple Conductor Cable
1,952,097	Mar. 27, 1934	Shanklin	Stop Joint for Electric Cables
1,964,684	June 26, 1934	Clark	Electrical Apparatus
1,970,393	Aug. 14, 1934	Piercy	Method of and Means for Connecting Reservoirs to Fluid Filled Cables
1,977,325	Oct. 16, 1934	Pfannkuch	High Voltage Cable
1,978,233	Oct. 23, 1934	Shanklin	Pressure Reservoir for Cables
1,979,148	Oct. 30, 1934	Eby	Joint for Electric Cables
1,988,279	Jan. 15, 1935	Kirch	Terminal and Joint for Electric Cables
1,991,230	Feb. 12, 1935	Shanklin	Electric Cable System and Method of Installing the Same
1,995,884	Mar. 26, 1935	Eby	Sheath Insulator
1,999,004	Apr. 23, 1935	Clark	Dielectric Composition
2,000,747	May 7, 1935	Eby	Fluid Stop Joint
2,000,748	May 7, 1935	Engster	Terminal for Electric Cables
2,004,769	June 11, 1935	Shanklin	Means for and Method of Detecting and Ascertaining the Region of Oil Leaks in Cable Systems
2,009,820	July 30, 1935	Shanklin	Apparatus for Impregnating Cables
2,013,537	Sept. 3, 1935	Eby	Terminal for Electric Conductors
2,015,542	Sept. 24, 1935	Zeiss	Means for Temporarily Closing the Channels in Hollow Conductors of Fluid Filled Cables
2,019,338	Oct. 29, 1935	Clark	Dielectric Material
2,019,339	Oct. 29, 1935	Clark	Snuffer Composition
2,019,342	Oct. 29, 1935	Eby	Joint
2,048,516	July 21, 1936	Piercy	Reel for Fluid Filled Cables
2,050,873	Aug. 11, 1936	Zickrick	Method of and Means for Making Cable Sheaths
2,050,888	Aug. 11, 1936	Kirch	Oil Filled High Voltage Cable
2,052,422	Aug. 25, 1936	Rottsieper	So-called Semistop Joint for Fluid Filled Cable
2,053,163	Sept. 1, 1936	Phillips	Joint for Fluid Filled Cables and Method of Making the Same
2,056,017	Sept. 29, 1936	Piercy	High Tension Oil Filled Cable
2,089,052	Aug. 3, 1937	Calvert	High Tension Cable System
2,092,559	Sept. 7, 1937	Runaldue	Signal Means for Fluid Filled Cables
2,092,560	Sept. 7, 1937	Runaldue	Alarm System for Fluid Filled Cables
2,093,305	Sept. 14, 1937	Buck et al.	Cable Joint
2,105,406	Jan. 11, 1938	Clark	Liquid Insulating Composition
2,112,739	Mar. 29, 1938	Eby	Stop Joint for Fluid Filled Cables
2,112,740	Mar. 29, 1938	Humphrey	High Tension Gas Filled Cable
2,125,121	July 26, 1938	Marks	Terminal for Electric Cables
2,133,405	Oct. 18, 1938	Sheals	Oil Filled Cable and Means for Jointing the Same
2,141,894	Dec. 27, 1938	Alexanderson	Cable for Transmitting Electric Power
2,141,912	Dec. 27, 1938	Hobart	Power Transmission System
2,145,182	Jan. 24, 1939	Kirch	High Pressure Fluid Insulated Electric Cable
2,159,742	May 23, 1939	Kirch	Gas Pressure Electric Cable
2,167,510	July 25, 1939	Hobart	High Tension Gas Insulated Cable
2,173,717	Sept. 19, 1939	Hobart	Electrical System of Power Transmission
2,176,749	Oct. 17, 1939	Shanklin	Joint for Gas Filled Cable
2,188,178	Jan. 23, 1940	Eby	Connector for Sector Conductor Cables
2,196,026	Apr. 2, 1940	Piercy	Fluid Filled Cable
2,197,639	Apr. 16, 1940	Hobart	High Tension Cable System
2,210,804	Aug. 6, 1940	Eby	Connector for Cables
2,215,290	Sept. 17, 1940	Hobart	High Pressure Gas Filled Cable
2,216,010	Sept. 24, 1940	Hobart	High Tension Electric Cable
2,217,104	Oct. 8, 1940	Crandall	Temporary Sealing Means for Gas Filled Cables
2,220,728	Nov. 5, 1940	Piercy	Means for Controlling Liquid Pressure in Riser Cables
2,221,670	Nov. 12, 1940	Cooper	Gas Insulated Electric Device
2,222,718	Nov. 26, 1940	Phillips	Joint for High Tension Cables
2,237,803	Apr. 8, 1941	Zysk	Control Means for Gas Filled Cables
2,245,247	June 10, 1941	Aitchison	Variable Capacity Reservoir
2,248,588	July 8, 1941	Shanklin et al.	Gas Filled Cable Installation
2,253,171	Aug. 19, 1941	Engster	Gas Cable Installation
2 253,984	Aug. 26, 1941	Shanklin	Gas Filled Cable and Method of Making the Same

No.	Date	Inventor	Title
2,253,985	Aug. 26, 1941	Shanklin	Stop Joint for Gas Filled Cables and Method of Installing the Same
2,253,986	Aug. 26, 1941	Shanklin	Gas Filled Cable
2,253,917	Aug. 26, 1941	Shanklin	Terminal for Gas Filled Cables
2,259,129	Oct. 14, 1941	Engster	Gas Filled Cable
2,275,866	Mar. 10, 1942	Runaldue	Pressure Actuated Relay
2,277,460	Mar. 24, 1942	Shanklin	Gas Filled Cable Installation
2,290,706	July 21, 1942	Phillips	Cable Joint and Method of Making the Same
2,292,114	Aug. 4, 1942	Fritsche	Stop Joint for Multiconductor Fluid Filled Cable
2,295,290	Sept. 8, 1942	Piercy	Electric Power Cable
2,358,621	Sept. 19, 1944	Buller et al.	Wiring Scheme for Oil Filled Relay Systems
2,401,595	June 4, 1946	Wetherill	Gas Filled Cable Systems
2,401,996	June 11, 1946	Wetherill	Cable Terminal

PENDING APPLICATIONS

588,742	Apr. 17, 1945	Piercy & Kent	Method & Apparatus for Manufacturing Gas Filled Cable
607,833	July 30, 1945	Flynn	Gas Filled Electric Cable

IV. Other patents as to which The Okonite-Callender Cable Company, Incorporated has rights.

1,874,235	Aug. 30, 1932	I. Branthwaite	Electric Conductor
1,879,867	Sept. 27, 1932	C. E. Bennett	Lead Pressing
1,885,045	Oct. 25, 1932	C. E. Bennett	Lead Press
1,886,786	Nov. 8, 1932	I. Branthwaite	Electric Cable
1,926,666	Sept. 12, 1933	C. E. Bennett	Continuous Metal Press
1,931,592	Oct. 24, 1933	D. R. Stevens	Electric Cable
1,941,614	Jan. 2, 1934	F. Meyer and G. E. Moffitt	Pothead or Terminal for Electric Cables
1,947,454	Feb. 20, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Cable Joint
1,947,455	Feb. 20, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Cable Construction
1,947,481	Feb. 20, 1934	F. Meyer	Cable Joint
1,959,338	May 22, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Terminal Structure for Electric Cables
1,959,339	May 22, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Electric Power Cable
1,959,354	May 22, 1934	G. Everest	Electric Cable
1,968,019	July 31, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable
1,969,720	Aug. 14, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Electric Power Cable
1,969,721	Aug. 14, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Cable System
1,969,722	Aug. 14, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Cable System for the Underground Transmission of High Tension Electrical Energy
1,969,764	Aug. 14, 1934	R. E. Soutter	Electric Apparatus
1,975,075	Oct. 2, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
1,980,370	Nov. 13, 1934	C. E. Bennett	Cable Terminal
1,986,789	Jan. 8, 1935	C. E. Bennett	Electric Power Cable System for the Underground Transmission of Electrical Energy
1,986,842	Jan. 8, 1935	F. C. Meyer et al.	Cable Terminal
1,986,843	Jan. 8, 1935	F. C. Meyer and G. E. Moffitt	Terminal or Pothead for Electric Cables
1,986,844	Jan. 8, 1935	F. C. Meyer and G. E. Moffitt	Electric Cable Terminal
1,991,368	Feb. 19, 1935	C. E. Bennett	Electric Power Cable
1,999,354	Apr. 30, 1935	I. Branthwaite	Cable Sheath
2,015,063	Sept. 24, 1935	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable (Oilostatic)
2,026,587	Jan. 7, 1936	F. C. Meyer and G. E. Moffitt	Joint for Electric Cables (Oilostatic)
2,029,332	Feb. 4, 1936	F. C. Meyer and G. E. Moffitt	Pothead
2,043,227	June 9, 1936	C. E. Bennett	Leak Indicating Apparatus for Oil Filled Electric Power Cables
2,046,341	July 7, 1936	D. V. McParlin	Method of and Apparatus for Removing Sheaths from Cables and the Like
2,046,364	July 7, 1936	C. E. Bennett	Apparatus for Shipping and Installing Electric Power Cables
2,049,465	Aug. 4, 1936	F. C. Meyer and G. E. Moffitt	Joint for Electric Cables
2,062,289	Dec. 1, 1936	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,066,320	Jan. 5, 1937	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,066,321	Jan. 5, 1937	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,066,322	Jan. 5, 1937	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,066,323	Jan. 5, 1937	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,070,974	Feb. 16, 1937	F. C. Meyer	Electric Cable System and Joint Therefor

No.	Date	Inventor	Title
2,080,829	May 18, 1937	F. C. Meyer and G. E. Moffitt	Joint for Electric Cables
2,081,263	May 25, 1937	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,099,291	Nov. 16, 1937	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,138,614	Nov. 29, 1938	B. B. Reinitz	Sheathing Electric Cables
2,150,201	Mar. 14, 1939	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,158,517	May 16, 1939	D. V. McParlin	Apparatus for Alloying Metals
2,161,413	June 6, 1939	F. H. Gooding	Electric Cable System
2,168,858	Aug. 8, 1939	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,174,961	Oct. 3, 1939	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,180,425	Nov. 21, 1939	F. C. Meyer	Electric Cable System
2,185,376	Jan. 2, 1940	D. V. McParlin	Melting Pot
2,186,444	Jan. 9, 1940	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,186,445	Jan. 9, 1940	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,213,983	Sept. 10, 1940	F. H. Gooding	Apparatus for Electrically Measuring the Wall Thickness of Metal Tubing
2,222,932	Nov. 26, 1940	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable
2,227,316	Dec. 31, 1940	F. C. Meyer	Electric Power Cable
2,233,765	Mar. 4, 1941	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable Systems
2,257,727	Oct. 7, 1941	C. E. Bennett and F. C. Meyer	Method of Forming Dams
2,286,594	June 16, 1942	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,300,666	Nov. 3, 1943	F. H. Gooding	Electric Power Cable
2,315,039	Mar. 20, 1943	H. L. Beede	Electric Cable
2,318,367	May 4, 1943	J. E. Brigg	Insulated Electric Conductor
2,320,506	June 1, 1943	C. E. Bennett and F. C. Meyer	Method of Forming Dams
2,354,191	July 5, 1944	C. E. Bennett	Pothead or Terminal for Electric Cable System
2,368,097	Jan. 30, 1945	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
2,375,067	May 1, 1945	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable Sheath
2,375,068	May 1, 1945	C. E. Bennett	Method of Forming Reinforced Sheathed Cables
2,375,069	May 1, 1945	C. E. Bennett et al.	Apparatus for Drying Air
2,382,120	Aug. 14, 1945	F. J. White	Electric Cable System
2,388,899	Nov. 13, 1945	C. E. Bennett	Electrical Apparatus
2,390,823	Dec. 11, 1945	C. E. Bennett	Apparatus for Impregnating Electric Power Cables
2,399,849	May 7, 1946	C. E. Bennett	Method of Lining Pipe with Plastic Material
2,412,556	Dec. 17, 1946	C. E. Bennett	Electric Power Distribution System
2,414,352	Jan. 14, 1947	C. E. Bennett and P. V. White	Joint for Electric Cables
2,419,054	Apr. 15, 1947	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable
2,433,505	Dec. 30, 1947	C. E. Bennett and G. Everest	Means for Locating Electric Faults in Electric Cable System
2,433,729	Dec. 30, 1947	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable

PENDING APPLICATIONS

1,446	Jan. 9, 1948	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
1,447	Jan. 9, 1948	C. E. Bennett and P. V. White	Electric Power Cable
1,448	Jan. 9, 1948	C. E. Bennett and P. V. White	Apparatus for Installing Electric Power Cables
2,430	Jan. 15, 1948	C. E. Bennett	Electric Power Cable Terminal
463,186	Oct. 24, 1942	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable System
535,832	May 16, 1944	C. E. Bennett and P. V. White	Pressure Controls for Electric Cables
548,688	Aug. 9, 1944	C. E. Bennett and P. V. White	Terminal Bushings
549,764	Aug. 16, 1944	C. E. Bennett	Tubular Metal Enclosure
586,590	Apr. 4, 1945	C. E. Bennett and P. Logan	Protective Apparatus
613,257	Aug. 29, 1945	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable Systems
631,688	Nov. 29, 1945	C. E. Bennett and P. V. White	Joint Structures for Cables
635,344	Dec. 15, 1945	C. E. Bennett	Terminal for Electric Power Cables
671,177	May 21, 1946	C. E. Bennett	Electric Power Cable
672,968	May 27, 1946	C. E. Bennett	Joints for Electric Cable Systems
673,205	May 29, 1946	P. V. White	Apparatus for Aligning Pipe
674,356	June 4, 1946	C. E. Bennett and P. V. White	Reels
679,605	June 26, 1946	C. E. Bennett	Electric Cable
685,573	July 23, 1946	C. E. Bennett	Terminal Structure

No.	Date	Inventor	Title
685,574	July 23, 1946	C. E. Bennett	Joints for Pipe Lines
698,576	Sept 21, 1946	C. E. Bennett and P. V. White	Reels
737,926	Mar. 28, 1947	C. E. Bennett	Terminating Bushings
740,358	Apr. 9, 1947	C. E. Bennett and P. V. White	Electric Cables and Method and Apparatus for Installing Same
741,931	Apr. 16, 1947	C. E. Bennett	High Tension Cable System

V. Other Patents as to which Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corporation Has Rights.

1,892,663	Jan. 3, 1933	Del Mar	Method of and Apparatus for Improving Electrical Properties of Cables
1,944,003	Jan. 16, 1934	Del Mar	Construction for Exterior Channel Oil Filled Cable
1,944,004	Jan. 16, 1934	Del Mar	Construction for Exterior Channel Oil Filled Cable
1,944,005	Jan. 16, 1934	Del Mar	Means for Separating Oil and Gas in Pressure Reservoirs
1,950,608	Mar. 13, 1934	Hanson	Condenser Type Joint or Terminal
1,959,526	May 22, 1934	Del Mar	Pre-twisted Sector Cable
1,980,388	Nov. 13, 1934	Del Mar	Construction for Exterior Channel Oil Filled Cable
2,031,014	Feb. 18, 1936	Staples	Means for Eliminating Laminations in Lead Sheath Manufacture
2,038,894	Apr. 28, 1936	Del Mar	High Pressure Oil Filled Cable
2,057,454	Oct. 13, 1936	Staples	Method for Making Lead Sheathed Cables
2,145,092	Jan. 24, 1939	Mitchell	High Tension Electric Cable
2,190,017	Feb. 13, 1940	Del Mar	Electric Cable
2,190,018	Feb. 13, 1940	Del Mar	Impregnated Paper Insulation for Electric Cables
2,275,187	Mar. 3, 1942	Clark and Palmer	Electric Cable
2,406,676	Aug. 27, 1946	Gambitta	Cable Joint
2,415,184	Feb. 4, 1947	Merrell	Electric Device with Electron Barrier
2,425,851	Aug. 19, 1947	Wyatt	Gas Filled Cable
2,432,568	Dec. 16, 1947	Gambitta	Gas Filled Cable System
2,432,603	Dec. 16, 1947	Zink	Segmental Conductor

UNDERTAKINGS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL WITH RESPECT TO THE PATENTS LISTED IN SCHEDULES B AND C HERETO ATTACHED

Under authority of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended, Executive Order No. 9193, as amended, and Vesting Orders Nos. 27, 112, 151, 201 and 4009, issued pursuant thereto, and Executive Order No. 9788, all right, title, and interest in the United States patents listed in Schedules B and C attached hereto and the rights and interests created in Societa Italiana Pirelli and Compagnie Internationale Pirelli by their agreement dated June 30, 1933 with General Electric Company, referred to in the foregoing final judgment, are vested in the Attorney General.

Under authority of the aforesaid Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended, and Executive Orders Nos. 9193 and 9788, and pursuant to law, the undersigned hereby undertakes and agrees that:

(1) The agreement dated June 30, 1933 between Societa Italiana Pirelli, Compagnie Internationale Pirelli and General Electric Company is hereby acknowledged to be terminated by virtue of the foregoing final judgment, subject to the retention by General Electric Company of the nonexclusive license and by other persons or corporations of the nonexclusive sub-licenses to make, use, and vend under the patents listed in Schedules B and C granted prior to December 31, 1943 by or in accordance with the terms of that agreement.

(2) The Office of Alien Property (and any successor thereto) will, during the entire terms of the patents listed in Schedule B attached hereto, grant to any applicant, including any defendant, upon written request therefor, an unrestricted, royalty-free, nonexclusive license under any one or more of such patents, in accordance with the general policies of the Office with respect to the licensing of such class of patents the titles to which are vested in the Attorney General.

(3) The Office of Alien Property (and any successor thereto) will, during the entire terms of the patents listed in Schedule C attached hereto, grant to any applicant, including any defendant, upon written request therefor an unrestricted, nonexclusive license under any one or more of such patents, in accordance with the general policies of the Office with respect to the licensing of such class of patents the titles to which are vested in the Attorney General, but in any event on terms and conditions at least as favorable to applicants for such licenses as the terms and conditions prescribed in Paragraph VI of the foregoing final judgment.

SCHEDULE B

1,906,600	1,956,723	1,981,535	2,011,389	2,115,574
1,906,636	1,973,068	1,981,536	2,030,943	2,261,265
1,933,112	1,973,111	1,999,701	2,082,649	2,352,041

SCHEDULE C

1,869,308	1,944,637	1,979,150	2,064,650	2,132,259
1,883,648	1,947,929	2,006,236	2,072,742	2,133,382
1,895,982	1,957,995	2,039,587	2,081,880	2,133,398
1,895,983	1,962,059	2,040,204	2,120,889	2,133,399
1,900,600	1,964,907	2,043,033	2,122,281	2,244,392
1,933,008	1,979,149	2,049,835

[¶ 62,301] Warren O. Englebrecht, doing business as Warrens Grocery v. Earnest Day and Mrs. Earnest Day and John Doe Day.

In the District Court within and for Muskogee County, State of Oklahoma. No. 31971. Filed July 23, 1948.

Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act

Unconstitutionality.—Section 593 of the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act is unconstitutional and void. Section 593 of the Act, which is concerned with sales below cost, sets forth that ". . . any advertising, offer to sell, or sale of any merchandise, either by retailers or wholesalers, at less than cost as defined in this Act, with the intent, or effect, of inducing the purchase of other merchandise or of unfairly diverting trade from a competitor or otherwise injuring a competitor, impair and prevent competition, injure public welfare, are unfair competition and contrary to public policy and the policy of this Act, . . ." By setting out the clause "or effect," after the clause "with the intent," this section renders the Act unconstitutional and void.

See the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act, ¶ 8688.

For plaintiff: George Miskovsky and R. M. Mountcastle.

For defendants: Kelly Brown.

E. G. CARROLL, E. A. SUMMERS, and O. H. P. BREWER, District Judges sitting en banc.

Journal Entry

[Nature of Action]

This cause coming on for hearing on this the 23rd day of July, 1948, upon the defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's petition, pursuant to regular setting, plaintiff appearing by George Miskovsky and R. M. Mountcastle, his attorneys and defendants appearing by Kelly Brown, their attorney. And the Court, having heard and considered the arguments and briefs of counsel, and being fully advised, sustains said demurrer on the ground that the act (Title 15, Secs. 591 to 597, inclusive, OSA) upon which the said cause was instituted and prosecuted, is unconstitutional and void for the reason that Sec. 593 of said act contains language rendering the same unconstitutional and void, to-wit: By setting out the clause "or effect", after the clause "with the intent"; To which ruling and order said plaintiff duly excepted.

Thereupon plaintiff in open Court having elected to stand thereon, the Court ordered that said petition be and the same is hereby dismissed. To all of which plaintiff excepted. And thereupon in open court plaintiff gave notice of appeal to the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma and requests that this notice be entered on the trial docket of this Court as provided and required by law.

[Plaintiff's Request for Extension of Time Granted]

Thereupon plaintiff requested an extension of time in which to prepare and serve case made, and for good cause shown plaintiff is granted until October 23rd, 1948, within which to make and serve case-made, ten days thereafter for suggestion of amendments by either party in writing and same to be settled on five days notice in writing by either party.

[¶ 62,302] Opinion of the Attorney General of Kentucky.

Addressed to Willis J. Ballinger, Economic Counsel to the Committee, House Committee on Small Business, 131 Old House Office Building, Washington, D. C. by A. F. Funk, Attorney General, Walter C. Herdman, Assistant Attorney General. August 23, 1948.

Kentucky Unfair Practice Act

Sales Below Cost.—The Kentucky Fair Trade Practice Act is rather difficult to enforce, in that there must be proven an intent to injure competitors and destroy competition where prices are fixed below actual cost.

See the Kentucky Unfair Practices Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8308.

[Question]

We have your letter of August 12 in which you desire information concerning state laws prohibiting the selling of merchandise below cost in intrastate commerce.

[Proof of Intent to Injure]

The State of Kentucky enacted a Fair Trade Practice Act in 1936 prohibiting price discrimination; however, this Act is apparently rather difficult to enforce, in that the Court has held that there must be proven an intent to injure competitors and destroy competition where prices are fixed below actual cost. The Court held this in the case of Kentucky Utilities Company v. Carlisle Ice Company, 279 Ky. 585, 131 S. W. (2d) 499.

[Source of Information]

The Act in questiton can be found in the Kentucky Revised Statutes, Chapter 365, principally Sections 365.020 to 365.070. We understand that the wording of this Act was adopted from a similar Act found in the California Statutes. It is too long to quote, and we suggest that you obtain a copy of the Kentucky Revised Statutes for information concerning this law.

[Public Hearing]

We regret that we will be unable to appear before your public hearing. If we can be of further service, however, please so inform.

[¶ 62,303] Bernard M. Shotkin, trading as Dison Power & Light Company v. Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, a Pennsylvania Corporation, Mine & Smelter Supply Company, a Colorado Corporation, New England Electric Company, a Colorado Corporation, Harry U. Schockett, trading as Schockett Electric Company and M. L. Foss, Inc., a Colorado Corporation.

In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. No. 3605, May Term, 1948. Filed August 31, 1948.

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Colorado.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Case Dismissed for Lack of Prosecution.—In an action for injunctive relief and damages under the Sherman Act, the question as to whether or not the action should be dismissed on the court's own motion for failure to prosecute with reasonable diligence tests largely in the sound judicial discretion of the court, and its action with respect thereto will not be overturned on appeal except in case of abuse of discretion. Manifestly, there was no abuse of discretion in the dismissal of this case. Although plaintiff contends that it was denied due process, and ordinarily notice and opportunity to be heard should be given, nevertheless, the dismissal without notice of this action does not contravene any sustainable concept of due process with which the Court is familiar.

See Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.619.

For appellant: Bernard M. Shotkin pro se.

For appellees: John Adams (Irving Hale, Jr., Donald S. Stubbs, and Lewis, Grant, Newton, Davis & Henry, for Westinghouse Electric Corporation; Winston S. Howard and Pershing, Bosworth, Dick & Dawson, for Mine & Smelter Supply Company; Harry C. Davis, and Davis, Klahr & James, for M. L. Foss, Inc., Walter M. Appel and Ira C. Rothgerber for Harry U. Schockett and Merrill A. Knight and Schaetzel & Knight for New England Electric Company, were with him on the brief).

Before PHILLIPS, BRATTON and MURRAH, Circuit Judges.

[Nature of Action]

BRATTON, Circuit Judge: In August, 1943, Bernard M. Shotkin, acting as trustee for his minor children, instituted this action against Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company and others for injunctive relief and damages under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1, et seq. From time to time, plaintiff filed numerous groundless motions and engaged in tactics indicating a studied purpose to drag the case along without trial. On March 11, 1947, the court entered an order reciting that no progress had been made in the case during the preceding year and that it should be dismissed for failure to prosecute unless cause to the contrary be shown on or before the first day of the next term to begin May 6th. Pursuant to such order, the clerk of the court called attention to the parties to Rule 8 of the court, and advised them that the case would be dismissed on May sixth unless a proper showing to the contrary be made in the meantime. Thereafter, plaintiff filed a memorandum brief which recited that it was a motion to strike the third paragraph of the answer of the defendant Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company. No substantial affirmative showing was made as to why the case should not be dismissed. On May sixteenth, it was dismissed for lack of prosecution; and plaintiff appealed.

[Case Cited]

A district court of the United States is vested with power to dismiss an action for failure of plaintiff to prosecute it with reasonable diligence. The power is inherent and independent of any statute or rule. And where plaintiff has failed to prosecute the action with reasonable diligence, the court may dismiss it on motion of the defendant or on its own motion. Hicks v. Bekins Moving & Storage Co., 115 F. (2d) 406.

[Judicial Discretion of Court Discussed]

A motion to dismiss for failure to prosecute diligently is addressed to the sound judicial discretion of the court, and the action thereon will not be disturbed on appeal unless such discretion was abused. United States v. Fischer, 93 F. (2d) 488; Hicks v. Bekins Moving & Storage Co., supra; Silver v. Eakins, 175 Pac. 876; Raggio v. Southern Pacific Co., 185 Pac. 171; Brown v. Haymore, 32 Pac. (2d) 1027. In like manner, the question whether the action should be dismissed on the court's own motion for failure to prosecute with reasonable diligence rests largely in the sound judicial discretion of the court and its action with respect thereto will not be overturned on appeal except in case of abuse of such discretion. Manifestly, there was no abuse of discretion in the dismissal of this case.

[Denial of Due Process Contended]

The judgment of dismissal is silent in respect to the place at which it was entered and as to whether notice was given to the parties. It is stated in the brief of appellant that the judgment was entered at Topeka, Kansas, without notice and opportunity to be heard; and upon that statement in the brief, it is argued that appellant was denied due process. While ordinarily notice and opportunity to be heard should be given, the dismissal without notice of an action for failure of plaintiff to prosecute with reasonable diligence does not contravene any sustainable concept of due process with which we are familiar.

The judgment is AFFIRMED.

[¶ 62,304] Sterling Drug, Inc. v. Morris V. Benatar, etc., et al.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 370849. August 12, 1948.

California Fair Trade Act

Applicability of Fair Trade Law to War Surplus Commodities—Injunction to Restrain Fair Trade Violations Granted.—An injunction to restrain a California corporation from selling "war surplus" tooth powder, purchased from the War Assets Administration, and bearing the trademark of a Delaware corporation, at prices below the minimum retail prices stipulated in the Delaware corporation's fair trade contracts in California, has been granted. The rights sanctioned by the California Fair Trade Act extend to the resale of "war surplus" trademarked commodities purchased from the War Assets Administration. These rights afforded by the statute relate not so much to the sale of commodities per se as to protection of the good will symbolized by trademarks, brands and names. Although defendant contended that the "war surplus" tooth powder had acquired a distinct character in the public mind, namely, as depreciated in value and sold only at less than regular prices, it should be noted that defendant made no claim that the "war surplus" tooth powder was actually damaged or deteriorated in quality. Regardless of defendant's claims in advertising that the "war surplus" tooth powder was in the manufacturer's original factory cartons and that it represented a sensational value, there is no indication in the Fair Trade Act that the source of acquisition limits or changes the rights which the statute affords against what it denominates to be "unfair competition." Nor are such rights limited or changed by the differences in packaging.

See the California Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8064.

For plaintiff: Landels and Weigel, by Stanley A. Weigel.

For defendants: Gerald C. Halsey and Frederick T. Leo.

Opinion of the Court

[Question Presented]

FOLEY, THOMAS M.: The dominant question presented for decision here is this: Do the rights sanctioned by the California Fair Trade Act extend to the resale of "war surplus" trademarked commodities purchased from the War Assets Administration? Careful consideration compels an affirmative answer to this question which appears to be one of first impression.

[Statutory Provision Set Forth]

In common with the similar statutes of 44 other states, the California Fair Trade Act (Business and Profession Code, 16900-16905) authorizes the vendor of commodities identified by trademarks, brands or names to stipulate, by contract with buyers, the price at which the latter shall resell. Our statute, like the others, provides for a cause of action against sales at less than the contract price, regardless of whether or not the one who sells for less is a party to the contract. The statutory provision providing such a remedy reads as follows:

> "Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to this chapter, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby." (Business and Professions Code 16904).

[Statute Protects Value of Trademarks]

Plaintiff's suit here is grounded in the quoted provision, which, prior to codification, was designated as Section 1½ of the Fair Trade Act. This particular provision of the statute has had a long history of judicial review. Both the Supreme Court of this state and the Supreme Court of the United States have made it clear that the rights afforded by the statute relate not so much to sales of commodities per se as to protection of the good will symbolized by trademarks, brands and names. In other words, rather than sanctioning the fixing of prices on commodities as such, the statute affords protection against injury to the value of trademarks, brands or names identifying the commodities.

"The essence of the statutory violation then consists not in the bare disposition of the commodity, but in a forbidden use of the trade-mark, brand or name in accomplishing such disposition. The primary aim of the law is to protect the property—namely, the good will—of the producer, which he still owns. . . ."

"There is nothing in the act to preclude the purchaser from removing the mark or brand from the commodity—thus separating the physical property, which he owns, from the good will, which is the property of another—and then selling the commodity at his own price, provided he can do so without utilizing the good will of the latter as an aid to that end." Old Dearborn Distributing Co. v. Seagram-Distillers Corp., 299 U. S. 183, at 193 and 195. (Upon the authority of the cited case, which dealt with the Illinois Fair Trade Act, the California statute was contemporaneously held constitutional in Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman, 299 U. S. 198.)

[Max Factor Case Cited]

In the Max Factor case, our own state Supreme Court had, prior to affirmance by the United States Supreme Court, taken a similar view of the purpose and character of the statute.

". . . The statute only applies to certain articles sold under the trade-name or brand or trade-mark of the producer. As to such articles, the producer or manufacturer, through advertising or other means, has built up a good-will in connection with the articles, which good-will is a species of property entitled to protection. When the retailer sells such an article to a customer, the article is not sold solely on the reputation of the retailer, but partially, at least on the reputation built up by the owner of the trade-mark, brand or trade-name. Moreover, section 1½ comes into operation only when the manufacturer or producer has entered into contracts fixing the resale price. The statute, as its title indicates, by preventing price-cutting, is aimed at protecting these valuable property and cotnract rights of the manufacturer or producer—rights just as valuable and just as much entitled to protection as the right of the retailer, who is attempting, by exercising his claimed right of freedom of action, to injure the property and contract rights of the manufacturer or producer. The statute, in other words, does not merely prohibit price-cutting in order to regulate prices, but prohibits price-cutting in an attempt to protect the validly acquired rights of others." Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman, 5 Cal. (2d) 446, 463-464.

[Basis for Decision]

It is, then, in the light of the foregoing interpretations of the Fair Trade Act, handed down by the highest courts of this state and the nation, that the decision here must be made.

[Facts]

The facts in the case at bar are clear and, for the most part, without conflict. Plaintiff, a Delaware corporation qualified to do business in this state, is sole owner of the trademark which has long identified the product, Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder. Acting under Fair Trade contracts entered into (by plaintiff's predecessor in interest) with hundreds of retail dealers throughout the State of California, plaintiff stipulated a minimum price of 39¢ on Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, 50¢ size, sometimes referred to as "large size".

Defendant Benatars, a California corporation, owns and operates two large retail drug stores in San Francisco, California. Defendant "purchased indirectly" from War Assets Administration a large quantity of Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, 50¢ size. (For the purposes of this opinion, it may be assumed that defendant purchased directly from War Assets Administration. Defendant's chief defense is predicated upon the goods being, in fact, "war surplus", i. e., reaching defendant after disposal by War Assets Administration.)

Defendant advertised, offered for sale and sold this "war surplus" tooth powder at 29¢ instead of at 39¢ the latter being the minimum Fair Trade price stipulated on Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, 50¢ size. Defendant refused to maintain that price on the "war surplus" goods, insisting that the statute did not apply to them.

The "war surplus" product was packaged somewhat differently from the current product being distributed by plaintiff. No outer cardboard container accompanied the cans containing the "war surplus" product; the color of the can of the latter was a lighter shade of blue; the cap was different in color; and the lettering on the can was different. However, the "war surplus" can carried plaintiff's trademark and the quantity of tooth powder in each case was the same. Defendant claims to have kept the "war surplus" merchandise segregated from the regular stock and to have maintained the 39¢ price in selling the latter. This is assumed to be the fact for the purposes of this opinion.

[Chief Defense Asserted by Defendant]

The chief defense asserted by defendant was that the "war surplus" product was not subject to the rights of plaintiff under the Fair Trade Act. Defendant urged upon the court that "War Surplus goods have acquired a distinct and separate character in the public mind, namely, as depreciated in value and sold only at less than regular prices" (Defendant's Points and Authorities, page 1, par. 1), and that "War Surplus" (merchandise) is separate and distinct from regular merchandise freshly manufactured and sold through the usual channels of distribution from manufacturer to retailer; such "War Surplus" goods have frequently been in storage in government warehouses and elsewhere for a period of several years, under varying wartime conditions and are consequently not regarded by the public as comparable to fresh new stock . . . and . . . saleable only at prices substantially reduced from the regular, usual or 'Fair Trade' prices." (Affidavit of Mr. Morris V. Benatar, pp. 10, 11.)

[No Claim that "War Surplus" Merchandise Damaged]

In connection with these contentions, it should be noted that defendant made no claim that the "war surplus" merchandise was actually "damaged or deteriorated in quality". In that case, the statute (Section 16902, second subdivision (2)) appears to make it clear that defendant could sell at prices of defendant's own choosing, provided that public were notified of the damage or deterioration.

[Surplus Property Act of 1944 Quoted]

Defendant also urged upon the court that the federal Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended (Title 50, U. S. C. A., Appendix, Section 1611 et seq.), as well as several California statutes, "recognized the separation, and distinct character and classification of 'War Surplus' merchandise" (Defendant's Points and Authorities, page 3, par. 6). Finally, in this line of argument, defendant suggested that applictaion of rights under the Fair Trade Act to the "war surplus" tooth powder would frustrate savings to consumers intended by the federal act.

[Contentions Unsound]

On the issue here, none of these contentions is sound.

[Purpose of Court]

Courts are not concerned with the economic wisdom of legislation. Their sole responsibility is to apply the controlling statute fairly to the facts in the interest of carrying out, not defeating legislative intent. The legislature of this state has seen fit to provide a remedy to protect the good will symbolized by trademarks, brands and names against the damage resulting when commodities so identified are sold at prices less than stipulated in contracts sanctioned by the statute. The source of acquisition of products carrying the symbol of good will does not control the power to injure the value of the symbol. And injury to a trademark may be done regardless of the form of package upon which it appears.

[Surplus Property Act of 1944 Inapplicable]

Any suggestion that the federal Surplus Property Act of 1944, supra, supports the position of the defendant is not well taken, as can be determined by examination of the statute itself. The first sentence of the statute reads:

> "The Congress hereby declares that the objectives of this Act are to facilitate and regulate the orderly disposal of surplus property so as—" (Italics added)
>
> "§ (h) to assure the sale of surplus property in such quantities and on such terms as will discourage disposal to speculators or for speculative purposes;"
>
> "§ (m) to achieve the prompt and full utilization of surplus property at fair prices to the consumer through disposal at home and abroad with due regard for the protection of free markets and competitive prices from dislocation resulting from uncontrolled dumping;"

"§ (n) to utilize normal channels of trade and commerce to the extent consistent with efficient and economic distribution and the promotion of the general objectives of this Act (without discriminating against the establishment of new enterprises);" Title 50, U. S. C. A., Appendix § 1611.

§ 1627(b) provides that the Surplus Property Board shall determine ". . . (that) the vairous classes of such property should be offered consistently with the usual and customary commercial practice with respect to such class". (Italics added)

§ 1629 provides that "nothing in this Act shall impair, amend or modify the antitrust laws or limit and prevent their application to persons who buy or otherwise acquire property under the provisions of this Act. As used in this section, the term 'antitrust laws' includes the Act of July 2, 1890 (C. 647, 26 Stat. 209), as amended." (Italics added)

The amendment just referred to provides as follows:

". . . Provided, that nothing contained in sections 1-7 of this title shall render illegal, contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intrastate transactions, under any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which such resale in to be made, or to which the commodity is to be transported for such resale, and the making of such contracts or agreements shall not be an unfair method of competition under section 45, as amended and supplemented by this title:" 15 U. S. C. A. § 1.

If Congress intended that goods sold under the federal Surplus Property Act should be exempt from state Fair Trade laws and from the quoted federal accommodation thereof, it is inconceivable that it would have evidenced such concern for orderly distribution, avoidance of dislocation, etc., and that it would have referred, as it did in § 1629, to the Fair Trade amendment to the antitrust laws without qualifying the reference.

[General Disposal Letter Quoted]

There is rather compelling evidence that the views expressed above are shared by the War Assets Administration itself. Its General Disposal Letter No. 20, dated January 14, 1947, advises those charged with disposal of war surplus property that "All regional and district offices holding inventories of branded or trade-marked drug and cosmetic items which are or may be affected by a State 'Fair Trade' Practices Act" shall give explicit notice that "The resale or use of the property herein offered for sale and/or sold by the Government, may be affected by applicable State 'Fair Trade' Practice Acts, or other similar regulatory laws."

[1945 California Statutes Do Not Support Defendant's Contentions]

The 1945 California statutes cited by defendant in no way support defendant's contentions. Referring to these statutes, seriatim: Chapter 1144 simply prohibits the use of names such as "Army", "Navy", "United States", etc., in connection with the sale of surplus material where such use would tend to mislead the purchasing public into believing that the seller had an official governmental connection or into believing that such articles "are of higher quality and lower price than those elsewhere obtainable" (showing that the California legislature apparently does not share the defendant's view that the public regards war surplus articles as inferior); Chapter 992 is concerned with empowering the State Director of Finance to buy war surplus property for state use; Chapter 77 memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to designate a single federal agency to deal with states and other political subdivisions desirous of acquiring surplus property; Chapter 232 authorizes municipalities to purchase federal surplus property; and Chapter 796 merely implements Chapter 232 in authorizing municipalities to purchase federal surplus property.

[Defendant's Desire to Capitalize upon Plaintiff's Trademark]

The error of defendant's position results from the fact that defendant manifestly does desire to capitalize upon the good will symbolized by plaintiff's trademark in connection with sales at less than Fair Trade prices. Defendant advertised the war surplus merchandise as "guaranteed to be in manufacturer's original packages and in 100% perfect condition." Its advertising also featured the fact that the war surplus goods were "in the original factory cartons" and that they represented "sensational values" at the price set by defendant.

[Unfair Competition]

Regardless, however, of defendant's claims in advertising or selling the goods, there is no indication in the Fair Trade Act that the source of acquisition limits or changes the rights which the statute affords against what it denominates to be "unfair competition". Nor are such rights limited or changed by the differences in packaging above indicated. See Guerlain, Inc. v. F. W. Woolworth Co., 297 N. Y. 11, 74 N. E. (2d) 217 (certiorari deined U. S. Supreme Court (12/8/47), 68 S. Ct. 220) and cases on the same point therein cited.

[Discrimination Alleged]

Defendant's remaining contentions merit but brief consideration. Defendant claimed that plaintiff inequitably discriminated against defendant by bringing this suit, while competitors of defendant were left free to disregard Fair Trade prices. The facts were otherwise. In all cases in which it was called to plaintiff's attention that a retailer was selling its product, "war surplus" or not, at less than the Fair Trade price, plaintiff exhibited reasonable zeal in notifying such retailer to desist. It is not incumbent upon plaintiff to sue all violators. See Hutzler Bros. & Co. v. Remington-Putnam Book Co., 46 A. (2d) 101; James Hedden's Son v. Callender, 29 Fed. Supp. 579; and Calvert Distillers Corp. v. Stockman, 26 Fed. Supp. 73.

[Meaning of Fair Trade Act's "Close-Out" Provision]

Another contention made by defendant was to the effect that since defendant advertised the Dr. Lyon's war surplus tooth powder in question as "War Surplus Close-out", defendant could disregard the minimum prices established by contract under that clause of the Fair Trade Act which appears to exempt sales made "In closing out the owner's stock for the purpose of discontinuing delivering any such commodity". (Section 16902, second subsection (1) To sustain defendant's contention here would be to emasculate the statute. The quoted clause manifestly relates, and relates only, to a situation where a dealer, in good faith, intends to discontinue dealing in the particular product or line of products altogether and actually does so discontinue. Defendant can hardly be said to be closing out for the purpose of discontinuing delivering if, as is clear from the testimony and advertisements, defendant purchased a large special stock of Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder and immediately thereafter purported to "close out" the new purchase alone without undertaking to close out defendant's entire stock of the product. Indeed, instead of closing out Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, for the purpose of giving up sale of that brand, defendant appears to desire to feature a portion of defendant's stock of the brand at prices below those established under the Fair Trade Act.

In any event, we do not have here even a claim that defendant acted in pursuance of an intent to close out for the purpose of discontinuing delivering all Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder. The testimony of Mr. Morris V, Benatar of careful maintenance "of the Fair Trade price on the regular merchandise" is inconsistent with a complete discontinuance of dealing in the product. The quoted provision of the statute does not sanction disregard of the Fair Trade Price for the purpose of reducing stock or disposing of a portion of the stock. Were it to be construed, the door would be opened to complete frustration of the plain purpose of the statute.

[Facts Carefully Presented]

The court is indebted to counsel on both sides for full and careful presentation of the facts and the law relevant to the issue.

[Directions to Plaintiff]

Consonant with the foregoing opinion, counsel for plaintiff are directed to prepare and submit, upon due notice to counsel for defendants, proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, as well as form of Judgment and Decree.

[¶ 62,305] United States v. Wallace & Tiernan Company, Inc., Wallace & Tiernan Products, Inc., Wallace & Tiernan Sales Corporation, Builders Iron Foundry, Novadel-Agene Corporation, Industrial Appliance Corporation, Martin F. Tiernan, William J. Orchard, Henry S. Chafee, Gerald D. Peet, Harold S. Hutton, Vincent Pisani and Cornelius F. Schenck.

In the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island. Civil Action No. 705. August 6, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Introduction of Evidence—Motion for Judgment—Action Dismissed Without Prejudice.—A civil action charging a monopoly in the chlorinating equipment industry through patent and stock acquisitions, withholding of supplies from users of rival equipment, dividing fields of distribution, fixing prices, and influencing the writing of specfications and the letting of bids to exclude competitive equipment, is dismissed without prejudice for lack of prosecution. It is held that the plaintiff has not produced any facts or evidence in support of the complaint. A motion by the plaintiff for production of documents essential to the presentation of the government's case is denied on the ground that knowledge of the documents had been obtained as a result of subpoenas duces tecum issued by an illegally constituted grand jury.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1610.345.

For plaintiff: Grant W. Kelleher, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, Boston, Mass.

For defendants: Edwards & Angell, William H. Edwards, Gerald W. Harrington; Hinckley, Allen, Tillinghast & Wheeler, Chauncey E. Wheeler, S. Everett Wilkins, Jr.; Hogan & Hogan, Edward T. Hogan, Laurence J. Hogan; all of Providence, Rhode Island.

[Nature of Action]

HARTIGAN, J.: This is a civil action brought by the United States of America against the above named defendants under Section 4 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade in [sic] commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," as amended (15 U. S. C. § 4), commonly known as the Sherman Act, in order to prevent further alleged violations by them, jointly and severally of Sections 1 and 2 of said Act (15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2).

[Portions of the opinion consisting of arguments of counsel and examination of witnesses are omitted as not pertinent to the scope of these reports.]

The above is substantially the record of the trial upon which counsel for the Government said: "I urge Your Honor to enter judgment for the plaintiff and to grant the relief prayed for in the complaint." (Tr. 32)

I find that the plaintiff has not produced any facts or evidence in support of the complaint.

After the Government completed the presentation of its evidence the defendants did not move for a dismissal on the ground that upon the facts and the law the plaintiff has shown no right to relief.

The reality here practically amounts to non-prosecution since the Government states that other evidence than the suppressed documentary evidence "might be obtained" to establish violations of the Sherman Act.

In Carnegie Nat. Bank v. City of Wolf Point, 110 F. 2d 569, 572, the Court said:

> "We have referred to the fact that Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure does not specifically provide that a court may dismiss for want of prosecution, but that it does not limit the power of a court to dismiss to those instances enumerated because it suggests that there might be dismissals not provided therein. In any event, it is well settled, 'that a court of equity has general authority, independently of statute or rule, to dismiss a cause for failure or want of diligence in prosecution, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion.' Longsdorf, Cyc. Fed. Proc., vol. 4, p. 40, § 1024; Buck v. Felder, D. C. Tenn., 208 F. 474, 477; Colorado Eastern Ry. Co. v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 8 Cir., 94 F. 312, 313. We are satisfied, therefore, that a dismissal for failure or want of diligence is within the power of a court of equity."

See also Hicks v. Bekins Moving & Storage Co., 115 F. 2d 406.

In the instant case the Government seeks equitable relief.

In Rudolph v. Sensener, 39 App. D. C., 385, 388, the Court said:

"The plaintiff in every action at law where there is no admission of the facts alleged has the burden of proving the necessary allegations of his declaration. If he declines or fails to offer evidence, the court may in its discretion dismiss his action without prejudice, or enter a judgment against him. * * *"

The situation in the instant case is somewhat analogous to that in the Sensener case, supra.

The Government's "request" for judgment and relief prayed for in the complaint is denied and judgment may be entered dismissing the action without prejudice.

It is so ordered.

[¶ 62,306] Canute Co. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. Term, 1948. No. 9390. August 12, 1948.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Case Remanded to Commission.—A Federal Trade Commission case, based upon an order prohibiting misrepresentation of a hair dye preparation designated "Canute Water," has been remanded to the Commission for the sole purpose of enabling the Commission to set aside its findings as to the facts, conclusion and order to cease and desist, and to dismiss finally the complaint. The cease and desist order had required the manufacturer to stop representing that its preparation is water or anything other than a hair dye preparation and to discontinue using the term "pure" to describe it. The order had provided further that the term "Canute Water" could be used as a brand or trade name only if qualified by a statement to the effect that the preparation is a "Silver-nitrate" hair dye.

Remanding of case in Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order, Dkt. 5234.

See Federal Trade Commission Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 6620.808.

For petitioner: Walter Moses.

For respondent: William P. Kelly.

WILLIAM M. SPARKS, C. J., J. EARL MAJOR, C. J.

Order of Court

[Case Remanded to Commission]

Upon motion of the Federal Trade Commission, respondent, joined in by Canute Company, a corporation, petitioner, (1) it is ordered that the respondent's motion to be permitted to withdraw from the consideration of this Court (a) motion to remand this case to the Federal Trade Commission for the purpose of enabling the Commission to enter modified findings as to the facts and conclusion, and a modified order to cease and desist, and (b) petitioner's answer thereto with supporting brief, is hereby granted, and (2) it is further ordered that this case is remanded to the Federal Trade Commission for the sole purpose of enabling the Commission to set aside its findings as to the facts, conclusion and order to cease and desist entered March 31, 1947, and to dismiss finally the complaint herein.

[¶ 62,307] Katz v. Gevirtz.

In the New York Supreme Court, Special Term, Part I. 120 N. Y. L. J. 568. September 24, 1948.

Feld-Crawford Act

Motion to Dismiss—Motions to Strike—Sufficiency of Complaint.—A non-signatory retail reseller is just as amenable to the provisions of the Feld-Crawford Act as the one who signs the price contract. Nor is it necessary that the person who sues to restrain a retailer from price cutting be a signer of any price-fixing contract or that he be a manufacturer or producer. The Act permits "any person damaged thereby" to bring action for a violation.

See the Feld-Crawford Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.30.

[Nature of Action]

BELDOCK, J.: In this action brought under the so-called "Feld-Crawford Act" (General Business Law, secs. 369-a and 369-b) for an injunction and damages, defendant has moved under Rule 106 of the Rules of Civil Practice to dismiss the complaint on the ground of insufficiency. Defendant also moves in the alternative, under Rules 102 and 103 of the Rules of Civil Practice, to strike certain paragraphs of the complaint as sham, frivolous and irrelevant and to make other paragraphs more definite and certain.

The pleading challenged for insufficiency must be construed broadly and liberally and every fair inference resolved in its favor, however imperfectly or informally the facts may have been drawn (Condon v. Associated Hospital Service, Inc., 287 N. Y. 411; Wainwright & Page v. Burr & McAuley, 272 N. Y. 130).

I hold the complaint to be sufficient in law. The essential elements of a cause of action of this kind are (1) the fixing of prices by the owner or producer of the commodity within the provisions of the Feld-Crawford Act; (2) that the commodities involved are in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others, and (3) that defendant having notice of the fixing of prices, as aforesaid, willfully and knowingly advertised or offered the commodities for sale at less than the price stipulated. The complaint herein substantially sets forth these essential allegations.

The objection raised, that defendant is not alleged to have been a party who subscribed to the price contract, is untenable. A nonsignatory retail reseller is just as amenable to the act as the one who signs the price contract (Port Chester Wine & Liquor Shop v. Miller Brothers, 281 N. Y. 101; Calvert Distillers Corp'n v. Nussbaum Liquor Store, Inc., 166 Misc. 342). Nor is it necessary that the person who sues to restrain defendant from price cutting be a signer of any price-fixing contract or be a manufacturer or producer. The language of section 369b precludes any such interpretation, for that statute permits "any person damaged thereby" to bring action for a violation (Weisstein v. Corbyn Liquor Store, Inc., 174 Misc. 1075). Plaintiffs claim to be competitors who were damaged by reason of the acts complained of and the right to sue and be awarded injunctive relief under this statute is available to them. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss the complaint under Rule 106 is denied.

Similarly, motions addressed to the pleading under Rules 102 and 103 are not deemed merited.

The references in the paragraphs of the complaint under attack to "fair trade agreements" and "fair trade contracts" are merely descriptive of the type of contracts entered into under the General Business Law, elsewhere referred to in the complaint. Such references are not so indefinite or uncertain that the precise meaning is not apparent. Furthermore, the uncertainty, if any, may be clarified by a bill of particulars (Higgins v. O'Donnell, 256 App. Div. 981).

I do not find that the allegations of the complaint are sham, frivolous, irrelevant or redundant, as is charged. While much may be said about the form of the pleading, it substantially sets forth facts necessary to plaintiffs' cause of action, and as this phase of the motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the court (Solomon v. La Guardia, 267 App. Div. 435), the allegations will not be stricken unless harm or prejudice will result by the retention thereof (Goodrow v. N. Y. American, Inc., 233 App. Div. 37). In this instance, the presence of the matters sought to be stricken involves no prejudice and will not tend to embarrass or delay the fair trial of the action (Rule of Civil Practice 103). Defendant can readily obtain information as to the price lists and contracts by means of a bill of particulars.

Defendant's motion is in all respects denied, with leave to answer within twenty days after service of a copy of the order to be entered hereon, with notice of entry thereof.

[¶ 62,308] United States v. American Optical Company, an association, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 10-391. September 17, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Elimination of Restrictive Practices—Restoration of Competitive Conditions.—A consent judgment entered in an action charging 13 manufacturers of eyeglass frames and mountings, a national trade association of optical wholesalers, six optical wholesalers, two patent holding companies and 13 individuals with engaging in a conspiracy and combination to fix prices and otherwise restrain trade in opthalmic goods enjoins price fixing, cancels certain patent licenses, requires that patents and trademarks relating to the frames and mountings involved be made available to other manufacturers on reasonable terms, and prohibits expansion by two defendants in the field of wholesale distribution by the acquisition of independent concerns, and the boycotting of wholesale firms and other unfair competitive practices.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.10 and the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2023.

For plaintiff: Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; Sigmund Timberg, J. Francis Hayden, Special Assistants to the Attorney General; Marcus B. Hollabaugh, George L. Derr, Robert L. Tollefson, Special Attorneys.

For defendants: Root, Ballantine, Harlan, Bushby & Palmer; Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett; Darby & Darby; Spence, Hotchkiss, Parker & Duryee; Sonnenschein, Berkson, Lautmann, Levinson & Morse; Blair, Curtis & Hayward; Niles & Johnson; Morris N. Bobis, Curtis & Belknap; Max Rockmore; Letts & Quinn; Pennie, Edmonds, Morton & Barrows; Goodman & Mabel; Harris, Beach, Folger, Keating & Wilcox; White, Wright, Raub & Forrey.

FINAL JUDGMENT

The complainant, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on September 16, 1940; all of the defendants having appeared and severally filed their answers to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof and denying any violation of the law as alleged in the complaint; this action having come on for trial before the Honorable John M. Woolsey, late Judge of this Court, and the trial having been adjourned on October 21, 1942 pursuant to the request of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy; an order having been entered on September 17, 1948, upon the motion of certain of the defendants, declaring a mistrial in this case because of the death of Judge Woolsey during the period of adjournment and directing a new trial of all the issues; no testimony or evidence having been taken upon such new trial; and all parties hereto, by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment without any adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without constituting evidence or admission in respect of any such issue:

NOW, THEREFORE, before any testimony or evidence has been taken upon such new trial and without any adjudication of law or fact herein, upon the consent of all parties hereto,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED:

[Jurisdiction]

I

That this Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of all parties hereto, and that the complaint states a cause of action against the defendants under Sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," and Section 3 of the Act of Congress of October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to Supplement Existing Laws Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies and For Other Purposes," and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

[Terms Defined]

II

When used in this final judgment, the following terms shall have the following meanings:

A. "American Optical" means, individually and collectively, the defendant American Optical Company, an association, and the defendant American Optical Company, a corporation.

B. "Bausch & Lomb" means the defendant Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, a corporation.

C. "Bausch & Lomb Affiliates" means, individually and collectively, the defendants Riggs Optical Company-Consolidated; Riggs Optical Company, Inc.; McIntire, Magee and Brown Company; Colonial Optical Company, Inc.; and the Southeastern Optical Company, Inc., which, for the purpose of this judgment, are treated as subsidiaries of Bausch & Lomb.

D. "O. W. N. A." means the defendant Optical Wholesalers National Association, Inc.

E. "Ful-Vue Sales Company" means the partnership of that name composed of the defendants George P. Kimmel, Robert E. Hillier, and Julius H. Tuvin, and the individual partners thereof.

F. "Patents" means United States Letters patent and patent applications, including all renewals, extensions, continuations, divisions, or reissues of such patents or patent applications.

G. "Ophthalmic goods" means ophthalmic lenses, lens blanks, spectacle frames, mountings, eyeglasses, spectacles, and component parts or combinations of any of these articles, and as so defined does not include sun glasses or industrial safety equipment not containing lenses ground to prescription.

H. "Person" means an individual, corporation, partnership, association, joint stock company, business trust, or any other business organization.

I. "Manufacturers' prices" means the prices at which manufacturers sell ophthalmic goods to wholesalers.

III

Wherever reference is made in this judgment to any defendant, said reference shall also include each of such defendant's subsidiaries, successors, and assigns and each of its directors, trustees, nominees, partners, members, officers, agents, representatives or employees, and any person acting or with authority to act, under, through, or for them or any of them.

[Agreements Cancelled]

IV

That the following patent licenses or agreements and all amendments, modifications, or supplements of the same, and all schedules issued thereunder or relating thereto, are hereby cancelled and decreed to be null and void from the date of this judgment, and each defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from the further performance, observance, or enforcement of any of the terms or provisions thereof (except with regard to royalties, if any, accrued to the date of this judgment, as to which this judgment is without prejudice to rights or defenses that may be asserted or claimed by any party to any proceeding), and from adopting, adhering to, or furthering any course of conduct for the purpose or with the effect of maintaining, reviving, or reinstating said licenses or agreements:

A. All licenses and agreements between Ful-Vue Sales Company and American Optical under or relating to any of the patents listed in Appendix "A", which is attached hereto and made a part hereof, including but not limited to the License Agreement dated May 1, 1929, the License Agreement dated January 10, 1930, the Amendment to License Agreement dated September 2, 1931, the Supplemental Agreement dated March 20, 1931 and the Agreement dated September 11, 1934.

B. All licenses and agreements between the Uhlemann Optical Company of Illinois and American Optical under or relating to any of the patents listed in Appendix "A", including but not limited to the License and Agreement dated June 4, 1938, the Agreement dated October 28, 1938, the Letter Agreement dated January 19, 1939, and the Agreement dated September 4, 1941.

C. All licenses or sublicenses issued by American Optical under or relating to any of the patents listed in Appendix "A", except that this provision shall not affect the paid-in license dated January 20, 1938, issued by American Optical to Bausch & Lomb in connection with the exchange of licenses in settlement of Interference Proceeding No. 73476 declared by the Commissioner of Patents on October 30, 1936.

D. All licenses issued by Bausch & Lomb under or relating to any of the patents listed in Appendix "A".

[Notice]

V

A. That defendant American Optical, as to the licenses and sublicenses referred to in Section IV C, and defendant Bausch & Lomb, as to the licenses referred to in Section IV D, are hereby ordered and directed, within fifteen days from the date of this judgment, to give notice to each of the licensees and sublicensees that said licenses and sublicenses, and all schedules issued thereunder or relating thereto, have been cancelled and are no longer in effect. Said notice shall be in a form approved by the Department of Justice and shall be accompanied by a true copy of this judgment.

B. That the respective owners of the patents listed in Appendix "A" are hereby ordered and directed within fifteen days from the date of this judgment to give notice to each person whose license under such patents of said owner has been cancelled by Section IV of this judgment, advising such persons of their rights to utilize patents and trade marks and to obtain patent licenses in accordance with the provisions of Sections VI and IX hereof. Said notice shall be in a form approved by the Department of Justice.

[Patents to Be Made Available]

VI

A. That each of the defendants American Optical, Bausch & Lomb, Ful-Vue Sales Company and Uhlemann Optical Company of Illinois, is hereby ordered and directed to grant to all applicants therefor non-exclusive, non-assignable licenses to make, use and vend under

(1) any or all of the patents listed in Appendix "A" which are owned or controlled by it (as indicated in said Appendix "A"), and

(2) any or all patents heretofore issued or applied for, or issued or applied for within ten years from the date of this judgment, claiming inventions constituting improvements to any invention which was claimed in any of the patents listed in Appendix "A" or which might have been claimed therein as a new invention on the basis of the inventor's disclosure, insofar as such patents are now or hereafter owned or controlled by such defendant directly or indirectly or under which it has or obtains a right to grant licenses or sublicenses.

Each of said defendants is hereby enjoined and restrained from making any disposition of any of the patents listed in Appendix "A" which deprives it of the power or authority to grant such licenses, and from accepting any exclusive license under any such improvement patents owned or controlled by any other person unless the license gives it the right to grant licenses or sublicenses under such patents in accordance with the requirements of this Section VI.

B. That if at any time hereafter any of the defendants, other than those named in Section VI A hereof, shall grant to any person a license to make, use or vend under any patent heretofore issued or applied for, or issued or applied for within ten years from the date of this judgment, claiming inventions constituting improvements to any invention which was claimed in any of the patents listed in Appendix "A" or which might have been claimed therein as a new invention on the basis of the inventor's disclosure, such license shall be non-exclusive and shall conform to the requirements of Section VI C hereof, and the defendant which grants such license is hereby ordered and directed to grant to all applicants therefor, similar non-exclusive, non-assignable licenses to make, use and vend under any or all such patents so licensed.

C. That each of the defendants is hereby enjoined and restrained from including any restriction or condition whatsoever in any license or sublicense granted by it pursuant to the provisions of this Section except that (a) a reasonable royalty may be charged which shall be uniform except with respect to the license excepted from the operation of Section IV C hereof; (b) reasonable provision may be made for periodic inspection of the books and records of the licensees by an independent auditor who shall report to the licensor only the amount of the royalty due and payable; (c) reasonable provision may be made for cancellation of the license upon failure of the licensee to pay the royalties or to permit the inspection of his books and records as hereinabove provided; and (d) the license must provide that the licensee may cancel the license at any time by giving thirty days notice in writing to the licensor.

D. Upon aplication for a license under the provisions of this Section, the defendant to whom application is made shall state the royalty which it deems reasonable for the patents to which the application pertains. If the parties are unable to agree upon a reasonable royalty, the defendant may apply to this Court for the determination of a reasonable royalty, giving notice thereof to the applicant and the Attorney General, and he shall make such application forthwith upon request of the applicant. In any such proceeding, the burden of proof shall be upon the defendant to whom application is made to establish by a fair preponderance of evidence, a reasonable royalty, and the Attorney General shall have the right to be heard thereon. Pending the completion of negotiations or any such proceeding, the applicant shall have the right to make, use and vend under the patents to which his application pertains and the only obligation arising from such application shall be the obligation to pay the reasonable royalty ultimately determined by the parties or by the Court with respect to his exercise of rights under the patents during the period from the date of his application to the date of such determination of the reasonable royalty.

E. That if any person whose license or sublicense has been cancelled by Section IV of this judgment shall, within a period of sixty days from the date of this judgment, make application for a new license under the provisions of this Section, the rights and obligations of such person with respect to all patents to which the application pertains shall be determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if the application had been made on the date of this judgment.

[Acts Enjoined]

VII

That each of the defendants American Optical, Bausch & Lomb, Ful-Vue Sales Company and Uhlemann Optical Company of Illinois is hereby enjoined and restrained from instituting or threatening to institute, or maintaining any suit, counterclaim or proceeding, judicial or administrative, for infringement or to realize or collect damages or compensation for infringement under or on account of any patent listed in Appendix "A", where the cause of action arose prior to the date of this judgment.

VIII

That, as to ophthalmic frames or mountings embodying the invention of any patent listed in Appendix "A" or any improvement thereto as to which licenses are required to be issued under Section VI by the defendants American Optical, Bausch & Lomb, Ful-Vue Sales Company or Uhlemann Optical Company of Illinois, and manufactured by an American licensee under such patent, said defendants are hereby enjoined and restrained from attempting to enforce rights under any foreign patent embodying substantially the same invention with the purpose or effect of preventing or impeding the exportation from the United States to any foreign country of said frames or mountings.

IX

That each of the defendants is hereby enjoined and restrained from interfering in any manner with the use by any other person, with reference to a frame or mounting or part thereof, of any designation, whether registered as a trade mark or not, which has heretofore been generally used to designate frames or mountings or parts thereof manufactured under any of the patents listed in Appendix "A", except (1) to prevent the use of such designation with reference to an article without disclosure of the source of manufacture or (2) to prevent the use of such designation, in such a way as to cause deception, with reference to an article which is not substantially similar to articles to which the designation has been heretofore generally applied. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the following trade marks or designations are included among those heretofore generally used to designate certain of said patented articles: Ful-Vue, Numont, Arcway, Rimway, Toprim and Zyl-arc. This judgment does not in any way adjudicate, determine or affect the validity or invalidity of any such designation as a trade mark. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any trade mark or designation which has been used exclusively by any one of said defendants to designate articles manufactured or distributed by it.

X

That each defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained, for a period of five years from the date of this judgment, from granting or enforcing any license or sublicense, or entering into or enforcing any agreement under any patents (other than those which are dealt with in Section VI hereof) in the field of ophthalmic goods, which are now or hereafter owned or controlled by it, directly or indirectly, or under which it has or obtains a right to grant sublicenses, wherein there is contained any provision or condition fixing, designating, limiting, or restricting in any manner (a) the prices, conditions, or terms of sale under which any article may be made, used or sold, (b) the purpose or use for which any article may be made, used or sold, (c) the quantities of any article which may be made, used or sold, (d) the territories or areas in which any article may be made, used or sold or (e) the persons by whom any article may be used or to whom any article may be sold. At any time within five years after the injunctive provisions of this section have ceased to be applicable, if any defendant shall include any such provision or condition in any such license, sublicense, or agreement, the defendant shall give notice thereof to the Attorney General. Non-action by the United States after receipt of any notice shall in no event be considered as approval or acquiescence.

XI

That each defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from granting or enforcing any license or sublicense or entering into or enforcing any agreement, under any patents in the field of ophthalmic goods which are now or hereafter owned or controlled by it, directly or indirectly, or under which it has or obtains a right to grant sublicenses, by the terms or conditions of which (a) any licensee or party is required to enter into Fair Trade resale price maintenance contracts or otherwise fix or attempt to fix or maintain resale prices, or (b) any purchaser of a patented article is restricted in the use or disposition thereof.

[Price Contracts Declared Void]

XII

That all Fair Trade resale price maintenance contracts or schedules now in effect between any of the defendants and customers of such defendants, which relate to the resale prices of ophthalmic frames or mountings, or parts thereof, are hereby decreed to be null and void, and each defendant shall forthwith cancel each of said contracts or schedules to which it is a party and give notice within thirty days hereof to each of its customers that said contracts or schedules have been cancelled and are no longer in effect; that each of the defendants is hereby enjoined and restrained from enforcing or attempting to enforce any of said contracts or schedules; and that each of the defendants is hereby enjoined and restrained for a period of two years from the date of this judgment from entering into any Fair Trade resale price maintenance contracts or schedules relating to ophthalmic frames or mountings or parts thereof and from systematically suggesting to any other person wholesale or prescription prices for ophthalmic frames or mountings, or parts thereof.

[Acts Enjoined]

XIII

That the defendant OWNA is hereby enjoined and restrained from:

A. Collecting or soliciting information from or concerning, or investigating, any person with respect to the functions, operations or business of such person by any means other than direct inquiry to such person and voluntary submittal of information by such person, unless such person is a member of or has made a formal application for membership in the OWNA.

B. Collecting, soliciting, utilizing, distributing or disclosing any data or information concerning the businesses of wholesale or retail distribution of ophthalmic goods:

(1) For any purpose other than that of compiling and distributing general trade information or reports; or

(2) in such a manner as to disclose any data or information concerning any particular person; or

(3) where the purpose or effect of such activity is to establish any functional classification of any person or persons or to exclude any person from engaging in either of such businesses.

C. Preparing or disclosing any classification or list purporting or tending to show the classification of the functions or business of any particular person or persons.

XIV

That each of the defendants American Optical, Bausch & Lomb and Bausch & Lomb affiliates is hereby enjoined and restrained from being or becoming members of any organization or association whose activities have the purpose or effect of establishing any functional classification of any person or persons, fixing prices or otherwise restraining competition in the manufacture, sale or distribution of ophthalmic goods.

XV

That each of the defendants is hereby enjoined and restrained from refusing to sell ophthalmic goods at manufacturers' prices to any person because such person is not listed on the Ful-Vue Distributors List, or any similar list, or is not a member of the OWNA or any other association, or is not listed or classified as a wholesale distributor by the OWNA or by any other person.

XVI

That each of the defendants is hereby enjoined and restrained from:

A. For the purpose or with the effect of eliminating a competitor or destroying, restraining or preventing competition, selling or offering for sale ophthalmic goods and processing services upon such goods at unreasonably low prices.

B. Selling or offering for sale ophthalmic goods to retailers under any columnar or other quantity discount price list which permits a larger aggregate gross profit on the sale of a lesser quantity of goods than it permits on the sale of a larger quantity of goods of like grade and quality, provided, however, that notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, sales in quantities other than those for which specific prices are quoted may be made at the prices applicable to the next lower listed quantity. For the purpose of this provision, the term "gross profit" shall mean the difference between the manufacturer's price and the price at which the goods are sold or offered to retailers.

C. Selling or offering for sale like quantities of ophthalmic goods of identical physical characteristics which are regularly sold by the defendant as being goods of the same grade and quality, or of ophthalmic goods of identical physical characteristics which are sold under the same brand or name, at different prices in the same trade or competitive area; provided that differentials in price may be made between customers in different functional classifications prevailing in the industry.

Nothing contained in this section shall prevent any of the defendants from adopting a price made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.

XVII

That each of the defendants American Optical, Bausch & Lomb, and the Bausch & Lomb affiliates is hereby enjoined and restrained, individually or by combination or agreement among themselves or with any other person, from interfering with or attempting to influence or affect the business policies, practices or expansion of any other person who is a manufacturer or wholesaler of ophthalmic goods, through the use of any threat to injure or destroy the business of such person.

XVIII

That each defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering any contract, agreement, understanding, combination or conspiracy with any other person as to prices, discounts or other terms or conditions to be charged, given, or imposed in the sale or distribution of any ophthalmic goods to third persons, other than such contracts, agreements or understandings as are not then prohibited by other provisions of this judgment and are then lawful under patent license agreements or fair trade resale price maintenance contracts.

XIX

That each of the defendants American Optical, Bausch & Lomb and the Bausch & Lomb affiliates is hereby enjoined and restrained for a period of ten years from the date of this judgment from acquiring, directly or indirectly, any ownership interest by purchase or acquisition of assets or of securities or otherwise, or from leasing, or from acquiring control over, any establishment, business or concern engaged in whole or in part in the wholesale distribution of ophthalmic goods, except, however, that nothing herein shall prevent Bausch & Lomb or the Bauch & Lomb affiliates from (1) acquiring additional stock or other ownership interest in or the assets of the Bausch & Lomb affiliates, and (2) acquiring ownership or control of outlets in the territory defined in Appendix "B", which is attached hereto and made a part hereof, for the wholesale distribution of ophthalmic goods, provided that it or they have, after reasonable notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity on the part of the latter to be heard, shown to the satisfaction of the Court that any such acquisition does not substantially lessen competition in the wholesale distribution of ophthalmic goods in the area served by the outlet sought to be acquired, or tend to create a monopoly in the wholesale distribution of ophthalmic goods in the above-defined territory. In no event shall acquisition be permitted under subdivision (2) of this Section in any city or locality in which Bausch & Lomb or a Bausch & Lomb affiliate owns or controls an outlet for the wholesale distribution of ophthalmic goods.

XX

That each of the defendants American Optical, Bausch & Lomb and the Bausch & Lomb affiliates is hereby enjoined and restrained from representing or holding out to the public that any concern, outlet or factory branch owned or controlled directly or indirectly by any of said defendants, which is engaged in the ophthalmic wholesale business or performs any of the functions of an ophthalmic wholesaler, is independently owned, controlled, or operated.

XXI

That each of the defendants American Optical, Bausch & Lomb and the Bausch & Lomb affiliates is hereby enjoined and restrained from making, entering into or enforcing, or attempting or threatening to enforce, any covenant in any contract for or incident to the acquisition or purchase of the ownership or control of any establishment, business or concern engaged in the manufacture or wholesale distribution of ophthalmic goods which prohibits, limits or restricts, in any manner, the right of the vendor or any person to engage in the manufacture or wholesale distribution of ophthalmic goods or to compete with such defendants.

XXII

That as between the defendants American Optical and Bausch & Lomb, and as between the defendants American Optical and the Bausch & Lomb affiliates, said defendants are hereby enjoined and restrained from:

A. Exchanging with each other, or disclosing one to the other, with respect to the manufacture or distribution of ophthalmic goods, any information relating to unit costs; future prices; current prices or current sales (other than such as is lawfully available on equal terms to other members of the industry); names of customers; or the opening or closing of wholesale outlets.

B. Jointly obtaining, acquiring, owning or holding, directly or indirectly, any patent relating to ophthalmic goods, or any interest in such patent.

C. Exchanging or granting one to another on an exclusive basis any license under any United States patent in the field of ophthalmic goods or any technical information in that field, or making or performing any agreement or understanding for a general exchange between any of said defendants of rights under such United States patents or of such technical information.

XXIII

That each of the defendants Bausch & Lomb, Bay State Optical Company, New Jersey Optical Company, American Optical and Shuron Optical Company is enjoined and restrained from:

(1) Leasing, selling or licensing machines used to assemble ophthalmic goods, on the condition or with the agreement or understanding that the lessee, purchaser, or licensee will not use such machine to assemble ophthalmic goods made or sold by any competitor of such defendant;

(2) Enforcing any provision in any existing lease, contract or license relating to a machine used to assemble ophthalmic goods, which provides that the lessee, purchaser or licensee will not use such machine to assemble ophthalmic goods made or sold by any competitor of such defendant; and

(3) Selling ophthalmic goods on the condition or with the agreement or understanding that such goods will be assembled only by use of machines leased, sold or licensed by such defendant.

[Inspection for Compliance Purposes]

XXIV

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall upon written request of the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General and on reasonable notice to any defendant corporation, association or partnership made to its principal office be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this judgment, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters; provided, however, that no information obtained by the means provided in this paragraph shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment or as otherwise required by law.

[Report to be Filed]

XXV

Within three months from the date of this judgment, the defendants shall file with the Attorney General a report of the action taken to carry out the provisions of this judgment requiring said defendants to send notices, including a copy of each type of notice so sent and a list of the persons to whom such notices were sent, and shall file with the Attorney General a copy of the form of patent license used in complying with the provisions requiring compulsory licensing of patents, including a statement of the rate of royalty being collected with respect to each patent so licensed.

For a period of ten years from the date of this judgment, each defendant shall, upon written request of the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General, submit reports in writing with respect to (a) the form and contents of, or parties to, any patent license agreements to which it is a party under United States patents in the field of ophthalmic goods; (b) the nature and extent of its United States patent holdings in the field of ophthalmic goods; (c) the United States trade marks or trade names being used by it in the field of ophthalmic goods, and any litigation or complaints initiated by it with respect thereto; (d) the activities of any trade association concerned with ophthalmic goods, and the participation of the defendants therein; (e) the cancellation of any patent license, issued pursuant to the compulsory licensing provisions of this judgment, and the reasons or grounds for such cancellation; and (f) the acquisition or opening of concerns, branches or outlets for the manufacture or wholesale distribution of ophthalmic goods in the United States.

No information obtained by the means provided in this paragraph shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment or as otherwise required by law.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

XXVI

Jurisdiction of this Court is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this decree, for the modification thereof, or the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[Activities Not Affected]

XXVII

Except with respect to Section VIII, nothing contained in this judgment shall have any effect with respect to operations or activities of any defendant which relate exclusively to acts and operations outside the United States and its territories and are not violative of the Anti-Trust laws of the United States.

[Issues Not Adjudicated]

XXVIII

Nothing contained herein shall be deemed to adjudicate, determine or otherwise affect the issues involved in United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, et al., Civil Action No. 46C1332, United States v. American Optical Co., et al., Civil Action No. 46C1333, or United States v. Uhlemann Optical Company of Illinois, et al., Civil Action No. 48C608, now pending in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.

APPENDIX "A"

United States Patent No.	Name of Inventor	Name of Owner	Issue Date
1,685,192; Reissue 17,994	Ernest E. Emons	Ful-Vue Sales Company	Sept. 25, 1928; Reissued Mar. 10, 1931
1,739,049; Reissue 17,996	John A. Smith	Ful-Vue Sales Company	Dec. 10, 1929; Reissued Mar. 10, 1931
1,964,664	Ernest E. Emons	Ful-Vue Sales Company	June 26, 1934
1,976,661	Ernest E. Emons	Ful-Vue Sales Company	Oct. 9, 1934
2,041,638	Ernest E. Emons	Ful-Vue Sales Company	May 19, 1936
2,197,682 Reissue 21,909	William Brown	Ful-Vue Sales Company	Apr. 16, 1940; Reissued Sept. 30, 1941
DP-85,089	Ernest E. Emons	Ful-Vue Sales Company	Sept. 15, 1931
DP-91,518	Ernest E. Emons	Ful-Vue Sales Company	Feb. 20, 1934
DP-93,765	Ernest E. Emons	Ful-Vue Sales Company	Nov. 6, 1934
DP-94,541	Ernest E. Emons	Ful-Vue Sales Company	Feb. 12, 1935
1,935,433	T. E. Bosworth	American Optical	Nov. 14, 1933
1,953,922	T. E. Bosworth	American Optical	Apr. 10, 1934
DP-84,024	T. E. Bosworth	American Optical	Apr. 28, 1931
DP-84,678	T. E. Bosworth	American Optical	July 21, 1931
1,747,904	George E. Nerney	American Optical	Feb. 18, 1930
1,984,541	George E. Nerney	American Optical	Dec. 18, 1934
2,050,525 Reissue 21,255	Louis L. Gagnon	American Optical	Aug. 11, 1936; Reissued Oct. 3, 1939
2,236,304	T. J. Snavely	American Optical	Mar. 25, 1941
DP-107,697	George E. Nerney	American Optical	Dec. 28, 1937
DP-110,739	Edward M. Splaine	American Optical	Aug. 2, 1938
DP-112,386	Edward M. Splaine	American Optical	Nov. 29, 1938
DP-115,769	Thomas J. Snavely	American Optical	July 18, 1939
DP-115,772	Edward M. Splaine	American Optical	July 18, 1939
DP-117,769	Charles O. Cozzens	American Optical	Nov. 21, 1939
1,878,366	Carl L. Bausch	Bausch & Lomb	Sept. 20, 1932
1,878,370	Samuel E. Bouchard	Bausch & Lomb	Sept. 20, 1932
1,878,371	Samuel E. Bouchard	Bausch & Lomb	Sept. 20, 1932
1,978,890	Samuel E. Bouchard	Bausch & Lomb	Oct. 30, 1934
1,985,499	George L. Hommel	Bausch & Lomb	Dec. 25, 1934
2,033,608	Samuel E. Bouchard	Bausch & Lomb	Mar. 10, 1936
2,063,170	Cletus F. Kramer	Bausch & Lomb	Dec. 8, 1936
2,108,875	William R. Uhlemann	Uhlemann Optical Company of Illinois	Feb. 22, 1938
2,164,557	William R. Uhlemann	Uhlemann Optical Company of Illinois	July 4, 1939
2,188,380	William R. Uhlemann	Uhlemann Optical Company of Illinois	Jan. 30, 1940
DP-117,766	William R. Uhlemann	Uhlemann Optical Company of Illinois	Nov. 21, 1939

All renewals, extensions, continuations, divisions or reissues of any of the above patents.

APPENDIX "B"

All of the Lower Peninsula of the State of Michigan; all of the State of Ohio; all of the State of West Virginia; all of the State of Kentucky except the Counties of Ballard, Carlisle, Hickman, Fulton, Graves, Calloway, Marshall, McCracken; all of the State of Indiana except the Counties of Lake, Porter, and Laporte; the Counties of Garrett and Alleghany in the State of Maryland; the following counties of the State of Illinois: Peoria, Woodford, Livingston, Tazewell, McLean, Ford, Mason, Logan, DeWitt, Piatt, Champaign, Vermilion, Cass, Menard, Scott, Morgan, Sangamon, Macon, Douglas, Greene, Macoupin, Montgomery, Christian, Shelby, Moultrie, Coles and Edgar; and the following counties in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania: Erie, Crawford, Warren, McKean, Mercer, Venango, Forest, Elk, Cameron, Lawrence, Clarion, Jefferson, Clearfield, Beaver, Butler, Armstrong, Indiana, Cambria, Allegheny, Westmoreland, Washington, Greene, Fayette, and Somerset.

[¶ 62,309] Irvin Padnos v. Hiram Walker Distributing Co., a Delaware corporation, and Hiram Walker & Sons, Inc., a Michigan corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 47 C 976. September 13, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Antitrust Act

Suit for Treble Damages—No Intent to Restrain Trade Shown—Integration Not Unlawful Per Se.—A complaint alleging that plaintiff retail liquor dealer was injured by reason of a combination and conspiracy entered into by defendant distillers and distributors, whose products are distributed and manufactured by four integrated companies having financial and managerial interests in common, which agreement fixed resale prices and other terms of distribution and sale, is dismissed with leave to amend. It is held that the allegation of the existence of such resale agreements, together with defendants' integration, is without circumstance to show that defendants in the alleged conspiracy had the intent and purpose to restrain or monopolize trade or commerce. No facts are alleged from which the court can construe the effect of the integration to result in an injury to the public. The present complaint is directed to the personal injury suffered by plaintiff in his dealings with defendants.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.121, and the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2024.19, 2036.

For plaintiff: Maurice R. Kraines, Chicago, Illinois.

For defendants: Carl S. Lloyd, Joseph H. Pleck and Perry S. Patterson of Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis, Chicago, Illinois.

Memorandum

[Nature of Action]

LaBuy, J.: The complaint in this case is premised on two counts: the first being based upon the treble damage section of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 15) allowing suit by a private person for damages sustained through violation by defendant of the antitrust laws, and the second being for equitable relief from continuance of defendants' actions.

[Allegations of Complaint]

Plaintiff alleges he is a Chicago retail liquor dealer who until May 1947 purchased defendants' products. It is alleged that defendant, Hiram Walker Distributing Company, is the sole and exclusive wholesale and retail distributor for the defendants, Hiram Walker & Sons, Inc., for Hiram Walker and Sons, Ltd., and W. A. Taylor Co. The latter two companies are not made parties defendant. The complaint states that Hiram Walker & Sons, is a Michigan corporation operating a distillery in Illinois which produces Imperial and Walker's DeLuxe whiskey; that Hiram Walker & Sons, Ltd. is a Canadian corporation operating a distillery in Ontario producing Canadian Club whiskey; that W. A. Taylor & Co. is a New York corporation producing wines in California under the name of Valliant. These four corporations are alleged to have substantially the same officers and to operate under an agreement whereby the products Canadian Club, Imperial, Walker's DeLuxe and Valliant wines are sold through the Hiram Walker Distributing Company, a Delaware corporation, doing business in Illinois as the sole and exclusive distributor for the other three corporations.

Paragraph 5 of the complaint charges that as to Canadian Club the four corporations "entered into a combination, conspiracy, agreements or contracts" that the Distributing Company was to have sole and exclusive sale of Canadian Club in the Chicago territory; that it was not to sell to retailers unless they agreed to buy Imperial and Valliant; that it was to maintain and increase the dollar price of Canadian Club; that it was to maintain the price of Canadian Club by contracting with retailers not to sell the Distributing Company products at less than a "suggested" price and threatening to enjoin those who sold below; that the supply of Canadian Club was to be stretched by requiring retailers to purchase Walker's DeLuxe and Canadian Club on condition that retailers purchase similar quantities of Imperial and Valliant. As to Imperial and Walker's DeLuxe the Distributing Company was to be the sole and exclusive seller in Chicago; that it was agreed the sale of Canadian Club would be conditional on the sale of Imperial thereby requiring retailers to push Imperial; that it was agreed Imperial was to be sold at a "suggested" price; that this resulted in a large supply of Imperial stock making it harder to sell competing whiskies. As to Valliant wines the allegations are substantially the same as those respecting Imperial.

Paragraph 6 of the complaint charges a restraint on foreign trade by limiting the sale of Canadian Club to persons who would buy Imperial and Valliant; requiring retailers to pay increased prices and requiring dealers to purchase Imperial and Valliant; requiring retailers not to sell below "suggested" prices which were distributed to them and threatening to enjoin sales at less. Plaintiff could not procure said products at wholesale except from the Distributing Company; the Distributing Company raised the dollar price of Canadian Club sold to plaintiff twice; that plaintiff was compelled to purchase Imperial or Valliant equal to two or more times Canadian Club; that other retailers were compelled to buy only one case and therefore plaintiff was discriminated against; that plaintiff was compelled to dispose of Imperial and Valliant at substantial loss.

The equitable relief count iterates the first seven paragraphs of Count I, alleges the injunction issued by the Circuit Court of Cook County on petition of defendants in May 1947 was without jurisdiction and this court should enjoin the prosecution of the suit in the Circuit Court; that if defendant Distributing Company has a fair trade contract that such contract is null and void as being part of the conspiracy; that secret rebates are given to retailers in the form of the more desired beverages; and that an injunction should issue restraining defendants from continuing the practices injuring the plaintiff.

[Necessary Elements]

The elements necessary to found an action under Section 15 of the Clayton Act are (1) a conspiracy (2) in restraint of or to monopolize interstate or foreign trade, and (3) resulting in damages to the plaintiff. It is a fundamental principle in this kind of action that unless the conspiracy violates Section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act no action will lie under Section 15 of the Clayton Act. Further, the effect upon interstate commerce must be direct and not remote and must be the result of an intent to restrain interstate commerce.

The combinations and contracts in restraint of trade which were intended to be prohibited by the Sherman Act are combinations which are directed to the control of the market by suppression of competition in the marketing of goods and services, the effect of which is adverse to the consumer and the public. The practices prohibited by the Act are those that have an evil effect upon the public generally as distinguished from purely personal or private injury.

[No Intent Alleged]

From reading the first count of the complaint the court is of the opinion from the facts alleged that no intent and purpose to restrain or monopolize trade or commerce is shown or can be inferred. The factors which allegedly color defendants' activities stem from (1) the fact that their products are manufactured and distributed by four integrated companies having allegedly financial and managerial interests in common, and (2) the fact that an alleged agreement exists between the three producers with the one distributing company regarding distribution and terms of sale of these products.

[Integration Not Unlawful]

Integration is not in and of itself unlawful. The taint arises when such integration is utilized for the purpose of stiflng the free activity of others in the same field and deprives the public of the benefits of the competition. No facts are alleged from which the court can construe the effect of this integration to result in an injury to the public since it is not stated how the public has been deprived of the continued sale and distribution of defendants' products or how it has suffered any other injury.

[Complaint Insufficient To Charge Violation of Act]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act specifically exempts from its bar resale price agreements on products which are in free and open competition. The allegation of the existence of such resale agreements, together with defendants' integration, is without circumstance to show that defendants in the alleged conspiracy were directing their scheme against interstate and foreign commerce. It is necessary for the plaintiff to allege with a degree of certainty and definiteness the conspiracy or combination to restrict free competition in the sale and distribution of their products.

The present complaint is directed to the personal injury plaintiff suffered in his dealings with defendants. Count II is based upon the same jurisdictional requisites as Count I and consequently fails in the same essentials required by Section 15 of the Clayton Act.

The court therefore sustains defendants' motion to dismiss Count I and Count II of the complaint; denies defendants' motion for summary judgment; sustains plaintiff's motion for leave to amend and to make other parties defendant within thirty days from date hereof.

[¶ 62,310] M. Witmark & Sons v. Mrs. Jessie L. Jensen. Santley-Joy, Inc. v. Hastings Theatre Corp. Harms, Inc. v. Grand Theatre Corp. M. Witmark & Sons and Mills Music, Inc. v. Berger Amusement Company, Incorporated.

In the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota. Civil Nos. 1026, 1797, 1798, 1799. September 9, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Copyright Infringement Suit—Defense of Extension of Copyright—Violation of Antitrust Laws.—Injunctive relief will be denied in a suit for infringement of music copyrights where it is shown that the copyright owners have extended the copyright monopoly and have restrained competition, in violation of the antitrust laws. Plaintiffs, acting through an association of composers, authors and publishers, are shown to have acted in concert to fix prices and control competition in the licensing of musical compositions, and to have achieved monopolistic domination of the music integrated in sound films in the motion picture industry, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Where the granting of the relief sought would serve to continue the unlawful practices, such relief will be withheld.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1660.200, and digest of prior opinion, reported in 1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,589.

For plaintiffs: Louis D. Frohlich, New York, N. Y.; Thomas Vennum, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

For defendants: Louis B. Schwartz, Samuel P. Halpern, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Amicus curiae: Bogle, Bogle & Gates, Seattle, Washington.

Memorandum Decision

[Nature of Action]

NORDBYE, J.: These cases came before the Court for trial without a jury. Mr. Louis D. Frohlich, of New York City, and Mr. Thomas Vennum, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, appeared in behalf of the plaintiffs; Mr. Louis B. Schwartz and Mr. Samuel P. Halpern, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, appeared in behalf of the defendants; Messrs. Bogle, Bogle & Gates, of Seattle, Washington, filed a brief amicus curiae.

Plaintiffs in these cases are seeking (1) damages for alleged infringement by defendants of certain musical composition copyrights owned by plaintiffs, and (2) an injunction restraining future threatened violation of those copyrights. Plaintiffs contend that defendants, who operate certain motion picture theatres, gave public performance of those compositions for profit when showing certain films in their theatres without first obtaining from plaintiffs a license to perform publicly the compositions for profit.

[Defenses]

Defendants contend that plaintiffs are entitled to no relief upon the grounds that (1) plaintiffs have illegally extended their copyrights, and (2) plaintiffs' method of doing business is in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. Unless these defenses can be sustained, it follows from the evidence that plaintiffs have established infringement of the musical copyrights referred to in the complaint and are entitled to an injunction, damages, and counsel fees.

[Facts of Case]

Plaintiffs are members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, better known as Ascap, which is a voluntary association including within its membership many composers, authors, and publishers of musical compositions. Motion pictures in the United States are produced principally by eight major companies and are licensed by the producers to exhibitors to be exhibited in various motion picture theatres. Sound for pictures cannot be played unless the music included in the sound track is also played, in that the dialogue and music are on the same sound track and obviously cannot be separated. Plaintiffs and the other members of Ascap have adopted by their arrangements, agreements, and practices a uniform plan whereby copyrighted music owned by them is licensed through an agent to motion picture producers. The music is licensed to them at a license fee agreed upon, permitting the producers to synchronize the copyrighted music on the sound track of the motion picture film to be produced. The music by such synchronization will be integrated with the film, and all the members of Ascap know and are informed that the film on which the music is recorded will be copyrighted by the motion picture producer and thereafter licensed for exhibition in motion picture theatres for profit throughout the United States and elsewhere. As stated, the rights granted to the motion picture producers are merely synchronization rights. The license agreements covering synchronization seem to vary in form, but all of them specifically indicate that the rights granted are recording rights alone and do not extend to performance rights of the copyrighted music. In some the following reservations are made:

> "The right to perform said musical composition as covered by this agreement is conditioned upon the performance of said musical composition in theatres having valid licenses from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, or any other performing rights society having jurisdiction in the territory in which said musical composition is performed."

In other license contracts, the word "perform," as noted in the first line, is changed to the word "record." There may be other changes in the wording in the various forms of contracts used.

Furthermore, it may be noted that, in the agreements between the copyright owner and the producers granting synchronization rights to the producers, the latter specifically assent that there is a reservation to the copyright owner of the right to license the performance rights to the exhibitors of the films, and, in carrying out the arrangement between the copyright owner and the producer, the latter in its contract with the theatre owner limits the exhibition of the film, where Ascap rights are involved, to theatres having licenses from Ascap.

The licensing of the performance rights of the copyrighted music thus recorded on the sound film is handled exclusively by Ascap for these plaintiffs and other members of that Society. There are some fifteen thousand theatres in the United States which obtain music performance rights from Ascap. The performance rights of any musical composition controlled by Ascap may be licensed singly, but it appears that Ascap's copyrighted music is always licensed as a group under a blanket license from Ascap. And while the copyright owners, including the plantiffs herein, since the consent decree entered into in 1941 between Ascap and the federal government, may deal individually with anyone seeking a license for the performance of their compositions publicly for profit, it seems that, in the licensing of the performance rights of the music integrated in a sound film, as a matter of practice theatre owners have but little opportunity to obtain licenses from the many individual copyright owners belonging to Ascap who may have copyrighted music in the particular film purchased by the theatre owner. Defendants term the right of granting individual licenses by the individual Ascap copyright owner as "illusory" in that the motion picture theatre owner is generally required to buy his pictures for his theatre before he knows what copyrighted music may be contained therein. It is contended that often he does not know the titles of the pictures for which he has contracted and which he has agreed to exhibit in his theatre. The "cue sheets," which contain the entire music score of the particular film and which are made available with each film production, reflect whether the music is copyrighted or in the public domain, but usually they are not made available to the exhibitor until he has bound himself to purchase the film. Obviously, therefore, it is urged that he is in no position to bargain for a license with the copyright owners of the music. That is, he must have the license or licenses or he cannot exhibit the film in his theatre. Defendants contend that, in the relatively short time available to the motion picture operator after the cue sheets are available, it would be quite impossible for any motion picture exhibitor to contact all the different copyright owners of music for licenses, and that the very predicament that he would be in if he would assume to wait until the cue sheets are prepared and made available before he bargained for a license for copyright music requires him to obtain a yearly blanket license for all Ascap music if he is to carry on his theatre business successfully. That the necessities of the situation seem to make this practice uniform is sustained by the record herein, and there is no deviation in the manner in which theatre owners obtain a license for the performance rights of copyrighted music. They all clear through Ascap, and for years Ascap has built up its business in this regard accordingly and with full knowledge of all of these circumstances. In fact, one of the witnesses, informed as to the methods of doing business in this regard, testified, and his testimony is not contradicted, that he had never heard of any theatre owner's approaching anyone but Ascap for performance rights where the music was copyrighted by an Ascap member. Then, in addition, there are certain practical aspects which undoubtedly have brought about the uniform practices of Ascap in this regard. If a member of Ascap intends to issue a performance license to a motion picture theatre owner, he is required to give notice to the Society of his intention to do so, and the issuance of such license by him must have the approval of all parties interested in the copyright—the composer, the author, and the publisher. All license fees obtained by Ascap members for performance of motion picture films for profit, are paid to Ascap and these fees are distributed to the members by Ascap according to a formula devised by that Society. These factors undoubtedly have had a bearing upon, and apparently were devised to bring about, the plan of Ascap's being in exclusive control of the granting of performance rights of music copyrighted by Ascap members, but whatever may have occasioned the plan, it is evident that Ascap has obtained over the years a monopoly of the music thus integrated in sound motion picture films. It is uncontradicted that on an average at least 80 per cent of the music integrated in sound films is copyrighted and owned by members of Ascap and the licensing exclusively controlled by Ascap.

[Monopolistic Control]

This plan and method of doing business by plaintiffs and the other members of Ascap undoubtedly was prompted by a desire to protect their rights as copyright owners, facilitate the collection of license fees so that they might be distributed in accordance with the formula agreed upon, enable them to handle more expeditiously the licensing of films to theatre owners, and enable the Society to police the violations of their copyrights. But, notwithstanding these seeming beneficent purposes, plaintiffs and their associates through Ascap have obtained by these methods and practices which they have carried on over the years monopolistic control over the copyrighted films in which their music is integrated. This seems evident because, unless the theatre owner obtains a license at a fee which plaintiffs and their associates through Ascap demand, no theatre owner can exhibit a sound film which he rents from a producer and which contains Ascap music. In other words, plaintiffs and their associates have, through Ascap, the combined and potential power to deny to any theatre owner the right to carry on his business, because, without the right to exhibit films containing Ascap music, no theatre owner would be able to stay in business. It is therefore defendants' contention that all of these facts and circumstances undeniably establish that plaintiffs have extended their copyrights by their method of doing business and that such practices give to them through Ascap an economic advantage and economic control beyond that granted to each of them by the copyright laws. Defendants rely principally upon the teachings of the following cases: Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502; Carbice Co. v. American Patents Development Co., 283 U. S. 27, 51 S. Ct. 334; Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U. S. 458, 58 S. Ct. 288; B. B. Chemical Co. v. Ellis, 314 U. S. 495, 62 S. Ct. 406; Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488, 62 S. Ct. 403; Mercoid Corporation v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, 64 S. Ct. 268; Mercoid Corporation v. Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 620, 64 S. Ct. 278; Ethyl Gas Corporation v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 50 S. Ct. 618; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. Supp. 416.

[Prior Decision]

Questions similar to those presented herein were before this Court on defendants' motion for a summary judgment. That motion was denied on July 10, 1947. However, further consideration of the facts now disclosed in the record and a reappraisal of some of the decisions of the Supreme Court has caused the Court to depart from the principal conclusions reached in passing upon defendants' motions.

[Rights Under Copyright Act]

At the outset, it may be assumed that a copyright owner of music may have the right to license the recording of his composition on a film and also the exclusive right to license the performance of the synchronized composition publicly for profit. It would seem that these rights are separate and independent rights under the Copyright Act, which provides (17 U. S. C. A. § 1):

"Any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this title, shall have the exclusive right:

"(a) To print, reprint, publish, copy, and vend the copyrighted work;

* * *

"(e) To perform the work publicly for profit if it be a musical composition and for the purpose of public performance for profit; and for the purposes set forth in subsection (a) hereof, to make any arrangement or setting of it or of the melody of it in any system of notation or any form of record in which the thought of an author may be recorded and from which it may be read or reproduced: * * *."

The United States Court of Appeals for this circuit has held in Remick v. Interstate Hotel Co., (1946) 157 F. 2d 744, at 745, cert. den., that the right to perform a composition publicly for profit and the right to record it are separate and independent rights. See, also, Jerome v. Twentieth Century Fox-Film Corp., 67 F. Supp. 736; Buck v. Jewell-La-Salle Realty Co., 283 U. S. 191, 51 S. Ct. 410, 75 L. Ed. 971, 76 A. L. R. 1266; Jewell-La-Salle Realty Co. v. Buck, 263 U. S. 202, 204, 51 S. Ct. 407, 75 L. Ed. 978; Buck v. Swanson, 33 F. Supp. 377, 387, and cases cited; Fox Film Corporation v. Doyal, 286 U. S. 123, 127, 52 S. Ct. 546, 76 L. Ed. 1010.

[Extension of Copyrights]

And because of the claimed right to split the licensing of the recording rights and performance rights, plaintiffs urge that the asserted extension of their copyrights is merely the copyright monopoly which has inured to them because of the advancement in the motion picture industry, which has inaugurated sound films and devised the technique of integrating the sound script with the background of music and songs. It is pointed out that any individual copyright owner of music necessarily obtains a potential control over motion picture films if a producer decides to use his music in a sound film; that is, no motion picture exhibitor can exhibit any film containing copyrighted music unless he pays tribute by way of a license fee to every copyright owner of music which may be contained in the film. Thus, it is argued that the potential power of the copyright owner over the copyrighted film, and perchance any uncopyrighted songs contained in the film, is the result of the monopoly granted by the copyright law and is thrust upon the copyright owner by reason of the mechanical arts and technique employed in the production of the sound motion pictures. But if it be assumed that the act of an individual copyright owner in granting an individual recording license of his copyrighted music to the motion picture producer, and the granting of performance rights to the motion picture exhibitor, does not unlawfully extend his copyright monopoly, that situation is not that which the present record presents. Here, the plaintiffs and their associates have wittingly or unwittingly adopted a method and plan of licensing the recording for public performance of their copyrighted music in the motion picture field which has bestowed upon them a monopoly of some 80 per cent of all the music recorded in motion picture films. By placing the control of performance rights for motion pictures in a Society maintained by them, they have obtained a potential economic advantage which far exceeds that enjoyed by one copyright owner. The power, although it may be argued it has been benevolently exercised in the past, nevertheless fully exists. Through Ascap, these plaintiffs and their associates by a refusal to license, or by the imposition of an exorbitant performance license fee, can sound the death knell of every motion picture theatre in America. That it would not be good business economics for them to do so does not mitigate the economic advantage which these plaintiffs have obtained in addition to that which is granted to them by their lawful copyright monopoly. Free competition among the members of Ascap to license individually their music is effectively curbed, if not completely obliterated, by the scheme of operation which the members of Ascap have adopted. The monopoly which they enjoy is tied in with the copyrighted film monopoly because, as a part of the plan, the producers require the exhibitors to obtain a license from Ascap where Ascap's music is involved before they are authorized to exhibit the film which is licensed to them. The pooling of all license fees obtained from the licensing of some 80 per cent of all sound music in motion pictures and the sharing of the revenues thus obtained permit each copyright owner to enjoy the benefits obtained by other copyright owners. So it will be seen that plaintiffs have also tied their copyrights with other copyrighted music and thus have shared in the rewards which are obtained from other copyrighted material.

The language used by Judge Hand in speaking for the three-judge court in United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 66 F. Supp. 323, at 348, seems apposite. There, the court was considering the monopoly of motion picture producers in carrying on their practice of "block booking" in the sale of films to motion picture exhibitors. Judge Hand stated:

"It is true that a copyrighted motion picture when united with another copyrighted picture by block-booking is not tied to an uncopyrighted article. Nevertheless the objections to conditioning the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another are the same, for the result is to give the copyright owner not only the reward which is his due from the licensing of a single copyrighted film, but to extend his monopoly by requiring his licensee to accept one or more other films and to pay royalties therefor as an additional consideration."

Instead, therefore, of having a single monopoly of a particular piece of copyrighted music and the benefits which that might afford, every copyright owner of music in Ascap obtains the added economic power and benefit which the combined Ascap control gives to them and their associates. Obviously, no one copyright owner would have the monopolistic power over the motion picture industry which Ascap now enjoys.

It does not appear that plaintiffs or Ascap have actually imposed exorbitant fees in the past, or that they have ever refused to license any theatre owner who is willing to pay the required fee. And while it does appear that Warner Brothers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, and Twentieth Century Fox, four of the major motion picture producers, have subsidiaries which are members of Ascap, and that these producers have employees and others who compose music for films for them and that such music is copyrighted by the producers or their affiliates and eventually licensed by Ascap in the same way as music composed and copyrighted by other composers belonging to Ascap, and that these producers thereby share in the license fee pool maintained by Ascap, it does not seem necessary to determine on this record whether there is any actual conspiracy between the major producers, or a majority of them, to combine with Ascap in its plan of splitting the license rights in order to create a greater revenue for Ascap and for the producers. It may be that the producers are of the opinion that it is simpler to have the exhibitors pay the performance license fee rather than for them to pay Ascap a license fee for both recording and performance, and then pass on the extra cost of the license fee to the exhibitors. Admittedly, however, there may be an economic advantage to both the producer and Ascap under the present system.

However free plaintiffs and their associates in Ascap may have been from any design or intent to extend their copyright monopoly, or however beneficial it may be for them to carry on their business in this manner, or however inconvenient it may be for them to function otherwise, such facts and circumstances will not permit them to enlarge their lawful monopoly. As stated by the Supreme Court in B. B. Chemical Co. v. Ellis, 314 U. S. 495, 498,

> "* * * The patent monopoly is not enlarged by reason of the fact that it would be more convenient to the patentee to have it so, or because he cannot avail himself of its benefits within the limits of the grant."

And as stated in Mercoid Corporation v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, 666,

> "* * * The necessities or convenience of the patentee do not justify any use of the monopoly of the patent to create another monopoly. The fact that the patentee has the power to refuse a license does not enable him to enlarge the monopoly of the patent by the expedient of attaching conditions to its use."

[Concert of Action]

It is the collective acts and agreements of plaintiffs and their associate members which have diverted their copyrights from their "statutory purpose and become a ready instrument for economic control in domains where the antitrust acts or other laws not the patent statutes define the public policy." Mercoid Corporation v. Mid-Continent Co., supra, at p. 666. Refuge cannot be sought in the copyright monopoly which was not granted to enable plaintiffs to set up another monopoly, nor to enable the copyright owners to tie a lawful monopoly with an unlawful monopoly and thus reap the benefits of both.

The defendants contend that plaintiffs not only are extending their copyright monopoly in contravention of the copyright law, but also are violating the antitrust laws and that, for both of these reasons, they should be precluded from any recovery or injunctive relief herein because the relief they are seeking is in effect in furtherance and in aid of their law violations. In a recent decision of Judge Leibell, of the Southern District of New York, in Alden-Rochelle, Inc., et al. v. American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, et al., dated July 19, 1948, Ascap was held, upon the facts presented in that case, to be in violation of the antitrust laws. While some of the facts recounted in that decision may not very clearly appear in the record herein, it would seem that a fair appraisal of this record would require the same conclusions as indicated by Judge Leibell. He determined that "Almost every part of the Ascap structure, almost all of Ascap's activities in licensing motion picture theatres, involve a violation of the antitrust laws." In passing, it may be noted that the consent decree of 1941 permitting individual copyright owners to issue individual licenses for performance rights does not preclude a finding that Ascap is in violation of the antitrust laws in other respects.

[Restraint of Competition]

As heretofore indicated, motion picture operators are required by the methods of doing business established by the producers, as well as by the members of Ascap, to enter into a blanket license with Ascap for the performance rights of the copyrighted music integrated in sound films, and, as stated, Ascap under this arrangement controls some 80 per cent of the music integrated in sound films. It seems undeniable that there is no competition among Ascap members. Competition is effectually restrained because all licenses are granted by Ascap under its control and domination. All earnings derived from licenses are pooled and divided among the members. As illustrative of the monopoly and control of Ascap, it appears that in August, 1947, it attempted by a notice to all theatre owners, to raise substantially and arbitrarily the license fees for performance rights of Ascap music in all motion picture theatres in the United States. This proposed raise was to be based upon the seating capacity and the admission charge of the particular theatre. Thereafter, the representatives of Ascap and representatives of a certain portion of the motion picture exhibitor associations had long negotiations looking to an adjustment in the existing rates for the right to perform publicly for profit music in Ascap's repertoire by the motion picture exhibitors throughout the United States. And while it is contended that the present rates arrived at in February, 1948, were acquiesced in by some twelve thousand motion picture exhibitors as being fair and reasonable and that they were willing to execute contracts with Ascap thereunder, the price fixing power was nevertheless vested in Ascap. The reasonableness or unreasonableness of the rates does not militate against the absolute control of Ascap to fix prices. The vice of the arrangement is apparent because, as the Supreme Court stated in United States v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 223,

> "* * * the machinery employed by a combination for price-fixing is immaterial.
>
> "Under the Sherman Act a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se."

[Monopolistic Domination]

It cannot be denied, therefore, that plaintiffs and their associates, acting in concert through Ascap, fix prices and completely control competition and thereby restrained trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act which declares illegal "every contract, combination, in the form of a trust or otherwise, or a conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." Moreover, it seems inescapable on this record that plaintiffs, through Ascap, have achieved monopolistic domination of the music integrated in the sound films in the motion picture industry and have effectively monopolized that part of trade and commerce in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. As stated by Judge Leibell in his decision:

> "The fact that Ascap is a membership association gives it no immunity. 'Arrangements or combinations designed to stifle competition cannot be immunized by adopting a membership device accomplishing that purpose.' Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1 at p. 19. Nor is Ascap shielded by its purpose to prevent the infringement of the copyright of its members. The purpose of the Fashion Guild to prevent 'Style Piracy', i.e. the copying of 'original creations', did not take it outside the scope of the antitrust laws. Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, 312 U. S. 457."

Granted that there may be practical difficulties confronting Ascap members if they are to realize a full reward of their individual copyright monopoly, their practice of using a monopoly to obtain another monopoly cannot be condoned in view of the prohibition of the antitrust laws. The language of Mr. Justice Reed in United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U. S. 287, 315, seems highly pertinent:

> "* * * The mere fact that a patentee uses his patent as whole or part consideration in a contract by which he and another or other patentees in the same patent field arrange for the practice of any patent involved in such a way that royalties or other earnings or benefits from the patent or patents are shared among the patentees, parties to the agreement, subjects that contract to the prohibitions of the Sherman Act whenever the selling price, for things produced under a patent involved, is fixed by the contract or a license authorized by the contract."

Undoubtedly, the simplest plan for the copyright owners belonging to Ascap would be for them to issue both synchronization rights and performance rights to the producers. This would provide for a free competitive market in the motion picture industry for all copyright owners of music suitable for use in sound films. That the cost of the performance license would be passed on to the theatre owner is entirely probable, but plaintiffs would not be using their copyright privileges contrary to public interest.

[Relief Withheld]

In view of the foregoing, if the relief sought by the plaintiffs were granted, the Court would be, as stated in Mercoid Corporation v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, at 670, "placing its imprimatur on a scheme which involves a misuse of the patent privilege and a violation of the antitrust laws." The same principle is announced in Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co., 314 U. S. 488, at 492, where the court stated, "It is a principle of general application that courts, and especially courts of equity, may appropriately withhold their aid when the plaintiff is using the right asserted contrary to public interest."

This Court is now sitting as a court of equity. Equitable relief is prayed for to restrain the defendants from future threatened violation of plaintiffs' copyrights, as well as for damages for past infringement. Public interest transcends plaintiffs' rights under their copyrights, and where the granting of relief sought would serve to continue the unlawful practices here condemned, it should be withheld. One who unlawfully exceeds his copyright monopoly and violates the antitrust laws is not outside the pale of the law, but where the Court's aid is requested, as noted herein, and the granting thereof would tend to serve the plaintiffs in their plan and scheme with other members of Ascap to extend their copyrights in a monopolistic control beyond their proper scope, it should be denied. In view of the Court's finding that the copyright monopoly has been extended, it is not necessary to determine whether antitrust violations alone would deprive plaintiffs of the right of recovery. See article "Violations of Anti-Trust Laws as Defenses in Civil Actions," Minnesota Law Review, May, 1947.

It follows, therefore, from the premises that plaintiffs should be denied any recovery herein. Findings of fact and conclusions of law consistent herewith may be submitted upon five days' notice.

An exception is allowed to the plaintiffs.

[¶ 62,311] United States v. St. Louis Dairy Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, Eastern Division. Criminal No. 25,713. Filed May 14, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Motions to Dismiss Indictment—Direct and Substantial Restraint of Commerce.—Motions to dismiss an indictment charging a conspiracy the substance, purpose and effect of which is to fix and stabilize prices of fluid milk are overruled. It is not necessary that the pleading state factual allegations sufficient to show a direct and substantial impact upon interstate commerce and a restraint thereupon. The agreement for price maintenance without more is an unreasonable restraint under the Sherman Act. Other elements of restraint need not be charged or proven.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1630.210.

Same—Conspiracy in Restraint of Interstate Commerce.—Milk purchased by defendant dairies in Illinois for bottling and pasteurization in Missouri is involved in interstate commerce. The allegation that there was a "continuous" flow of milk from producers in Illinois to consumers in Missouri is sufficient to charge a restraint of interstate commerce, in violation of the Sherman Act. Bottling, pasteurizaton and commingling of milk do not arrest the flow of interstate commerce.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1630.217.

For plaintiff: Drake Watson, United States Attorney, New London, Missouri; George B. Haddock, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, Washington, D. C.; John R. Niesley, Walter D. Murphy, Joseph R. Cannon, Special Attorneys, all of Washington, D. C.

For defendants: James A. Finch, Cape Girardeau, Missouri; E. C. Hartman, William H. Allen, Jacob M. Lashly, all of St. Louis, Missouri.

Memorandum on Motions of Defendants to Dismiss Indictment

HULEN, J.: Defendants, being charged by indictment with conspiracy to fix and stabilize prices of fluid milk, in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of the Sherman Act (U. S. Code, Tit. 15, Sec. 1) move to dismiss on grounds that the indictment does not plead facts showing (1) the conspiracy charged was in restraint of interstate commerce, and (2) the restraint described directly and substantially restrains interstate commerce.

The indictment in substance charges the corporate defendants have their principal place of business in St. Louis, Missouri, are engaged in purchasing fluid milk from producers, bottling, selling and distributing such milk to retail and wholesale customers for resale in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, and communities near St. Louis in Missouri. The milk thus sold is produced in the States of Illinois and Missouri. The corporate defendants purchase milk from the producers in Illinois, consisting of over half the fluid milk sold by them. After purchase of the milk in Illinois it is transported by defendants to St. Louis, there it is intermingled in the corporate defendants' plants with milk produced in Missouri. (By local ordinance all milk sold in the City of St. Louis must be pasteurized.) The indictment recites that fluid milk by its nature is perishable, cannot be stored, must reach consumers within a short time after production, and from day to day there is a continuous flow of fluid milk from the producers in Illinois and Missouri to consumers in St. Louis and vicinity. The corporate defendants sell and distribute 63 per cent of fluid milk consumed in the St. Louis area. Conspiracy of defendants, as alleged is to fix uniform and non-competitive retail and wholesale prices for fluid milk sold by them in the St. Louis, Missouri area during the past ten years, by virtue of a continuing agreement and concert of action among defendants that the corporate defendants would charge uniform prices for fluid milk sold by them. Things charged as the purpose of and to effect the conspiracy are the charging of uniform prices and various meetings at which it was agreed to and said defendants did fix a uniform price for fluid milk. The meetings commenced in July 1946 and ended in January 1948. The retail price of fluid milk in July 1946 was fixed at 17¢, wholesale 15¢. The last meeting, according to the indictment, fixed the retail price at 22½¢ and wholesale at 20½¢. The effect of the conspiracy, as intended by defendants, has been to increase and fix the price of milk to consumers sold by the corporate defendants in the St. Louis area and restrain interstate commerce in fluid milk.

I.

The Government asserts that "while it is true that the Sherman Act applies only to unreasonable restraints of trade * * price fixing agreements are per se unreasonable." Combinations to fix or regulate prices are banned by the Sherman Act. Such was the holding of the Supreme Court in Fashion Guild v. Trade Commission, 312 U. S. 457, l.c. 466:

> "Petitioners, however, argue that the combination cannot be contrary to the policy of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, since the Federal Trade Commission did not find that the combination fixed or regulated prices, parcelled out or limited production, or brought about a deterioration in quality. But action falling into these three categories does not exhaust the types of conduct banned by the Sherman and Clayton Acts."

More direct was the pronouncement of the Court in United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, l.c. 154-5:

> "A combination formed for the purpose of controlling the market price of a commodity and possessing the power to make its control effective raises such danger of evil consequences which the Sherman Act was intended to prevent, that it falls within the direct condemnation of the statute and can not be removed by collateral considerations urged in justification of the restraint. United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U. S. 392.
>
> "While the Act has been interpreted as forbidding only unreasonable restraints of trade and while this concept is of value in many situations where the nature of the restraint is such that the application of the statute is doubtful, the concept does not compel the conclusion that there are no restraints which ipso facto come within the condemnation of the Act."

The consequences of such combinations, at which the law is leveled, is stated in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, l.c. 458:

> "Agreements for price maintenance of articles moving in interstate commerce are, without more, unreasonable restraints within the meaning of the Sherman Act because they eliminate competition, United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U. S. 392, and agreements which create potential power for such price maintenance exhibited by its actual exertion for that purpose are in themselves unlawful restraints within the meaning of the Sherman Act, which is not only a prohibition against the infliction of a particular type of public injury but a 'limitation of rights which may be pushed to evil consequences and therefore restrained.'" (Emphasis added)

We pause to observe in the last ruling the words "potential power" for price maintenance. The agreement need not in fact accomplish that result. Note this language: "a limitation of rights which may be pushed to evil consequences". On the same subject the Court said in Local 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293, l.c. 297:

> "The control of the handling, the sales and the prices at the place of origin before the interstate journey begins or in the State of destination where the interstate movement ends may operate directly to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce."

In line with the lastest authorities, cited above, which it is claimed by some give the Sherman Act a more liberal interpretation than older cases, will be found Coronado Co. v. U. M. Workers, 268 U. S. 295, 1.c. 310, where the Court said:

> "The mere reduction in the supply of an article to be shipped in interstate commerce by the illegal or tortious prevention of its manufacture or production is ordinarily an indirect and remote obstruction to that commerce. But when the intent of those unlawfully preventing the manufacture or production is shown to be to restrain or control the supply entering and moving in interstate commerce, or the price of it in interstate markets, their action is a direct violation of the Anti-Trust Act."

The authorities on this proposition are reviewed in United States v. Food and Grocery Bureau of So. Cal., 43 Fed. Supp. 974, 1.c. 977-8, and there will be found a summary of the law in an opinion by Judge Yankwich:

> "In assaying price-fixing agreements, the test is not so much whether the effect is felt after the movement of the goods has reached the end of the interstate journey. The inquiry seeks the effect upon prices in the market. And if this effect be shown, it matters not that the movement has come to a halt within the state. The teaching of the most recent cases, to which I have just referred, and which I also discussed in the opinion on the motions to dismiss and to strike, is too clear to absolve price-fixing agreements solely because their effect may not be felt until local sales are made, in retail trade, at the end of the journey. To interpret them in this manner is not to destroy whatever distinction may exist between interstate and local activities. It is merely to recognize that the Supreme Court, realizing the inter-relation between local and interstate commerce, has declined to recognize a break in the continuity of movement of articles originating in interstate commerce, and has asserted the controlling power of the anti-trust law over the entire process. And so, when the court said specifically that control of prices 'in the state of destination where the interstate movement ends' (Local 167 v. United States, 1934, 291 U. S. 293, 297, 54 S. Ct. 396, 398, 78 L. Ed. 804) may come under the interdict of the anti-trust laws, we cannot assume that it was not aware of the full implication of the words.
>
> "The optative mood in the language of the court does not mean that in price-fixing other elements of restraint must be shown. If the language had that meaning, the teaching of the later case—that price-fixing alone is a violation—gives the contrary answer."

The indictment in this case states the defendants engaged in the conspiracy "to fix uniform and non-competitive retail and wholesale prices for fluid milk sold"; "[corporate] defendants * * sell and distribute approximately 63 per cent of the fluid milk consumed in the St. Louis area"; "the * * conspiracy has consisted of a continuing agreement and concert of action * * the * * terms of which have been that * * corporate defendants would charge uniform and non-competitive retail and wholesale prices for fluid milk"; "the corporate defendants have regularly * * charged uniform and non-competitive retail and wholesale prices in their sale of fluid milk"; "the conspiracy * * has had the effect, as intended by the defendants, of increasing, stabilizing, and otherwise controlling and fixing prices to consumers and other purchasers of fluid milk sold by the corporate defendants". We conclude the indictment states a violation of the Sherman Act, stressing those parts quoted together with the other allegations of the charge, provided it also pleads interstate commerce.

The indictment having charged a conspiracy, the substance, purpose and effect of which is the stabilizing and fixing of prices, we are unable to agree with the defendants that the pleading must go further and state "factual allegations * * sufficient to show a direct and substantial impact upon interstate commerce such as to operate as a restraint thereupon". The control of prices "where the interstate movement ends may operate directly to restrain * * interstate commerce". (Local 167 v. United States, supra.) The agreement for price maintenance "without more" is an unreasonable restraint under the Sherman Act. (See Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, supra.) Other elements of restraint need not be charged or proven. Price-fixing alone is a violation. (See United States v. Food and Grocery Bureau, et al., supra.)

II.

On the question of interstate commerce raised by defendants' motions we direct attention to the charge that as to the milk originating in Illinois constituting over one-half of the milk sales of the corporate defendants, that while this milk is produced in Illinois the corporate defendants purchase the milk from the producers in Illinois and therafter retain exclusive custody and control of the product until it reaches either the retail consumer or wholesaler in Missouri. Defendants, to free themselves from the interstate character stamped on the transaction by the parts of the charge noted, strenuously argue that the corporate defendants "warehouse" the milk in St. Louis, that it is mingled with milk produced in Missouri, and that its form is changed by Pasteurization. How long milk must be held by the corporate defendants in their St. Louis plants to subject it to classification as being warehoused, we are not informed. The argument is not germane because we are passing on the allegations of the Government's pleading and it states, "there is a continuous flow of fluid milk from producers in the State of Illinois" and Missouri to defendants' customers, that "milk by its nature is perishable" and "must reach the consumer within a short time after production". By authority of discovered adjudications and having regard for the evident policy expressed in the Sherman Act, as declared in the ruling of our highest Courts, we are of the opinion the indictment charges a conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce.

There are cases holding, when the commodities come to rest within the state, if their origin is in another state, that interstate commerce ends. Schechter Corp. v. United States (295 U. S. 495) is relied on by defendants in that respect. It involved not a case under the Sherman Act, but validity of the N. R. A. legislation. This rule has had liberal application to sustain state laws concerning transportation and tax matters. But the same construction has not been given to cases arising under the Sherman Act. In Live Poultry Dealers' Protective Ass'n v. United States, 4 F. 2d 840, 1.c. 842, Judge Hand, in passing on a case involving the same issue defendants here raise, held:

> "However, the power of a state to tax goods (so it be without discrimination), which have been brought from other states, is by no means the measure of the powers of Congress over interstate commerce. The point is neatly illustrated in the cases, among others, which concern the regulation of prices for natural gas. Thus in Missouri v. Kansas Gas Co., 265 U. S. 298, 44 S. Ct. 544, 68 L. Ed. 1027, where the gas was delivered to wholesalers, the state might not act at all, while, when it is delivered direct to the consumers, it may, until Congress interfere. Pennsylvania Gas Co. v. Public Service Com., 252 U. S. 23, 40 S. Ct. 279, 64 L. Ed. 434. Perhaps, in the light of those cases, sales like those at bar are within the exclusive power of Congress in any event. But we need not go so far; by the Sherman Act (Comp. St. §§ 8820-8823, 8827-8830) Congress has exercised its fullest power over interstate commerce, and certainly such sales as these are within it."

The case just referred to was a proceeding under the Sherman Act. It involved a price-fixing agreement on live poultry after it arrived in New York. Speaking directly to the subject of interstate commerce the Court said:

> "The defendants raise two chief objections: First, that the commerce is not interstate; and, second, that the agreement is not an unreasonable restraint of trade. As to the first, it should be noticed that the poultry reaches Washinton Market after a pause at Hoboken only sufficient to put it into crates. It is, moreover, in proof that the sales take place on the same day as the poultry arrives in New York. We ignore such sales as take place in Hoboken, since they add no new feature to the case. So far as touches the point of interstate commerce, such a situation is precisely within Swift & Co. v. U. S., 196 U. S. 375, 25 S. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518, and Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495, 42 S. Ct. 397, 66 L. Ed. 735, 23 A. L. R. 229, both of which concerned the shipment of live stock."

A case more directly in point is United States v. Sheffield Farms Co., 43 F. Supp. 1. The case was before the Court by attack on the Government's pleading by defendants. The defendants in the Sheffield Farms case, as here,

> "contend that the conspiracy alleged operated solely with respect to the prices charged for milk at wholesale in the City of New York after the milk had come to rest in city plants and after any milk which originated outside the state was intermingled with local milk, pasteurized and packaged. However, the milk could not have been sold in New York City if it had not been pasteurized because of a local ordinance, and the packaging is but a necessary incident to its distribution."

The Court held:

> "The temporary stoppage of commerce on its way to the ultimate consumer does not remove the flow from the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. United States v. General Motors, 7 Cir., 121 F. 2d 376, certiorari denied October 13, 1941, 62 S. Ct. 105, 86 L. Ed. —; Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U. S. 495, 544, 55 S. Ct. 837, 79 L. Ed. 1570, 97 A. L. R. 947; Local 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293, 54 S. Ct. 396, 78 L. Ed. 804; N. L. R. B. V. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U. S. 1, 57 S. Ct. 615, 81 L. Ed. 893, 108 A. L. R. 1352. Therefore the stoppage of the milk, coming across state lines, for the purpose of pasteurization and packaging or bottling, did not change its interstate character. Local 167 v. United States, supra."

In Lake Valley Farm Products v. Milk Wagon Drivers' Union, 108 F. 2d 436, a like ruling was made. Similarity of facts to the present case is evident.

> "The Farm Products Company purchases its daily requirements of fluid milk from the plaintiff Cooperative, which receives its product from farmers in Wisconsin, who deliver their milk to the plant of the Cooperative where it is loaded on motor trucks and transported over the public highways to the Farm Products Company in Chicago, which pasteurizes and bottles the milk, after which it is sold by the Farm Products Company to various persons referred to as 'vendors,' who severally own and operate their own automobile truck equipment. They in turn, after purchasing the milk and cream from the pasteurizing plant, distribute it to various stores which in turn sell it to the general public on a cash and carry plan."

Similarity in basis for claims of defendants is also apparent. The Court declared:

> "Under the facts found, it is clear that there is an actual flow of milk in interstate commerce from the farm-receiving station in Wisconsin, through the plaintiff dairy into the retail cut-rate stores in Chicago."

The case involved a labor dispute and was reversed by the Supreme Court (311 U. S. 91) because the lower court was without jurisdiction under the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

To argue that mere stoppage for bottling (and Pasteurization) and commingling in St. Louis destroyed the interstate character of the movement is to overlook the position occupied by the corporate defendants with regard to the product originating in Illinois. From the time of making purchase in Illinois, until it passed out of their hands, either by retail or wholesale disposal, the defendants controlled the product. Under the charge they purchased the milk with knowledge of the conspiracy and how the milk would be handled by them to effect the conspiracy. Thereafter the milk never left the possession and control of the corporate defendants, moving across the State line into and out of their St. Louis plant and into the consumer's hands in case of retail sale, at all times impressed with the object of the same conspiracy, by the same parties from origin in Illinois to final destination in Missouri. These facts, in our opinion, bring this case, as pled, more conclusively within the ban of the Sherman Act than some of the cases relied on by the Government. Take the case of United States v. Food and Grocery Bureau of So. Cal., 43 F. Supp. 966, 1.c. 968, where the conspiracy was to fix prices of "products, such as milk, baking powder, cereals, sugar and the like, originating in interstate commerce." Ownership in this case must have changed hands more than once after the products came into the State of California. It is fair to conclude the products became a part of the conspiracy in some cases after they arrived in the State as the con spiracy was "started as an effort on the part of persons engaged in the food and grocery business". The conspiracy was to fix the retail price—after original boxes had been broken. The Court held the conspiracy was to restrain interstate commerce and was under the interdict of the Sherman Act. In affirming the lower court the Court of Appeals ruled (139 F. 2d 973, 1.c. 978):

> "The Supreme Court in Local No. 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293, 297, 54 S. Ct. 396, 398, 78 L. Ed. 804, states that the control of prices 'in the state of destination where the interstate movement ends may, operate directly to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce'."

We find in Greater New York Live Poultry C. of C. v. United States, 47 F. 2d 156, 1.c. 158, a comment on intent of shippers. as bearing on the question as to when shipments leave interstate commerce. There the Court said:

"It was clearly contemplated by the shippers that the poultry should pass through the receivers to the marketmen, for the shippers paid the charges for unloading, cooping and cartage to West Washington Market, and the price paid the shippers depended on market price made by resale to the marketmen. While the receivers cannot on this record be held to be mere agents of the shippers, as in Live Poultry Dealers' Protective Ass'n v. United States, 4 F. (2d) 480 (C. C. A. 2), their intervention as purchasers does not necessarily cause interstate shipment of the poultry to end on delivery to them."

And in the present case, when the corporate defendants purchased the milk in Illinois, under the facts pled in the indictment, they contemplated and intended every step the milk would take until delivery, with ultimate intent it should be governed in its sale in Missouri by the terms of the conspiracy. Under these circumstances we find no basis for terminating the interstate character of the shipment, at any point on the journey from producer to consumer, under a charge it was a "continuous journey", together with the other allegations of the indictment.

Under this rationale we think the ruling in Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291, 1.c. 309, sustains our position. We quote:

"The film contracts were between residents of different States and contemplated the leasing by one to the other of a commodity manufactured in one State and transported and to be transported to and used in another. The business of the distributors of which the arrangement with the exhibitor here was an instance, was clearly interstate. It consisted of manufacturing the commodity in one State, finding customers for it in other States, making contracts of lease with them, and transporting the commodity leased from the State of manufacture into the States of the lessees. If the commodity were consigned directly to the lessees, the interstate character of the commerce throughout would not be disputed. Does the circumstance that in the course of the process the commodity is consigned to a local agency of the distributors, to be by that agency held until delivery to the lessee in the same State, put an end to the interstate character of the transaction and transform it into one purely intrastate? We think not. The intermediate delivery to the agency did not end and was not intended to end the movement of the commodity. It was merely halted as a convenient step in the process of getting it to its final destination. The general rule is that where transportation has acquired an interstate character 'it continues at least until the load reaches the point where the parties originally intended that the movement should finally end.'" (Emphasis added)

If we are correct in our conclusion that the fluid milk at the time it was purchased in Illinois by the corporate defendants was impressed with the unlawful agreement and conspiracy, and thereafter travelled under such defendants' control and ownership to retail consumer and wholesaler in Missouri in furtherance of the conspiracy, then the Frankfort Distilleries case (324 U. S. 293; 1944) is applicable. This was a case under the Sherman Act, which reached the Supreme Court on a question of sufficiency of the Government's pleadings. The charge of price fixing as the object of the conspiracy was disposed of in the following language:

"The effect, and if it were material, the purpose of the combination charged, was to fix prices at an artificial level. Such combinations, affecting commerce among the states, tend to eliminate competition, and violate the Sherman Act per se."

A concurring opinion by Mr. Justice Frankfurter not only indicates the trend in construction given to the Sherman Act by that Court, to which we have referred, but announced a conclusion on an issue like that now before this Court which we believe is applicable:

"The decision of the court below is not without support in what has been said in the past in holding that, apart from the Twenty-first Amendment, this was a restraint local in its nature and therefore outside the scope of the Sherman Law. But price-fixing is such an immediate restraint upon trade that I do not think that the reach of the consequences of such an obvious restraint should be determined by drawing too nice lines as a matter of pleading. The case is before us, in effect, on demurrer to the indictment and judged abstractly, as a matter of pleading, I cannot say that the indictment was demurrable."

We are not unaware of the apparent conflict in our conclusion with that of the District Court for the Southern District of Ohio in United States v. French Bauer, 48 F. Supp. 260. We have the greatest respect for opinions of District Courts but nevertheless we are not bound to follow them if we are not in agreement. From the meager facts recited in the opinion we are unable to determine the full basis of the ruling on one point in particular which we consider important in the present case. That is, control of the product from purchase in one State until delivery in another. The French Bauer opinion apparently disagrees with the rule, as we understand it, that price-fixing is per se a violation of the Sherman Act.

As to the Schechter case, relied on by defendants, we do not think it controlling in support of their position, and the Appellate Court (Food and Grocery Bureau of So. Cal. v. United States, supra) and the Supreme Court (United States v. Wrightwood Dairy Co., supra) have apparently held likewise. It was not a case under the Sherman Act. It involved hours and wages of employees—not price paid for merchandise. That this distinction is vital to defendants' position is indicated by the ruling of the same Court in United States v. Wrightwood Dairy Co., 315 U. S. 110, l.c. 123) where the Court said:

> "In the Schechter case the Court was concerned only with the alleged infringements of the 'Code of Fair Competition' for the live poultry industry of the New York City metropolitan area, which had been adopted under the provisions of § 3 of the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933, 48 Stat. 195, 196. The violations of the code charged were that wholesale distributors who had purchased poultry in New York, most of which came from without the state, and who were engaged in slaughtering and reselling to retailers, had failed to maintain for their employees wages and hours prescribed by the code, and had failed to abandon 'selective selling' to their customers in New York which the code had prohibited.
>
> "The Court's opinion pointed out that the defendants were not charged with injury to interstate commerce or interference with persons engaged in that commerce, and that the acts charged had no different relation to or effect upon interstate commerce than like acts in any other local business which handles commodities brought into the state. Schechter Corp. v. United States, supra, 545-6. It characterized their effect upon interstate commerce as 'indirect', and distinguished them from those acts and tranactions intrastate which, because they 'directly affect' interstate commerce, are within the Congressional regulatory power. In explanation of this distinction and as examples of direct effects which are within the commerce power it referred to the 'fixing of rates for intrastate transportation which unjustly discriminate against interstate commerce,' citing the Shreveport case, supra, and referred to intrastate restraints upon competition injuriously affecting interstate commerce condemned by the Sherman Act, citing Local 167 v. United States, supra, and other cases." (Emphasis added.)

We think the very language of the Schechter opinion demonstrates how that case differs from this case. The Court said in the Schechter opinion (at p. 542):

> "But the code provisions, as here applied, do not concern the transportation of the poultry from other States to New York, or the transactions of the commission men or others to whom it is consigned, or the sales made by such consignees to defendants. * * *
>
> "(p. 543) The undisputed facts thus afford no warrant for the argument that the poultry handled by defendants at their slaughterhouse markets was in a 'current' or 'flow' of interstate commerce and was thus subject to congressional regulation."

As we have stated, in this case under the pleading of the Government, after defendants formed the conspiracy they journeyed regularly into Illinois and purchased milk to use in effecting the conspiracy. The indictment states there was a "continuous" flow of milk from producers in Illinois to consumers in Missouri. It may well be said the conspirators used the ultimate means of sales in Missouri, which in and of themselves were intrastate activities, to attain the end of fixing prices on milk they had obtained in Illinois. Cases falling under this head were excepted from the ruling in the Schechter case (l.c. 544):

> "And combinations and conspiracies to restrain interstate commerce, or to monopolize any part of it, are none the less within the reach of the Anti-Trust Act because the conspirators seek to attain their end by means of intrastate activities."

Finally we direct attention to the case of Mandeville Island Farms, Inc., et al. v. American Crystal Sugar Company, — U. S. — (May 10, 1948). This is a case under the Sherman Act. The issue on the pleading was stated thus:

"Broadly petitioners regard the entire sequence of growing the beets, refining them into sugar and distributing it, under the arrangements set forth, as a chain of events so integrated and taking place in interstate commerce or in such close and intimate connection with it that, for purposes of applying the Sherman Act, the complete sequence is an entirety and no part of it can be segregated from the remainder so as to put it beyond the statute's grasp.

"Respondent, on the contrary, broadly severs the phase or phases of growing and selling beets from the later ones of refining them and of marketing the sugar. The initial growing process together with sale of the beets, and it would seem also the intermediate stage of refining, are taken to be "purely local," since all occurred entirely within California; therefore were wholly intrastate events; and consequently were beyond the Sherman Act's reach."

While the pleading went further than the indictment in the present case and charged other effects on interstate commerce than price fixing alone, we cite the case principally as bearing on defendants' claim that the bottling, commingling and Pasteurization changed the form of the product and arrested interstate commerce. If manufacture, in and of itself, of beets into sugar cannot stop the interstate flow of goods, from which sugar is processed, then it would seem to follow that bottling, Pasteurization and commingling of milk would not. The holding of the Court on this point is:

"The broad form of respondent's argument cannot be accepted. It is a reversion to conceptions formerly held but no longer effective to restrict either Congress' power, Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U. S. 111, or the scope of the Sherman Act's coverage. The artificial and mechanical separation of 'production' and 'manufacturing' from 'commerce,' without regard to their economic continuity, the effects of the former two upon the latter, and the varying methods by which the several processes are organized, related and carried on in different industries or indeed within a single industry, no longer suffices to put either production or manufacturing and refining processes beyond reach of Congress' authority or of the statute."

Order

Motions of defendants, and each of them, to dismiss the indictment are overruled.

[¶ 62,312] Harry Ferguson and Harry Ferguson, Inc. v. Ford Motor Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil No. 44-482. September 23, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Motion to Impound Documents—Applicability of Remedy—Admissibility of Documents Discretionary.—A motion by plaintiffs to impound documents alleged to have been improperly obtained by defendants in a suit charging patent infringement, antitrust violations, and unfair competitive practices is denied. It is held that any harm done by disclosure of information contained in the documents cannot be undone by impounding them, that summary relief against the competitive use of information in the possession of the defendant must be litigated upon a motion for an interlocutory injunction, not upon a motion to impound, and that use of the documents for purposes of examination and cross-examination or evidence rests within the discretion of the court in each individual instance.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640, and prior opinion reported at ¶ 62,252.

RIFKIND, D. J.: Plaintiffs have moved for an order directing: (a) that the defendants and their counsel file with this court, in a sealed envelope, all copies in their possession, or under their control, of specified confidential documents which they have improperly obtained from one William J. Sands, a witness being examined before trial; and (b) that said documents be and remain sealed and be opened only on further order of this court; and (c) that pending further order of this court defendants, their counsel, employees, agents and representatives make no further use of information acquired from said documents.

A brief statement of the facts is necessary in order to place this motion in its proper context. On January 8, 1948, plaintiffs filed a complaint wherein they alleged that the defendant had infringed their patents, had violated the antitrust laws and had engaged in unfair competitive practices, all to the damage of the plaintiff. In due course issue was joined and the pre-trial examinations began.

In June of 1948, the plaintiffs discovered, or at least so it is alleged, that the defendant had induced one Sands, an employee of the plaintiffs, to assist the defendants in the preparation of their defense and, in that connection, to surrender to the defendants a large number of confidential documents, property of the plaintiffs and in the possession of the witness as a result of his confidential relationship to his employer. These documents were produced during the examination of Sands and were marked for identification. It is with respect to seventy of the documents, so produced, that the present motion is addressed.

The theory of the plaintiffs' motion is as follows: Had the defendants, by recourse to the discovery rules, made application for the production by the plaintiffs of the documents, plaintiffs would have been in a position to ask for the protective devices contemplated by Rule 30(b) with respect to confidential matters and secret processes. Plaintiffs contend that they should not be in any worse position because defendants had improperly secured access to these documents. Therefore, they urge the court to regard these documents as if constructively still in the possession of the plaintiffs and to make provision for the protection of such secrets as they contain. It is important, however, to note that upon the argument plaintiffs' attorney expressly disavowed any desire or intention to suppress the documents insofar as they affected the litigation and stated that he desired merely to protect plaintiffs against the competition to which they would be unjustly subjected by reason of business, rather than litigation, use of the material thus made available to defendants by the faithless employee.

It must be recognized that the plaintiffs' view is founded, necessarily, upon a fiction. Whether acquired by the defendants rightfully or wrongfully, the reality is that they have had possession of and access to these papers for many, many months. Insofar as the disclosure in itself is harmful to plaintiffs, the harm has already been inflicted. Insofar as the disclosure has business consequences, the remedy which may be available to the plaintiffs consists of a claim for damages or the restraint of further use. It can no longer rest in the realm of non-disclosure. Since the protective devices of 30(b) to which plaintiffs have reference concern the degree of disclosure it is to a large extent, although not wholly, inapplicable to the proceeding.

If we examine now the purpose of the plaintiffs in making this motion as avowed by their attorney, it becomes clear that what they are seeking is summary relief against the competitive use of information in the possession of the defendant. It may be that they are entitled to such summary relief but, if it is available, the application therefor would have to be presented and litigated upon a motion for an interlocutory injunction. Absent facts which would justify interlocutory relief, the remedy would be by action: either by independent action or by supplemental complaint in the pending action. Either procedure would afford the parties and the court a direct opportunity for passing upon the merits of the claim. They should not be passed upon in the oblique manner in which they are presented upon a motion to impound.

The defendants argue that whatever may be the avowed purpose of the plaintiffs in making this motion, its inevitable consequence would be that they would be deprived of the opportunity to use the papers in the examination and cross-examination of the witness Sands and of the plaintiffs. They contend that these papers contain evidence; that whether they were lawfully or unlawfully obtained is immaterial to the issue of the admissibility of such evidence. VIII Wigmore, 3rd ed. § 2183

Although I have not inspected the papers, the affidavits indicate that it may well be that they contain "secrets" in three different senses of that word. One, they may contain admissions in the form of statements confidentially made by plaintiffs to witness Sands, such as, for instance, an admission that plaintiff Ferguson was in fact not the inventor of an invention covered by a patent in issue, or that the damages which plaintiffs attribute in the complaint to the violation of the anti-trust laws was, in fact, attributed by the plaintiffs, before suit was commenced, to some other cause. These are matters confidential in the eyes of business men. They are not confidential in the eyes of the law in the sense of being inadmissible in evidence. Two, there may be items which are in the legal sense privileged, such as communications between the plaintiffs and their attorneys. And, three, there may be items which the law denominates trade secrets, such as a secret process for the manufacture of an article marketed by plaintiffs.

How to deal with material of the third category always presents a problem. The nature of that problem was analyzed in Dupont Powder Co. v. Masland, 1917, 244 U. S. 100, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Holmes. The brevity of that opinion renders superfluous any attempt to paraphrase it; but this much of it needs to be noted, that the judge's discretion is very wide in the determination whether, to whom, and under what precautions the revelation should be made.

In the light of these considerations it seems to me that (1) nothing this court can now do would undo the disclosure already made; (2) business abuse of the disclosure, if any has occurred or should occur, is beyond the scope of the relief available on the pending motion; (3) use of the papers for purposes of examination, cross-examination, refreshment of memory or introduction into evidence can best be regulated by consideration of the factors bearing upon such use in each individual instance, separately, in the precise context in which such use is proposed.

The motion is, therefore, denied.

[¶ 62,313] United States of America v. Standard Education Society, a corporation, Standard Encyclopedia Corporation, H. M. Stanford, individually and as President and Director of Standard Education Society and as President, Director and Incorporator of Standard Encyclopedia Corporation, W. H. Ward, individually and as Secretary and Director and Incorporator of Standard Encyclopedia Corporation, and A. J. Greener, individually and as Incorporator of Standard Encyclopedia Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 4521. September 28, 1948.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Res Judicata Defense.—A civil penalty proceeding for violation during 1940 and 1941 of a modified cease and desist order, prohibiting misrepresentation in the sale of encyclopedias or reference books and so-called extension service, is not res judicata in view of a decree denying application for enforcement of the cease and desist order since there was no showing of any violation prior to March 21, 1938. The defense of res judicata is applicable only where the underlying issue in two suits is the same, and the adjudication of the issue in the first suit is determinative of the same issues in the second suit.

See the Federal Trade Commission Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 6125.336, 6125.611, 6601.70, 6610.42, 6610.61, 6620.190, 6660.85.

Question of Immunity Under Section 9 of Act Justified.—In a civil penalty proceeding for violation of a modified cease and desist order prohibiting misrepresentation in the sale of encyclopedias or reference books and so-called extension service, defendants, who testified extensively before the Commission in obedience to a subpoena issued by the Commission while acting as special master, and testimony was not limited to corporate records, have the right to raise the question of immunity under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The subpoena involved in this proceeding made no designation that the Commission was sitting as special master. It is in all respects the subpoena of the Commission.

See Federal Trade Commission Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 6129.28.

Civil penalty proceeding dismissed in FTC Dkt. 1574.

Attorney for plaintiff: Otto Kerner, Jr.

Attorneys for defendant: Henry Ward Beer and Anderson & Roche.

Memorandum

[Nature of Proceeding]

LABUY, J.: The complaint herein is a civil penalty proceeding for past violations in 1940 and 1941 of a modified cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission entered March 28, 1940 and is brought pursuant to Section 45(1) of the Wheeler-Lea Act (15 U. S. C. A.).

[Prior Court Proceedings]

The chain of events concerning the defendants began on December 24, 1931 when, after hearings before the Federal Trade Commission regarding violations with respect to representations to customers, the Federal Trade Commission issued a cease and desist order. On January 20, 1936 the Federal Trade Commission petitioned the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit for an enforcement of said order. On December 21, 1936 paragraphs 1, 3 and 8 of said order were reversed and on November 8, 1937 the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the Circuit Court of Appeals and sent the matter back for proceedings in accord with its opinion. On March 21, 1938 the Wheeler-Lea Act was passed giving the United States the concurrent remedy of a suit for civil penalties for violations of Federal Trade Commission orders. On May 20, 1938 the Circuit Court of Appeals entered a decree "resettling" the cease and desist order of December 24, 1931 and designated the Commission a special master to hear and determine whether violations of the 1931 order were existent. On March 28, 1940 the Federal Trade Commission issued the present modified order to cease and desist in reliance upon the provisions of Section 5(i) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended by the Wheeler-Lea-Act. This modified order is in all respects identical to the original order of December 24, 1931. On September 18, 1941 the Federal Trade Commission petitioned the Circuit Court of Appeals to be released from reporting as to whether defendants had complied with the 1931 order since the Wheeler-Lea Act now provided that the Attorney General could bring a civil suit for penalty. This petition was denied on October 20, 1941 on the ground that the matter was in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission.

On July 24, 1942 the present penalty complaint was filed. On December 10, 1942 the Commission was required by the Circuit Court of Appeals to proceed with the taking of proof on or before February 1, 1943 under penalty of revocation of the order of May 20, 1938 appointing it as special master. On October 20, 1943 Judge Sullivan overruled the defendant's motion to dismiss the present civil penalty suit brought July 24, 1942 and continued the proceeding until such time as the Commission makes its report to the Circuit Court of Appeals. As special master the Commission submitted its report to the Circuit Court of Appeals on July 27, 1944. This report disclosed, with the exception of Stanford, that violations of paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 6 of the May 20, 1938 decree had occurred, but that the defendants had committed no violations prior to March 21, 1938.

On January 29, 1945 the Commission petitioned the Circuit Court of Appeals to deny its 1936 application for enforcement of its cease and desist order and on February 13, 1945 an order was entered discharging the Commission as special master and denying the application for enforcement since there was no showing of any violation prior to March 21, 1938.

[Defendants' Grounds for Dismissal Listed]

The defendants' motion to dismiss the remaining counts, Counts 1 to 28, 40, of this complaint is based on three principal grounds: (1) the present suit is res judicata in view of the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals on February 13, 1945; (2) the modified cease and desist order entered March 28, 1940 is null and void; and (3) the individual defendants are immune from being subjected to this penalty suit by virtue of Section 49 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[Nullity Contention Disregarded]

With respect to defendants' contention on the nullity of the modified cease and desist order of March 28, 1940 this court is not concerned since the question has been determined by the ruling of Judge Sullivan on October 20, 1943 wherein it was held that said order was authorized by Section 5(i) as amended by Section 3 of the Wheeler-Lea Act.

[Res Judicata Discussed]

The master's report covers defendants activities during the years 1939, 1940 and 1941. No action was requested of the Circuit Court of Appeals regarding approval or disapproval of this report or for a consideration on its merits. In support of its contention of res judicata defendants call attention to the opinion of Judge Sullivan wherein it is stated:

"The question to be decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals is whether or not the defendants here have complied with the provisions of the cease and desist order; the question before the court in the instant case is whether or not defendants have violated the same cease and desist order of the Commission. Hearings are now being carried on by the Commission in conformity with the order of the Circuit Court of Appeals. Nothing will have been gained by also forcing defendants into the position of furnishing the same lengthy and expensive evidence in the penalty case."

The defense of res judicata is applicable where

"the underlying issue in two suits is the same, the adjudication of the issues in the first suit is determinative of the same issues in the second suit. The rule is "That a right, question or fact distinctly put in issue and directly determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, as a ground of recovery, cannot be disputed in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their privies; and, even if the second suit is for a different cause of action, the right, question, or fact once so determined must, as between the same parties or their privies be taken as conclusively established so long as the judgment in the first suit remains unmodified." Lee v. F. T. C., (C. C. A. 8, 1940) 113 F. (2d) 583.

[Res Judicata Inapplicable]

From the present state of the pleadings and with particular reference to the order of the Circuit Court of Appeals denying application for enforcement of the Federal Trade Commission order, there is nothing to indicate determination of the issue presented by the present complaint. The order of the Circuit Court of Appeals held no violations occurred prior to March 21, 1938; the violations complained of in the present complaint present violations for the years 1940 and 1941.

[Question of Immunity Discussed]

The defense of immunity appears in Section 49 of the Trade Commission Act (15 U. S. C. A.) reading:

"* * * No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence before the commission or in obedience to the subpoena of the commission on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction or thing concerning which he may testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the commission in obedience to a subpoena issued by it: * * *"

[Question of Immunity Justified]

Suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred by the commission of offenses against the law are quasi-criminal in nature and are within the realm of criminal proceedings for all the purposes of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution and of that portion of the Fifth Amendment which declares that no person, shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616 (634). The Government contends that since the Federal Trade Commission was acting as a special master this immunity proviso cannot apply and further if it did apply no testimony or evidence was adduced relating to defendants outside of the corporate records. But this section grants immunity from prosecution where testimony is given or evidence produced before the commission in obedience to a subpoena issued by it. The subpoenas, which are exhibits herein, make no designation that the Federal Trade Commission is sitting as special master. It is in all respects the subpoena of the commission and the court believes the defendants have the right to raise the question of immunity in this action. It is true the section does not apply to corporate officers so far as they are required to produce and testify concerning books and records of the corporation whether made by them as an officer or by another authorized to do so. The transcript of the record in the Federal Trade Commission acting as special master has also been submitted by defendants for the purpose of their motion. From the transcript it appears that the defendants seeking immunity testified extensively and that such testimony was not limited to corporate records.

[Presentation of Order]

Counsel should present an order not inconsistent herewith within twenty (20) days from date hereof.

[¶ 62,314] United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Association.

In the United States Supreme Court. No. 89. October 11, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Conspiracy to Restrain Trade—Sufficiency of Allegations—Motions to Transfer.—An indictment charging a conspiracy to fix prices and restrain trade in milk was dismissed by the District Court for failure to set forth sufficient facts to constitute a conspiracy in violation of Section 3 of the Sherman Act. A per curiam order grants motions to transfer and remands the case to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1630.225, and prior opinion reported at ¶ 62,264.

[Order]

Per curiam: The motions to transfer are granted and the case is remanded to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit pursuant to Title 18, United States Code, 3731. United States v. Swift & Co., 318 U. S. 442; United States v. Wayne Pump Co., 317 U. S. 200.

[¶ 62,315] Louis Paradise, d. b. a. Paradise Distributing Company v. Charles J. Goldman, d. b. a. C. J. Goldman Liquor Shop.

In the Wisconsin Circuit Court for Milwaukee County. No. 213188. Filed May 21, 1948.

Wisconsin Fair Trade Act

Enforcement of Minimum Resale Prices—Foreign Manufacturer—Not Licensed to Do Business in Wisconsin.—An out-of-state manufacturer of liquor, who is not licensed to do business in Wisconsin, may not enjoin the sale of his product at a price less than that established pursuant to fair trade contracts. The rights of plaintiff distributor are no greater than those of the manufacturer of the commodity. Defendant retailer is entitled to judgment dismissing the complaint.

See the Wisconsin Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8944, and Commentary on Resale Price Maintenance, ¶ 7361.

For plaintiff: Gold and & McCann, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

For defendant: Fred Wright, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

DECISION

[Nature of Action]

BRAUN, A. E., Circuit Judge: This is an action, under the provisions of Sec. 133.25 of the statutes (Fair Trade Act) to enjoin the defendant from selling certain brands of liquor below prices stipulated by the plaintiff as a distributor. Plaintiff is a distributor of liquor products made by Gooderham & Worts, Ltd., a foreign corporation and hereinafter referred to as G. & W.

Prior to January 22nd, 1941, G. & W. was licensed to do business in Wisconsin but on that date it surrendered its license and since that time it has not been licensed to do business in this state.

[Fair Trade Contracts]

G. & W. is a producer of liquors which are marketed under various brands and labels. Under the provisions of Sec. 133.25 G. & W. made a number of contracts in the spring of 1947 to provide for the fair trading of its products. Under the terms of the contracts G. & W. stipulated the prices at which certain brands of whiskey and gin might be sold at retail. No competent evidence was presented showing that the defendant had knowledge of such price lists. In September 1947 G. & W. issued another list of prices at which its products might be sold at retail and also as to this list the evidence failed to show that notice or knowledge of such price list can be imputed to the defendant.

In December, 1947, G. & W. issued still another list of minimum prices that might be charged for its products by retailers. Prior to that time G. & W. sent notices by mail to licensed liquor dealers in Wisconsin notifying them of its minimum prices. The defendant, Goldman, denied that he ever received any of the notices sent by G. & W.

The evidence shows that on December 27th, 1947, a Mr. William H. Plouff, the state manager for G. & W. and his assistant, Carroll Prinz deposited in the post office at Milwaukee post-cards containing the minimum retail price list of G. & W. Products and addressed such cards to the defendant at his place of business. The cards then used were like Exhibit 5 which is a special post card authorized by the post-office department. Plouff testified that he addressed a card similar to Exhibit 5 and deposited it in the post-office but gave no testimony that he affixed the usual postage stamp on such card. Prinz admitted that he had no recollection of postage stamps having been placed on the cards addressed to the defendant by himself or Plouff. Exhibit 5 is a specimen of cards having printed on the space usually reserved for stamps a notation that the postage was paid under a permit. It is a matter of common knowledge and the court takes judicial notice of the fact that postal regulations authorize the use of post cards in this form provided they are used in large quantities and the postage is paid in advance. It is obvious that a single card or two like Exhibit 5 will not be delivered under postal regulations unless a proper postage stamp is first affixed thereto. The evidence therefore is insufficient to establish a basis for the presumption that the mail in question was actually delivered to the defendant. This is especially so in the light of the testimony given by the defendant and his assistant that they never received the cards which Plouff and Prinz claim they sent to the defendant. So in respect to this last price list it must be held that the defendant did not have notice of the G. & W. minimum fair trade price list.

[Defense Raised]

One of the defenses pleaded by the defendant to the claim that G. & W. had published a fair trade price list regulating the sale of its products at retail is that G. & W. is a foreign corporation; that it has not been licensed to do business in Wisconsin and that under Sec. 226.02 (9) neither G. & W. nor its assigns may enforce any contract made in Wisconsin or in respect to its property in this state.

Plaintiff's counsel denies the validity of this defense but has failed to cite any authorities holding that statutes like Sec. 226.02 (9) are unconstitutional.

Subsec. 133.25 (5) of the Fair Trade Act binds dealers who have information as to price lists stipulated by a producer under the act even though they do not sign contracts with the producers. Even though a retailer refuses to sign a contract for the purchase and sale of a commodity which is being fair traded, if he has notice of such fact and of the minimum prices that have been stipulated by the producer then if, with such notice and konwledge, he buys such commodity for the purpose of resale it must be held that the provisions of the minimum price list are incorporated in the contract of purchase and he is bound to comply with it. In other words he makes himself a party to the fair trade contract even though he does not sign it. From this it follows that if the commodity is being fair traded by a foreign corporation which is not licensed to do business in this state then a retailer may avail himself of the defense provided by Sec. 226.02 (9). It is therefore my conclusion that the defendant was not compelled to observe the minimum price list stipulated by G. & W. if he had notice of such minimum price list and if he did not have notice of such list he also cannot be held to have violated the Fair Trade Act.

The evidence also shows that in 1948 G. & W. arranged for three wholesale liquor dealers in Milwaukee to distribute and sell its products to retail dealers, namely: Capital Beverage Company, McKesson Liquor Company and the plaintiff, doing business under the name of Paradise Distributing Company.

It is also established that in October, 1947, the defendant bought 95 cases of John Collins gin and 50 cases of William Penn whiskey from the McKesson Liquor Company and that in December, 1947, he purchased 100 cases of William Penn whiskey from the Capitol Beverage Company. It further appears that between January 13th, 1948, and March 3rd, 1948, the defendant purchased large quantities of Mill Farm Bourbon whiskey, William Penn blended whiskey and John Collins gin from the Capitol Beverage Company and that the last deliveries under such purchases were made March 30th, 1948. All of these liquors are products of G. & W. and are included in the minimum price lists stipulated by such producer.

On March 4th, 1948, plaintiff sent to the defendant by registered mail a fair trade price list of the same products which G. & W. had attempted to fair trade and with prices identical to those mentioned in Exhibit 5 which was issued by G. & W.

Defendant admits that subsequent to receiving the price list which was issued by plaintiff he advertised in the Milwaukee newspapers that he offered to sell and did sell the brands of whiskey and gin at prices below the minimum prices stipulated by the plaintiff. These advertisments and sales precipitated the present litigation.

[Constitutionality]

Defendant claims the Wisconsin Fair Trade Act is unconstitutional because by subsection (8) of the act cooperative societies and associations not organized for profit are exempted from the provisions of the act and cites Weco Products Co. v. Reed Drug Co., 225 Wis., 474, as his authority. While it is true that the court in that case held subsec. (8) of the act unconstitutional, it nevertheless held that the act was severable and held the balance of the act valid. However, regardless of the validity of subsec. (8) the legislature by ch. 275, sec. 42 of the laws of 1943 repealed said subsection and now there can be no doubt about the validity of the act in its present form.

[Distributor Has No Greater Rights Than Manufacturer]

Another defense to the complaint which defendant relies on is that, because G. & W. as an unlicensed foreign corporation has no standing in court to protect the sales of its brands of liquor in this state, therefore plaintiff as a distributor of G. & W. products, has no rights respecting the protection of the brands of liquor produced by G. & W.

Sec. 133.25 exempts from charges of conspiracy or contracts in restraint of trade or commerce commodities produced by owners who by the use of trade-marks, brands and labels have built up a good will for themselves if such commodities are in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others.

All of the cases in which the validity of Fair Trade Acts have been considered recognized the fact that when a producer markets a commodity under a trade-mark, brand or label he thereby builds up a good will for such commodity; that such good will is a property right and it is this property right which is sought to be protected. These cases distinguish between the protection of the good-will of producers and the right to sell the product itself independent of the trade-mark, brand or label. It is uniformly held that the good-will which a producer establishes by the use of a trade-mark, brand or label is entitled to be protected against price cutting in the sale of such protected commodity, although the product itself is not protected if not sold under such trade-mark, brand or label. The cases supporting this theory may be found in the briefs filed by counsel for both parties and it does not seem necessary to enumerate them here.

Subsec. 133.25 (3) of the Fair Trade Act protects contracts fixing minimum prices that may be charged for commodities which are sold under a trade-mark or brand against the charge of a conspiracy in restraint of trade if such contracts are made by the owners of such trade-marks or brands. Subsec. (5) of the statute gives a cause of action to any person who may be damaged by the sale of such trade-marked or branded commodity against anyone who wilfully and knowingly advertises for sale or sells below the stipulated price. It is my interpretation of the Fair Trade Act that the contracts providing for the sale of commodities under a trade-mark or brand at a stipulated price must be made or produced by the owner of the trade-mark or brand and if a retailer who is a party to such contract or who has knowledge of such contract and minimum price list may be enjoined from selling such commodities at cut prices in an action by a distributor or wholesaler who is damaged thereby.

Under this interpretation the rights of the plaintiff can be no greater than the owner or producer of the trade-marked or branded commodity and as G. & W. has no standing in court in this action so plaintiff as a distributor cannot enforce any price list stipulated by G. & W. It is also my interpretation of the Fair Trade Act that the right to make contracts fixing minimum prices belongs to the owner of the trade-mark or brand that is used in the sale of a commodity. If an owner of a trade-mark or brand used in the production of a commodity wishes to delegate to a distributor the right to stipulate a minimum price list he probably may do so but under no circumstances can the distributor acquire a greater right than that of the producer. From this it follows that the minimum price list issued by the plaintiff cannot be enforced in court because plaintiff's assignor has no authority to stipulate minimum price lists in Wisconsin so long as it is not licensed to do business here.

Defendant also contends that he is only bound to maintain prices lawfully stipulated in the sale of commodities purchased after the date of contracts made by G. & W. or by plaintiff as distributor and after receiving notice of the minimum price list. In other words defendant claims that in respect to the liquor purchased by him prior to March 4th, 1948, he is free to sell it at any price he pleases. The following cases support this contention: Lentheric, Inc., v. Weissbard et al., 122 N. J. Eq. 573, 195 A. 818; Chamley Drug Shop v. Guerlain, 113 Fed. (2d) 247; James Heddon's Sons v. Callendar, 29 Fed. Supp. 579.

[Complaint Dismissed]

Defendant also has raised a number of other points on which he relies to defeat plaintiff's prayer for an injunction. In view of the conclusions arrived at above it does not seem necessary to discuss these other contentions of the defendant. It follows from what has been said that the defendant is entitled to judgment dismissing plaintiff's complaint with $100.00 costs and disbursements.

Let findings of fact and conclusions of law be prepared accordingly.

[¶ 62,316] M. R. Dickson, et al. v. North East Texas Motor Freight Lines, Inc.

In the Texas Court of Civil Appeals for the Fifth Supreme Judicial District. No. 13,831. February 27, 1948. On rehearing, April 16, 1948.

Texas Antitrust Laws

Labor Dispute—Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade—Permanent Injunction.—A judgment of permanent injunction restraining a teamsters' union, its business agent, certain of its members, and eighteen truck lines from establishing and maintaining a boycott against a motor carrier of freight is affirmed as to the restraints against acts in the nature of secondary boycott. Provisions of the decree prohibiting all picketing of plaintiff's premises for purpose of publicizing plaintiff as unfair are reversed. Publicizing the facts of a labor dispute in a peaceful way through appropriate means is within the Constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech.

See the Texas Antitrust Laws, Vol. 2, ¶ 8835, 8836.

For appellants: L. N. D. Wells, Jr., W. F. Bane, Dallas, Texas; David Previant, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

For appellee: Bowyer, Gray, Thomas, Crozier & Jaffe, Dallas, Texas.

[Nature of Proceeding]

YOUNG, A. J.: After trial to the court, Teamsters Union No. 745 A. F. of L., its officers, representatives and other named persons have here appealed from a judgment of permanent injunction. Plaintiff below is a motor carrier of freight, defendants being said union, Dickson, its business agent, nine individuals (ex-employees of plaintiff), and eighteen other truck lines. The judgment complained of followed generally the allegations of plaintiff's petition, which prayed that all defendants be restrained from establishing and maintaining a boycott against it; from picketing its place of business with placards carrying untrue statements; from interfering with plaintiff's contracts and with commerce; from maintaining a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the antitrust laws of Texas, notwithstanding provision of contracts between said union and truck line defendants relating to the crossing of picket lines and the handling of goods characterized by the union as unfair. Mandatory provision of the judgment directed truck line defendants to resume interchange of freight with plaintiff; the union and four of plaintiff's ex-employees only undertaking an appeal.

[Employer's Business]

Appellee is a Texas corporation, a common carrier of freight, handling merchandise by motor vehicles over the highways of Texas and Oklahoma on permits from the Interstate Commerce Commission and Texas Railroad Commission. It has engaged in such business since 1921, employing between 130 [and] 165 persons, operating 92 trucks with more than 5,000 customers. Its operations extend from Dallas to Texarkana, with many terminal and intermediate points of service in North Texas and southern Oklahoma. Appellee's daily tonnage is about 300,000 lbs; it having contracts and interchange agreements with the eighteen truck line defendants from whom it received on an average, daily, of between 175,000 and 200,000 lbs. of freight.

[Representation of Employees]

On September 16, 1946 M. R. Dickson, assistant business agent of appellant union, had been furnished by eleven employees of appellee (the nine individual defendants already mentioned and two others) with slips authorizing Local 745 to act as their agent in collective bargaining. However, none of the North East Texas Motor Line employees were members of a labor union; no proceedings had been instituted before the NLRB for certification to defendant union or other person or organization as bargaining agent for plaintiff's employees; and according to J. L. Robinson, Company president, and Bert Aldis, manager of its Dallas terminal, there had been no demands by company employees for better wages, hours and conditions of employment, when, on September 17, 1946, Robinson received a long distance call at Paris from Dickson, defendant union's assistant business agent at Dallas. As to the ensuing conversation, the evidence is conflicting, Dickson testifying to effect of telling Robinson that the latter's employees in pickup and delivery service had asked witness to represent them in securing better wages and working conditions; requesting a conference and the signing of a union contract; that the employees would go on strike if an agreement was not signed, which request for negotiations Robinson flatly refused. On the other hand, Mr. Robinson testified to telling Dickson that he was not averse to such a conference and that "I will be glad to have you."

[Picketing]

These eleven employees went off the job the next morning, the record being unclear as to whether they quit voluntarily, were discharged or simply went on strike; at any rate, the succeeding day (September 18) pickets were stationed around plaintiff's Dallas terminal (one or more of these dissatisfied employees participating), each picketer bearing a sign reading "North East Texas Motor Lines unfair to Teamsters Union A. F. of L." Testimony is likewise conflicting as to whether these labor activities were initiated by Dickson on behalf of the union; its office, however, answering all inquiries to effect that a strike was on at plaintiff's premises and the company on the "unfair" list. Immediately all truck line defendants except six[1] ceased doing business with plaintiff, either because of their drivers' refusal to cross picket lines or by reason of proviso in each of their contracts with the union to the same effect, notwithstanding the interchange contracts and arrangements plaintiff had with such other truck lines. As a result, and overnight, plaintiff suffered losses in business revenues of some 90 per cent; his Dallas office receipts on September 16 being $1,650; the next day, following above labor activity, receipts of $150.

[Injunction]

The final order of injunction (here appealed from) carried in substance the following recitals: (1) That on the occasion in question no bona fide labor dispute existed between plaintiff and labor defendants; (2) labor and truck line defendants were enjoined from refusing to handle plaintiff's freight and ordered to resume business relations with plaintiff in accepting and delivering freight, notwithstanding provision of contracts between union and said truck lines; (3) labor union and ex-employees were enjoined (a) from establishing a picket line at plaintiff's place of business or picketing defendant truck lines for purpose of publicizing plaintiff as unfair, and (b) similarly enjoining them from telephoning or informing truck line defendants or customers that plaintiff is "unfair" or informing them that a strike existed among employees of plaintiff; (4) labor union defendants and ex-employees were enjoined from interfering with business relations or contracts between plaintiff and truck line defendants or customers so as to terminate such contracts or business relations; these truck lines being likewise enjoined from terminating contracts and business relations with plaintiff on account of above mentioned labor troubles; (5) labor union defendants and ex-employees were enjoined from threatening and intimidating or coercing Liquid Carbonic Company or other shipping or receiving customers not to do business with plaintiff, or from informing said customers a strike existed among employees at plaintiff's Dallas terminal, or that plaintiff was unfair or on the unfair list.

[1] Of these, Merchants' Fast Motor Lines and Brown Express had no contract with the union; and whether interchange of freight ceased between the other four truck lines and plaintiff on account of strike, the record is not clear.

[Pertinent Legislation]

Recent legislation (both Federal and State) with respect to labor organizations and affairs, appears to have rendered moot to some extent the issues raised on this appeal. See Labor Management Relations (Taft-Hartley) Act, 80th Congress, 1947, and the Nine Acts, Texas Legislature, 50th Session, 1947, now appearing as Art. 5154 a-f, and Art. 7428 as amended, Vernon's Annotated Civil Statutes. Likewise the similarity in subject matter in the instant suit and Turner v. Zanes, 206 S. W. 144 (by this Court), is such as that both appeals are based upon identical points of error. The Turner-Zanes case is deemed controlling, therefore, of several points herein raised; but to the extent that this record differs from the Turner appeal, appellants here are entitled to conclusions of fact and law, viz:

[Labor Dispute]

First: While every presumption will be indulged in favor of the trial court's finding, this record, we think, clearly discloses the existence of a labor dispute between appellee and eleven of his employees; if not that, then surely there was a pending dispute with defendant union as an adversary party. While there is a conflict of testimony as to whether Daniel, an employee, had complained to Mr. Robinson or his Dallas foreman on behalf of the group, the whole record is suggestive of their dissatisfaction in the matter of appellee's working conditions; as, for example: Their authorization of Dickson in the matter of collective bargaining; the latter's discussion with Robinson of a union contract; they [sic] walking off the job and joining a picket line, carrying banners, all of which sufficiently establishing the activity as a labor dispute within the meaning of Art. 1621b, Sec. 3, Penal Code. But if we be mistaken in our conclusion that there was no [sic] employer-employee dispute, then unquestionably the negotiations between appellant union and the company (attempted or pending), constituted such a dispute and an adequate basis for the ensuing strike and picketing. "A state cannot exclude working men from peacefully exercising the right of free communication by drawing the circle of economic competition between employers and workers so small as to contain only an employer and those directly employed by him. * * * The right of free communication cannot therefore be mutilated by denying it to workers, in a dispute with an employer, even though they are not in his employ." (Italics ours) A. F. of L. v. Swing, 312 U. S. 321.

[Scope of Picketing Restraint]

Second: The judgment further restrained all picketing of plaintiff's premises "for purpose of publicizing the plaintiff as unfair" to defendant union or as on the "unfair" list, though their conduct was otherwise peaceful. We have seen that such picketing has constitutional protection as a form of free speech (See recent U. S. Supreme Court decisions, cited in the Turner appeal). Also that in connection with picketing, a reference to the employer as unfair or on the unfair list is not to "falsify facts." Cafeteria Employees, etc. v. Angelos, 320 U. S. 293; these terms in an industrial dispute being merely expressions of opinion relative to the labor policy of a particular employer. Teller, Vol. 1, Sec. 152; Steffes v. Motion Pictures, etc., (Minn.), 161 N. W. 524.

The trial court erred, therefore, in wholly restraining appellant's method of picketing the premises of plaintiff, likewise in forbidding free communication of such fact to the public or parties concerned; for we have already held that a condition of strike was then subsisting between the parties. "Publicizing the facts of a labor dispute in a peaceful way through appropriate means, whether by pamphlet, by word of mouth or by banner, must now be regarded as within that liberty of communication which is secured to every person by the Fourteenth Amendment against abridgement by a State." Carlson v. California, 310 U. S. 106.

[Restraint of Carriers]

Third: The injunction further required truck line defendants to resume commercial relations with plaintiff by accepting and handling all freight tendered in usual course of business, notwithstanding a proviso of appellant union's contract with at least sixteen of these truck lines, reading: "The employer shall not request nor instruct any employee to go through a picket line of a union, nor to handle unfair goods declared so by the unions signed to this agreement." Defendant motor lines have not appealed from this phase of the judgment, thus making the particular restraint a final order. A brief discussion of these court recitals is proper, however, defendant union being a party to the contract mentioned in said judgment.

On notice of the strike, these sixteen truck lines immediately terminated all business relations with plaintiff company; numerous of the truck line officials testifying that they considered themselves bound to do so under the contract. The result was an almost total stoppage of plaintiff's business in interchange of freight and heavy decrease in cash receipts the following day. The trial court could reasonably have found from the foregoing facts that the practical construction placed on the quoted proviso by the parties, obliged each "employer" to cease business relations with any concern which defendant local was attempting to unionize. So viewed by the court, the contract simply became the predicate for a secondary boycott by the parties thereto against any nonsubscribing employer, the boycott to become actual upon notice of the existence of a strike, as in the instant situation; such an understanding between a trade union and business organizations being obviously in violation of our laws against trusts, monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade. For while it may be true that the proviso in question was prima facie in aid of the union's right to collectively bargain, the immediate effect of its operation as applied to plaintiff was a virtual boycott and the creation and carrying out of restrictions against him in the free pursuit of a lawful business. Arts. 7426 to 7429, Vernon's Annotated Statutes, and Arts. 1632-1634 Penal Code; Webb v. Cooks', Waiters' and Waitresses' Union, (Tex. Civ. App.), 205 S. W. 465; Borden Co. v. Local No. 133 of Teamsters, etc. (Tex. Civ. App.), 152 S. W. (2d) 828. See also Art. 7437, reading: "Any contract or agreement in violation of any provision of this subdivision shall be absolutely void and not enforcible either in law or equity."

For a discussion of other points, the parties are referred to the companion case of Turner v. Zanes, supra, which opinion is deemed controlling thereof.

[Ruling]

All restraint imposed by judgment, paragraphs 1, 2, 4 and 5, in nature of secondary boycott, involving truck line defendants, is hereby affirmed. In other respects the judgment is reversed and here rendered; labor defendants being entitled to the same rights of publicity and picketing in connection with their pending labor dispute as were accorded in the Turner-Zanes appeal, viz: "Nothing herein shall be construed to limit the right of C. B. Kepke and the Labor Union Defendants from publicizing the controversy with plaintiffs in an accurate, peaceful and truthful manner, without threats, coercion or intimidation, actual or implied, against any of the parties herein mentioned."

Affirmed in part; otherwise reversed and rendered. All costs of appeal are taxed against appellee.

[On Motion for Rehearing]

YOUNG, A. J.: Appellants point out and correctly, that appellee was not deprived of all facilities for inter-line connections with other carriers; in our opinion, however, not relieving the employer-union agreement in question of its aspect of illegality under our State antitrust laws.

After full consideration the motions of both appellants and appellee for rehearing are overruled.

[¶ 62,317] Revere Camera Company v. Eastman Kodak Company and Eastman Stores Co.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 48 C 50. October 5, 1948.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Treble Damage Suit—Allegations of Public Injury—Motions to Strike.—A complaint filed by a camera manufacturer for treble damages and injunctive relief based upon alleged violations of the antitrust laws by a manufacturer of cameras and film stated that plaintiff brought the suit on its own behalf and in the public interest in that the acts complained of are injurious to the interests and welfare of the public. Defendants' motion to strike from the complaint the allegations which purport to set forth claims based on injury to others than plaintiff, on the ground that they are immaterial to any claim which plaintiff may assert on its own behalf, is allowed. A motion to strike portions of the complaint which refer to other legal proceedings involving a defendant, on the ground that none of such references to prior proceedings is within the purview of the Clayton Act, and that none of these proceedings refers or relates to any of the claims or allegations of this complaint, is allowed. Allegations regarding prior litigation are improper and immaterial in the absence of some showing either of materiality to the issues to be tried or that they constitute a prima facie case against defendant under Section 5 of the Clayton Act. A motion to dismiss the complaint insofar as it purports to set forth a claim on behalf of the public, and seeks relief therefor, on the ground that plaintiff has no capacity, standing or right to assert such a claim, is allowed. There is nothing in the Clayton Act authorizing a private person to bring suit on behalf of the public or others for violation of the antitrust laws and to obtain relief therefor. Injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage will not be granted where the injury complained of is a public injury, and the plaintiff cannot show that he suffers a special injury differing from that suffered by the public at large.

See the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2024.19, 2036.35.

For plaintiff: Zabel & Gritzbaugh, Chicago, Illinois.

For defendants: Charles O. Parker, Chicago, Ill.; Donovan, Leisure, Newton, Lumbard & Irvine, by James R. Withrow, Jr., New York, N. Y.; Nixon, Hargrave, Middleton & Devans, by Arthur L. Stern, Rochester, N. Y.

Memorandum

[Nature of Action]

SULLIVAN, Judge: This action is brought under Sec. 15 of Title 15, USCA, known as the Sherman Act, and Sec. 26, Title 15, known as the Clayton Act, for treble damages and injunctive relief based upon alleged violations by Eastman Kodak and Eastman Stores of Sections 1, 2 and 3, Title 15, (Sherman Law) and Sections 13 and 14, Title 15, (Clayton Act.)

The complaint was filed on January 14, 1948. Paragraph 1 thereof sets out the facts which confer jurisdiction on this court.

Paragraph 2 alleges that Revere is engaged in the manufacture and sale of amateur motion picture cameras, projectors and film splicers, and in the sale of certain accessories and equipment therefor manufactured by others.

Paragraph 3 alleges that "Revere brings this suit on its own behalf and in the public interest in that the acts complained of are injurious to the interests and welfare of the public, and the equitable relief sought, if granted, will inure to the benefit of the public generally."

Paragraph 4 alleges that Eastman Kodak is also engaged in the manufacture and sale of like items, and in addition manufactures and sells amateur motion picture film and maintains stations at which photographers may have exposed film processed or developed.

Paragraph 5 alleges that Eastman Stores is a wholly owned subsidiary of Eastman Kodak, and is engaged in transacting business as a retail outlet for Eastman Kodak products.

Paragraphs 6 and 7 set out the interstate and foreign commerce carried on by both Revere and Eastman Kodak.

Paragraph 8 outlines the growth and importance of the photographic industry.

Paragraphs 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 outline the history, scope and character of the business and operations of Eastman Kodak.

Paragraphs 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18 describe the photographic goods involved in this suit.

Paragraphs 19 and 20 describe the sources of supply of motion picture film.

Paragraph 21 outlines Revere's history in the business, alleging "that prior to September 1939, Revere had manufactured amateur motion picture cameras of the single 8 mm. spool type and that it was able to offer to purchasers of its cameras an adequate supply of black and white film for use therein. This film was manufactured and packaged by Agfa-Ansco Corporation, a film manufacturer, and sold by Revere under its own name."

Paragraph 22 alleges the offenses complained of as follows:

Eastman individually, and as parent of the corporate structure hereinbefore mentioned, and in concert with one or more of its said subsidiaries including Stores (Ill.) and with others has

(a) Acted, confederated, conspired and combined, with said subsidiaries and said others, to do the unlawful acts and things set forth in this complaint, and continues so to do.

(b) Contracted, combined and conspired with one or more of its said subsidiaries, including Stores (Ill.), and with others to restrain trade or commerce in motion picture film, cameras and projectors, for amateur use, and accessories and supplies therefor, in violation of the provisions of Sections 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act.

(c) Monopolized and attempted to monopolize, combined and conspired to monopolize and to attempt to monopolize, a part of the trade or commerce among the several states of the United States, and with foreign nations, in motion picture film, cameras, and projectors, for amateur use, and accessories and supplies therefor, in violation of the provisions of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

(d) Combined, and conspired, with the intent of using the monopoly established by them in the manufacture, distribution and sale of color film to attempt to establish a monopoly, and to restrain trade and commerce, in the production, distribution and sale of motion picture cameras, and accessories, equipment and supplies therefor.

(e) Discriminated in price between different purchasers of motion picture film, cameras, and projectors, for amateur use, and accessories, equipment, and supplies therefor, of like grade and quality, in commerce, and for use, consumption or resale within the United States or a Territory thereof, or the District of Columbia, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, sale and distribution of one or more of said items, or to injure, destroy or prevent competition with Eastman, and one or more of its said subsidiaries, including Stores (Ill.), in violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act.

(f) It has unlawfully discriminated in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser of amateur picture film, cameras, and other equipment, supplies and accessories bought for resale, by contracting to furnish or furnishing or by contributing to the furnishing of services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale or offering for sale of such commodities upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionately equal terms.

(g) In the course of commerce, leased or made a sale or contract for sale of motion picture film, cameras, projectors, for amateur use, and accessories and supplies therefor, for use, consumption or resale within the United States, or a Territory thereof, or the District of Columbia, or fixed a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, or merchandise, of a competitor or competitors of Eastman, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale of such condition, agreement or understanding may be, or has been, to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in commerce in such items, in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act."

Paragraph 23 outlines the relations of the parties and alleges "that in or about August, 1939, Eastman importuned Revere to abandon the manufacture and sale of its single 8 mm. cameras, to cease the sale of single 8 mm. film, and to enter into a patent license agreement with Eastman to make and sell an amateur motion picture camera under certain of Eastman's patents, adopted for use with Eastman's double 8 mm. film wound on patented spools manufactured by Eastman." It is further alleged that Eastman represented to Revere that if Revere would agree to enter into such license agreement, Eastman would supply Revere with patented rewind spools to equip the cameras manufactured by it thereunder and, further, that Eastman would at all times provide purchasers of such cameras from Revere with an adequate supply of double 8 mm. film and suitable facilities for developing or processing the same throughout the United States and abroad.

Paragraph 24 alleges that Revere, relying upon said representations, on or about September 8; 1939, entered into a license agreement with Eastman by the terms of which Eastman granted to Revere a limited non-exclusive royalty-free license to make, use and sell double 8 mm. motion picture cameras under Eastman patents. It is further alleged that while such license agreement provided that "nothing herein shall create any obligation of any kind on the part of Eastman to market or continue to market any particular type or kind of film" it was intended by the parties thereto that Eastman would, and Eastman by said agreement undertook during the life of said agreement to manufacture an adequate supply of film suitable for use in cameras made by Revere thereunder and facilities for processing and developing said film so used, and to refrain from doing anything to hinder Revere in the beneficial enjoyment of such agreement.

Paragraph 25 sets out that immediately upon entering into said license agreement Revere abandoned the manufacture of single 8 mm. film, redesigned its camera and manufacturing equipment, and under its license began to manufacture and sell a new moderately priced double 8 mm. camera for use with film manufactured by Eastman. That in making this change Revere was compelled not only to redesign its product, but also to reorganize its plant at great expense.

Paragraph 26 alleges that pursuant to the terms of the agreement, Revere equipped each of its double 8 mm. cameras with one empty spool purchased from Eastman, so that Eastman thereby had continuous information as to the number of cameras manufactured and sold by Revere.

Paragraph 27 alleges that Revere's double 8 mm. spool type cameras manufactured and sold under the license agreement with Eastman attained great popularity and that Revere's sales of such cameras now exceed those of all other manufacturers combined.

Paragraph 28 sets out that in 1941 Revere designed and built a double 8 mm. magazine camera and exhibited a model thereof to Eastman, and that Eastman charged that it constituted an infringement of certain of Eastman's patents. After extended correspondence Eastman proposed that Revere accept a license under certain Eastman patents, and that Revere manufacture and sell, pursuant to such license, its magazine camera designed to accommodate magazine and film made by Eastman. In order to prevent dealers in its products from being involved in litigation, Revere brought a suit against Eastman in this court, which resulted in a decree in its favor, whereupon Revere enlarged its production of double 8 mm. camera of the magazine type.

Paragraph 29 alleges that due to Eastman's dominant position in the manufacture and sale of motion picture film purchasers of Revere's cameras are dependent upon Eastman for supplies of film.

Paragraph 30 alleges that in connection with the manufacture and sale of its cameras Revere also manufactures motion picture projectors and film splicers.

Paragraph 31 sets out the competition which exists between Revere and Eastman as well as certain of Eastman's subsidiaries.

Paragraph 32 sets out the growth of Revere's sales, based upon which Revere in 1946 enlarged its equipment and facilities for an estimated production greatly in excess of its 1946 sales, and which it would have realized but for Eastman's unlawful acts as set forth in this complaint.

Paragraph 33 alleges that notwithstanding the obligations of Eastman under its license agreement with Revere to furnish Revere camera users with an adequate supply of film, purchasers of Revere cameras, in recent months, have had increasing difficulty in obtaining film for use therein. It is alleged that many dealers in Revere products have cancelled orders for cameras, projectors and splicers, or reduced the volume thereof because of their inability to obtain film with which to supply their customers for use in Revere cameras, and that the inability of the dealers and users of Revere cameras to obtain film for use therein is due to the unlawful acts of Eastman as stated in the complaint.

Plaintiff, in its prayer for relief, asks that defendants be found guilty of the unlawful acts charged and that damages be assessed in the sum of $1,000,000 and that said damages be trebled, and that plaintiff have judgment against defendant for $3,000,000 plus costs of suit and reasonable attorney's fee. That defendants be adjudged to have violated the antitrust laws of the United States as charged in the complaint, and that each of them, and their officers, directors and agents be enjoined permanently from continuing to so violate said anti-trust laws. That defendant Eastman be commanded to so direct and control its subsidiaries as to prevent them from engaging in all unlawful acts as set out in this complaint, and particularly from conspiring and combining among themselves or with others to restrain trade or commerce in motion picture films, cameras, projectors, splicers, and accessories and equipment therefor. That the court decree that Eastman disclose all formulae, processes and "know-how" within the knowledge of Eastman and license all patents and patent applications owned or controlled by Eastman pertaining to the manufacture of amateur motion picture color film to any applicant upon such terms as the court may deem just. And that plaintiff have such other and further relief as to the court seems just and proper.

Defendants, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure have moved: (1) to dismiss the complaint insofar as it purports to set forth a claim on behalf of the public, and seeks relief therefor, on the ground that plaintiff has no capacity, standing or right to assert such a claim. (2) To strike from the complaint under Rule 12(f) all allegations purporting to set forth a claim on behalf of the public and seeking relief therefor, on the ground that such portions of the complaint are immaterial to any claim which the plaintiff may properly assert. And (3) motion to strike from the complaint under Rule 12(f) the portions thereof which refer to other legal proceedings involving the Eastman Kodak Company, on the ground that none of such references to prior proceedings are within the purview of the Clayton Act, and none of these proceedings refer or relate to any of the claims or allegations of this complaint, and are immaterial and improper.

These motions are now before me for disposition.

Plaintiff at the outset contends that this litigation should not be decided on pleadings and that motions to strike are not favored by the courts, citing a number of cases in support of this contention, among them the case of Burke v. Masta Machine Company, 5 Fed. Rules Dec. 134, where the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania held:

> "A motion to strike was never intended to furnish an opportunity for the determination of disputed and substantial questions of law, and, therefore, without attempting to pass upon the question whether the allegations of the answer in this case to which the motion to strike is addressed, constitutes a defense, and, without intimating that they do, I conclude only that the allegations are of such a character that their sufficiency ought not to be determined summarily upon a motion to strike, and therefore, the plaintiff's motion as it relates to the allegations in said amended answer is denied."

I do not believe that the question here involved is the same sort of disputed question of substantive law as the Pennsylvania Court had under consideration when it decided that the same should be decided only after a hearing on the merits. The plaintiff here insists that it has a right to bring its action in the public interest, although I have been unable to find any case which supports this contention and plaintiff has cited none to me. Defendants on the other hand insist that Section 4 of the Sherman Act and Section 15 of the Clayton Act very clearly and definitely provide that the Attorney General shall bring either civil or criminal actions on behalf of the public, and Section 4 of the Clayton Act authorizes a person "who shall be injured in his business or property" to bring a suit for treble damages and provides that he may recover such damages as have been "by him sustained," and therefore that all allegations purporting to assert claims on behalf of the public are immaterial to the question of plaintiff's damage and should be stricken.

This complaint is brought under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act which authorizes a private person to sue on his own behalf for actual or threatened injury to his business or property and provides that he may recover damages by him sustained. There is nothing in this statute authorizing a private person to bring suit on behalf of the public or others for violation of the anti-trust laws and to obtain relief therefor. Section 4 of the Sherman law and Section 15 of the Clayton Act charge the Attorney General with the duty of protecting the public interest by either civil or criminal action. The statute makes no provision for this function to be assumed by a private person. The courts seem consistently to have held that a suit may not be maintained by a private person merely because of violations of the anti-trust laws which have resulted in injury to the public. On the contrary a plaintiff must allege and prove that these violations have been the proximate cause of special injury to his business or property, as distinguished from injury resulting to the public generally. In Beegle v. Thomson, 138 Fed. (2) 875, cert. denied 322 U. S. 743 (1944) the court said:

> "Section 15, allowing private parties treble damages for injury accruing to their business from violation of the Anti Trust Act, embraces, as one of the essentials of such action, injury to plaintiff's business. The complaint must affirmatively show this injury. It is not enough to allege something forbidden and claim damages resulting therefrom. Allegation of the specific injury suffered by plaintiff differing from that sustained by it as a member of the community is essential . . . the mere existence of a violation is not sufficient ipso facto to support the action."

Section 16 of the Clayton Act authorizes injunctive relief for private persons. The language of this section also provides that a plaintiff thereunder may obtain injunctive relief only against threatened special loss or damage to him, differing from the injury which may be suffered by the public at large. As contrasted with Section 4 of the Sherman Law and 15 of the Clayton Act authorizing the Attorney General to institute proceedings in equity "to prevent and restrain" violations, this section authorizes a person to sue for injunctive relief "against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the Anti Trust laws . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity under the rules governing such proceedings . . ."

The rule in equity is that injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage will not be granted where the injury complained of is a public injury, and the plaintiff cannot show that he suffers a special injury differing from that suffered by the public at large. Section 16 also authorizes relief only to prevent special injury to the plaintiff differing from the injury which may be suffered by the public at large and does not authorize a suit on behalf of the public. In Westor Theatres, Inc. v. Warner Bros. Pictures, 41 Fed. Sup. 757, the court said:

> "The complaint herein purports to allege a cause of action under the Sherman and Clayton Acts on behalf of individual plaintiffs. It seeks both legal relief by way of money damages and equitable relief by way of injunctions and orders of dissolution. The sole statutory authorizations for such a proceeding by individual plaintiffs are found in two provisions of the anti-trust laws in Sections 4 and 15 of the Clayton Act.
>
> "Under both sections it is apparent that the individual cause of action contemplated is one arising by virtue of acts of the defendants, in violation of the anti-trust laws, which have been the proximate cause of injury to plaintiffs in their business or property or which threaten to cause loss or damage to the plaintiffs. Hence the only relevant issues are those involving conduct which proximately results in injuries to the plaintiffs or which threatens such injury. An individual plaintiff is not entitled to sue by reason of violations resulting in injury to other persons or to the public. Correction of the latter evils is the function of the Government alone."

Plaintiff alleges that it brings this action against Eastman on its own behalf and in the public interest, on the ground that the monopoly on amateur motion picture films, especially on double 8 mm. color films held by Eastman, and Eastman's system of allocating film through the channels of merchandising, effect discriminations in trade and cause injury to Revere, as well as to other manufacturers of cameras using double 8 mm. film, and to the public.

Plaintiff's case for treble damages must be predicated upon a showing that defendant has monopolized or attempted to monopolize trade or commerce among the several states; and that it has contracted, combined and conspired to restrain trade or commerce, in violation of the anti-trust laws, resulting in harm and injury to the public, and must then plead facts showing that such violations have been the proximate cause of injury, loss and damage to plaintiff in its business or property.

Plaintiff apparently agrees with this theory, because it admits that it is elementary anti-trust law that an injury to the public interest must be shown, citing the case of Neumann v. Bastian-Blessing Company, et al., 70 Fed. Supp. 447, decided in this court by Judge LaBuy, where the court said:

> "The combinations and contracts in restraint of trade which were intended to be prohibited by the Sherman Act are combinations which are directed to the control of the market by suppression of competition in the marketing of goods and services, the effect of which is adverse to the consumer and the public. The practices prohibited by the Act are those that have an evil effect upon the public generally, as distinguished from purely personal or private injury."

From this plaintiff argues that in the instant case it is not only proper but implicit that it plead the public interest, and that in bringing this private anti-trust action it appears in court in the double capacity of representing itself and as a representative of the public interest; that the very purpose of the kind of action brought here is to use the private suit as an instrument for enforcing the anti-trust laws.

The anti-trust laws were enacted to prevent injury to the public as well as injury to individuals, but nowhere is the individual authorized to bring a suit on behalf of the public for the public injury. The Attorney General alone is authorized by the statute to bring such suit, the individual being authorized to bring his own treble damage action for any injury he may have sustained as a result of a violation of the anti-trust laws. True, the cases have held that treble damage suits are intended as an ancillary and additional force to supplement law enforcement by the Department of Justice, but nowhere does the statute give to a private litigant authority to bring the action on behalf of the public. Weinberg v. Sinclair Refining Company, 48 Fed. Supp. 203. Plaintiff also cites the case of Maltz v. Sax, et al., 134 Fed. (2) decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, where Judge Evans said:

> "This grant to persons damaged (through an unlawful combination or conspiracy in restraint of commerce)—a cause of action for treble damages—was for the purpose of multiplying the agencies which would help to enforce the Act and therefore make it more effective."

I cannot believe that this gives the plaintiff here because of its own alleged injury a right to plead the public interest. I am of the opinion that the law clearly establishes that plaintiff has no authority to sue on behalf of the public and others which it claims have been injured by defendants' alleged violations of the anti-trust acts. Defendant's motion to dismiss the claims on behalf of the public and of others alleged by plaintiff to have been injured is allowed.

On defendant's motion Number 2 to strike the allegations which purport to assert claims on behalf of the public and others: These allegations are immaterial to any claim which the plaintiff may have properly asserted. Whether or not the suit is in the public interest and whether the various unlawful acts alleged are injurious to other competitors or other manufacturers is immaterial to the question of whether the plaintiff here has suffered special injury for which he may recover treble damages or obtain injunctive relief under the provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Acts. This is also true of the allegation that "public policy" requires that Eastman be compelled to disclose its formulae, processes and "know-how" in the manufacture and sale of amateur color film.

Defendants' motion to strike from the complaint the allegations set out in the motion, which purport to set forth claims based on injury to others than Revere, on the ground that they are immaterial to any claim which Revere itself may assert on its own behalf, is allowed.

On defendants' motion to strike references to various other anti-trust cases, without showing their relevancy to this proceeding:

Paragraph 13 of plaintiff's complaint alleges:

"Eastman has attained its position in the industry by consolidation and merger, acquisition of business and assets and reorganization of various corporations, including competitors, as well as by growth and expansion. In attaining its dominant position, Eastman has frequently resorted to illegal trade practices which have involved it in numerous lawsuits including several under the anti-trust laws of the United States."

The complaint then goes on to cite five cases in which Eastman appeared as a party. The courts have held that allegations regarding prior litigation are improper and immaterial in the absence of some showing either of materiality to the issues to be tried or that they constitute a prima facie case against defendant under Section 5 of the Clayton Act, which provides:

"A final judgment or decree hereafter rendered in any criminal prosecution or in any suit or proceeding in equity brought by or on behalf of the United States under the anti-trust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any suit or proceeding brought by any other party against such defendant under said laws as to all matters respecting which such judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto; Provided, This section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken."

In Mebco Realty Holding Co. v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., 6 Fed. Rules Service 12 f 21, Case No. 1, plaintiff attempted to make the same general use of prior anti-trust cases as in the case at bar, the complaint containing the following allegation:

"Various courts of the United States at various times have found that defendant Producers and defendant Distributors have acted in concert and conspired together to have performed acts in violation of the Sherman Act and Clayton Act aforesaid."

The court granted defendant's motion to strike this allegation, saying:

"These statements, unless material or pertinent to the issue to be tried, ought to be stricken under the provisions of Rule 12f of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. I have heard the arguments and have read the briefs. There is nothing asserted which convinces me that what has happened to the producers or distributors in former cases in any court can have any legal effect in the instant action. An attempt to answer that paragraph would mean that every defendant would have to set out and analyze each case of similar character in which it might have been involved. If the paragraph had set out the specific cases as applicable to each defendant it would be a good pleading if at all applicable.

"I hold that in either case it is an improper pleading and should be sticken."

Sainaiko Bros. Coal and Oil Company v. Ethyl Gasoline Corporation, 2 Fed. Rules. Dec. 205, was a suit for treble damages, and plaintiff pleaded the Government's charges in a prior suit against defendant and the result of the suit. The court held that under the statutory provision that an adjudication under anti-trust laws to the effect that defendant had violated the laws shall be prima facie evidence against defendant, plaintiff, suing for damages under the Clayton Act, could not plead a prima facie case if he did not set forth the charges in the Government's suit against the defendant and the result of that suit.

Defendants' motion No. 3 to strike from the complaint reference to other proceedings involving the Eastman Kodak Company is allowed.

Plaintiff is given thirty days in which to amend its complaint if it so desires.

If plaintiff does not elect to amend, then defendants are given thirty days in which to answer.

[¶ 62,318] United States v. General Electric Company, International General Electric Company, Incorporated, Carboloy Company, Inc., Fried, Krupp Aktiengesellschaft, Walter M. Stearns, Zay Jeffries, Walter G. Robbins.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Cr. 110-412. October 8, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Price Fixing and Monopolization—Combination of Independent Competing Patents—Proof of Guilty Knowledge Not Required.—Domestic and foreign manufacturers charged with monopolization of the hard metal composition industry in violation of the antitrust laws are adjudged guilty where the evidence establishes that defendants entered into (1) agreements for the cross-licensing of patents providing that one licensee would grant sublicenses and fix selling prices which all would follow, (2) manufacturing licenses providing for price control over unpatented products, and (3) licenses on condition that the licensee or agent should assign or cross-license future patent rights; and engaged in resale price fixing, an illegal boycott to prevent competition in the sale of unpatented tools, territorial division of markets, vertical integration by acquisition of competitors, and direct price fixing. The failure of the Government to prove that the patent owners had guilty knowledge that they were combining independent competing patents does not preclude conviction under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. In suits under Section 1, wrongful intent need not be established by the Government.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.341, 1630.585.

Same—Conviction under Section 2—Proof of Specific Intent Not Required.—A finding that defendants' primary purpose was a system of price control that ranged over the entire cemented carbide industry, and a finding that defendants are guilty of actual monopolization, sustain a conviction on charges of monopolization, attempt to monopolize, and conspiracy to monopolize. It is not necessary that defendants were aware that they were pooling competing patents, so long as they knew what they were doing, and did it with the intent to create a monopoly.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1022.10, 1240.101.

Wilson Tariff Act

Combinations in Restraint of Trade—Articles Imported from Foreign Countries—Application of Statute.—The Wilson Tariff Act applies to a combination in restraint of trade between domestic and foreign manufacturers. The statute makes explicit the prohibitions of the Sherman Act in the field of foreign commerce.

See the Wilson Tariff Act, Vol. 1, ¶ 696, and the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.361.

For plaintiff: John F. X. McGohey, United States Attorney; Herbert A. Berman, Bartholomew Diggins, Malcolm Hoffman, Special Assistants to the Attorney General; Robert B. Hummel, John S. James, Carlisle P. Myers, Gareth Neville, Special Attorneys.

For defendants (except Krupp): Walter Gordon Merritt, Hyler Connell, James T. Mackey, John B. Tittmann, Thomas P. Dwyer, Andrew M. Calamari.

[Nature of Action]

[Digest] This is a criminal prosecution under an indictment returned October 21, 1941, charging defendants in four counts with violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, Sections 1 and 2; and in a fifth count with violation of the Wilson Tariff Act. By stipulation, a jury was waived, and the case tried to the Court.

The suit concerns trade and commerce in so called hard metal compositions and products containing such compositions. By hard metal composition is meant tungsten carbide and all other combinations of tungsten, tantalum, titanium, or a similar metal, with carbon, particles of the carbide being cemented or bound together by iron, cobalt, nickel, or a similar matrix.

The corporate defendants are Fried, Krupp Aktiengesellschaft, which is not before the Court, the General Electric Company, and two General Electric subsidiaries, the Carboloy Company Inc., and the International General Electric Company. The individual defendants are Walter Stearns, who was manager of special contracts for the General Electric Company; Zay Jeffries, technical director of the Lamp Department of that corporation and formerly chairman of the Board of Carboloy; and Walter Robbins, president of Carboloy. The four companies owned and acquired patents which were so used as substantially to dominate the entire interstate and foreign commerce of the United States in the field of hard metal compositions. This situation continued from the inception of the industry in this country in 1928, until 1940, when some of the patents were declared invalid in an infringement suit in Michigan, General Electric Company v. Willey's Carbide Tool Co., 33 Fed. Supp. 969.

The Schroter patents are fully discussed by Judge Tuttle in his opinion in General Electric Co. v. Willey Carbide Tool Co., 33 F. Supp. 969, D. C. Mich. 1940, in which he held them to be invalid in view of the prior art.

These patents were originally owned by the Osram Company in Germany. Under a contract General Electric Company had with Osram, the American concern was granted the exclusive United States right to use the disclosures in its own manufacture of electric lamps. Consequently, the patents were issued in the name of General Electric as assignee. All the remaining rights in the patents were sold by Osram to the Krupp Company of Germany.

By 1928, the Schenectady works of the General Electric Company were manufacturing a substantial amount of cemented carbides for its own use for machining and wire-drawing purposes, not only at Schenectady, but elsewhere. GE patents were applied for in 1927 and 1928. Indicative of the extent of GE research is the fact that by the end of 1929, fifteen additional patent applications had been filed, and thereafter as many patents were issued.

Of these GE patents, the more important ones are Hoyt No. 1,843,768, filed April, 1927, granted February, 1932, and Gilson, No. 1,756,857, filed April, 1927, granted April, 1930. Both of these are known as hot press patents, in contrast with those of Schroter, which are cold-pressed. Each of these patents contain product, as well as process claims.

Meanwhile, Krupp itself was manufacturing a hard metal composition that was called Widia. This material was being sold in the United States, but the volume of the business, and the selling price of the material were not clearly established upon the trial. The evidence does show, however, that on January 31, 1928, Krupp gave Morris Simons of the Union Wire Die Company a three months exclusive option on the right to import Widia into this country for use in dies, and on July 7, 1928 Simons and Krupp signed a three years contract along these lines. Furthermore, Widia appears to have been sold here in 1928 for use in tool cutting by the firm of Thomas Prosser & Sons. By letter dated August 13, 1928, Krupp quoted Prosser prices which were in the neighborhood of 10¢ per gram. There are 453.59 grams in a pound.

By September, 1926, GE had begun to think seriously of the desirability of acquiring rights in these patents, in addition to such as had already been acquired through its Osram contract. The original thought was that GE would bargain for shop rights, and that Krupp would have all others, including rights to the GE improvements, and the right to license others to use the patents in the lamp industry. Apparently, Krupp offered a license to manufacture and sell, but on unsatisfactory terms, and by October, 1927, GE was considering the advisability of obtaining exclusive United States rights. A memorandum expressing the "tentative agreement" of the parties was signed on April 17, 1928, and the contract itself was finally signed on November 5, 1928.

The 1928 contract was for 15 years, with automatic extension thereafter until terminated by 6 months notice. Basically, Krupp assigned to GE all its present and future United States patent rights in the field of hard metal compositions. Three such patents and six applications were listed, including Baumhauer and the Schroter. Krupp had an outstanding contract with Gewerkschaft Wallram of Essen, which permitted the latter to export Krupp-manufactured dies into the United States, and the new contract recognized this right. Krupp itself was permitted to import into the United States under any of the GE-held patents, or under any improvement to which GE should acquire future patent rights. An arrangement was made for the exchange of technical information between the parties. GE agreed to issue a "reasonable number" of non-exclusive licenses to make, use, and sell under the patent rights and agreed specifically to license Ludlum Steel Co. and Firth-Sterling Co., two companies to which Krupp had promised rights under the patents. With these exceptions, GE's control of the patents within the United States was to be complete. GE, apparently, at Krupp's insistence, agreed to fix prices and terms of sale, and to require all licensees not to sell at a price or on terms more favorable than GE's own sales. Krupp agreed that its material sold here would conform to the GE prices. Krupp was to receive two-thirds of a royalty fund to be created, less litigation expenses which were to be paid out of the fund. Licensees were to be charged a royalty of $5 per pound and this $5 was to go into the fund. GE was to contribute $5 for each pound it sold itself, and Krupp was to pay $5 for each pound it exported into the U. S. The remaining third of the fund was to go to GE. The contract was predated to April 17, 1925, apparently in an effort to make the Krupp-Simons contract subservient to the GE contract.

In September, 1928, GE incorporated the Carboloy Company as a subsidiary in which it had a majority interest, and thereafter assigned to it the GE rights under the Krupp contract, as well as its other interests in the hard metal composition field. This company carried on all GE's activities in the field of carboloy, as the new material was called. In 1932, GE obtained complete ownership of Carboloy.

The Carboloy Company published a very complicated manual which fixed the prices at which manufacturers and agents could sell parts and finished products. The price was fixed on all items except so-called "particular tools." These were more or less unusual tools for which the manual did not attempt to fix a formula for the price of the completed instrument. Only the cemented carbide content was price-fixed in such tools.

On an average, it may be said that the cost of the hard metal composition was about one-third to one-half the cost of the finished tool.

Thus, in addition to the Carboloy Company, there were four groups in the field: (1) the manufacturing licensees, (2) the agents, (3) the Krupp Company and its United States outlets, Morris Simons of Union Wire Die, and Thomas Prosser & Sons, and (4), a group not yet mentioned, the so-called infringers. It will be convenient to describe the events of the 1927-1940 period, to which the indictment relates, in terms of the GE-Carboloy relations with these various interests.

The Krupp Company and Its United States Outlets

Relations between Krupp and GE were uncongenial from the very start. Krupp complained about GE's price-fixing policy, and GE complained about the price-cutting being practiced by the Krupp outlets in the United States.

In January, 1930, Krupp and GE representatives met in Germany to discuss their difficulties. The Germans presented their understanding of the true import of the 1928 contract, but Mr. Stearns strongly denied any such interpretation. On the witness chair, Mr. Stearns reiterated his stand that the contract meant exactly what it said, namely that GE was to fix the prices.

However, at that 1930 meeting, Mr. Stearns seems to have felt that Krupp should have some assurances that GE would not fix prices without first consulting the German company. Accordingly, GE submitted to Krupp for signature a letter stating that, "GE intends to exploit hard metal composition in the United States in the best manner possible, and fully intends that the prices, terms and conditions established by G. E. (as to which G. E. retains full freedom of action) either directly or through Carboloy in accordance with the terms of the Main Agreement will be fair and reasonable to all parties concerned." Krupp rejected this as "merely a promise on your part to maintain a price policy in accordance with the spirit of the agreement. This promise in no wise provides for an extension of our former rights, and, besides, its value is problematical."

When Stearns was examined at the time of the trial, he said that he had promised Krupp that prices would be "fair and reasonable," but explained that this meant that they would be fixed only after due investigation.

The Krupp outlets in the U. S. were Morris Simons' Union Wire Die Company, and Thomas Prosser & Sons. Simons sold the die line, Prosser the tool line. Krupp's various contracts with Prosser were all subsequent to November 5, 1928, and so were subject to the basic Krupp-GE agreement of that date. Consequently, while Carboloy had some difficulty with Prosser's price-cutting, it was not important.

Simons, on the other hand, was a source of great difficulty to the family of licensees until 1937, when Carboloy finally took over the Simons' business. The extent of GE's concern can be measured by the fact that at the time of the purchase Simons was estimated to be doing three to four times more business in the die line than Carboloy.

One further source of bad feeling between the parties should be mentioned. Krupp maintained that the 1928 contract prohibited exports by GE and Carboloy. GE contended the contrary. The upshot was that GE agreed not to export except to South America, where the trade was very small. This accommodation also involved a refusal to fill a substantial order from Russia, which Carboloy first planned to solicit, but finally decided not to sell.

Due to these difficulties, Krupp and GE entered into new negotiations, and in April, 1936, a contract was signed amending the basic document. GE territory was broadened to include Canada, but neither GE nor its licensees could export out of this licensed area. Krupp, on the other hand, agreed not to export into the GE area, in return for which concession the royalty rate returnable to Krupp was increased. Krupp's consent would be necessary for any sublicense to be issued by Carboloy in the future. The contract was to be effective July 7, 1937, unless Krupp should cease importing, or Carboloy should enter into agreement with Simons, at an earlier date, which date would then be the effective date of the amended contract.

According to Jeffries' testimony, the Krupp Company was willing to eliminate Prosser and Simons without any compensation, but the GE Company insisted that these concerns be fairly treated. On May 1, 1936, Prosser sold all its assets and good will to Carboloy upon the following terms, to wit: a down payment of $13,000 for the purchase of the inventory, and the balance, amounting to almost $300,000, payable over seven years, the annual payment being contingent on Prosser's not competing with Carboloy. Simons, as usual, was much more difficult to deal with, and it was only after extended negotiations, and GE's request of Krupp "to strongly bring as much pressure as possible on Mr. Simons," that Simons capitulated, and sold his business, along with a covenant not to compete, for a sum close to a million dollars. The indenture was signed July 14, 1937.

After careful consideration of the exhibits and the testimony, I am forced to conclude that the elimination of Prosser and Simons from the hard metal field was not due to a sense of fair play on the part of GE, but was designed to overcome their competition and to obtain an effective price control of hard metal composition in the American market. The most convincing evidence of this purpose is afforded by a study of the extended difficulties preceding the Simons contract. If Krupp could cut Simons loose without further ado, and if the GE-Krupp contract were not dependent upon the elimination of Simons, GE would have been able to come to an agreement much more rapidly, and would not have been obliged to make an expenditure of one million dollars. Other portions of the record confirm this view of both purchases.

The basic purpose of the arrangement is revealed by a statement made by Robbins in February, 1936. In his judgment, the most important advantage of the arrangement was this:

> "an effective price control on all merchandise would immediately be possible... I feel that in the next seven or eight years an effective price control on our part with the matter of new price arrangements entirely in our hands we can by careful selection and decision increase the profits to be taken from this business in a very substantial amount over our present operations."

At this point, it is fitting to discuss the activities of the Internal Electric Company (IGE).

IGE was a wholly owned subsidiary of GE, charged with complete responsibility for GE's foreign business, except that Canada remained within the jurisdiction of GE. In this capacity, IGE administered the restrictions on exports which had been agreed to between GE, Carboloy, and Krupp. Further, IGE was responsible for negotiations with other foreign companies concerning cemented carbides. Thus IGE had a contract with Allgemeine Elektricitaets-Gesellschaft (AEG), a German corporation, which, essentially, was a pooling and territorial division of patent rights. This contract applied to cemented carbides from 1927 until October 7, 1938. The manner in which this contract operated is illustrated by a letter written by Scudder of IGE to Jeffries in January, 1935. AEG was negotiating with Siemens, another German corporation, concerning a proposed Siemens license of its hard metal composition patent rights to Krupp, in return for an increase of royalty which Krupp would pay Siemens, and Siemens would then divide the same with AEG pursuant to a contract between them. In order to carry out this proposal, it was necessary for AEG to have IGE's approval. IGE withheld its assent.

The Manufacturing Licenses

Each of these had certain provisions in common. Each license recited that it was subject to the basic Krupp-GE contract. The licensee was granted a non-exclusive right to make, use, and sell hard metal compositions in the United States, its territories and possessions. The licensee agreed not to sell at a price or on terms of sale more favorable than Carboloy's own price and terms, so long as such articles or their processes of manufacture continued to be covered by any of the licensed patents. The licensee further agreed not to violate the spirit of this provision. The licensee's books were to be open to inspection by the licensor. The licensee also stipulated that if it should fail to abide by the contract terms it would, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, pay damages equal to the total value of the articles involved at the price specified in the manual. The licenses were personal and of restricted assignability. The licensee admitted the validity of the patents licensed or to be licensed, except as invalidity should be determined in a suit between other parties.

It seems hardly necessary to set forth the history of each of these licenses in the fullness of detail presented by the record. In general, it may be said that Carboloy issued a license only when it felt it to be expedient, and then did so under such restrictive provisions as could be negotiated.

In 1932, Dr. Schwarzkopf, a German inventor, came to America to exploit a cemented carbide called Cutanit, for which a patent application had been filed in this country in 1930. The Cutanit material was perhaps the first titanium carbide that was offered to the trade, and its efficiency, at least for "light cuts" on steel, was decidedly greater than that of any material then made by Carboloy, or its licensees.

The licensees were much upset over the competition thus threatened, and were anxious that Carboloy obtain rights which would enable them to make use of this material. Carboloy itself was extremely worried. On October 7, 1932, Jeffries wrote Ludlum Steel that Carboloy's first objective was to obtain complete patent rights on Cutanit, and its second objective, if the first could not be obtained, was to put Cutanit under price control. By November, Jeffries was thinking of offering Schwarzkopf a limited license. "This, apparently, would clear up the whole patent situation and put everything under price control and, I believe, leave us and our licensees in a preferred position in the field."

In October of 1932, the licensees had a meeting at which it was decided that, if it were necessary to pay a considerable sum in order that all might have rights to Cutanit, the licensees would absorb a portion of the cost in the form of additional royalties for the use of Cutanit. Finally, in April of 1933, the license was signed.

The Cuttings Corporation, Schwarzkopf's concern, was licensed to make, use, and sell hard metal composition under 18 listed patents and 14 listed applications belonging to Carboloy, and under any improvements thereto to which Carboloy might subsequently acquire patent rights. However, hard metal composition was given a restrictive definition, being confined to material containing 16% or more of titanium, or other members of the same chemical family, but not including tantalum or tungsten. The royalty rate was 16.15 cents per cubic centimeter of hard metal composition. The Cuttings Corporation granted Carboloy an exclusive U. S. license under six listed applications, and any patents to issue thereunder, Cuttings retaining the right to practice these inventions. Carboloy could sublicense any of its own licensees to the Cuttings patents. Cuttings was to receive 16.15 cents per cubic centimeter for material produced under its patents. Cuttings expressly agreed not to export.

The Fansteel and Eisler licenses were both granted after Carboloy had filed infringement suits against these concerns.

The Cuttings Company apparently refused to remain within the terms of its restrictive license. In early 1938, Robbins wrote Krupp that Carboloy would sue if the Cutanit people continued to violate their agreement, a decision in which Krupp heartily concurred. Carboloy also took notice of the fact that Cuttings was apparently suffering some financial troubles. Nevertheless, no suit was instituted. Instead, a new and broader license was negotiated. Cuttings was permitted to manufacture not in excess of 750 pounds of material per year, "not containing more than 2 per cent by weight of any one, or any combination of titanium, vanadium, zirconium, boron, and silicon" and was licensed without any quantity restriction on material containing more than 2 per cent of such ingredients.

Two devices were employed to keep the licensees working together. Formal meetings of the licensees, to which Prosser and Simons were invited, were held from time to time. In the early thirties, especially, these meetings were held monthly or bi-monthly. The evidence does not clearly establish what business was transacted on these occasions. No records were kept of the proceedings. It was admitted, however, that prices, and price changes, were discussed. The defendants maintain, nevertheless, that in no instance did they ever reach an agreement with the licensees on what the price should be, although they do not deny that one of their prime purposes in these meetings was to hear the licensees' opinions on prices.

The other device was the Cemented Carbide Supervision Bureau. The purpose of the Bureau was to police the prices at which carbides were sold, and to insure that they conformed to the manual. Carboloy itself was not infrequently caught in a violation, and it, too, had a fine assessed against it. During the first year and a half, expenses above fines collected were prorated by agreement among the licensees. Carboloy began to operate the Bureau in July, 1932. It thereafter continued, however, as a "nonpartisan" instrument for the protection of the price line in the interests of all the manufacturers.

The Infringers

As already noted, manufacturing licenses were granted to three alleged infringers—American Cuttings Alloys, Fansteel, and Eisler Electric. American Cuttings Alloys was threatened with an infringement suit, and was induced to give a three months option to Carboloy. The other two were actually sued, although the actions were never brought to trial. The defendants claim that the American Cuttings Alloys and Fansteel licenses were issued to avoid patent litigation, and that the Eisler license was issued because Laise, of the management of that company, could not effectively be restrained by means of any court order, but would create a new corporation and resume competition.

In addition to Simons and Prosser, and these three alleged infringers, the licensed family, from time to time, was harassed by competition from smaller manufacturers. In all, the record shows fourteen such competitors. The striking feature of the record is that, although the first suit was filed in 1930, the patents were not judicially considered until 1940. This came about in the case of General Electric Co. v. Willey's Carbide Tool Co., supra. The patents on which plaintiff then relied were the Schroter patents, Hoyt, and Gilson. Judge Tuttle held each of them to be invalid.

The delay in reaching an adjudication of the patents was due to a number of reasons: In some instances, GE deliberately refrained from instituting suit. On one occasion, a suit was dropped for the reason that the defendant discontinued business. On another occasion, the litigation came to an end when the defendant took an agency license. As to some of the others, the evidence for defendants was that one was dropped because another was pending. The Cleveland Automatic Machine Co., suit was terminated by a consent decree, holding the patents valid and infringed, but with no accounting or costs, because the Marvel Rare Metals Co., suit was pending. That suit was not pursued because the Super Tool Co., suit was pending. One of the reasons that suit was not urged was the pendency of the case against Tool Metals Co. This case was not diligently prosecuted because counsel were pressing for trial in the Super Tool case. This last was the suit which terminated in the Eisler Electric Co., license, Super Tool being a subsidiary of that concern.

A third group of infringers should be mentioned. These were Ford and General Motors, two large users who made or threatened to make their own material in order to get lower prices. Although Jeffries stated that suit against Ford was contemplated at one time, the record indicates that the real purpose of the licensees was to sell material to Ford, and not to sue him. The same is true as to General Motors.

[Sherman Act]

With this resume of some of the factual circumstances of the case, attention should here be given to Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

It will be appropriate first to discuss the application of Section 1 of the Sherman law, and then to consider the three counts of the indictment that are laid under Section 2. Count 4 of the indictment charges a conspiracy in violation of Section 1. It is horn-book law that decision in a case such as this may turn on an evaluation of "the whole picture, not individual figures in it." U. S. v. Pullman Co., 50 F. Supp. 123, 135 (D. C. Pa., 1943); U. S. v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324, 357, 1912; American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 147 F. 2d. 93, 106 (C. C. A. 6, 1944). This rule of evaluation as a whole may apply to patent anti-trust cases as well. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. U. S., 226 U. S. 20, 41, 48, 1912; National Harrow v. Hench, 83 F. 36, 38 (C. C. A. 3rd 1897); Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) v. U. S., 283 U. S. 163, 1931; U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 333 U. S. 364, 401, 1948. A patentee may not use his patent to transcend what is necessary to protect the use of his grant. Patent rights when "pushed to evil consequences" are well within the restrictive provisions of the Sherman Act.

In making appraisal of a particular set of facts, a Court need not find that specific practices violate the law. It may take into account, as suggested above, the ultimate result of the sum total of the circumstances revealed by the evidence. Following this process, it is my conclusion that the General Electric Company and its co-conspirators are revealed by the proof before me to have been guilty of a large number of specific illegal practices, and that these illegal practices, as disclosed by the record as a whole, condemn the scheme that the parties had in mind. First of all, I shall discuss the indicia of illegality, and I shall then set forth the reasons which lead me to reject the various defenses on which I am asked to acquit the defendants.

A cross licensing of patents providing that one licensee would grant sublicenses and fix selling prices which all would follow

In United States v. Line Material Company, 333 U. S. 287, 1948, it was held that such a cross-license violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act although one of such patents dominated the other, so that the latter could not be practiced without a license from the holder of the dominant one. The Krupp-GE license and three of the manufacturing licenses cross-licensed patents. At best, these were improvement patents, and not competing basic patents. The Firth-Sterling and Ludlum contracts did not cross-license then existing patents, but did cross-license future patent rights to be acquired by the licensees. I have no doubt that these agreements also came within the rule of the Line Material case. Cf. also U. S. v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 276, 1942.

Defendants contend that to apply the Line case, or United States v. U. S. Gypsum Company, 333 U. S. 364, 1948, rehearing denied 333, U. S. 869, 1948, both of which were decided on March 8, 1948, would be to violate the prohibition against ex post facto laws contained in Article 1, Section 9 of the Constitution. In the first place, such prohibition applies only to statutes, and not to judicial decisions. Ross v. Oregon, 227 U. S. 150, 1913; Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309, 1915. Secondly, these opinions did not overrule any prior decisions of the Court, and there is thus absent the element of reliance which has seemed to some courts to justify extending only prospective application to an overruling decision. State v. Longino, 109 Miss. 125, 67 So. 902, 1915.

Manufacturing licenses providing for price control over unpatented products

As I have noted, the manufacturing licensees sold both hard metal composition material and hard metal composition products, that is, the raw material or parts, and the finished product. With a few exceptions, these products were unpatented. The Carboloy Company felt that if it did not fix the price of the finished product, it would be unable to maintain price control over the carbide component. Manufacturing licensees and manufacturing agents it was believed would take a loss on their labor or material costs in order to depress the final price. Consequently, Carboloy made a careful study of what actual material and labor costs should be for the production of price-fixed products, and required that the final selling price reflect these estimated average costs. By this device it was possible to fix a uniform price for all sellers, though costs actually varied between them. So long as the complicated formulae of the price manual were correctly computed, the minimum prices would be identical to the penny. As already noted, this did not apply to so-called "particular tools," although even for such tools the agency contract said that the labor supplied was for the account of the principal.

The Government contends that the true purpose of this arrangement was to prevent price competition in the tool line among the licensed family. A finding on the real purpose of the defendants is not required here since, whatever the purpose, such an arrangement is illegal. Individual practices within the scope of the patent grant are condemned only if "pushed to evil consequences." But there can be no justification for fixing the price of an unpatented product. A patentee may not employ his patent to restrain trade beyond the scope of his grant. Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661, 1944. As was stated in that case, "The necessities or convenience of the patentee do not justify any use of the monopoly of the patent to create another monopoly." Permissible price control can not be protected by price control on an unpatented item. Cf. U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 1940; U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., supra.

The license agreements now before the court provide that the licensee would follow Carboloy's prices "so long as such articles or their processes of manufacture continue to be covered by any patents within the license." While this circuit had been in conflict with others on whether product price-fixing on the basis of process patents was justified, Straight Side Basket Corp. v. Webster Basket Co., 82 F. 2d 245 (C. C. A. 2nd. 1936); Barber-Colman Co. v. National Tool Co., 136 F. 2d 339, (C. C. A. 6th, 1943); Cummer-Graham Co. v. Straight Side Basket Corp., 142 F. 2d 646, (C. C. A. 5th, 1944) cert. den. 323 U. S. 726, 1944, Judge Learned Hand suggested in U. S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, 438 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1945) that this circuit considered the problem to be "in flux."

Licensing on condition that the licensee or agent should assign or cross-license future patent rights

The Carboloy Company ensured for itself access to any patent rights which any of its manufacturing licensees or agents might subsequently acquire. In the case of the manufacturing licensees, Carboloy was either automatically licensed, or was required to be licensed on request, to any such patent rights. In the majority of cases, these licenses, in effect, were exclusive. The agency contracts required the agents "upon request of the Company at any time," to "assign to the Company, without further charge, all such inventions and applications for United States patents which relate to cemented hard metal carbide or similar material or to the manufacture thereof, and the Agent shall receive back without further charge, full, free, non-exclusive, non-divisible, non-transferable licenses. . ." Both licensees and agents were obligated to do everything possible to secure the rights to any inventions made by any of their employees. In fact, though some patents were offered by agents, Carboloy never accepted any.

In Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp. v. Stokes & Smith Co., 329 U. S. 637, 1947, a clause requiring the licensee to assign over to the patentee any patentable improvements that might be made by the licensee was held not to be illegal, per se, but the Supreme Court remanded the case for an anti-trust finding. On remand, the arrangement was upheld. 161 F. 2d 565 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1947). In that case, however, the contracting parties were two relatively small concerns and were without an extensive control of market conditions.

This point of view is also set forth in the opinion in U. S. v. National Lead Co., 63 F. Supp. 513, decided by Judge Rifkind in 1945, and affirmed by the Supreme Court in 1947, after the Transparent-Wrap case was decided. 332 U. S. 319. In the lower court opinion, one of the factors relied upon in condemning the arrangements between the leading producers in the field, was that they

> "applied to patents not yet issued and to inventions not yet imagined. . . . They embraced acknowledgment of patent validity with respect to patents not yet issued, nor applied for, and concerning inventions not yet conceived . . ."

The trade position of the present defendants closely approximates that of the defendants in the National Lead case, and not that which is found in the Transparent-Wrap case. The employment of basic patents, or patents which may be basic, to compel the transfer of future patent rights, is condemned per se, when practiced on a scale such as is found in this suit. With regard to this question, there would seem to be no difference between licensing a patent with such a condition, and granting an agency conditional on such a clause.

Resale price fixing

Resale price-fixing is illegal even when the product is patented. Bauer & Cie. v. O'Donnell, 299 U. S. 1, 1913. In part, at least, Carboloy and the manufacturing licensees distributed their products through the medium of agents. The government contends that these agents were really purchasers, and that Carboloy's control of their selling prices amounted to resale price fixing. Defendants maintain that true agencies had been established. In my judgment, the evidence justifies a finding that the arrangement violated the prohibition against resale price fixing for two reasons: (a) the agents were really purchasers, and (b) the agents were competitors within the meaning of U. S. v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 1942.

Some of the carbide which the agents obtained from the manufacturing licensees was in the form of completed tools, dies, wear resistant parts, etc. The agents resold these articles without performing any work on them. The remaining portion of the supply obtained from the manufacturers was not in the form of completed usable products. Of this, a part was sold to users who made their own finished products. The remaining portion the agents themselves manufactured into finished products. As already noted, the labor going into such manufacture was estimated to be from one-half to two-thirds the value of the completed tool. Perhaps most of the tools thus made and sold by the agents were particular tools, that is, tools on which the price was not fixed for the completed product. However, many of them were not particular tools, but were price-fixed tools.

Having already held that it was unlawful for Carboloy to fix the price of a completed tool manufactured by one of the licensees who also manufactured the carbide material, I likewise conclude that when the manufacturing was performed not by a manufacturing licensee, but by a so-called agent, the arrangement was contrary to the statute.

The agency contracts contained the following clause: "The Agent is authorized to supply for the account of the Company such incidental labor and material as may be required to transform articles consigned hereunder into articles of any of the types and classes specified in Article 7 hereof." Article 7 specified the various categories of finished products the agent was allowed to make.

On cross-examination Robbins could not explain why the word "incidental" was used. He said: "I suppose you would say it is more than incidental. I don't know how the incidental word happened to get in there." As a matter of fact, there was little or no difference between the operation of the "agency" system, and the manner in which control was exercised over the manufacturing licensees. Both groups followed Carboloy's estimates of average labor and material costs. These costs did not reflect the actual costs of the individual agent any more than they reflected the costs of the individual manufacturing licensee. Carboloy kept no record and exerted no control over the labor and costs of the agents. The agency arrangement, as applied to the manufacturing operations of the agents, was a pure sham, designed to invoke the rule of U. S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, 1926, but came short of falling within its protection because of the nature of the agents' activities.

The agents did not perform manufacturing operations on all the material they handled. As already noted, they sold to users some unfinished material and some finished products. Having held that the unfinished material obtained for manufacture was purchased and not consigned, it perhaps follows that the unfinished material that was sold as such was also purchased, and not consigned, because the supplying manufacturing licensees never knew whether the material was to be used in the one way or the other. There are additional reasons for finding that in this respect also these were only simulated agencies.

The standard of U. S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476 is not perfectly applicable on these facts. The article with which the court was there concerned was the incandescent lamp, which is a standard item. Cemented carbide blanks and finished products are not standard products. They come in a great number of sizes, shapes, and grades. Since an agent who ordered a large stock on consignment might never get an order for a great proportion of the items he stocked, the practice, with a few exceptions, was for agents to carry extremely small stocks, if they carried any at all. The common procedure was to obtain an order from a user before ordering the necessary carbide or carbide product from the manufacturing licensee.

Despite this circumstance, some agents did carry stock. Although there is evidence supporting the contrary view, I have concluded that the agencies were feigned, even with respect to material on which the agent in fact performed no manufacturing operations. Perhaps the controlling factor is that normally the principal, Carboloy or a manufacturing licensee, never knew whether or not the agent carried consigned stock. The real difference between this case and the 1926 one is that there the parties regulated their conduct by the contract, while here the so-called agency contracts were mere forms. Thus in both cases the contract provided a discount for prompt servicing. In the lamp case, the discount was truly for prompt servicing; here it was for purchase. The lamp agents remitted to the company the proceeds of lamps actually sold. The carbide agents paid for their "consignments" whether or not they had already sold the material. While the lamp agents kept stock in accordance with the directions of General Electric and sold only to those to whom the principal permitted them to sell, the carbide agents ordered what they wished and sold to whom they wished. Further, the principals in the lamp case kept accurate records of the outstanding consigned stock, and often shifted such stock from one agent to the other. The carbide agents were originally required to file monthly reports of their sales, but, beginning in 1937, it was provided that "The Agent's remittances to the Company will be regarded as reports of the sale or withdrawal (for use in the agent's plant) of the consigned articles remitted for." The early provision for a semi-annual inventory was dropped in 1934. Also dropped in 1934, was the provision that upon termination of the agency all unsold goods were to be returned to the principal. While the 1937 contract did provide for a monthly report showing "all articles on hand on the last day of the previous calendar month covered by consignment invoices dated more than 60 days prior to the last day of the preceding calendar month and not sold or withdrawn for the Agent's own use," the Carboloy Company did not make any checks or inspections to verify these reports. As Robbins testified: "We rely 100 per cent upon the agent's integrity."

Furthermore, these agencies, whether sham or not, are condemned by the rule of the Masonite case, supra.

In the Masonite case, patent differences were settled when formerly competing manufacturers all became del credere agents of the Masonite Company. The agents discontinued the manufacture of hardboard, and devoted themselves to the sale of hardboard manufactured by Masonite. The Court assumed that true del credere agencies had been established, but found, nevertheless, that the arrangement offended the Sherman Act.

In some instances, alleged infringers of one or more of the patents here involved settled their differences with Carboloy by becoming agents of one of the manufacturing licensees, but this was not true of the great bulk of the agents. They never were competing manufacturers of carbide material as the agents in Masonite were competing hardboard manufacturers. Defendants claim that for this reason the Masonite rule does not apply. I think this would be so, were it not for the fact that the agents were competing manufacturers of completed carbide products.

Undoubtedly a high percentage of the agents were established tool manufacturers. If there was to be any competition in the sale of completed products, these companies had to be the source of such competition.

By adopting the agency scheme Carboloy made it impossible for such competition to exist, except for particular tools. The evidence fully establishes that the Carboloy policy was not to permit the sale of carbide material to tool-makers for fabrication into non-particular tools for resale unless the tool-maker signed an agency agreement, and this policy was strictly enforced. The manufacturing licenses obligated the licensees to observe Carboloy's "prices, terms and conditions of sale" and "general sales rules." Further, several of the licenses explicitly required the licensee to observe the agency distribution system. The 1930 price manual also required it, and subsequent price manuals prohibited the sale of material for resale and not for the customer's own use. Consequently there can be no doubt that in this case, in contrast with the 1926 GE case, there was agreement to adopt the agency scheme.

In these circumstances, the agency system was just such an arrangement of potential competitors as was condemned in the Masonite case. There the patents were assumed to be valid, and hence the agents were no more free to compete with Masonite than the agents here were able to compete with the licensed manufacturers in the sale of carbide. The Masonite case turns on the loss of potential competition, and the present facts illustrate the evils at which that ruling was directed. There was no price competition in finished carbide products, except for particular tools. If the licensed family wished to utilize the resources of the numerous established tool-makers who became agents, it should have done so by selling them the blanks and nibs for fabrication.

In Masonite the conspiracy was between the patentee and the agents. Here the impetus behind the plan was the assent among Carboloy and its manufacturing licensees. The agents were more the victims of the scheme, than its instigators. However, I do not believe that this distinction is controlling. The gist of the Masonite case is that a patentee may not exploit his patent in this way. How willing his potential competitors may be, is immaterial. That the manufacturing licensees joined with the patentee but aggravates the restraint. It is enough that such agency contracts were made, that the agents knew they could not obtain the material without signing the contract, that they knew the contract imposed the price restraint, and that the contracts were made with potential competitors with a purpose and in a manner designed to prevent effectually price competition in the distribution of carbide products. Cf. the discussion below of Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, 1939.

Boycott

The Masonite case condemns the agreement among these potential competitors. I have mentioned the assent with the licensees to show that no tool-maker could obtain material without signing the contract. But this agreement among the licensees is also condemned itself, as an illegal boycott to prevent competition in the sale of unpatented tools. The Sherman Act condemns not only the horizontal boycott directed against a competitor's business, Fashion Originators' Guild v. FTC, 312 U. S. 457, 1941, but also the vertical boycott, directed at controlling the terms and manner of distribution of the subject article. U. S. v. Frankfort Distilleries, 324 U. S. 293, 1945; Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. U. S., 282 U. S. 30, 1930; U. S. v. First National Pictures, Inc., 282 U. S. 44, 1930.

Territorial division of markets

Under the 1928 Krupp-GE contract, Krupp was permitted to export, though the Government contends it tacitly agreed not to do so. The evidence shows that, in fact, GE only exported to South America and refrained from other exports. These export-import rights were cancelled in the 1936 contract, Krupp not being any longer permitted to import, or GE to export, except that Canada became GE territory. Of the five principal manufacturing licenses, four contained express prohibitions against exports, and a similar clause was contained in all the agency contracts.

It is the contention of the defendants that the German patents were basic, and that all the other patents were for improvements thereon. Assuming this to be so for the moment, and assuming that the parties might have been permitted to enter into a cross-licensing contract which divided territories as the 1936 contract did, what was done here would still be without justification. The 1928 contract licensed the basic patents. The 1936 contract was not really a cross-license at all but more a naked division of markets among two former competitors. Krupp had been importing into the United States; in the future it would refrain. GE had exported to some extent; in the future it would refrain. What Judge Rifkind said in the National Lead case, supra, is applicable here:

> "No citation of authority is any longer necessary to support the proposition that a combination of competitors, which by agreement divides the world into exclusive trade areas, and suppresses all competition among the members of the combination, offends the Sherman Act."

Purchase of competitors

Carboloy purchased Morris Simons' Union Wire Die Company, and Thomas Prosser & Sons, for two reasons: (1) to effectuate that 1936 agreement removing Krupp from the U. S.-Canadian market, and (2) prevent the competition which Simons was able to offer aside from his position as a Krupp outlet. Krupp agreed to the new contract only on condition that satisfactory arrangements were made with these two outlets. Further, Simons was manufacturing on his own account, and had available other sources of supply, so as to constitute a threat to Carboloy aside from his relations with Krupp.

The test governing the legality of such purchases was set forth in the recent opinion in U. S. v. Columbia Steel, 334 U. S. 495, 1948, rehearing denied 334 U. S. 862, 1948:

> "The same tests which measure the legality of vertical integration by acquisition are also applicable to the acquisition of competitors in identical or similar lines of merchandise. It is first necessary to delimit the market in which the concerns compete and then determine the extent to which the concerns are in competition in that market. If such acquisition results in or is aimed at unreasonable restraint, then the purchase is forbidden by the Sherman Act. In determining what constitutes unreasonable restraint, we do not think the dollar volume is in itself of compelling significance; we look rather to the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, whether the action spring from business requirements or purpose to monopolize, the probable developments of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market. We do not undertake to prescribe any set of percentage figures by which to measure the reasonableness of a corporation's enlargement of its activities by the purchase of the assets of a competitor. The relative effect of percentage command of a market varies with the setting in which that factor is placed." (Page 527).

The record before me does not disclose the total amount of business done by Carboloy and the manufacturing licensees. There is no doubt, however, that Simons and Prosser did a proportionally large business. For the seven years preceding the sale, the two companies between them sold an average of 935,000 grams per year; in 1935 Carboloy sold 2,106,951 grams. According to defense counsel, total sales for the country in that year amounted to about 4,500,000 grams. Carboloy profits before taxes in 1936 were $406,422.48; Simons' profits were estimated to be at least $254,000 per year, and perhaps as high as $482,000.

The decisive factors are to be found in the fact that Simons was the only source of competition outside the price-fixed area, and that the prime intent and motive of the purchases was to remove this competition. Purchases under such circumstances, and for such a purpose, violate the law. Cf. U. S. v. Parker-Rust-Proof Co., 61 F. Supp. 805, D. C. Mich., 1945.

Direct price fixing

The defendants engaged in direct price-fixing. I have already discussed in some detail the reasons why I have concluded that such agreements were reached with Morris Simons prior to the purchase of his business. That such agreements were not watertight contracts, so that it was not expected that Simons would abide 100 per cent by the Carboloy price manual, does not save them. U. S. v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U. S. 392, 1927; U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co, supra. It is enough that the purpose and effect of such agreements was to preclude the possibility of a trade war that would have forced the Carboloy prices to come tumbling downward. Carboloy threatened such a war, but it never materialized. What prevented it was some degree of understanding between the parties.

Direct price-fixing was also revealed in the matter of the Heald Company. Heald manufactured tungsten carbide gauges which it was free to price as it wished. Appleton, of the Heald Company, wrote to Robbins, stating: "We are therefore passing them (these prices) along to you and if you feel that these prices are in line with your costs you will pr~bably want to quote prices somewhat sim .." Robbins thereupon instructed his salesman to tell Appleton that "we would be pleased to adhere to those prices." He cautioned, however, "that you will note from Mr. Appleton's letter that he is apparently not familiar with the antitrust laws," and instructed the salesman not to reply in writing but to tell Appleton "verbally" that Carboloy would adhere to Heald's prices. Robbins' explanation on the stand for this conduct was that Heald was a good customer, and that rather than antagonize a good customer Carboloy was willing to go along on the prices.

Adequate proof was also presented of two other practices which come within the price-fixing rule laid down in U. S. v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co., supra. At one time, the sales manual prohibited the sale of large blanks, but this prohibition was subsequently removed because there was actually some industrial use for such pieces. However, at least one of the licensees developed a practice of selling large pieces to be cut into smaller ones. Since the manual prices were proportionally much lower for such large pieces, substantial savings could be effected in this way. Carboloy was much concerned about this threat to the price structure, and a gentleman's agreement was reached prohibiting the sale of large pieces for cutting. Similarly, it was always possible to offer price competition by submitting to a user a line of carbide products containing a smaller carbide content than the other sellers were offering. Since the manual was based on the size, a lower price could be offered without offending the manual. This practice was regarded as "chiselling," and it is clear from the record that much was accomplished in the way of reaching understandings to prevent it.

Defendants, by their counsel, have frankly admitted that they were monopolists, and that they sought to prevent price competition. In the course of the trial, Mr. Merritt said:

> "It is true that having acquired this grant of monopoly from the Germans it became our property, our monopoly, and we set out to treat it as our monopoly and prevent all competition in the field covered by the patents so far as price monopoly is concerned and to cut out all competition by way of unlawful infringement of our monopoly."

The evidence clearly establishes that a price-fixing motive was largely responsible for many of the activities of the defendants. At the time of the first American Cuttings Alloys contract, Jeffries wrote Firth that "our first objective would be to bring the Cutanit material under price control." Regarding the Eisler license, Robbins wrote: "We feel that the signing of our license with Mr. Laise solved a serious price competitive problem." Robbins believed the most important advantage of purchasing Simons' business was that "an effective price control on all merchandise would immediately be possible." Discussing the second American Cuttings license Robbins wrote: ". . . As a result of these proposals we have been able to work out a license which puts him under price control on anything he manufactures, and as part consideration he has agreed to give up all of the contracts which he has temporarily negotiated with General Motors, Chrysler, and Ford. These contracts were designed to sell material lower than our manual prices and thereby seriously upset our apple cart." The record is replete with many similar declarations.

The eight illegal practices already discussed, especially when supplemented by the evidence to which reference has just been made, and when taken along with the character of the various licenses and agencies, and the course of dealing among all the parties, establishes beyond a reasonable doubt that defendants conspired among themselves to achieve a monopoly, and to fix prices in violation of the Sherman Act.

In Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, 1939, the Supreme Court laid down the test for proving a conspiracy under Section 1:

> "While the District Court's finding of an agreement of the distributors among themselves is supported by the evidence, we think that in the circumstances of this case such agreement for the imposition of the restrictions upon subsequent-run exhibitors was not a prerequisite to an unlawful conspiracy. It was enough that, knowing that concerted action was contemplated and invited, the distributors gave their adherence to the scheme and participated in it. Each distributor was advised that the others were asked to participate; each knew that cooperation was essential to the plan. . . .

"It is elementary that an unlawful conspiracy may be and often is formed without simultaneous action or agreement on the part of the conspirators. . . . Acceptance by competitors, without previous agreement, of an invitation to participate in a plan, the necessary consequency of which, if carried out, is restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act. . . ."

This reasoning applies to patent pool cases. In U. S. v. Masonite, supra, it was said there could be an unlawful conspiracy although:

"The District Court found that in negotiating and entering into the first agreements each appellee, other than Masonite, acted independently of the others, did not require as a condition of its acceptance that Masonite make such an agreement with any of the others, and had no discussions with any of the others. It is not clear at what precise point of time each appellee became aware of the fact that its contract was not an isolated transaction but part of a larger arrangement. But it is clear that as the arrangement continued each became familiar with its purpose and scope."

See also U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., supra, applying the same reasoning where manufacturing licenses were involved.

In this view of the case, it is not necessary to find that defendants pooled independent competing patents. The monopolistic price-fixing scheme in which they were engaged is illegal regardless of the relation between the patents they accumulated. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. U. S., supra, was a patent pool case in which it was found that the law was violated although the patents infringed. In U. S. v. Line Material, supra, the same result was reached in a cross-licensing case, and the rule also is found in Transparent-Wrap Machine Co. v. Stokes & Smith, supra, which was remanded for an anti-trust finding. Standard Oil (Indiana) v. U. S., supra, and U. S. v. National Lead Co., supra, are both patent pool cases in which it was held that the law had been violated. Neither case stressed the question of whether the patents were independent basic patents or not. In the Masonite case the court did not rely on the relation of the patents, noting rather that "The presence of competing patents serves merely to accentuate that tendency (to impair competition) and to underline the potency of the forces at work." A patentee may exploit his patent, but only by lawful means. He may, for instance, issue a manufacturing license in which he fixes the price to the patented manufactured product. But there are many paths of exploitation he may not pursue, including the eight that have heretofore been discussed. Moreover, he may not combine with others in a scheme, the purpose and intent of which is to clamp price control on an entire industry, horizontally and vertically, including patented and unpatented products.

It is not a significant distinction that, practically speaking, in the present case the industry was born with and at the time of the initial license. As stated in U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 247 U. S. 32, 53, 1918, "neither the letter of the law nor its purpose 'distinguishes between strangling of commerce which has been born and preventing the birth of a commerce which does not exist.'" Because the manufacturing licensees perhaps could not have entered the field without acceding to the Carboloy plan—and I make no finding on what the licensees really thought of the validity of the Carboloy patents—it does not follow that they could combine with Carboloy in a scheme the primary purpose and objective of which was industry-wide price control, which scheme was effectuated [by] a whole series of unlawful practices.

[Defenses]

I turn now to the defenses urged upon me.

The major defense is based on the manner in which the indictment was framed. Paragraph 13 of the indictment sets forth ten "purposes and objects" in general terms. Paragraph 13 (j) refers to "restraints, limitations and restrictions . . . as hereinafter set forth." Paragraph 14 in 19 subparagraphs occupying 24 printed pages sets forth the "means and methods" with particularity.

Defendants argue that paragraph 14 is to be included with paragraph 13 as stating the crime charged, and in particular, that paragraph 14c is part of the crime charged. 14c charges guilty knowledge, to wit: "As the defendants well knew, hard metal compositions made in accordance with certain of the letters patent contributed by General Electric and Carboloy to said patent pool would not have infringed the patents contributed thereto by Krupp insofar as they may have been valid," with similar averments concerning the Krupp patents and the sublicensees' patents.

Defendants draw two arguments from these pleadings. First, it is said that the indictment charges a ten-purpose conspiracy, and that therefore it is necessary to prove almost all those purposes. "Of course, if just one of the ten purposes has not been established it might be a close question. But failure to establish nine of the purposes hardly leaves any room for doubt. The crime proven differs in character from the crime charged." It is claimed that at most one of the ten purposes was proved. Secondly, defendants claim that there can be no conviction without proof beyond a reasonable doubt that defendants "well knew" that they were combining independent competing patents. "If the Government is to prove a case it must prove that these defendants well knew that these patents were independent competing patents, and the first thing to prove is that fact. It is not so important as to whether they were or not as it is whether these defendants well knew that."

The first argument may be summarily rejected. Of the ten purposes alleged, defendants claim that seven would be lawful if incidental to a lawful patent monopoly, and of another, they say it would be lawful in part if protected under a proper patent structure. I have concluded that defendants did not, to use their term, possess a lawful patent structure, but an unlawful one. The activities complained of, dominating trade and commerce, pooling patents, limiting the number of persons who could engage in the trade, excluding others, fixing prices, forbidding export, etc., were sufficiently proved.

The second argument is the nub of the defense. It is my feeling that I cannot accept either of the two reasons that are presented in its support.

(1) The first reason is that paragraph 13 is not sufficiently particular to withstand demurrer, and that consequently resort must be had to paragraph 14c. Defendants admit that such resort is permissible under U. S. v. Waltham Watch Co., 47 F. Supp. 524 (S. D. N. Y. 1942). This is a non sequitur. Because paragraph 14 must be referred to for particularity, it does not follow that 14c must be referred to. Paragraph 14 occupies 24 pages.

(2) The second reason is that under the law of indictments 14c must be proved because it was averred. In support of this contention defendants cite two types of cases, i. e. (i) Surplusage cases in which an averment was stated with greater particularity than is necessary to an indictment, and it was held the averment had to be proved. U. S. v. Howard, 20 Fed. Cases 388 (No. 15,403), C. C. Mass., 1837; U. S. v. Brown, 24 Fed. Cases 1265 (No. 14,666) C. C. Ohio, 1843. (ii) A type of variance case, i. e., those where the proof made out a crime contained in the averments of the indictment, but not the particular statutory crime made out by all the averments of the indictment. Butler v. U. S., 20 Fed. 570, (C. C. A. 8, 1927), and perhaps U. S. v. Eisenminger, 16 F. 2d 816, D. C. Del., 1926.

In this circuit the law is not so strict in either surplusage cases, U. S. v. Lesser, 66 F. 2d 612, 1933; U. S. v. Groopman, 147 F. 2d 782, 1945, cert. den. 326 U. S. 745, 1945, or in this variety of variance cases. U. S. v. Satuloff Brothers, 79 F. 2d 846, 1935; Maresca v. U. S., 277 F. 727, 1921, cert. den. 257 U. S. 657, 1922. Moreover, the problem here is not one of variance between different statutory crimes at all. The question is not which one of two statutory crimes defendants are charged with, but what facts the government relies on to make out the statutory crime charged. It might well be a fatal defect to charge a crime under one section of the Criminal Code and prove a crime under another section, while it would not be fatal to prove a crime stated under a named section by proving all the particular averments except one. Kutler v. U. S., 79 F. 2d 440 (C. C. A. 7th, 1935) cited by defendants, does not hold otherwise. Moreover, the Supreme Court in cases involving variance of the proof within one crime has indicated its approval of the more liberal rule. Cf. Berger v. U. S., 295 U. S. 78, 1935; Kotteakos v. U. S., 328 U. S. 750, 1946, and has also done so in a case which may be construed as involving the surplusage problem. American Medical Assoc. v. U. S., 317 U. S. 519, 1943.

Aside from the argument that guilty knowledge must be proven because pleaded, it is claimed that no substantive crime under the Sherman Act can be made out without such proof. I do not accept this view. The rules developed in Section 1 cases which do not involve patents apply as well to cases which do involve patents. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. U. S., supra; National Harrow Co. v. Hench, 83 F. 36, (C. C. A. 3rd, 1897); U. S. v. Masonite, supra; U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., supra. The rule for Section 1 cases has been stated as follows: "In suits under Sec. 1 charging a restraint of trade, it is settled by authoritative pronouncement of the Supreme Court that wrongful intent need not be established by the Government and that good motives will not condone action in contravention of the statute." Handler, TNEC Monograph Number 38, page 78, footnote 81. See also U. S. v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 1913; U. S. v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 1912; Board of Trade of the City of Chicago v. U. S., 246 U. S. 231, 1918; U. S. v. General Motors Corp., 121 F. 2d 376, (C. C. A. 7th, 1941) cert. den. 314 U. S. 618 (1914); U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U. S. 131, 1948; U. S. v. L. C. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100, 1948. Further, there are patent pool cases under Section 1 containing explicit pronouncements on the question. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., v. U. S., supra; U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., supra; Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) v. U. S., supra.

To the defendants' contention that it is harsh to punish them by a criminal conviction for their reliance on the grant given them by the Patent Office, the answer must be that the Patent Office grant did not permit them to conspire together to abuse their patent rights in the manner revealed by this trial. See Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373, 1913.

Section 2 of The Sherman Act

So far as I am aware, this is the first criminal patent pool anti-trust case. It is therefore the first patent case in which the distinction between the various crimes within Sections 1 and 2 of the Act becomes of some importance.

The indictment charges three offenses under Section 2: conspiracy to monopolize (Count I); attempt to monopolize (Count III); and monopolization (Count II). I will first discuss Count II, monopolization.

There may be considerable difference between the issues in a monopolization case which does not involve patents, and one which does. In a case not concerned with patents the first, and perhaps major, fact issue, is whether the defendants possessed the necessary percentage of market control to constitute a monopoly. Assuming that the requisite size is present, a number of legal questions present themselves which have only been conclusively answered in very recent Supreme Court pronouncements. These include the problem of whether actual exclusion of competitors is necessary, whether it is necessary to achieve the monopoly position by unlawful means, whether the monopoly position, once achieved, must have been abused, and what the requisite intent is. See U. S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, (C. C. A. 2d 1945); American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 328 U. S. 781, 1946.

On the other hand, depending upon the type of patents, in a patent case there may be no question of whether defendants monopolized. Here the patents defined a whole new industry. The defendants admit to monopoly. The defense is that the monopoly was lawful, coming within the protection of the patent grants. Decision must turn on whether or not the patent privilege has been misused. Although in a non-patent case exclusion, unlawful achievement, and abuse of monopoly power may not need to be proved, elements of such conduct are necessary in a patent case before Section 2 may be invoked.

At the same time, Section 2, in a patent case, is distinguished from Section 1 by the same criteria which distinguish the two sections in a non-patent case. In a famous footnote in U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 1940, Justice Douglas wrote: "But the crime under Sec. 1 is legally distinct from that under Sec. 2 . . . though the two sections overlap in the sense that a monopoly under Sec. 2 is a species of restraint of trade under Sec. 1." In the Tobacco case Justice Burton wrote: ". . . we have here separate statutory offenses, one a conspiracy in restraint of trade that may stop short of monopoly, and the other a conspiracy to monopolize that may not be content with restraint short of monopoly. One is made criminal by Sec. 1 and the other by Sec. 2." See also U. S. v. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100, 1948.

Assuming patents of the variety here in suit, which define a whole new industry, in this type of case the distinction between the sections is the degree of success attained by way of these unlawful business practices. The present defendants used their patents as a lever to win domination over the entire cemented carbide business. The total absence of price competition, coupled with defendants' price-fixing practices, are the sure signs of monopoly control. Competitors were excluded by purchase and by boycott, prices on unpatented products were fixed, resale prices were fixed, future patent rights were forced into the pool, world markets were divided, and on occasion prices were fixed beyond the scope of any asserted patent protection. Furthermore, many other restrictive practices were employed, such as a Supervision Bureau and numerous threats of infringement suits. It can not be argued that defendant's position in the industry was thrust upon them, and I do not think it can be maintained that their position was justified by the patents they owned. Section 2 does not permit a patentee to use his patents to combine an entire industry under his price-fixing regime, unlawfully controlling both the manufacture and distribution of the patented product. See U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., supra. Defendants did unlawfully monopolize.

It is established that to make out the crime of actual monopolization it is not necessary to prove specific intent "in the sense in which the common law used the term," but "It is sufficient that a restraint of trade or monopoly results as a consequence of a defendant's conduct or business arrangements." U. S. v. Griffith, supra. See U. S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra. Turning now to Count III, the attempt to monopolize, the important distinction is that here specific intent is necessary. As was said in Swift & Co. v. U. S., 196 U. S. 375, 1905, at page 396: "Intent is almost essential to such a combination and is essential to such an attempt." See also U. S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, at page 431.

Thus while there can be actual monopolization without any purpose or intent to create a monopoly, so long as "monopoly results as a necessary consequence of what was done," U. S. v. Paramount, supra, there can be no attempt without a specific intent to create a monopoly. What this means is that defendants must have done certain things with monopoly as their objective, which, if performed without the requisite intent, but with complete success, would have resulted in actual monopolization. This also serves to distinguish the required intent from that guilty knowledge that they were pooling independent competing patents which defendants argued had to be proved before they could be convicted under Section 1. It is not necessary that they were aware they were pooling competing patents, so long as they knew what they were doing, and did it with the intent to create a monopoly. Since I have found that defendants' primary purpose was a system of price-control that ranged over the entire cemented carbide industry, and since I have also found them guilty of actual monopolization, it is clear that they must also be found guilty on the count of attempted monopolization. In addition to the factors, already discussed, and which support these conclusions, confirmation thereof is to be found in several practices appearing in the record, and which were not relied upon as indicia of illegality under Section 1. These include the private policing system, U. S. v. Eastman Kodak, 226 F. 62, 78 (W. D. N. Y. 1912), the numerous infringement suits and the discriminatory practices complained of in paragraph 24f of the indictment, which avers that Carboloy discriminated even against its co-conspirators, a charge which was substantially supported by the record.

Court I requires the same proof of intent as does Count III, except that it is a conspiracy count while Count III charges attempt. I find this count also sufficiently well established, for reasons apparent from the conclusions reached in the other three crimes.

The Supreme Court has ruled in American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., supra, that conviction on all four counts does not involve double jeopardy. While that was not a patent case, I believe the reasoning is applicable in this prosecution. In the course of the opinion I have spelled out what I believe are the different elements going into the different crimes. No two are the same.

The Wilson Tariff Act

Court V charges violation of Section 73 of the Wilson Tariff Act of 1894, 15 U. S. C., Section 8. That section reads in part as follows:

> "Every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is declared to be contrary to public policy, illegal, and void when the same is made by or between two or more persons or corporations, either of whom, as agent or principal, is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States, and when such combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade, or free competition in lawful trade or commerce, or to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported into the United States, or of any manufacture into which such imported article enters or is intended to enter."

There is very little authority on the construction of the section, and none on the nature of the requisite intent. However, defendants have not argued that they may be acquitted on this count, although convicted under the Sherman Act counts, and I do not think there can be any doubt but that the statute applies. As stated in U. S. v. General Dyestuff Corp., 57 F. Supp. 642, S. D. N. Y. 1944, the statute "makes explicit the prohibitions of the Sherman Act in the field of foreign commerce." See U. S. v. Sisal Sales Corp., 274 U. S. 268, 1927.

It follows that I must adjudge each of the defendants to be guilty of each and all the charges made against them.

[¶ 62,319] United States v. National City Lines, Inc., American City Lines, Inc., Pacific City Lines, Inc., Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, General Motors Corporation, Phillips Petroleum Company, Mack Manufacturing Corporation, Standard Oil Company of California, Federal Engineering Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Central Division. No. 6747-Y Civil. October 12, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Change of Venue—Transfer of Cause—Balancing of Conveniences.—A civil action seeking injunctive and other relief against the defendants for violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act was instituted in 1947, and was dismissed in that year on the ground of forum non conveniens. On appeal to the Supreme Court, the dismissal order was reversed on the ground that the doctrine of forum non conveniens does not apply to civil actions under special venue statutes. After the return of the mandate to the district court in California, defendants moved to transfer the cause to the district court in Illinois. The motion is granted under a provision of the revised Judicial Code, effective September 1, 1948, which reads: "For the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought." It is held that the provision was intended to apply to antitrust actions, and that the discretion to apply the provision should be exercised under the facts in the instant case, inasmuch as the Supreme Court, in reversing the dismissal, did so solely on the ground that forum non conveniens did not apply to antitrust actions, and did not undertake to determine the sufficiency of the facts. Upon a balancing of conveniences, it is found that transfer of the cause is warranted.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1610.101, and prior opinions reported in CCH Trade Cases, 1946-1947, at ¶ 57,617, and at ¶ 62,259.

For plaintiff: William C. Dixon, Special Assistant to the Attorney General; Jesse R. O'Malley, Edwin U. Driscoll, Alex D. Fred, Special Attorneys.

For defendants: O'Melveny & Myers, Jackson W. Chance; Cosgrove, Clayton, Cramer & Diether, T. B. Cosgrove, Leonard A. Diether; Wright & Millikan, Charles E. Millikan; Finlayson, Bennett & Morrow, H. T. Morrow; Haight, Trippet & Syvertson, Oscar A. Trippet; Lawler, Felix & Hall, John M. Hall, all of Los Angeles, California; Hodges & Reavis; Pantaleoni & Downey, Martin Jacobs, New York, New York; Henry M. Hogan, Detroit, Michigan; Joseph Thomas, Akron, Ohio.

I

The Motion To Transfer

[Digest] This civil action seeking injunctive and other relief against the defendants for violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act was instituted on April 10, 1947. On September 29, 1947, I granted the motion of the defendants to dismiss the action on the ground that our district was an inappropriate forum for its maintenance and prosecution. On direct appeal to the Supreme Court, pursuant to the special provision of the Judicial Code, that Court reversed the order upon the ground that the doctrine of forum non conveniens does not apply to civil actions of this character, in which the choice of venue is determined by Section 12 of the Clayton Act.

After the return of the mandate to this Court, the defendants moved to transfer the cause to the district court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division,—the district to which a companion criminal prosecution against nine corporate defendants involved in this action and seven individuals, originally instituted in this district, was transferred by me on August 14, 1947. The transfer was made under the provision for change of venue contained in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

The motion to transfer the present proceeding is made under a new section of the revised Judicial Code, which went into effect September 1, 1948.

The Government resists the motion and has filed a countermotion to strike the motion to transfer.

II

Change of Venue

In the main, the position of the parties to this litigation is the same as to both motions. For, in the last analysis, it relates to the applicability or non-applicability of the new provision for the transfer of civil actions to other districts to an action of this character, which reads:

"For the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought." (Emphasis added)

The clause is part of a section which the Revisers have entitled "Change of Venue," and which also allows the transfer of civil actions from one division to another, and the trial of any civil action at any place within the division.

A consideration of this enactment calls for certain general and almost obvious observations.

We are not dealing with an amendatory statute, but with a revision of the entire Judicial Code, the first one attempted since 1911. This aim was set forth with thorough emphasis in the Reports of the Senate and House Judiciary Committees.

The Report of the House Committee on the Judiciary, dated April 25, 1947, which accompanied the Resolution, stressed the object of the resolution "to revise, codify and enact into law." It called attention to the changes in the national scene which "make imperative this revision of the Judicial Code." (Emphasis added)

In attempting to discern the purpose of the enactment, we are, at the outset, confronted with the proposition that it created a new procedural scheme, namely, a method of transferring cases from one district to another, which did not exist before. This was accomplished not by amending existing law, but by including the particular provision in a single piece of legislation, the object of which was to enact a revised code dealing with the jurisdiction of, and procedure in, the courts of the United States.

In endeavoring to achieve this object, the Congress strove to attain uniformity and simplicity of expression. The various circumlocutions, which had heretofore been used to designate the varieties of actions, were abandoned and the phrase "civil action" was substituted. The reviser's notes, which the Committees made a part of their report to the two Houses of the Congress, reveal this intention. Indeed, this appears in the very section on change of venue. The phrase "any civil action" is given as the equivalent of "any action, suit, or proceeding of a civil nature" used in subdivision (b). And the reviser's notes leave no doubt that this was their intention in the entire revision.

III

The Manner of Changing Venue

The aim of the Congress in enacting the section allowing transfers from one district to another, and from one division to another, was to cover the entire field and set down the circumstances under which such transfers could be had, either by the consent of the parties, or upon a proper showing.

The aim of the Congress was (1) to establish, through this revision a single procedural scheme to cover all incidences of procedure in the federal courts not provided for by the Rules of Civil Procedure; and (2) to apply the provisions, except where otherwise indicated, to all civil actions, of whatever nature.

The aim being procedural, it is axiomatic that, unless the contrary appears, the provisions are applicable to pending proceedings.

The principle which forbids application of new enactments or revisions to pending actions applies to statutes dealing with substantive rights only. At times, it is difficult to draw a distinct line between substantive law and procedure. And many procedural changes have, historically, had a lasting effect on substantive rights, as, for instance, the rule allowing the jury to judge both the law and the facts in criminal libel. Nonetheless, matters of venue and change of venue are, as a rule, mere incidences of procedure. And statutes relating to remedies and procedure operate retrospectively.

IV

Change of Venue in Antitrust Cases

These premised, we come to the nub of the controversy, which is:

Does the provision for transfer apply to the present action?

I am of the view that it applies to all pending civil cases, as readily appears from the legislative history and the legal principles just considered. And it applies to antitrust cases unless we can find in the decision of the Supreme Court in the present case language indicating that the special venue statute in antitrust cases, as the Supreme Court construes it, immunizes such actions against a general transfer enactment of the type under consideration, as the Court has held it protects it from the impact of the doctrine of forum non conveniens.

So it becomes imperative to analyze the language of the Court in its proper setting. The gist of the majority opinion is contained in the statement of Mr. Justice Rutledge:

"When, therefore, Congress came to face the problem of making the nation's antitrust policy more effective through the Clayton Act's provisions, that body was not confronted with any problem of abuse by plaintiffs in selecting venue for antitrust suits; nor was it concerned with any question of providing means by which the defendants in such suits might defeat the plaintiff's choice to serve their own convenience. Congress' concern was quite the opposite. It was to provide broader and more effective relief, both substantively and procedurally, for persons injured by violations of its antitrust policy. Insofar as convenience in bringing suit and conduct-trial was involved, the purpose was to make these less inconvenient for plaintiffs or, as was said in the Eastman opinion, to remove the 'often insuperable obstacle' thrown in their way by the existing venue restrictions.

"To have broadened the choice of venue for the reasons which brought about that action, only to have it narrowed again by application of the vague and discretionary power comprehended by forum non conveniens would have been incongruous, to say the least. In making the change Congress did not authorize plaintiffs to institute civil antitrust suits in the newly specified districts, merely in order to have them transferred back for trial to one of the districts comprehended by #7. It intended trial to take place in the district specified by the statute and selected by the plaintiff." (Emphasis added)

The Government sees in the last italicized sentence a declaration that the institution of the action, and the consequent right to choose venue, imply the absolute right of trial in the place chosen.

We need not consider the contention of the defendants that the legislative history does not support the Court's interpretation. We cannot make our own gloss in a matter in which the Supreme Court has spoken so recently. We must give to the language used its full implication. So doing, however, we must bear in mind the theoretical basis of the opinion.

It was the Government's contention before the high court, as it was before me, that the doctrine of forum non conveniens does not apply to actions instituted under special venue statutes. Mr. Justice Jackson, who wrote the majority opinion in the Gulf and Koster cases, adopted this view as flowing from those decisions.

Under this view of the law, the doctrine of forum non conveniens would apply only to cases arising under general venue statutes. It would not apply to those brought under special venue statutes, such as the Federal Employers' Liability and the Antitrust statutes. But the majority opinion did not so hold. It did not choose to establish a principle to serve as a guide in all cases. It preferred to hold merely that the history of antitrust legislation shows an intent not to limit the choice of forum by the application of the doctrine of forum non conveniens. And it interpreted its prior decisions as applying the same principle to the Federal Employers' Liability statute, in the light of its particular history. So the language of the majority opinion, when read in this perspective, means simply that, because of the legislative history of antitrust laws, the court declined to allow the application to them of the doctrine of forum non conveniens. So, any implication of absolute choice of place of trial in antitrust cases must be read in the light. The stand proof against interference by the application of the doctrine of forum non conveniens. But are they impregnable to the legislative power of the Congress which granted the choice of forum in the first instance? I think not. The legislative history of the revision of the Judicial Code shows that the intent of the Congress was to overcome the absolute choice in cases of this character, in which the court's interpretation had resulted. And the "legislative intent" they sought to overcome was their own as found by the Court.

One other observation. It is a fundamental rule of statutory interpretation that a statute general in its language is to be given general application. No exceptions will be read into a statute of such character. The legislative history of the revision of this portion of the Judicial Code evidences an intention to follow the accepted pattern in this respect. This also appears from the use of the adjective "any."

"Any" covers everything in a category or class. Its use excludes exceptions unless they are specifically given. For its primary meaning is "one indefinitely, or indifferently, out of a number." And that the aim was to use the word in that sense is evident from the legislative history already given. This is also apparent from the fact that whenever, in this revision, the Congress intended either the whole revision or a specific provision in it, not to apply, they made specific exceptions from the generic phraseology. An example of this is found in Section 2680, 28 U. S. C. The revisers, after recodifying the Tort Claims Act, specifically excluded from its operation twelve distinct types of claims, which would have been included under the general terminology of the section.

So the whole scheme of the revision stands in the way of a construction which would exempt this special type of action from any of the incidences of procedure codified. More, this interpretation is not inconsistent with the aim of the special venue provision in antitrust cases. It stands unimpaired. The Government still has the choice of venue.

However, the court may, under conditions prescribed by the Congress and "in the interest of justice," change the venue.

On the whole, therefore, there is no legal or factual reason for not giving full effect to the intention of the revisers in making this section applicable to antitrust actions.

V

The Discretionary Power To Transfer

There remains the question: Do the facts warrant the granting of the motion?

Before answering this question by reference to the facts, we consider briefly the meaning of the transfer provision.

The wording of the clause is different from that of the corresponding provision in the criminal rules. The latter calls for a transfer "if the Court is satisfied that in the interest of justice, the proceeding should be transferred." The section under consideration provides for transfer "for the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice." While both sections use the identical phrase "in the interest of justice" as a criterion, the civil transfer rule uses the phrase in juxtaposition with the convenience requirement. But the meaning of the phrase is the same in both instances.

In the present case, the conclusion was arrived at after a balancing of conveniences. This is of the very essence of the judicial process in any matter which calls for the exercise of discretion.

The transfer provision which concerns us here depends on discretion for its application, as do the kindred provision in the criminal cases and the doctrine of inconvenient forum.

Having determined that the transfer provision is applicable to this litigation, our next inquiry is whether the discretion should be exercised under the facts in the case.

The factual situation did not change while the matter was before the Supreme Court. It is the same as existed when I granted the motion to dismiss. The affidavits filed with the prior motion have been refiled and adopted for the purposes of the present motions. The Government has filed no additional affidavits. But it was agreed at the hearing that the additional facts contained in the affidavit of Jesse R. O'Malley, one of counsel for the Government, in opposition to the affidavit of Denis B. Sullivan, filed in opposition to the Government's motion for an early trial date, might be considered. The affidavit merely recites that a transfer to the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, might result in delay because of the crowded condition of the calendar of that court. It points to the fact that the transfer of the criminal case had resulted in delay.

Speculations as to possible time of trial are not determinative of the matter. Regardless of the condition of their calendars, district courts have it within their power to advance cases when public interest so requires. And if the need for immediate action is brought home to the judges of the District Court of Illinois, I am certain that they will arrange for as early a trial of this cause as could be had in this district. In the instant case, the Government could very readily have avoided the delay which resulted from its direct appeal from my ruling by refiling the case immediately in the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, especially when the defendants had stipulated that they would not seek a dismissal if so refiled.

I do not question the Government's right to seek the alternative of appeal in order to avoid a decision which it disapproved and which it did not desire to become established as an unchallenged precedent. However, in balancing the conveniences, we must exclude situations such as delay brought on by the voluntary act of the Government when it had another alternative.

I need not repeat the summary of the affidavits given in the two previous opinions. Having re-examined them, and having considered the additional affidavits and facts in the record to which my attention has been called by both parties, I am of the view that the convenience of the parties and witnesses require the transfer of this case in the interest of justice.

Anticipating that such conclusion might be based on a balancing of conveniences, counsel for the Government intimated at the hearing that no resort could be had to such method in resolving the conflicting contentions. I agree that when the section speaks of the convenience "of parties and witnesses," it means that the convenience of both sides must be examined. But I know of no way of applying the requirement to a particular situation than by viewing the facts from both standpoints and giving preference to those which, in the court's opinion, preponderate to such an extent as to make the choice in the interest of justice. Unless the right to choose between conflicting facts or assertions exists, the court could never determine a motion under this section on the facts. For if the mere assertion by the Government of its own convenience and the convenience of its witnesses were sufficient to stay action, we would be confronted with a power to paralyze judicial discretion, beside which the devastating effect of the historic liberum veto ("Nie Pozwalan"—"I don't permit") of the Polish nobles in their Diet (1572-1697) would dim into insignificance.

As I cannot so interpret the meaning of the section, I conclude that the showing in this case warrants transfer to the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.

This conclusion is reached on the conviction that the Supreme Court, in reversing the order of dismissal, did so solely on the ground that the doctrine of forum non conveniens did not apply to antitrust actions. It did not undertake to determine whether the findings were supported by the evidence or there was abuse of discretion. The opinion of Mr. Justice Rutledge very pointedly states that the sole question which the Court was deciding was the applicability of the doctrine to cases of this character.

The sufficiency of the facts, therefore, not having been determined by the Supreme Court, their revaluation is before me. On such revaluation, I conclude that the motion to transfer should be granted.

[¶ 62,320] Edison Products Corporation v. National Pressure Cooker Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 39-205. July 1, 1948.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Unfair Competition—Service of Process—Motion to Quash.—A motion by defendant to quash service of process upon it as to a cause of action for unfair competition is granted where the service of process pursuant to Section 12 of the Clayton Act is insufficient to support the jurisdiction over that defendant as to that cause of action.

See the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2032.25.

For plaintiff: Benjamin, Galton & Robbins.

For defendant: Cleary, Gottlieb, Friendly & Cox.

[Nature of Action]

COXE, D. J.: The service of process on the defendant National Pressure Cooker Company in Wisconsin, pursuant to Section 12 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A., § 22), is insufficient to support the jurisdiction over that defendant as to the second cause of action for unfair competition. This was the holding in Sure-Fit Products Co. v. Fry Products, 23 F. Supp. 610, and I adhere to that decision.

[Motion Granted]

The motion of the defendant National Pressure Cooker Company to quash the service of process upon it as to the second cause of action is granted.

[¶ 62,321] Combs, Inc. v. Brooklyn Mills, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 45-424. October 19, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Motion to Add Third Party Defendants—Motion for Summary Judgment—Motion to Limit Examination.—In a private suit for damages under the antitrust laws, permission to add as a third party defendant a corporation which is a resident of the district in which the suit was brought is granted, for the purpose of granting complete relief. Process in suits under the antitrust laws may be served on a corporation wherever it is an inhabitant or may be found. However, defendant is denied permission to add as a third party defendant a corporation which does not appear to be resident in the district. Addition of such a party would extend the jurisdiction of the court. A motion for summary judgment is denied where it appears that defendant's answer denies almost every allegation in the complaint, and where the papers submitted in support of the motion do not dispose of the issues of fact created by the pleadings. A motion to limit the examination is denied as to the question regarding the type of damage, if any, suffered by plaintiff, and as to a specific inquiry as to the amount and extent of defendant's use of the alleged infringing articles.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.261, 1640.291.

Memorandum

CONGER, J.: Motions by the defendant (1) for summary judgment under Rule 56, F. R. C. P., (2) to add additional or third party defendants, and (3) to limit the examination of defendant's president.

Motion by the plaintiff to compel the defendant's president to answer certain questions.

[Summary Judgment Denied]

The defendant's answer denies almost every allegation in the complaint. The papers submitted in support of the motion for summary judgment in no way dispose of the issues of fact created by the pleadings, and, in fact, do not purport to do so. Motion for summary judgment is denied.

[Addition of Defendant Allowed]

The defendant presents no ground, under Rule 14, F. R. C. P., for impleader of third party defendants. However, the relief sought against Diadem, Inc. seems proper under Rule 13 (h) of the F. R. C. P. in connection with the counterclaim and for the purpose of granting complete relief in the determination of the counterclaim herein. For that reason, Diadem may be added as a party defendant. Proceeds in suits under the antitrust laws may be served on a corporation wherever it is an inhabitant or may be found. 15 U. S. C. § 22. Therefore, permission to add Diadem, Inc. would not extend the jurisdiction of the Court. But the defendant has shown no basis for adding Sawyer without extending the jurisdiction of the Court. He does not appear to be resident here. Motion granted in part and denied in part as indicated. See Sure-Fit Products Co. et al. v. Fry Products, Inc., 23 F. Supp. 610.

[Limitation of Examination]

The motion to limit the examination is denied as to the first disputed question. The second disputed question is very general and calls for a general answer. It asks for the manner and means in and by which defendant was damaged. It does not call for figures. It calls for the type of damage, if any, suffered by plaintiff. I see no reason why this question should not be answered. The third disputed question presents a rather serious problem. Defendant's objection to answering this question was based on the theory that such a question would only be proper for an accounting proceeding. I do not so regard it. Defendant has interposed a defense of laches herein [paragraph 12 of the answer]. I presume defendant in support of that defense intends to rely to some extent upon its own use of the alleged infringing articles. That being so, plaintiff is entitled to inquire specifically and not generally into the amount and extent of that use for the limited purpose only of preparing to controvert the defense of laches. Under those circumstances the third disputed question is proper. Names of customers, of course, need not be given in connection with this branch of the examination.

[¶ 62,322] Burnham Chemical Company v. Borax Consolidated, Ltd., Pacific Coast Borax Company, United States Borax Company, and American Potash and Chemical Corporation.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. No. 11,766. October 27, 1948.

Upon Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Treble Damage Suit—Injury Pursuant to Conspiracy—Statute of Limitations.—A cause of action for damages for violation of the antitrust laws accrues when the damage is sustained, and the statute of limitations begins to run at that time. The state statute applies where federally created rights to sue are involved. An action predicated upon damages allegedly suffered and proven to have occurred between 1924 and 1929 is barred by the California statute of limitations. Under that law, the only damages for which a recovery may be had are those which accrued and were suffered within three years prior to the filing of the complaint, and the record reveals that none were shown during this period. The judgment of the district court holding the cause barred is affirmed.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.435.

For appellant: Sterling Carr, San Francisco, California; Thurman Arnold, Washington, D. C., of counsel.

For appellees: Maurice E. Harrison, Moses Lasky, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, San Francisco, California; Gurney Newlin, Paul Sandmeyer, Newlin, Holley, Sandmeyer & Tackabury, Los Angeles, California; Joseph W. Burns, Fulton, Walter & Malley; Michael F. McCarthy, Oliver & Donnally, all of New York, New York; Charles A. Beardsley, Oakland, California.

Before MATHEWS, HEALY and BONE, Circuit Judges.

[Nature of Action]

BONE, Circuit Judge: This is an appeal from a final judgment of the district court entered on May 9, 1947, dismissing appellant's action for treble damages brought in July, 1945 under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, (15 U. S. C. A. 15). Appellant, a Nevada corporation, brought the action for damages claimed to have been sustained by it as the result of a conspiracy or conspiracies by appellee corporations. The prayer of the complaint is for an award of money (trebled) as damages, for costs, interest and attorneys' fees with a general prayer for other and further relief deemed fit and proper.

Appellant was organized in 1921 for the purpose of producing borax in the State of California and in its complaint asserts that up to 1933 it had invested $1,168,564 in the development of leased property and a patented process. The great length of the complaint makes an adequate summary within reasonable limits of space an impossible task. Many of its 84 paragraphs deal with historic facts concerning the borax industry and charge generally that prior to 1929 world trade in borax was dominated by certain of the appellees, a domination which still exists as a result of unlawful monopoly practices of appellees.

It is alleged generally that appellees conspired in violation of Federal antitrust laws and committed certain overt acts in 1925 and 1928 in pursuance of the conspiracy or conspiracies which caused the damage to appellant and which gave rise to this action; that all of the acts done and performed by appellees or some of them were done with the intent and purpose of destroying appellant's activities; that due to said intents, purposes and acts of appellees, the appellant had been damaged in the sum of $1,168,564.

The complaint alleges that for the reasons therein stated the plant and business of plaintiff were shut down and closed on or about January, 1929 since when its struggle for financial rehabilitation was unsuccessful, the resultant loss and damage to appellant being the amount above named, which is the exact amount demanded as a judgment against appellees in the prayer of the complaint.

Reference appears in the complaint, in the evidence at trial, and in the briefs on appeal, to what was declared to be appellees' last "overt act" this act being generally spoken of as "The Little Placer" matter. This was a reference to appellant's efforts (continuing up to filing of suit) to secure a Government lease on a certain tract of California land containing kernite deposits, and it claimed that its efforts before a Government agency were there thwarted by resisting activities of appellees. (See footnote 13.) Relevance of this matter arises from the fact that at the trial the court asked appellant's counsel what (overt) act of appellees occurring after 1929 resulted in damage to appellant, aside from the futile attempts to secure a Government lease on The Little Placer. Appellant's counsel responded that nothing else had occurred; that appellant did not allege any other incidents in its complaint and that it could prove no damage from The Little Placer incident.

Appellant has at all times contended that its complaint is cast in a form which, while demanding treble damages for injuries to a private suitor resulting from violation of the Federal antitrust laws, is nonetheless a suit in equity and not an action at law. Here and below appellees have wholly disagreed with this argument. It presents an important question and we think it necessary to dispose of the issue at the outset by rejecting appellant's theory regarding the character of its pleading, a view that we think finds support in the cases.

An examination of the complaint convinces us that its allegations clearly indicate an intention to state a claim for relief under the Sherman Act. They describe and charge injuries or damages, some sustained in 1924 or 1925, and others sustained as a result of acts (price cutting in 1928 by appellees) which forced appellant to close its plant and business in 1929. We think there can be no doubt that appellant's action should be regarded as an action at law for damages predicated upon a liability created by statute, and not a civil action for equitable relief, as appellant would have it. The form in which the complaint is cast does not serve to disguise or change the basic nature of the claim upon which appellant rests its demand for relief. Where (as here) a private suitor asserts a claim under the Sherman Act for damages, the gravamen of the complaint is not the conspiracy. The damage for which a recovery is allowable is the damage which the suitor has suffered as the result of acts of the conspirators directed against him and committed in the course of the conspiracy and in furtherance of its purpose. (See cases cited by appellees, infra.)

In order that the proceedings in the lower court may be better understood they should be considered in light of the issues raised by the complaint and the material contentions of appellant urged both in that court and on this appeal. For that reason we first present these contentions at some length together with cases cited by appellant as supporting them, since this will serve clearly to delineate and clarify the material issues presented to and decided by the lower court. Appellant's contentions are lengthy and are necessarily summarized.

Appellant's Contentions

(1) Under the doctrine of Holmberg v. Armbrecht, 327 U. S. 392, this is an action in equity; (2) the conspiracy itself was a fraud upon appellant giving rise (thereby) to a claim for relief for fraud; (3) appellant was injured by this fraud (the conspiracy itself); (4) appellant's cause of action is founded on, and exclusively on, the 1929 conspiracy and not upon overt acts; (5) because this is an action in equity the State statute of limitations is not applicable; (6) where a plaintiff has been injured by fraud (the conspiracy itself) and remains in ignorance of this fraud without any fault or want of diligence [1] or care on his part, the bar of the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered though there may be no special circumstances or efforts on the part of the party committing the fraud (of conspiring) to conceal it from the other party, (citing as authority Holmberg v. Armbrecht, supra); (7) in actions founded on conspiracy and where fraud and concealment are alleged the question underlying that of the bar of the statute of limitations is not whether plaintiff had "cause to believe" that conspiratorial action by defendants was responsible for his damage, but whether plaintiff had "knowledge" of the existence of the conspiracy (this because "cause to believe" is not synonymous with "knowledge") or, having been put on notice, whether plaintiff exercised reasonable diligence to acquire the "knowledge" giving rise to a cause of action;[2] (8) appellant did not know of the existence of the alleged conspiracy and was without means of ascertaining knowledge of such conspiracy until the Federal Government filed suit against most of appellees in September, 1944, (appellant states that the greater part of its complaint is a copy of the Government's complaint) therefore by reason of this ignorance, and its "discovery" of the fraud (through the filing of this 1944 Government suit), neither the statute of limitations, if applicable, nor laches began to run against appellant until this "discovery"; (9) the conspiracy here was a "continuing conspiracy" and it continued, so far as the statute of limitations is concerned, so long any further action (an overt act) was taken in furtherance of the conspiracy (citing as authority United States v. Kissel, 218 U. S. 601). Reference is also made to Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U. S. 640, and Fiswick v. United States, 329 U. S. 211; (10) "The Little Placer" incident was such an "overt act," completed in 1945; (11) its action although personal in form, is brought additionally as a representative of the public interest (see Neuman v. Bastian-Blessing Company, et al., 70 Fed. Supp. 447 (1947)), ergo, greater latitude should be shown toward it otherwise public interest will suffer.

As indicated above, these were the basic contentions of appellant advanced at the time of trial.

The Proceedings Below

Appellees made timely motions to strike portions of the complaint, as amended, and to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, and also because the action was barred by a California

[1] Whether the application of the statute of limitations or the doctrine of laches is concerned in a case where the plaintiff's right to damages is founded on a conspiracy must depend upon whether plaintiff had knowledge of the existence of the conspiracy, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have acquired such knowledge. Russell v. Todd, 309 U. S. 280; Benedict v. City of New York, 250 U. S. 321, 328; Holmberg v. Armbrecht, 327 U. S. 392.

[2] Holmberg v. Armbrecht, supra; Hansen v. Bear Film Company, 28 Cal. (2d) 154; Kimball v. P. G. & E. Co., 220 Cal. 203; Pashley v. Pac. El. Ry. Co., 25 Cal. (2d) 226, 231. Also see Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal. (2d) 412 and West v. Great Western Power Co., 36 Cal. App. (2d) 403. As supporting appellant's contentions of the action being deferred until discovery by the aggrieved party under Section 338, subd. (4) Cal. Code of Civil Procedure, see rule announced by the Ninth Circuit in Fleishhacker v. Blum, 109 F. 2d 543. On the ground that suspicion on the part of plaintiffs that defendants were violating the antitrust law, and even their belief that such was the fact, does not start the running of the statute of limitations under the doctrine announced in American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133; Hazel-Atlas Co. v. Hartford Empire Co., 322 U. S. 238 and Shawkee Mfg. Co. v. Hartford Empire Co., 322 U. S. 271.

three-year statute of limitations (Section 338 (1) of the California Code of Civil Procedure).[3] Appellees supported their motions by affidavits and appellant filed counter-affidavits. The parties entered into a written stipulation in which it was agreed that appellees' motions should (also) be treated and considered as motions for summary judgment, total or partial, under Rule 56, R. Civ. P. Appellant reserved the right to apply for a separate trial of the issue of the State statute of limitations or any other issue (under Rule 42 R. Civ. P.) in the event the motions were denied.

Being of the view that justice and the interests of the parties required that the issue of the State statute of limitations should be resolved preliminarily upon a separate trial (under Rule 42 (b) R. Civ. P.) before litigating the larger issues involved in the merits of the controversy, the court ordered (among other matters) that appellees file special answers setting up the defense of the statute of limitations. In this order the court also reserved decision on the motions to strike and dismiss the cause until this special issue was decided. (Rule 12 (d) R. Civ. P.)

Appellees filed such special answers whereupon appellant claimed that this special defense tendered an issue of fact and demanded (and the court ordered) a jury trial thereon. The court then formulated the special issue to be submitted to the jury, which reads as follows:

> "At any time from May 17, 1929, to October 10, 1939, did plaintiff know or have good cause to believe that its business had been theretofore damaged by acts of the defendants in violation of the Anti-Trust laws of the United States?"

Subsequently, a jury was duly empaneled and oral and documentary evidence received at a trial on this special issue of the statute of limitations, the evidence being almost entirely derived from the testimony of George B. Burnham, President and Director of appellant. At the conclusion of the testimony on April 3, 1947, all parties to the action moved for a directed verdict; the court, by a so-called "minute order" thereupon granted motion of appellees, withdrew the case from jury consideration (appellant tendering no objection when the court had previously indicated that it might later take this step) and dismissed the jury, announcing from the bench that the court would grant appellees' motion to dismiss the cause, and itself decide the issue.

Thereafter and on May 6, 1947, the court entered an order dismissing appellant's cause, with costs to appellees. Subsequently and on May 9, 1947, the court made and entered final judgment dismissing the cause with costs to appellees. By what is obviously an inadvertence, the judgment was made to recite that a directed verdict had been entered, whereas no such verdict was returned due to the procedure adopted by the court.

It is clear that the court elected to regard the oral testimony and the various documents, introduced at the jury hearing on the statute of limitations as supplementing the original affidavits filed in support of the motions for summary judgment, and (under the stipulation) as being in the same category and having the same force and relevance as the papers, depositions and admissions which may be employed under Rule 56 R. Civ. P. This posture of the case justified the court in so regarding this additional evidence, and the procedure it adopted appears to be both rational and in harmony with the spirit and purpose of the Rules of Civil Procedure. (See R. Civ. P. 43 (e).) Furthermore, we think that the state of the evidence was such that it was well within its right and its duty in disposing of the special issue of fact without submission to the jury.

The opinion expressed by the court when dismissing the jury[4] makes evident that if the case had been given to the jury and it

[3] "§ 338 [Within three years.] Within three years:

"1. An action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture.

* * * * * * *

"4. An action for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake. The cause of action in such case not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery, by the aggrieved party, of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake. [Enacted 1872; Am. Stats. 1921, p. 192; Stats. 1933, p. 878; Stats. 1935, p. 1673.]"

[4] "* * * The evidence was concluded yesterday, April 2nd. Only one witness testified in the case, the president of the plaintiff corporation, and all evidence on behalf of both the plaintiff and the defendants was elicited either from him or while he was on the witness stand.

"The plaintiff, at the conclusion of the evidence yesterday, moved that the court direct the jury to answer the special inquiry in the negative. The defendants separately moved that the court direct the jury to render a verdict on the special issue in the affirmative. The court had returned a verdict for appellant, the court would later have felt obligated to set aside the verdict and any judgment entered thereon and grant appellees' motions for summary judgment. Thus, where a party moves for a directed verdict, the court may discharge the jury without receiving a verdict, and, on timely motion, enter judgment as if a verdict had been returned in favor of the moving party. See Bluebird Taxi Co. v. American F. & C. Co., 26 Fed. Supp. 808; Ryan Distributing Corporation v. Caley, 147 F. 2d 138, 142; Cf. Domarek v. Bates Motor Lines, 93 F. 2d 522 (Rule 50 (b) R. Civ. P.)

Appellant asserts prejudice because the court did not make and enter findings of fact and conclusions of law, claiming that the judgment may not stand without the support of one or the other. Respecting the failure to make findings where the opinion of the trial court is before us, see Hazeltine Corporation v. General Motors Corporation, 131 F. 2d 34, 37. The opinion here provides a clear understanding of the basis of the decision below, and the absence of findings of fact and conclusions of law is not sufficient to justify a reversal in this case.

The court was fully persuaded that if the evidence then before it was taken as true, and all reasonable inferences favorable to appellant were drawn therefrom, this evidence would still lead a reasonable man impartially exercising his judgment, to conclude that it revealed an entire absence of any genuine issue in the case as to any material fact. (Rule 56 R. Civ. P.)

The merits of appellant's case were given so thorough an examination at the hearing on the special issue that the resultant judgment was not the product of mere trial by may and it should direct a verdict if the evidence is undisputed or if the evidence, even though it be conflicting, be so conclusive that the court, in the exercise of sound judicial discretion, should set aside a verdict in opposition to it. Brady v. The Southern Railway Company, 320 U. S. 476; Farr Company v. Union Pacific Railroad, 106 Fed. (2d) 437; National Mutual Casualty Company v. Eisenhower, 116 Fed. (2d) 891; Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company v. Snyder, 109 Fed. (2d) 469; Oklahoma Natural Gas Company v. McKee, 121 Fed. (2d) 583.

---

"It appears to the court in this case that the evidence upon the issue now before the jury is undisputed. All of the evidence shows both knowledge and good cause to believe on the part of the plaintiff during the period specified in the special inquiry, that its business had been damaged by acts of the defendants in violation of the Antitrust Laws. The statements of the president of the defendant corporation, who was the only witness in the case, that he had no knowledge or cause to believe, are opinions, and in the opinion of the court are therefore not proper evidence. However, even if the statements of the president of the corporation, who was the only witness, that he had no knowledge or cause for belief be considered as evidence, the court would still direct a verdict in the affirmative upon the special issue, because the evidence is so conclusive in favor of an affirmative answer upon the special issue that the court would set aside a negative reply by the jury to the special issue. Statements in writing and under oath by the witness Burnham, who was the managing president of the plaintiff, commencing in 1925 and continuing throughout the years to 1940, show without dispute a continued awareness and knowledge of the plaintiff's cause of action set out in the complaint. Not only that, but these writings make continuous claim as to the responsibility of the defendants for the loss and damage caused to the plaintiff's business. Consequently, no mere lip service to the contrary can rise to the dignity of creating a factual conflict for resolution by the trier of the fact. There has been no evidence in the opinion of the court of any fraudulent representation or concealment by the defendants of the plaintiff's cause of action which deterred the plaintiff from timely presentation of its claim in this court. The so-called Zabriskie and Emlaw conversations do not by any stretch of the imagination go beyond denials of the plaintiff's claim. In no sense do they reach the stature of fraudulent representations or concealment of such an affirmative nature as to in law be misleading to the plaintiff. Moreover, the evidence without dispute shows the plaintiff did not rely upon the statements made by these two men and hence there is no proof of any misleading character to be attributed to them.

* * * * * *

"* * * there has been a contention made by the plaintiff that the plaintiff made every effort and used every diligent procedure at its command to endeavor to obtain what it stated to be the necessary evidence in connection with its asserted cause of action. However, the law does not excuse an untimely presentation upon the ground that the party asserting the claim has been unable to obtain others to aid in the presentation of the claim. The burden of presenting an asserted claim in a legal proceeding always rests upon the party who has and asserts it, and he may not excuse untimely presentation because he has been unable to enlist the aid of others in order to bring about adjudication in the court of his claim.

"The plea of the statute of limitations is not a technical one. No court can disregard it because of a personal desire that someone may ultimately obtain recompense for an injury alleged to have been suffered. The statute of limitations plea is as much a component part of the scheme of administration of justice as is the theory that a just claim should be given consideration by a court. There are many reasons why claims must be timely presented. For the reasons the court has stated, the plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict will be denied and the defendants' several motions will be granted."

affidavits. We think that this judgment of the court was rested not only upon cases which clearly sustain it but it is also fortified by substantial and convincng evidence of such persuasive and controlling force as to compel its entry. (See Brady v. Southern Railway Co., 320 U. S. 476 and Farr Company v. Union Pacific Railway Co., 106 F. 2d 437, 439.) If the most critical appraisal of the procedure here adopted revealed that employing it worked an invasion of the substantive rights of appellant, or resulted in an injustice on it, we would unhesitatingly condemn it. (Rule 61 R. Civ. P.) It did not sacrifice the substance of justice to mere form; it produced exactly the same result as though the jury had rendered the directed verdict demanded by appellees. Nor was there error in formulating the controlling issue in the language employed by the trial court.

We note that in appealing from the judgment appellant stated the points on which it intended to rely but did not designate the absence of a formal (jury) verdict. Moreover, appellant did not object in the lower court to the omission of a formal verdict by the jury and does not here assign it as error in its specifications. The objection is technical and we fail to see how appellant is prejudiced by the procedure followed. We think that the absence of a verdict is an irrelevant fact which did not interfere with the disposition of the case on the merits of appellees' motion since on the merits the judgment of the court was clearly right. Nor are findings prerequisite to the validity of the judgment here entered on the motions for summary judgment.

Specifications of Error

On this appeal appellant specifies as error that the lower court (1) granted appellees' motion to dismiss; (2) entered the judgment appealed from; (3) made the pre-trial order that the special issue to be submitted to the jury be in the words we have quoted above; (4) held that the conspiracy charged in the complaint was not a continuing conspiracy; (5) held that the cause of action was barred by the California statute of limitations; (6) denied appellant's motion for a directed verdict and a new trial on the question of the statute of limitations and (7) refused to allow appellant to read the complaint to the jury.

Whether appellant's claims of error possess merit is best determined by laying them alongside the contentions of appellees and the cases they cite in support thereof. The arguments of appellees are also lengthy and must be summarized.

Appellees' Contentions [5]

A

(a) On the face of the complaint this is a civil (private) action for treble damages arising under the Federal antitrust laws (Sherman Act) and is therefore an action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture (see 338 (1) California Code section, supra); (b) as such, it is not based upon any conspiracy, continuing or otherwise, (which the Government might prosecute) which may have been charged since any conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce under these laws does not, in and of itself, give rise to a private cause of action; such a right is based solely upon the injury or damage caused a plaintiff pursuant to the conspiracy; [6] a right of action for violation of the Sherman Act is based, not on the conspiracy, but on the acts done pursuant thereto which damage a plaintiff; [7] (c) appellant's plea that the (mere) existence of the conspiracy and appellant's ignorance thereof is sufficient to invoke the rule that the statute of limitations does not begin to run on an action until this fraud was discovered, is lacking merit and wholly irrelevant: (d) the instant suit for damages under the Sherman Act is an action at law, and not a suit in equity as appellant contends; [8] (e) the test is the type of relief sought (here only money damages) and the mere use of the term

[5] Briefs on behalf of all of the appellees present substantially the same contentions and are considered as one brief.

[6] Nalle v. Oyster, 230 U. S. 165, (1913); Alexander Milburn Co. v. Union Carbon & Carbide Corp., 15 F. 2d 678 (4-Cir. 1926), cert. den. 273 U. S. 757; Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., 72 F. 2d 885 (4-Cir. 1934); Foster & Kleiser v. Special Site Sign Co., 85 F. 2d 742 (9-Cir. 1936), cert. den. 299 U. S. 613. (See also Hicks v. Bekins Moving & Storage Co., 87 F. 2d 583, 585; Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co., 330 U. S. 743, 753; Sullivan v. Associated Billposters and Distributors, 6 F. 2d 1000, 1009; Strout v. United Shoe Mach. Co., 195 Fed. 313, 317.)

[7] Foster & Kleiser Co. v. Special Site Sign Co., supra, and cases cited therein; see also rule applying in civil actions for violation of antitrust law, Alexander Milburn Co. v. Union Carbon & Carbide Corp., supra, and Momand v. Universal Film Exchange, 43 F. Supp. 996, 1007.

[8] State of Oklahoma v. American Book Co., 144 F. 2d 585 (10-Cir.); Fleitman v. Welsbach Co., 240 U. S. 27; Williamson v. Columbia Gas & Electric Co., 110 F. 2d 15 (3-Cir.). Cf. Venner v. Pennsylvania Steel Co., 250 Fed. 292, 296.

"fraud" in the complaint does not transform this suit into an equitable action since a suit for damages is a suit at law even though the cause of action be fraud (see Philpott v. Superior Court, 1 Cal. (2d) 512; Ambler v. Choteau, 107 U. S. 586 and 12 Cal. Jur. 785, 786); (f) appellant conceded at the trial that an action for damages under the Federal antitrust laws was not an action for fraud but urged that the charge of fraud tolled the statute of limitations under the doctrine of Holmberg v. Armbrecht, supra, (a class suit, i.e., a creditor's bill to recover on stockholder's liability under the Federal Farm Loan Act, where the action was necessarily one in equity and could never be at law);[9] (g) the applicable limitation statute is Section 338 (1) of the California Civil Code, supra; (h) this court in Foster & Kleiser v. Special Site Sign Co., 85 F. 2d 742 held that Section 338 (4) of the said California statute is not applicable to a treble damage suit; (i) the mere fact that the alleged conspiracy may have continued subsequent to the time of the alleged damage does not toll the statute of limitations or extend the time within which the action may be brought.[10]

B

(a) The antitrust laws do not contain a statute of limitations and the courts have held that the state statute applies where federally created rights to sue are involved, as in the case at bar;[11] (b) a cause of action for damages for violation of the antitrust laws accrues when the damage is sustained and the statute of limitations begins to run at that time;[12] (c) the instant cause is predicated upon damages allegedly suffered, and proven to have occurred, on two occasions, first in 1924 and 1925, when appellees allegedly conspired to have the Post Office Department issue a certain fraud order against appellant, and second, in 1928, when under the claimed conspiracy, appellees reduced the price of borax below appellant's cost of production and thereby drove him out of business at the end of 1928 or in January, 1929; (d) appellant charges in its complaint that at this time (January, 1929) and by reason of these acts it suffered "loss and damage" in the sum of $1,168,564 which is the exact amount demanded as a judgment for money damages in the prayer of the complaint; (e) information concerning "The Little Placer" incident admittedly was disclosed to appellant by the pleadings in certain Government suits filed in 1944, but, as indicated above, appellant frankly conceded at the trial that while "making an issue" of the incident as an "overt act," it could not prove any damages from it.[13]

---

[9] The remedy available in a class suit is in equity. Wheeler v. Greene, 280 U. S. 49; Christopher v. Brusselback, 302 U. S. 500; Russell v. Todd, 309 U. S. 280; Chattanooga Foundry and Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390.

[10] The contention that a treble damage suit was not barred because the conspiracy alleged was a continuing conspiracy under the rule of United States v. Kissel, supra (a criminal prosecution) was made in the Foster & Kleiser case, supra, where the court pointed out that in a civil action for damages sustained because of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, the right of recovery is not based on the conspiracy, but on the injuries resulting therefrom, a doctrine followed in Momand v. Universal Film Exchange, cited above. See also Twin Ports Oil Co. v. Pure Oil Co., 46 F. Supp. 149.

[11] Chattanooga Foundry and Pipe Works v. Atlanta, supra; Campbell v. Haverhill, 155 U. S. 610, 616; Foster & Kleiser v. Special Site Sign Co., supra; Bluefields S. S. Company v. United Fruit Company, 243 Fed. 1 (3-Cir. 1917) writ of error dismissed 248 U. S. 595; Ben C. Jones & Co. v. West Publishing Co., 270 Fed. 563 (5-Cir. 1921) writ of error dismissed 270 U. S. 665; State of Oklahoma v. American Book Co., supra; Momand v. Universal Film Exchange, supra; Rawlings v. Ray, 312 U. S. 96; Holmberg v. Armbrecht, supra, p. 395; Cope v. Anderson, 331 U. S. 461, 466. (The Chattanooga and Bluefields cases were actions for treble damages under the Sherman Act.) Barnes Coal Corp. v. Retail Coal Merchants Ass'n, 128 F. 2d 645, 647.

[12] Foster & Kleiser Co. v. Special Site Sign Co., supra; Bluefields S. S. Company v. United Fruit Co., supra.

[13] "The Court: Is it your contention, Mr. Carr, that plaintiff was put out of business in 1929 as a result of an unlawful conspiracy, and that the statute does not run as long as the conspiracy continues to be in effect?

"Mr. Carr: No, I don't go that far. My idea would be that it would run from the last overt act.

"The Court: What do you allege in the complaint to be the last overt act?

"Mr. Carr: The Little Placer claim * * * it has no applicability. We could not prove any damage from it, but we make a live issue of that thing in the complaint." (Emphasis supplied)

The "overt act" alleged was appellees' opposition to appellant's attempt to secure a lease on the so-called "Little Placer" claim. The Department of the Interior denied appellant a lease on The Little Placer claim. Appellant claims that this formal refusal of a Government Department to grant a lease was a result of the conspiracy among appellees which instigated the refusal. See American Banana Company v. United Fruit Company, 213 U. S. 347 and Buckeye Powder Co. v. duPont de Nemours Powder Co., 248 U. S. 55.

C

(a) California cases hold that mere failure by a defendant to disclose to a plaintiff the existence of the facts does not constitute "fraudulent concealment" of the cause of action unless a defendant is under a duty to disclose these facts, a situation not present in this case; [14] (b) appellant's President, George B. Burnham had a conversation with Emlaw and Zabriskie (officers of certain of appellees) in 1929 in which these officers did nothing more than deny that appellees had conspired to cut prices in 1928; (c) that Burnham testified below that these conversations "dispelled" his belief that appellant had a cause of action (see Feak v. Marion Steam Shovel Co., 84 F. 2d 670 (9-Cir.) cert. den. 299 U. S. 604 and Turman v. Holmes, 29 Cal. App. (2d) 198); (d) the testimony reveals that by their "denials" appellees' officers merely failed to disclose the existence of a cause of action, and the statute of limitations is not suspended merely by reason of appellant's ignorance of, or failure to "discover," the existence of the cause of action; [15] (e) no facts are pleaded and proved from which the court may conclude the date of "discovery" other than the sole allegation that appellees fraudulently concealed the cause of action and that this fact was not "discovered" until appellant became aware of the "concealment" by means of the allegations in the said suits instituted by the Government in 1944; (f) the only fact of concealment upon which appellant relies is that in the said suits the Government accused appellees of violation of antitrust laws, but this did not provide greater means of discovery than appellant apparently possessed at the time Burnham inquired of Zabriskie, and appellant must allege facts which establish that it could not have made the discovery earlier by the exercise of ordinary diligence; [16] (g) finally, giving a private individual a right to recovery does not enlarge the right of a private plaintiff since he must show personal pecuniary damages, his right of action being personal and for his own benefit and not (also) for the benefit of the public (as appellant vigorously contends). The public interest is vindicated by a criminal prosecution while the suit for damages merely redresses the private injury.[17]

Quotations from the lengthy oral testimony and the numerous exhibits, and a detailed analysis of the many cases cited by the parties are not necessary to sustain the conclusion we here reach. The entire record convinces us that under the evidence and upon the authority of the cases the contentions of appellees as to the facts and the law are fully supported and that the judgment of the lower court must be sustained. We agree with the conclusions expressed by that court (see footnote 4) that the record firmly establishes as a fact that during the time from May 17, 1929 to October 10, 1939 appellant knew, or had good cause and reason to believe, that its business had been theretofore damaged and that it had been driven out of business by acts of appellees which violated the antitrust laws of the United States; that appellant was, during this period, convinced that it had a good case against appellees for the damage it had then suffered and that its attorneys so believed and so advised it. We hold that this is an action at law for damages under Federal antitrust laws and the only damages for which a recovery might be had are those which accrued and were suffered within three years prior to the filing of the complaint and the record reveals that none were shown during this period. The court therefore properly held the cause barred by Section 338 (1) of the California statute of limitations.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the words "* * * and a directed verdict thereon having been entered * * *" and as so modified, is affirmed.

---

[14] Pashley v. Pacific Electric Co., supra; Kimball v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., supra; Bryan v. United States, 99 F. 2d 549, 553 (10-Cir. 1938) cert. den. 305 U. S. 661.

[15] Scafidi v. Western Loan and Building Co., 72 Cal. App. (2d) 550; Strout v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 208 Fed. 646; Lattin v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317; Lambert v. McKenzie, 135 Cal. 100; Medley v. Hill, 104 Cal. App. 309; Neff v. New York Life Insurance Co., 30 Cal. (2d) 165.

[16] Vertex Investment Co. v. Schwabacher, 57 Cal. App. (2d) 406; Lady Washington Consolidated Co. v. Wood, 113 Cal. 482, 486; Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, 140; Johnson v. Ehrgott, 1 Cal. (2d) 136; Myers v. Metropolitan Trust Co., 22 Cal. App. (2d) 284. See also Feak v. Marion Steam Shovel Co., supra; Turman v. Holmes, supra, on what constitutes concealment and the duty of a party put on notice of fraud.

[17] Maltz v. Sax, 134 F. 2d 2; Ketchum v. Denver & R.G.R. Co., 248 Fed. 106; Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co., supra; Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 271 Fed. 444; United States v. Cooper Corp., 312 U. S. 600.

[¶ 62,323] United States v. Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division. Civil Action No. 5239. October 30, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Agreements in Restraint of Trade—Acts Enjoined.—A consent judgment entered in an action charging manufacturers of flat glass with combining to fix prices and otherwise to restrain trade, in violation of the antitrust laws, prohibits the corporate defendants from entering into agreements to restrict manufacture, allocate sales territories and markets, fix prices and other terms of sale, or disseminate information concerning production, demand, inventories, sales, costs, prices, or similar information pertaining to the condition or operation of the flat glass industry. The entering into or adherence to agreements to exchange patent rights in such a way as to exclude third persons is also prohibited, as are the use of price lists, participation in a trade association, and the institution of infringement suits. Defendants are required to grant non-exclusive, royalty-free licenses to make, use, and vend flat glass under certain domestic patents, and to furnish to licensees certain technical information and assistance. All resale price maintenance agreements now in effect between defendants and their customers are terminated.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.10, 1530.50, 1590.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Same—Lessening of Competition—Acts Enjoined.—The corporate defendants are enjoined from selling or causing to be sold flat glass at any industry level at unreasonably low or discriminatory prices for the purpose of destroying a competitor or suppressing competition in the manufacture or sale of flat glass, and from entering into or performing any contract under which a purchaser is obligated to make purchases of flat glass for a period of more than one year. The acquisition of competing units, and interlocking directorates are also prohibited.

See the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2022.23, 2027.13, 2028.10.

Wilson Tariff Act

Same—Restraint of Export Trade—Agreements Enjoined.—The corporate defendants are enjoined from entering into and adhering to agreements to restrict or prevent the manufacture, processing, distribution or sale of flat glass for export to the United States, or the export of flat glass from the United States. The corporate defendants are ordered to cause foreign subsidiaries to withdraw from any such agreements.

See the Wilson Tariff Act, Vol. 1, ¶ 696, and the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.361.

For plaintiff: Phillip E. Pearlman, Acting Attorney General; Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; Phillip E. Pearlman, Acting United States Attorney; George L. Derr, Chief, Great Lakes Office, Antitrust Division; Curtis Shears, Sigmund Timberg, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

For defendants: Marshall, Melhorn, Wall & Bloch, Stuart S. Wall, William A. Belt; Shumaker, Loop, Kendrick & Winn, Ross W. Shumaker, Leland Hazard, Maurice W. Hibschman, Cyrus V. Anderson; Reed, Smith, Shaw & McClay, Paul J. Winschel, H. Eastman Hackney; Welles, Kelsey, Fuller, Cobourn & Harrington, George D. Welles, Charles F. Babbs; Fulton, Walter, & Halley, Joseph W. Burns; Yager, Bebout & Stecher, Joseph A. Yager.

Final Judgment

The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its amended complaint herein on March 19, 1946; the defendants Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, American Window Glass Company, Fourco Glass Company, Franklin Glass Corporation, National Glass Distributors Association, Rolland Glass Company, American Securit Company and

Blue Ridge Glass Corporation, having appeared and filed their answers to the amended complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; and the plaintiff and said defendants by their attorneys having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment herein, without adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without this judgment constituting evidence or admission in respect of any such issue;

NOW, THEREFORE, without adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent as aforesaid of all the parties hereto and not upon evidence, it is hereby

ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED AS FOLLOWS:

[Jurisdiction]

I

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all of the parties hereto. The amended complaint of the United States of America herein states a cause of action against the defendants under Sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," as amended, commonly known as the Sherman Act under Sections 2, 3 and 7 of the Act of Congress of October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to Supplement Existing Laws Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies and for other Purposes," commonly known as the Clayton Act, and under Section 73 of the Act of Congress of August 27, 1894, commonly known as the Wilson Tariff Act, and the Acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

[Terms Defined]

II

As used in this judgment:

A. "Flat glass" means each and all of the following kinds of glass, namely, sheet glass, plate glass, laminated or safety glass and tempered glass, or any size, quality of thickness thereof, whether substantially flat or bent, but shall not include rough rolled glass, wire glass, microscopic cover glass, non-transparent glass, specialty colored glass, or opaque glass, or other specialty glasses made of special compositions or any glass which is further processed or treated for special purposes or products made or fabricated from flat glass other than by cutting, edging, drilling or bending.

B. "Sheet glass" (sometimes called window glass in the trade) means a clear, transparent unground and unpolished glass with a finish known as fire finished, formed when the glass passes from a molten to a hard state and includes common window glass, thin glass and heavy or crystal sheet glass, or any size, quality or thickness thereof, whether substantially flat or bent.

C. "Plate glass" means a clear transparent glass, the surfaces of which have been rendered substantially parallel by grinding and polishing, or any size, quality or thickness thereof, whether substantially flat or bent.

D. "Laminated" or "safety glass" means a clear transparent glass which is made of two or more pieces of flat glass bonded to plastic material interposed between them, or any size, quality or thickness thereof, whether substantially flat or bent.

E. "Tempered glass" means a clear, transparent flat glass which has been strengthened by being heated to the softening point of the glass and then cooled suddenly, or any size, quality or thickness, thereof, whether substantially flat or bent.

F. PPG means the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with its principal office at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

G. LOF means the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal office at Toledo, Ohio.

H. AWG means the American Window Glass Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with its principal office at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

I. Fourco means the Fourco Glass Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, with its principal office at Clarksburg, West Virginia.

J. Franklin means the Franklin Glass Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office at Butler, Pennsylvania.

K. NGDA means the National Glass Distributors Association, a voluntary unincorporated association with its principal office at Chicago, Illinois.

L. Rolland means the Rolland Glass Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, with its principal office at Clarksburg, West Virginia.

M. American Securit means the American Securit Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office at Washington, D. C.

N. Blue Ridge means the Blue Ridge Glass Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York with its principal office at Kingsport, Tennessee.

O. Blackford means Blackford Window Glass Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Indiana, with its principal office at Vincennes, Indiana.

P. Harding means Harding Glass Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, with its principal office at Fort Smith, Arkansas.

Q. Adamston means the Adamston Flat Glass Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, with its principal office at Clarksburg, West Virginia.

R. The American Bicheroux Company means a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware.

S. "Fourco Group" means the defendants Fourco and Rolland and non-defendants Adamston and Harding. The members of said Group shall constitute one person for all purposes of this judgment.

T. The term "domestic flat glass patents" means United States Letters Patent and Applications therefor, all reissues, divisions, continuations or extensions thereof, and patents issued upon said applications, covering any product, process, or apparatus used or usable in the manufacture of flat glass.

U. "United States" means the United States and its territories and possessions.

V. "Subsidiary" of a corporation means a corporation more than 50 per cent whose stock entitled to vote upon election of directors (other than preferred stock so entitled to vote upon the failure of the corporation to pay certain dividends) is owned, or directly or indirectly controlled, by such other corporation.

W. "Person" means an individual, partnership, firm, association or corporation. For the purpose of this definition, a corporation (including any corporate defendant) and its subsidiaries shall be considered to be one person.

X. "Corporate defendants" as used herein shall mean LOF, PPG, AWG, Fourco, Rolland, Franklin, Blue Ridge and American Securit, or any of them.

[Applicability]

III

The provisions of this judgment applicable to any corporate defendant shall apply to such defendant, its officers, directors, agents, employees, successors, assigns, and all other persons acting under, through or for such defendant.

[Agreements Enjoined]

IV

The corporate defendants are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from combining or conspiring with, or from entering into, adhering to, renewing, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding or concerted plan of action with any other person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass to:

A. reduce or restrict the kinds, quantities, qualities or sizes of flat glass manufactured;

B. allocate or divide production or markets on a quota, past participation or any other basis or to determine, establish or maintain manufacturing or sales quotas for flat glass;

C. create, allocate or divide manufacturing or sales territories, on an exclusive or other basis, or apportion customers or markets or the manufacture of kinds, qualities or sizes of flat glass;

D. restrict any purchaser of flat glass in the use or disposition thereof;

E. determine, fix, maintain or adhere to prices, differentials, discounts or other terms or conditions of sale for flat glass sold to third persons;

F. designate any single person to initiate a price or discount to be thereafter followed by the remaining manufacturers of flat glass;

G. form joint sales agencies for the marketing of flat glass in the United States;

H. classify or list purchasers of flat glass at any industry level;

I. limit the amount of flat glass which may be sold to any third person;

J. discriminate against or refuse to sell to jobbers, distributors, dealers or other persons buying flat glass;

K. sell, or cause to be sold, any kind of flat glass at any industry level at unreasonably low prices for the purposes of destroying a competitor or suppressing competition;

L. reduce or restrict flat glass imports into or exports from the United States;

M. collect, compile, compare, disseminate or communicate to any other person engaged in the manufacture, sale or distribution of flat glass in the United States, or to any flat glass trade association or central agency of persons so engaged, any information concerning production, demand, capacity, inventories, sales, shipments, orders, commitments, costs, prices, discounts or other terms or conditions of sale of flat glass, or similar information pertaining to the condition or operation of the flat glass industry, for the purpose of accomplishing any of the things enjoined and restrained in Subparagraphs A to M of this Section IV.

[Acts Enjoined]

V

The corporate defendants are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from:

A. Selling, or causing to be sold, flat glass at any industry level at unreasonably low or discriminatory prices for the purpose of destroying a competitor or suppressing competition in the manufacture or sale of flat glass;

B. Entering into or performing any contract, agreement or understanding under which a purchaser is obligated to make purchases of flat glass for a period of more than one year. This provision, however, shall not apply to, nor shall it adjudicate the legality or illegality of, any contract, agreement or understanding in effect at the time of entry of this judgment which satisfies all of the following conditions:

(1) The purchaser is a person engaged in the business of manufacturing a product or products other than flat glass;

(2) The flat glass purchased is a minor constituent of a product manufactured by such purchaser;

(3) The flat glass has to be cut by the defendant to meet the specifications of the purchaser;

(4) The volume of purchases provided for by the contract, agreement or understanding is such that it will require all or substantially all of the output of a plant, and an immediate and complete termination of such purchases at the end of the primary contract period not to exceed one year would cause a shutdown of the operations of one or more plants involving one or more continuous tanks of the defendant with resulting unemployment;

(5) The contract, agreement or understanding provides for a substantial reduction of purchases, at the option of the purchaser, amounting to twenty five per cent (25%) during the first year following the primary contract period and fifty per cent (50%) during the second year following said primary contract period and for complete termination of any obligation to sell or buy flat glass thereunder at the end of said second year;

(6) The contract, agreement or understanding, if renewed at any time, can be renewed only upon consent of both parties, upon the same or similar terms and for periods not to exceed one year each.

The burden of proof shall be on the corporate defendant to establish compliance with the above mentioned conditions.

C. Controlling or attempting to control the use or disposition of flat glass by any purchaser;

D. Refusing to fill, or discriminating in the filling of, any order covering at least the equivalent of a carload of flat glass from one plant, because said order involves more than one purchaser, provided that nothing contained in this subsection shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for the differences in the cost of handling and shipping resulting therefrom;

E. Refusing to sell or discriminating in the sale of flat glass to any purchaser because the purchaser offers, sells or ships or intends to offer or sell or ship flat glass into any territory, or otherwise restricting or attempting to restrict the territories in which purchasers of flat glass may offer to sell, sell or ship flat glass;

F. Refusing to sell, restricting the sales of, or discriminating in the sale of flat glass to any purchaser because:

(1). The purchaser refuses to buy all or the preponderant part of his requirements for a particular kind or specification of flat glass from such defendant; or

(2) The purchaser has not purchased or will not agree to purchase any other kind of flat glass, or purchase flat glass from any source other than said defendant; or

(3) The purchaser was not, is not, or will not become a member of any trade organization; or

(4) The purchaser has not previously been listed on any quantity or qualified buyers list of any other person.

Provided, however, that nothing contained in this judgment shall be deemed to eliminate the general legal right of any defendant to select its own customers in good faith in bona fide transactions.

[Disclosure of Information]

VI

A. Each of the corporate defendants is severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from disclosing, disseminating or communicating to any other person engaged in the manufacture, sale or distribution of flat glass in the United States, or to any trade association of or central agency for persons so engaged (any or all of which are hereinafter collectively referred to as the recipient), any information concerning the production, demand, capacity, inventories, sales, shipments, orders or commitments, costs, prices, discounts or other terms or conditions of sale of flat glass:

(1) In such manner as to disclose, directly or indirectly,

(a) to any recipient competing with said defendant, any such information concerning or relating to said defendant, or

(b) to any recipient, any such information concerning or relating to any competitor of the recipient,
(other than terms and conditions of employment necessarily disclosed in bona fide labor disputes, and other data necessarily disclosed in good faith in legislative, administrative, or judicial proceedings); or

(2) Where the purpose is:

(a) To enable the recipient to control the channels or agencies through or by means of which flat glass shall or may be manufactured, sold or distributed or;

(b) To enable the recipient to exclude any person or persons from engaging in the business of manufacturing, sale or distribution of flat glass; or

(c) To enable the recipient to formulate, promote or take part in any plan with any other person engaged in the manufacture, sale or distribution of flat glass for the allocating or sharing of present or future business in the manufacturing, sale or distribution of flat glass.

B. If any information in the categories set forth in Subsection A of this Section (other than as described in the parenthetical clause of Section VI A (1) and in Subsection D of this Section) is disseminated in a manner not prohibited by said Subsection A:

(1) It shall be available upon request at the time of initial dissemination or communication to all persons engaged in the distribution of flat glass and to the general public, except when a disclosure would violate the provisions of Subsection A (1) of this Section VI; and

(2) The burden of proof shall be on the corporate defendant to establish that any information communicated or disseminated less than ninety (90) days after the last transaction or event to which it relates is not prohibited by the provisions of that Subsection.

C. The corporate defendants herein are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from:

Making any inquiries, directly or indirectly, in furtherance of the practices forbidden by Sections IV and V.

D. Nothing contained in Subsection IV M, and Section VI shall be construed to forbid or prevent the dissemination or communication by a single defendant of information to customers or prospective customers in bona fide transactions involving the sale or purchase of flat glass.

[Patent Rights]

VII

The corporate defendants are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, or claiming any rights under, any contract, agreement, understanding, or concerted plan of action with any person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass:

A. To exchange, in such a way as to exclude third persons, any rights to patents, inventions, processes, or technical information relating to the manufacture of flat glass;

B. To acquire from, or transfer to, any third person in such a way as to exclude him or any other third person, any rights to any patent, invention, process, or technical information relating to the manufacture of flat glass;

C. To determine or prescribe the terms or conditions upon which licenses or immunities under any patent, invention, or tecnical information relating to the manufacture of flat glass shall be available to others;

D. To acquire or grant rights in such a way as to exclude third persons, under patents or processes relating to the manufacture of flat glass not then in existence;

E. To acquire exclusive rights to domestic patents, processes, inventions or technical information relating to the manufacture of flat glass without simultaneously acquiring the right to sublicense such rights.

[Orders]

VIII

A. The defendant PPG is ordered and directed to increase the average number of establishments, other than those owned by PPG, to which PPG shall deliver plate and/or sheet glass at its then current factory buyer prices during the period of calendar years 1948 to 1952, both inclusive, by not less than 10 per cent above the average number of such establishments for the period of calendar years 1944 to 1948, both inclusive.

B. The defendant LOF is ordered and directed to increase the average number of establishments to which it shall deliver plate and/or sheet glass at its then current factory buyer prices during the period of calendar years 1948 to 1952, both inclusive, by not less than 10 per cent above the average number of such establishments for the period of calendar years 1944 to 1948, both inclusive.

[Agreements Terminated]

IX

A. The following agreements are hereby terminated and the defendants are hereby enjoined and restrained from the further performance of any of said agreements, and of any agreements or arrangements amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto:

(1) Agreement between LO Sheet, American Bicheroux Company, Blue Ridge et al., dated June 1, 1929.

(2) Agreement between LOF and American Bicheroux Company, dated November 6, 1931.

(3) Agreement between Blue Ridge and American Bicheroux Company, dated November 6, 1931.

(4) Agreement between LOF and PPG, dated February 27, 1932 (Triplex patents).

(5) Agreement between LOF, PPG and Duplate Corporation, dated February 27, 1932, as amended on March 29, 1937, January 12, 1938, May 31, 1938 and December 31, 1938.

(6) Agreement between LOF and PPG, dated May 24, 1932.

(7) Agreement between LOF and PPG, dated August 30, 1932.

(8) Agreement between LOF and American Securit Company, dated June 2, 1933.

(9) Agreement between PPG and American Securit Company, dated June 2, 1933.

(10) Agreement between Blue Ridge and Franklin, dated January 22, 1935.

(11) Agreement between American Bicheroux Company and Franklin, dated April 1, 1935.

(12) Agreement between LOF and PPG, dated June 3, 1936.

(13) Agreement between LOF and PPG, dated April 14, 1937 (Flow Process Agreement).

(14) Agreement between LOF and PPG, dated April 14, 1937 (Sub-license under Blythe patents).

(15) Agreement between LOF and PPG, dated January 12, 1938 (Synthetic resins agreement).

B. Each of the corporate defendants herein is hereby enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program among themselves or with any other person, except as otherwise provided in Sections XIII and XIV of this judgment, which has as its purpose or effect the continuing or renewing of any of the agreements listed in Subsection A of this Section.

[Acquisition of Competitors Enjoined]

X

A. Defendants LOF and PPG are each enjoined from acquiring directly or indirectly, by purchase, merger, consolidation or otherwise after the entry of this judgment and from holding or exercising after such acquisition ownership or control of, the business, physical assets (except goods or merchandise bought or incidental to the ordinary course of business) or goodwill, or any part thereof, or any capital stock or securities of any other person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass within the United States.

B. Defendant LOF, for a period of three years from the date of entry of this judgment, and defendant PPG, for a period of ten years from the date of entry of this judgment, are each enjoined from acquiring directly or indirectly, by purchase, merger, consolidation or otherwise after the entry of this judgment and from holding or exercising after such acquisition ownership or control of, the business, physical assets (except goods or merchandise bought or incidental to the ordinary course of business) or goodwill, or any part thereof, or any capital stock or securities of any other person engaged in the sale or installation of flat glass within the United States.

C. Defendant LOF, after three years from the date of entry of this judgment, and defendant PPG, after ten years from the date of entry of this judgment, are each enjoined from acquiring directly or indirectly, by purchase, merger, consolidation or otherwise after the entry of this judgment and from holding or exercising after such acquisition ownership or control of, the business, physical assets (except goods or merchandise bought or incidental to the ordinary course of business) or good-will, or any part thereof, or any capital stock or securities of any other person engaged in the sale or installation of flat glass within the United States until after it has, upon reasonable notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity on the part of the latter to be heard, shown to the Court that such acquisition would promote competition in the manufacture, sale or distribution of flat glass.

D. The defendants Fourco, Rolland and AWG are each enjoined from acquiring directly or indirectly, by purchase, merger, consolidation or otherwise after the entry of this judgment and from holding or exercising after such acquisition ownership or control of, the business, physical assets (except goods or merchandise bought or incidental to the ordinary course of business) or good-will, or any part thereof, pertaining to the window glass business, or any capital stock or securities of any other person (except as to Fourco and/or Rolland the window glass business, assets and good-will of Blackford) engaged in the manufacture of window glass within the United States.

E. Defendants Fourco, Rolland and AWG are each enjoined from acquiring directly or indirectly, by purchase, merger, consolidation or otherwise after the entry of this judgment and from holding or exercising after such acquisition ownership or control of, the business, physical assets (except goods or merchandise bought or incidental to the ordinary course of business) or good-will, or any part thereof, other than pertaining to the window glass business, or any capital stock or securities of any other person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass, other than window glass, or in the sale or distribution of flat glass within the United States (or as to Fourco and/or Rolland the window glass business, assets or good-will of Blackford) until after it has, upon reasonable notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity on the part of the latter to be heard, shown to the Court that such acquisition would not substantially lessen competition in the manufacture, sale or distribution of flat glass.

F. Defendants Franklin and Blue Ridge are each enjoined from acquiring directly or indirectly, by purchase, merger, consolidation or otherwise after the entry of this judgment and from holding or exercising after such acquisition ownership or control of, the business, physical assets (except goods or merchandise bought [in] or incidental to the ordinary course of business) or good-will, or any part thereof, or any capital stock or securities of any other person engaged in the manufacture, sale or distribution of flat glass within the United States until after it has, upon reasonable notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity on the part of the latter to be heard, shown to the Court that such acquisition would not substantially lessen competition in the manufacture, sale or distribution of flat glass.

G. The defendant LOF is ordered and directed:

(1) Forthwith upon entry of this judgment to dedicate to the public the domestic flat glass patents relating to the Bicheroux process as listed in Part I of Appendix A hereof;

(2) Within three years from the date of judgment, to divest itself of any and all capital stock or other financial interests in American Bicheroux Company, by dissolution of the American Bicheroux Company or otherwise;

(3) Thereafter to refrain from any participation or influence, direct or indirect, over the policies and activities of American Bicheroux Company, except as directly incidental to the dissolution of said corporation;

(4) To refrain from acquiring from or granting to American Bicheroux Company any exclusive rights to patents, processes, inventions, or technical information relating to the manufacture of flat glass.

[Interlocking Directorates Enjoined]

XI

A. Each individual defendant now acting in the capacity of officer, director, or employee of more than one person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass in the United States shall elect the person for which he desires to act as officer, director or employee, and shall within 30 days from the entry of this judgment sever his connections from all other persons engaged in the manufacture of flat glass in the United States. Thereafter each corporate defendant is enjoined and restrained from causing, authorizing or knowingly permitting any of its officers, directors, or employees to serve as an officer, director, or employee of any other person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass in the United States.

B. Within sixty days after making the election provided for in the above paragraph, each individual defendant shall sell and dispose of any shares of stock or other financial interest which he then owns or controls in any person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass (other than the one elected pursuant to Subsection A of this Section) in the United States. Thereafter, each individual defendant may own or control shares of stock or other financial interest in only one person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass in the United States.

C. Each corporate defendant herein is enjoined and restrained from causing, authorizing, or knowingly permitting any of its officers, directors, or employees holding policy-making positions to acquire ownership or control of shares of stock or other financial interest in any other person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass in the United States.

D. Defendant Rolland is enjoined from selling or assigning any portion of the shares of stock in defendant LOF now owned or controlled by said defendant Rolland or any interest therein to any corporate defendant other than LOF and is enjoined from the date of entry of this judgment, from exercising, directly or indirectly, any voting rights in said stock.

[Infringement Suits Enjoined]

XII

Each of the corporate defendants is enjoined and restrained from instituting or threatening to institute, or maintaining, or continuing any suit or proceeding for acts of infringement of any of its domestic flat glass patents alleged to have occurred prior to the date of this judgment.

[Patent Licensing Directed]

XIII

A. Each of the defendants, LOF and PPG, is ordered and directed, in so far as each has the power to do so, to grant to any applicant therefor, including any defendant, a non-exclusive royalty-free license to make, use and vend any kind of flat glass under any domestic flat glass patent now owned or controlled by it listed in Appendix A hereof [omitted herein], which license shall continue during the entire term of such patent. Each of said defendants is furthermore enjoined and restrained from making any disposition of any of said patents which deprives it of the power or authority to grant such licenses, unless it sells, transfers or assigns such patents and requires, as a condition of such sale, transfer or assignment, that the purchaser, transferee or assignee thereof shall observe the requirements of these Sections XII and XIII of this judgment and the purchaser, transferee or assignee shall file with this Court, prior to consummation of said transaction, an undertaking to be bound by the provisions of this Section of this judgment.

B. Each of the defendants, LOF and PPG, is ordered and directed, in so far as it has power to do so, to license any domestic flat glass patents now owned or controlled by it (which are listed in Appendix B) or which are hereafter issued or applied for within a period of five years from the date of this judgment in conformity with the provisions of Section XIV of this judgment.

XIV

A. Each of the corporate defendants other than LOF and PPG, is hereby ordered and directed, in so far as each has power to do so, to grant to each applicant therefor, including any other defendant, a non-exclusive license to make, use and vend any kind of flat glass under any, some, or all domestic flat glass patents now owned or controlled by such defendant (which are listed in Appendix B), or which are issued or applied for within five years from the date of this judgment, and is hereby enjoined and restrained from making any sale or other disposition of any of said patents which deprives it of the power or authority to grant such licenses, unless it sells, transfers or assigns such patents and requires as a condition of such sale, transfer or assignment that the purchaser, transferee, or assignee shall observe the requirements of this Section of this judgment and the purchaser, transferee or assignee shall file with this Court, prior to consummation of said transaction, an undertaking to be bound by the provisions of this Section of this judgment.

B. Each corporate defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from including any restriction or condition whatsoever in any license or sublicense granted by it pursuant to the provisions of this Section except that (1) the license may be non-transferable; (2) a reasonable non-discriminatory royalty may be charged; (3) reasonable provisions may be made for periodic inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor or any person acceptable to the licensee who shall report to the licensor only the amount of the royalty due and payable; (4) reasonable provision may be made for cancellation of the license upon failure of the licensee to pay the royalties or to permit the inspection of his books and records as hereinabove provided; (5) the license must provide that the licensee may cancel the license at any time after one year from the initial date thereof by giving thirty days' notice in writing to the licensor.

C. Upon receipt of a written request for a license under the provisions of this Section, a defendant shall advise the applicant in writing of the royalty which it deems reasonable for the patent or patents to which the request pertains. If the parties are unable to agree upon a reasonable royalty within sixty days from the date such request for the license was received by the defendant, the applicant therefor may forthwith apply to this Court for the determination of a reasonable royalty, and the defendant shall, upon receipt of notice of the filing of such application, promptly give notice thereof to the Attorney General. In any such proceeding, the burden of proof shall be on the defendant owning or controlling said patents to establish the reasonableness of the royalty requested, and the reasonable royalty rates, if any, determined by the Court shall apply to the applicant and all other licensees under the same patent or patents. Pending the completion of negotiations or any such proceeding, the applicant, shall have the right to make, use and vend any kind of flat glass under the patents to which its application pertains without payment of royalty or other compensation as above provided, but subject to the provisions of Subsection D of this Section.

D. Where the applicant has the right to make, use and vend any kind of flat glass under Subsection C of this Section, said applicant or the defendant owning or controlling said patents may apply to the Court to fix an interim royalty rate pending final determination of what constitutes a reasonable royalty. If the Court fixes such interim royalty rate, defendant shall then issue and the applicant shall accept a license or, as the case may be, a sublicense, providing for the periodic payment of royalties at such interim rate from the date of the filing of such application by the applicant. If the applicant fails to accept such license or fails to pay the interim royalty in accordance therewith, such action shall be ground for the dismissal of his application, and his rights under Subsection C shall terminate. Where an interim license or sublicense has been issued pursuant to this Subsection, reasonable royalty rates, if any, as finally determined by the Court shall be retroactive for the applicant and all other licensees under the same patents to the date the applicant files his application with the Court.

E. Nothing herein shall prevent any applicant from attacking in the aforesaid proceedings or in any other controversy, the validity or scope of any of the patents nor shall this judgment be construed as importing any validity or value to any of the said patents.

XV

Each of the corporate defendants herein is ordered and directed, in so far as it has power to do so, to grant upon written request to any applicant licensed under the provisions of Sections XIII and XIV of this judgment with respect to any products manufactured in the United States pursuant to such license, a non-exclusive grant of immunity from suit under foreign patents or patents issued on foreign applications for patents corresponding to any domestic flat glass patents under which the applicant is licensed.

[Disclosure of Information Required]

XVI

Each of the corporate defendants LOF and PPG is ordered and directed, for a period of five (5) years from the date of entry of this judgment, to give to each domestic licensee pursuant to the provisions of Section XIII A hereof, upon written request therefor, technical assistance and information disclosing the methods and processes used by it in its commercial practice under the licensed invention. Wherever practicable, such technical assistance and information shall be furnished in writing. However, where not practicable to furnish such technical assistance and information in writing, technical personnel shall be made available to help install and initiate the operation of the methods and processes by the licensee. Such technical assistance and information shall be charged for at no more than actual cost to the licensor, without allocating any overhead or general administrative expense.

[Agreements Prohibited]

XVII

The corporate defendants are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, furthering, or renewing, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding or arrangement which provides for:

(1) a license or immunity under any patent; or

(2) the rendering available or receipt of any invention, formula, process, or any technical information relating to the manufacture of flat glass, upon the condition or requirement that the other party thereto shall:

(a) request or accept a license or immunity under any other patent owned or controlled by any defendant;

(b) render available or disclose on an exclusive basis, any invention, formula, process, or technical information;

(c) reduce or restrict the manufacture of any kind of flat glass;

(d) determine, fix, maintain or adhere to prices or price ranges, or other terms and conditions of sale;

(e) maintain or adhere to any restrictions upon exportation from, or import into, the United States;

(f) maintain or adhere to any restrictions upon the customers, markets or territories in which flat glass may be sold or distributed in the United States.

[Patent Licensing or Exploitation]

XVIII

A. Each of the corporate defendants is enjoined and restrained from initiating, forming, creating, establishing, participating in, or adhering to any patent licensing or exploitation company, involving, directly or indirectly, flat glass, with any other domestic manufacturer of flat glass, or acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, any stock or other financial interest, or any control over any such company.

B. Each of the corporate defendants is enjoined and restrained from initiating, forming, creating, establishing, participating in, or adhering to any research or development company, involving, directly or indirectly, flat glass, with any other domestic manufacturer of flat glass, or acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, any stock or other financial interest, or any control over any such company, except with the approval of the Court on adequate notice to the Attorney General.

[Use of Lists Ordered Discontinued]

XIX

A. The corporate defendants and each of them are ordered and directed within twelve months from the entry of this judgment to discontinue the use, and to refrain from requesting, assisting, or facilitating the use by others, of any of the following lists: the American Window Glass Co. Price Lists of April 23, 1928, Jan. 1, 1938, December 3, 1941, and December 7, 1945; Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company's Price List of April 23, 1928, and List Prices of Sept. 1, 1930, Sept. 1, 1938, December 16, 1941, and December 15, 1945; Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company's Pennvernon Price List of April 23, 1928, and List Prices of January 31, 1938, December 31, 1941, and December 7, 1945; Fourco Glass Company's Price Lists dated April 23, 1928, November 8, 1937, and January 1, 1942, and List Prices of December 7, 1945; or any price or prediscount list containing prediscount figures copied from any of the above lists.

B. The corporate defendants, and each of them, are ordered and directed within eighteen months from the entry of this judgment to discontinue the use, and to refrain from requesting, assisting, or facilitating the use by others, of any of the following NGDA Lists: the Window Glass List, August 15, 1938; the Net Window Glass Light List, August 15, 1938; Polished Plate Glass List of July 1, 1937; the prediscount and price portions of the Auto Glass Part Service catalogues; any other price or prediscount list compiled or prepared by NGDA; and any prediscount list containing prediscount figures copied from any of the above described lists.

[Participation in Trade Association Enjoined]

XX

A. The corporate defendants are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained, for a period of five (5) years from the entry of this judgment, from creating, adhering to, maintaining, or otherwise participating in, any flat glass trade association or similar flat glass organization among themselves or with any person or persons engaged in the manufacture of flat glass.

B. The corporate defendants (including any person engaged in warehousing or other flat glass sales, installation or distribution activities now or hereafter owned or controlled by any of them) are severally and jointly perpetually enjoined and restrained from creating, adhering to, contributing money to, supporting, controlling, attempting to control, or exerting any pressure upon any flat glass trade association or similar flat glass organization comparable in membership to the defendant N. G. D. A., or consisting of distributors or dealers of flat glass not engaged in the manufacture thereof.

C. Defendant N. G. D. A. and each division thereof is ordered to be dissolved within ninety (90) days from the date of entry of this judgment. There shall within ten (10) days after such dissolution be delivered to the Court, after notice to the Attorney General, adequate proof of such dissolution.

D. The corporate defendants are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from creating, adhering to, maintaining, or otherwise participating in any flat glass trade association or similar flat glass organization, or central agency, which engages in or promotes any activity prohibited by Sections IV, V and VI of this judgment.

E. The corporate defendants herein are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from causing, authorizing, or knowingly permitting any distributor or dealer of flat glass not engaged in the manufacture of flat glass to become a member of, or otherwise promote or support the activities or policies of any flat glass trade association or similar flat glass organization of which any such corporate defendant is a member.

[Fair Trade Contracts Terminated]

XXI

All Fair Trade resale price maintenance contracts or schedules now in effect between any of the corporate defendants and customers of such defendants, relating to flat glass are hereby terminated, and each such defendant shall give notice within thirty days hereof to each of its customers that the contracts or schedules have been terminated and are no longer in effect. Each of the corporate defendants is enjoined and restrained from enforcing or attempting to enforce any of said contracts or schedules; and each such defendant is enjoined for a period of three years from the date of this judgment from entering into any Fair Trade resale price maintenance contracts or schedules relating to flat glass, or exerting any type of pressure, directly or indirectly, by acts, suggestion or otherwise, as to the resale prices of flat glass.

[Agreements Restraining Export Trade Prohibited]

XXII

A. The corporate defendants and each of them are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, renewing, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, or concerted plan of action with any person (including any trade association or group, but not including any bona fide agent) engaged, outside the United States, either in the manufacture of flat glass, or in patent licensing or exploitation or other research and development relating to flat glass:

(1) to restrict or prevent the manufacture, processing, distribution or sale of flat glass for export to the United States, or the export of flat glass from the United States, or the import of flat glass into the United States;

(2) wherein any such other party covenants or promises to refrain from shipping flat glass to the United States, or wherein any defendant pays or offers to pay commissions or any other sums or benefits in connection with such covenant or promise to refrain from shipping.

B. The corporate defendants and each of them are ordered and directed to cause any presently wholly-owned or controlled foreign subsidiary to withdraw from, and are enjoined and restrained from causing or permitting any wholly-owned or controlled foreign subsidiary to become or be a party to, any agreement, contract, or understanding containing provisions enjoined in Subsection A of this Section.

C. Each corporate defendant is ordered and directed to notify each of its licensees under any patent license involving the manufacture of flat glass, and each party to any contractual arrangements covering the manufacture of flat glass involving countries outside the United States, and all third parties known to said corporate defendant receiving patent licenses or other contractual rights pursuant to such license grants or contractual arrangements, that (1) any terms of the license grants or contractual arrangements, arrangements forbidding export, sale or use of flat glass in the United States are terminated, and (2) they may henceforth export to, sell or use flat glass in the United States regardless of the existence of any domestic process or machine patent, and (3) they may, with respect to any valid United States product patent to which Sections XIII and XIV are applicable (which may hereafter be issued), obtain licenses to vend in the United States under Sections XIII and XIV of this judgment. Within ninety (90) days following the giving of such notice each defendant shall furnish to the Attorney General of the United States in form approved by him, satisfactory proof of the giving of such notice.

D. Nothing in this judgment shall prevent a defendant from accepting a license containing provisions described in Subsection A of this Section, upon the independent and unilateral insistence of a foreign licensor and approval of the Court after sixty (60) days' written notice to the Attorney General.

XXIII

The corporate defendants are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained from:

(1) Selling flat glass in the United States on condition that it be resold only in the United States;

(2) Refusing to sell flat glass to, or threatening to withhold supplies of flat glass in the United States from any purchaser because he is engaging in or desiring to engage in the exportation of flat glass from the United States;

(3) Initiating or prosecuting any inquiry or investigation concerning the destination of specific shipments of flat glass, or shipments of specific persons, after the first sale from the factory;

(4) Discriminating in regularly offered terms and conditions of sale as to any purchaser of flat glass because he engages in the United States in its export or import trade, provided that nothing herein contained shall prohibit sales at prices lower than those for comparable flat glass sold within the United States, made in good faith to meet the lower prices of competitors outside the United States.

XXIV

A. Where a corporate defendant as of the date of this judgment owns directly or indirectly less than the entire capital stock entitled to vote in elections of directors (other than qualifying shares for local directors) of a corporation engaged outside the United States in the manufacture of flat glass, or in the licensing or exploitation of patents or other research or development in connection therewith, the defendant is enjoined and restrained, except as otherwise in this section provided, from:

(1) exercising the voting power of any stock which it owns or controls in;

(2) controlling or participating in, either directly or indirectly, any commercial policies of;

(3) acquiring or holding, in the future, directly or indirectly, the ownership or beneficial interest in any additional shares of stock entitled to vote in elections of directors or any right to vote additional shares of stock in;

(4) acquiring the right in the future to control or participate in, directly or indirectly, any commercial policies of;

(5) joining in the future in the limitation, establishment or promotion of, or participating in any joint manufacturing, sales, patent holding or exploitation, research or development company with respect to flat glass with;

any such foreign corporation, unless said defendant acquires complete ownership of such stock (other than qualifying shares for local directors) of such corporation.

B. The provisions of this Section XXIV, where otherwise applicable, are not applicable to any foreign flat glass manufacturer in which the voting shares or rights other than those owned or controlled by any one of the defendants or its subsidiaries are at the times in question directly or indirectly owned or controlled by a person or persons not otherwise engaged in flat glass manufacture or acting as a substantial source of supply for another flat glass manufacturer. The burden shall be on the corporate defendant of maintaining records, and submitting to the Court and to the Attorney General an annual report, containing a full and accurate listing of such foreign ownership or control, and the amounts thereof. Upon failure to maintain such records or submit such reports, the provisions of Section XXIV shall immediately become applicable.

C. Pursuant to Subsection A of this Section XXIV, each of the corporate defendants affected thereby shall expeditiously but in any event within one year from the date of entry of this judgment, submit for approval by the Court its plan, a copy of which shall be forwarded to the Attorney General at least sixty (60) days prior to the date of filing such plan with the Court, with respect to each foreign flat glass manufacturer to which the provisions of Subsection A are applicable to

(1) establish a trust under which a trustee, acting independently of any defendant, shall exercise all of the powers and voting rights in any and all shares of stock of such manufacturer which are held or owned at any time during the effective time of this judgment directly or indirectly, by, or on behalf of, or under the control of, any such defendant, or

(2) to comply with the provisions of Subsection A of this Section in such manner as this Court may deem appropriate.

D. Upon approval by the Court of the plan referred to in Subsection C (1) of this Section, the Court shall appoint a trustee, individual or corporate, who shall have no affiliation or interest, direct or indirect, with any corporate defendant, or its subsidiaries, successors or assigns, or with any person engaged in the manufacture of flat glass. Such trustee shall act as an officer of the Court and under its direction and shall assume the obligation of exercising all the powers vested in him so as to conform with the provisions of this judgment.

E. Nothing contained in this Section XXIV shall apply to any Canadian subsidiary of any corporate defendant, so long as it shall remain as such subsidiary, provided that with respect to any such subsidiary such defendant shall file with the Attorney General or with the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, on or before June 30, 1949 and thereafter semi-annually, an affidavit of compliance with each applicable provision of this judgment (other than Section XXIV) signed by the officer of such defendant directly responsible with respect to the affairs of such subsidiary, which affidavit shall be accompanied by a written report setting forth in reasonable detail the policies adopted, instructions given and actions taken, to secure and maintain compliance with the provisions of this judgment applicable to such subsidiary. Upon written request of the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General, and upon reasonable notice made to its principal office, such corporate defendant shall submit any additional written reports as from time to time may be reasonably necessary for the purpose of enforcement of the provisions of this judgment applicable to such subsidiary.

Failure of the Attorney General or Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division to take any action following receipt of any information pursuant to this Subsection E shall not be construed as an approval of the matters and things set forth in such affidavit, and shall not operate as a bar to any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, which may later be instituted or then be pending.

Nothing contained in this Subsection E shall be deemed to determine, adjudicate, or affect the legality or illegality of the relationship of any corporate defendant to any such subsidiary.

F. Nothing contained in this Section XXIV shall preclude any defendant now owning less than the entire voting shares or rights of any foreign flat glass manufacturer (other than qualifying shares for local directors) from acquiring additional shares or rights in such foreign flat glass corporation at any time subsequent to the date of this judgment, provided, however, that such additional voting shares or rights acquired shall be not subject to the provisions of Subsections A, C and D of this Section XXIV for a period of three months after the first acquisition of such additional shares or rights, and thereafter only if and while the defendant shall not own or control the entire capital stock of such corporation (other than qualifying shares for local directors).

XXV

Within six months from the entry of this judgment, the defendants PPG and LOF shall each cause any officers, directors, agents, or employees who are serving as officers, directors, agents, or employees of any person engaged outside the United States in the manufacture of flat glass, or in patent licensing or exploitation or in research or development relating to such manufacture, in which such defendant owns directly or indirectly less than the entire capital stock entitled to vote in election of directors (other than qualifying shares for local directors) to resign from such other positions. Thereafter each defendant is enjoined from causing, authorizing or knowingly permitting any of its officers, directors, agents or employees to serve as officer, director, agent or employee of any such foreign person.

[Webb-Pomerene Act]

XXVI

The corporate defendants are severally and jointly enjoined and restrained for a period of five years following the entry of this judgment, from availing themselves of the benefits of the Webb-Pomerene Act. Thereafter, the corporate defendants shall not avail themselves of such benefits except upon application to and subsequent approval by this Court, upon adequate notice to the Attorney General and in accordance with the terms of that Act.

XXVII

Except to the extent provided in Sections XXI and XXVI, nothing contained in this judgment shall prevent any defendant from availing itself of the benefits of (1) the Act of Congress of April 10, 1918, commonly called the Webb-Pomerene Act; (2) the Act of Congress of 1937, commonly called the Miller-Tydings proviso to Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies"; or (3) the Act of Congress of June 19, 1936, commonly known as the Robinson-Patman Act.

[Sales Agency Agreement Ordered Terminated]

XXVIII

A. Effective December 31, 1949, defendant Fourco is ordered to terminate its existing sales agency agreement with Blackford. It is further ordered that, if Blackford shall within 15 days after the entry of this judgment serve upon Fourco and file with the Court Blackford's written agreement to be bound by the provisions of this Section XXVIII, said existing agreement shall be terminable by either party thereto upon sixty (60) days' written notice to the other. Upon the termination of the sales agency relationship between them, defendant Fourco shall be obligated to purchase from Blackford and Blackford shall be obligated to sell to Fourco the shares of Fourco stock now held by Blackford at a fair and equitable price. Within sixty (60) days after the effective date of the termination of the sales agency relationship between Blackford and Fourco, Fourco shall file with the Court upon not less than ten (10) days' notice to Blackford and to the Attorney General, a plan setting forth (a) the price proposed to be paid by Fourco for Blackford's stock in Fourco and the time and terms of payment therefor, and (b) the basis for arriving at such price. Blackford shall within sixty (60) days thereafter file with the Court upon ten (10) days' written notice to Fourco and to the Attorney General either its acceptance of such plan or an alternative plan setting forth its objections to Fourco's plan and its counter-proposal as to the price of said stock and the terms of payment therefor. The Court thereafter, after due opportunity for hearing to all interested parties, will determine the value of such stock and make such other orders as are necessary or proper. The value placed by Fourco on its stock owned by Blackford shall be calculated as of the first day of the month immediately preceding the filing of such plan with the Court by Fourco, and Blackford and the Court shall likewise use the same date as that used by Fourco. Blackford shall be entitled to interest at the rate of 4% per annum on the sale price as finally determined by the Court from the first day of the month preceding the filing of such plan by Fourco to the date of payment, but Blackford shall not be entitled to participate in Fourco's earnings subsequent to the date as of which interest becomes payable as aforesaid. The value fixed for such stock shall take into consideration Fourco's trade name "Clearlite" and Blackford shall have no right to any use of such trade name after the termination of such sales agency relationship except that it shall be permitted to utilize packing boxes labeled "Clearlite" on hand at the termination of such sales agency relationship subject to reasonable limitations to be agreed upon by Fourco and Blackford (or in the event of disagreement to be determined by a Master appointed by the Court, the expense of such proceedings to be shared equally by Fourco and Blackford) as to the quantity of such boxes to be used and the period of such use by Blackford.

B. No action taken by Blackford under this Section XXVIII shall be deemed to be an entry of a general appearance herein by Blackford, or be deemed to make it a party defendant herein, but shall be a special appearance, limited strictly to, and shall constitute only a submission of, the questions arising under this Section XXVIII of this judgment.

C. Nothing in this Section XXVIII shall be deemed to determine, adjudicate or affect the legality or illegality of the sales agency relationship between Fourco and Blackford.

D. Until the effective date of the termination of the sales agency relationship between Fourco and Blackford and the consummation of the sale of Blackford's stock to Fourco as required by this Section XXVIII, any relationship between Fourco and Blackford shall be exempt from the other sections of this judgment, but defendant Fourco is enjoined from taking any action either in the administration of the sales agency agreement or otherwise which discriminates against Blackford.

XXIX

After sixty (60) days' written notice to the defendants the plaintiff may file a petition with this Court after three years following the date of this judgment for divestiture, divorcement, or dissolution of defendants PPG, LOF, AWG, Rolland or Fourco, or for the reopening of the provisions of Sections IV and V of this judgment, and such other relief as may be incidental thereto, without showing a change in circumstance subsequent to the date of entry of this judgment. In the event a petition is filed for divestiture, divorcement or dissolution as aforesaid, the provisions of Sections IV and V shall also be deemed reopened thereby. The entry of this judgment shall not be deemed a bar to any of the above mentioned relief that the Court may grant after a hearing upon such petition. Upon the hearing on such petition, the record of all proceedings in this case prior to the entry of this judgment shall be part of the record before the Court on such petition and shall be considered by the Court, together with any additional evidence which the plaintiff or the defendants may submit to support or oppose the relief sought. The defendants or any of them shall have the unrestricted right to contest such petition for further relief upon any ground (including facts and circumstances arising before or subsequent to May 23, 1945, and without any bar or estoppel arising by reason of the entry of this judgment) except that of failure to show a change in circumstances or that such relief is barred by this judgment.

[Inspection for Purpose of Securing Compliance]

XXX

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, or of determining the need for other and further relief pursuant to Section XXIX of this judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall upon written request of the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General and on reasonable notice to any defendant corporation or association made to its principal office be permitted subject to any legally recognized privilege (1) access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this judgment, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment any defendant upon the written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, and upon reasonable notice to its principal office, shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment or obtaining other and further relief pursuant to Section XXIX of this judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

XXXI

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment or for the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, and for the purpose of the enforcement of compliance therewith and the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 62,324] Opinion of the Attorney General of Wisconsin.

Addressed to Anthony E. Madler, Counsel, State Department of Agriculture, by Grover L. Broadfoot, Attorney General. Vol. XXXVII, page 420. August 10, 1948.

Wisconsin Unfair Sales Act

Unfair Sales Act—Marketing and Trade Practices.—A wholesaler may sell below cost "distress merchandise" to another wholesaler. In such a sale, the reduced price to the purchasing wholesaler is his "invoice cost" and it controls his resale price for the next 30 days. The determination of a bona fide clearance sale under Section 100.30(6)(a) must rest upon the intent of the seller inferred from the facts of each transaction and viewed in the light of the statutory purpose to outlaw loss leaders and to prevent unfair competition. A merchant may sell below statutory cost goods on hand which his supplier has notified him will be reduced in price.

See the Wisconsin Unfair Sales Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8948.

[Questions]

You have asked several questions relating to the enforcement of sec. 100.30, Stats., which is the unfair sales act of the state of Wisconsin. This section is designed to protect industry and agriculture from unfair competition in the form of sales below cost.

The questions raised are as follows:

1. If a wholesaler has a large stock of merchandise which is not selling at the statutory minimum price, and he desires to liquidate it to free his capital for investment in other goods, in order to earn his usual profit, may he classify such stock as "distress merchandise" and sell it to another wholesaler at less than "cost to the wholesaler" as defined in sec. 100.30 (b) (2)? The answer should take into consideration the fact that out-of-state wholesalers occasionally offer to sell the same merchandise below cost.

2. Is the reduced selling price referred to in question 1 the "invoice cost" to the dealer who buys such merchandise and, if so, does it control his resale price during the next 30 days?

3. May a merchant who has a large stock of seasonal merchandise such as fruit cocktail, which is moving slowly at the statutory minimum price, sell out such stock at a clearance sale as provided in sec. 100.30 (6) (a), where he admits that he will reorder the item under the same or other brand name?

4. May a merchant who is overstocked on an item, a particular brand of soap or washing powder, for example, which he believes will be reduced in price in the near future, sell out such merchandise at a clearance sale at less than the statutory minimum price to avoid financial loss?

5. May a merchant who is overstocked with an item such as tomato catsup, which will deteriorate slowly in the container if kept too long, sell out such merchandise at less than the statutory minimum price?

["Distress Merchandise"]

In answering the first question we understand that the phrase "distress merchandise" is used to describe certain classes of goods which are in salable condition but not in demand.

It is clear that a sale of such goods must meet the minimum price requirements of sec. 100.30 (2) (b). However, the seller need not comply with the section if the circumstances surrounding the sale bring the transaction within any of the exceptions provided in sec. 100.30 (6). The labeling of goods as "distress merchandise" does not in itself permit the seller to avail himself of the exceptions. Goods sold at a bona fide clearance sale must be advertised, marked and sold as such. Sec. 100.30 (6) (a). If these condition are met, there does not appear to be any reason why one wholesaler cannot sell to another wholesaler. The requirements of a bona fide clearance sale within the meaning of the statute are discussed in the answer to the third question.

Similarly, in our opinion, a Wisconsin wholesaler may lower the price of such goods below the statutory cost when necessary to meet the prices of out-of-state wholesalers. If the Wisconsin wholesaler reduces prices in good faith to meet his out-of-state competition, he comes within the exception provided in sec. 100.30 (6) (g). An out-of-state wholesaler should be considered a competitor of a Wisconsin wholesaler if they sell in the same area. See Callmann, Unfair Competition and Trade Marks, Vol. I, § 27.6.

[Invoice Cost]

As to the second question, we believe that the reduced selling price of the merchandise is the "invoice cost" to the purchaser of such merchandise and it controls his resale price during the next 30 days. The term "invoice cost" has been defined to mean prime cost or cost of goods. Sturn v. Williams, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 325, 342. See Callmann, supra, Vol. I, § 27.4 (e). It is still a sale at cost even though competitors cannot meet the price without a loss. Callmann, supra, Vol. I, § 27.3 (c).

[Bona Fide Clearance Sale]

A categorical answer cannot be given to the third question. It requires a definition of the term "bona fide" clearance sale. Each transaction must be considered in the light of actual market conditions and the purposes of the unfair sales act.

The purpose of the unfair sales act is to prohibit sales at less than cost made for the purpose of injuring competitors or destroying competition. 52 Am. Jur. 647; Wholesale Tobacco Dealers B. v. Nat'l Candy & T. Co., (Cal.) 82 P. (2d) 3. The statute is not violated unless the merchant who sells below cost does so with the intent to (1) induce the purchase of other merchandise, (2) unfairly divert trade from a competitor, or (3) otherwise injure a competitor. Advertising, offering, or selling below cost is prima facie evidence of intent to violate the statute, Sec. 100.30 (4). In prosecutions under this statute, the state must prove an intent to violate the statute beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. 20th Century Market, 236 Wis. 215; State ex rel. Heath v. Tankar Gas, Inc., 250 Wis. 218.

The term "bona fide" has been defined by the courts to mean good faith as distinguished from bad faith. The belief or act must not be attended by fraud, deceit, or collusion. See the cases cited in 5 Words and Phrases 609. Good faith in relation to the unfair sales acts has been discussed in only a few cases. See Rust v. Griggs, (Tenn.) 113 S. W. (2d) 733; Kentucky Utilities Co. v. Carlisle Ice Co., (Ky.) 131 S. W. (2d) 499; State v. Sears, (Wash.) 103 P. (2d) 337, 345, Callmann, supra, Vol. I, § 27.5 (a), states the rule as follows:

> "If a vendor is not prompted by the need to meet competition in the usual course of business or is not otherwise desirous of availing himself of the statutory exceptions, it is apparent that his continuous undercutting and selling below cost is actuated by an intent to force a competitor to match his prices and also sell below cost until he is driven out of business."

A clearance sale at less than cost must be an honest, unfeigned attempt to accomplish a proper merchandising function. A loss leader may not be offered in the guise of a clearance sale. The intent of the merchant must be drawn from the facts of each transaction. If the evidence shows that he has sold below cost for the purpose of inducing customers to purchase other merchandise or unfairly diverting trade from a competitor or otherwise injuring a competitor, he has not conducted a bona fide clearance sale.

The merchant in this instance wishes to sell below cost a large stock of canned fruit cocktail which he intends to reorder under the same or other brand name. The fact that he intends to reorder the same or similar merchandise arouses a suspicion that the clearance sale is not in good faith. However, the reordering of fruit cocktail under a different brand name may indicate the honest belief that the new merchandise will sell where the former has failed. A continuous or repeated selling below cost of the same or similar items systematically replenished, suggests a campaign to injure a competitor and may supply the intent required to violate the unfair sales act. See Callmann, supra, Vol. I, § 27.5 (c).

[Reduction in Supplier's Price]

In the fourth question, the seller believes that his supplier is about to reduce the price of goods which he, the seller, has on hand. He wishes to sell out his present stock below the statutory cost to avoid the risk of a greater loss which may result from a reduction in his supplier's price.

Under these circumstances, the validity of the sale must be determined by the nature of the information relied upon by the seller. His good faith will appear from an investigation of the source of the report of imminent reduction of price. If the seller actually received notice from his supplier and acted upon it, his good faith in selling below cost is evidenced.

[Perishable Merchandise]

The answer to the fifth question requires a definition of the term "perishable merchandise" as used in sec. 100.30 (6) (b). This phrase has been defined by the courts in many cases cited in 32 Words and Phrases 64, 65.

Some decisions construe the adjective "perishable" to mean a natural liability to speedy decay, and distinguish such articles from articles liable to deteriorate from keeping. Jolley v. Hardeman, (Ga.) 36 S. E. 952; Poole v. U. S., 9 Ct. Cust. App. 271, 275. Other decisions indicate that the term perishable includes property subject to depreciation in value from causes other than decay. An article may be treated as perishable where it is shown likely to become worthless by keeping. Witherspoon v. Cross, (Cal.) 67 P. 18, 19; McCreery v. Berney Nat'l Bank, (Ala.) 22 So. 577, 579.

In our opinion, the latter is the better rule and the merchant who has in stock an article which experience or inspection has shown to deteriorate when stored a considerable length of time may consider the same perishable within the meaning of sec. 100.30 (6) (b).

We do not believe that it is the intention of the unfair sales act to require a merchant to retain on his shelves merchandise which does not move at the statutory minimum price and which is slowly deteriorating and losing merchantability.

[¶ 62,325] Ford Motor Company v. United States.

Commercial Investment Trust Corporation, Commercial Investment Trust, Inc., Universal Credit Corporation, et al. v. United States.

In the United States Supreme Court. Nos. 1, 2. November 15, 1948.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Suspension of Consent Decree Provisions—Persuasion or Coercion to Deal with Auto Finance Companies—Affiliation Between Auto Manufacturer and Finance Company.—The decision of a district court denying the motion of parties to a consent decree entered in proceedings under the Sherman Act, seeking suspension of provisions of the decree restraining an automobile manufacturer from recommending, endorsing, advertising or arranging for visits to finance companies until such time as similar restraints are imposed upon a competitor, is reversed and remanded. It is held that the acts prohibited by the provisions in question amount to persuasion, exposition and argument, which conduct on the part of the competitor was not enjoined, was not found to be violative of the antitrust laws, and does not amount to such coercion as was found in a criminal suit against the competitor. The dissenting opinion would affirm the denial of the motion to suspend the provisions for the reason that the economic power of the auto manufacturer over its dealers is so great that the dealers cannot afford to resist the manufacturer's influence or persuasion, whether legalistically called coercion or not. The denial of the motion of one of the parties for an order permitting the manufacturer to acquire ownership of a finance company is reversed, inasmuch as there has been no adjudication of illegality of such acquisition, and since the prohibition in the decree has expired. The dissenting opinion would continue the ban against affiliation with a finance company because the manufacturer has failed to propose any plan for affiliation, and has failed to show that continuance of the decree will cause it to suffer competitive disadvantage in the sale of cars. The majority opinion found that the resumption of full-scale competition in the auto industry has made such a showing unnecessary.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1550.10, 1560.25.

Reversing and remanding the decision of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, reported in 1946-1947 Trade Cases at ¶ 57,505.

For appellants: Clifford B. Longley, Wallace R. Middleton, Frederick C. Nash, Detroit, Michigan; Charles E. Hughes, Jr., Samuel S. Isseks, Melbourne Bergerman, Wright Tisdale, Alphonse A. Laporte; Seymour Kleinman, of counsel; Scheer, Scheer & Taylor, of counsel.

For appellee: George T. Washington, Acting Solicitor General; Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General; Holmes Baldridge, James C. Wilson, Victor O. Waters, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

[Nature of Action]

Mr. Justice Frankfurter delivered the opinion of the Court.

These cases were brought here on appeal, prior to the revision of Title 28, United States Code, under what was § 345 and since September 1 has become § 2101 of that Title, to review final decrees of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana in a suit in equity brought by the United States under § 4 of the Sherman Law, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 36 Stat. 1167, 15 U. S. C. § 4. The cases present another phase of a multifarious litigation which has been occupying the attention of the federal judicial system for more than a decade. United States v. General Motors Corp., 26 F. Supp. 353 (N. D. Ind.); United States v. General Motors Corp., 121 F. 2d 376 (C. A. 7th Cir.), cert. denied, 314 U. S. 618, rehearing denied, 314 U. S. 710; United States v. General Motors Corp., 2 F. R. D. 346 (N. D. Ill.); United States v. General Motors Corp., 2 F. R. D. 528 (N. D. Ill.); Chrysler Corp. v. United States, 314 U. S. 583, rehearing denied, 314 U. S. 716; Chrysler Corp. v. United States, 316 U. S. 556. An analytical summary of this litigation will make clear the immediate issues before us and, indeed, largely dispose of them.

On May 27, 1938, indictments were returned in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Indiana, South Bend Division, against the three leading automobile manufacturers and the companies which financed the sale of their automobiles. One indictment was against the present appellants, Ford Motor Company, and Commercial Investment Trust Corporation, Commercial Investment Trust, Inc., and Universal Credit Corporation, these three referred to collectively as CIT; another against Chrysler Corporation and Commercial Credit Company; a third against General Motors Corporation and its subsidiary, General Motors Acceptance Corporation, to be abbreviated as GMAC. The indictments charged the automobile manufacturer and the jointly named finance companies with violations of the Sherman Law by influencing dealers who sold the automobiles of the respective manufacturers to give the finance companies the business of financing the dealers' wholesale purchases and retail sales of automobiles.

Following these charges, negotiations were set afoot to secure the elimination through consent decrees of the practices described in the indictments. As to the Ford and Chrysler groups the Government, on November 7, 1938, filed suits in equity and arranged for the dismissal of their indictments. (For present purposes we are not further concerned with Chrysler.) Although Ford and CIT formally resisted the complaint, denying its allegations and pleading affirmative defenses, negotiations for a consent decree proceeded. Efforts toward an amicable settlement with General Motors and GMAC failed. The Government therefore pressed the criminal charges against them. In view of the competitive conditions in the automobile industry it obviously became of crucial importance to Ford not to consent to any restraints beyond those which would fall upon General Motors through the contingencies of litigation against it. But it would not have been enough merely to provide that restraints which Ford accepted should eventually be lifted to the extent not imposed upon General Motors at some remote time defined merely by the vicissitudes of litigation. Protection against competitive disadvantage, the appropriateness of which the Government recognized, required a time certain at the end of which the restraints against Ford would expire if General Motors were still free of them.

[Provisions of Decree]

Accordingly, the consent decree, entered on November 15, 1938, assured Ford essential equality of position with the unconsenting General Motors by two explicit conditions. Their terms are fully set out in the margin;[1]

[1] "12. The Respondent Finance Company shall not pay to any automobile manufacturing company and the Manufacturer shall not obtain from any finance company any money or other thing of value as a bonus or commission on account of retail time sales paper acquired by the finance company from dealers of the Manufacturer. The Manufacturer shall not make any loan to or purchase the securities of Respondent Finance Company or any other finance company, and if it shall pay any money to Respondent Finance Company or any other finanee company with the purpose or effect of inducing or enabling such finance company to offer to the dealers of the Manufacturer a lower finance charge than it would offer in the absence of such payment, it shall offer in writing to make, and if such offer is accepted it shall make, payment upon substantially similar bases, terms and conditions to every other finance company offering such lower finance charge; provided, however, that nothing in this paragraph contained shall be construed to prohibit the Manufacturer from acquiring notes, bonds, commercial paper, or other evidence of indebtedness of Respondent Finance Company or any other finance company in the open market.

"It is an express condition of this decree that notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding paragraph of this paragraph 12 and of any other provisions of this decree, if an effective final order or decree not subject to further review shall not have been entered on or before January 1, 1941, requiring General Motors Corporation permanently to divest itself of all ownership and control of General Motors Acceptance Corporation and of all interest therein, then and in that event, nothing in this decree shall preclude the Manufacturer from acquiring and retaining ownership of and/or control over or interest in any finance company, or from dealing with such finance company and with the dealers in the manner provided in this decree or in any order of modification or suspension thereof entered pursuant to paragraph 12a. The court, upon application of the respondents or any of them, will enter an order or decree to that effect at the foot of this decree, and the right of any respondent herein to make the application and to obtain such order or decree is expressly conceded and granted.

"12a. It is a further express condition of this decree that:

"(1) If the proceeding now pending in this court against General Motors Corporation instituted by the filing of an indictment by the Grand Jury on May 27, 1938, No. 1039, or any further proceeding initiated by reindictment of General Motors Corporation for the same alleged acts, is finally terminated in any manner or with any result except by a judgment of conviction against General Motors Corporation their essence can be briefly summarized. Paragraph 12 forbids Ford from acquiring control of any finance company. After enumerating various forbidden forms of financial interest, the paragraph provides that if the Government should not have obtained a final decree against General Motors by January 1, 1941, requiring it to divest itself of all interest in GMAC, its affiliated finance company, the prohibition against Ford would cease. The second express condition, designed to relieve from restraints imposed by earlier paragraphs in the decree against various means of influencing dealers to patronize CIT, is found in paragraph 12a. That paragraph addressed itself to the possible eventualities of the criminal proceeding against General Motors and GMAC: (1) its termination with a result other than a judgment of conviction; (2) a general verdict of guilty; (3) a special verdict of guilty; (4) a plea of guilty or nolo contendere. Upon the first contingency all restrictive terms of the decree against Ford would be suspended until similar restraints were imposed upon General Motors and GMAC. The second was to be "deemed to be a determination of the illegality of any agreement, act or practice of General Motors Corporation which is held by the trial court, in its instructions to the jury, to constitute a proper basis for the return of a general verdict of guilty." The third and fourth were, respectively, to be deemed determinations of the illegality of "any agreement, act or practice" which was their subject matter.

---

and General Motors Acceptance Corporation therein, then and in that event every provision of this decree except those contained in this sub-paragraph (1) of this paragraph 12a of this decree, shall forthwith become inoperative and be suspended, until such time as restraints and requirements in terms substantially identical with those imposed herein shall be imposed upon General Motors Corporation and General Motors Acceptance Corporation and their subsidiaries either (a) by consent decree, or (b) by final decree of a court of competent jurisdiction not subject to further review, or (c) by decree of such court which although subject to further review continues effective. The court reserves jurisdiction upon application of any party to enter orders at the foot of this decree in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph.

"(2) A general verdict of guilty returned against General Motors Corporation in said proceeding, followed by the entry of judgment thereon, shall be deemed to be a determination of the illegality of any agreement, act or practice of General Motors Corporation which is held by the trial court, in its instructions to the jury, to constitute a proper basis for the return of a general verdict of guilty. A special verdict of guilty returned against General Motors Corporation in said proceeding, followed by the entry of judgment thereon, shall be deemed to constitute a determination of the illegality of any agreement, act or practice of General Motors Corporation which is the subject of such special verdict of guilty. A plea of guilty or nolo contendere by General Motors Corporation, followed by the entry of judgment of conviction thereon, shall be deemed to be a determination of the illegality of any agreement, act or practice which is the subject matter of such plea. The determination, in the manner provided in this clause, of the illegality of any agreement, act or practice of General Motors Corporation shall (for the purposes of clause (3) of this paragraph) be considered as the equivalent of a decree restraining the performance by General Motors Corporation of such agreement, act or practice, unless or until such judgment is reversed, or unless such determination is based, in whole or in part, (a) upon the ownership by General Motors Corporation of General Motors Acceptance Corporation, or (b) upon the performance by General Motors Corporation of such agreement, act or practice in combination with some other agreement, act or practice with which the respondents are not charged in the indictment heretofore filed against them by the Grand Jury on May 27, 1938, No. 1041;

"(3) After the entry of a consent decree against General Motors Corporation, or after the entry of a litigated decree, not subject to further review, against General Motors Corporation by a court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, or after the entry of a judgment of conviction against General Motors Corporation in the proceeding hereinbefore referred to, or after January 1, 1940 (whichever date is earliest), the court upon application of any respondent from time to time will enter orders:

"(i) suspending each of the restraints and requirements contained in sub-paragraphs (d) to (f) and (h) to (l), inclusive, of paragraph 6 of this decree to the extent that it is not then imposed, and until it shall be imposed, in substantially identical terms, upon General Motors Corporation and its subsidiaries, and suspending each of the restraints and requirements contained in sub-paragraphs (a), (c) and (d) of paragraph 7 of this decree to the extent that it is not imposed and until it shall be imposed in substantially identical terms, upon General Motors Acceptance Corporation and its subsidiaries, either (w) by consent decree, or (x) by final decree of a court of competent jurisdiction not subject to further review, or (y) by decree of such court which, although subject to further review, continues effective, or (z) by the equivalent of such a decree as defined in clause (2) of this paragraph; provided, however, that if the provisions of a consent or litigated decree against General Motors Corporation and its subsidiaries corresponding to sub-paragraphs (j) and (k) of paragraph 6 of this decree are different from said sub-paragraphs of this decree, then upon application of the respondents any provision or provisions of said sub-paragraphs will be modified so as to conform to the corresponding provisions of such General Motors Corporation decree;

These provisions furnish a litmus-paper test for determining what restraints survive the result of the proceeding against General Motors and GMAC. What was not illegal for General Motors was not longer to be prohibited to Ford. The sword of justice was to strike both alike. Paragraph 12a further defines how and when the restraints were to be relaxed. Sub-paragraph (3) provides that after the entry of a decree against General Motors, or after the entry of a judgment of conviction in the pending criminal proceedings "or after January 1, 1940 (whichever date is earliest), the court upon application of any respondent from time to time will enter orders" suspending any restraint against it (with exceptions not now relevant) "to the extent that it is not then imposed, and until it shall be imposed, in substantially identical terms" upon General Motors or GMAC.

[Suit Against Competitor]

On November 17, 1939, the jury returned a general verdict of guilty against General Motors, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed the judgment upon that verdict, 121 F. 2d 376, and this Court denied further review. 314 U. S. 618; id. at 710.

On October 4, 1940, the Government finally brought a suit in equity against General Motors seeking divestiture of its control of GMAC. But it was then too late for a decree to be entered before the lapse of Ford's agreement not to become affiliated with a finance company. On December 21, 1940, therefore, the Government made a motion asking to have paragraph 12 modified by moving forward the date when the prohibition against affiliation would expire if a decree against General Motors had not then been entered. Each year after that, as the new deadline came near, the Government made a new motion to have it extended, and year after year Ford consented to the extension. On December 31, 1945, the Government again moved to have the prohibition against affiliation extended, this time to January 1, 1947. Ford now resisted the motion, and on May 4, 1946, both Ford and CIT filed motions of their own. They asked the District Court to suspend sub-paragraphs (i) and (k) of paragraph 6 and sub-paragraph (d) of paragraph 7 and to modify sub-paragraph (e) of paragraph 6 on the ground that the practices enjoined by these provisions of the decree were not "held by the trial court, in its instructions to the jury, to constitute a proper basis for the return of a general verdict of guilty." Ford also moved that "an order be entered pursuant to paragraph 12 . . . that nothing therein shall preclude the Manufacturer from acquiring and retaining ownership of and/or control over or interest in any finance company . . ." The District Court denied the motions by Ford and CIT and granted the Government's motion for extension of the prohibition against affiliation

"(ii) suspending each of the restraints and requirements contained in the remaining sub-paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (g) of paragraph 6 to the extent that it is not then imposed, and until it shall be imposed, upon General Motors Corporation and its subsidiaries in any manner specified in the foregoing sub-clause (i) of clause (3), if any respondent shall show to the satisfaction of the court that General Motors Corporation or its subsidiaries is performing any agreement, act or practice prohibited to the Manufacturer by said remaining sub-paragraphs, and suspending each of the restraints and requirements contained in sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph 7 of this decree to the extent that it is not imposed, and until it shall be imposed, upon General Motors Acceptance Corporation and its subsidiaries in any said manner, if any respondent shall show to the satisfaction of the court that General Motors Acceptance Corporation is performing any agreement, act or practice prohibited to Respondent Finance Company by said sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph 7;

"(iii) Suspending the restraints of sub-paragraph (d) of paragraph 7 of this decree as to Respondent Finance Company, in the event that the restraints of sub-paragraph (i) of paragraph 6 of this decree are suspended as to the Manufacturer.

"(4) The right of the respondents or any of them to make any application for suspension of any provision of this decree in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph and to obtain such relief is hereby expressly granted.

"In the event that at any time prior to the date when General Motors Corporation has permanently divested itself of all ownership and control of and interest in General Motors Acceptance Corporation, General Motors Acceptance Corporation shall make available to dealers of General Motors Corporation in any area a finance charge, on all or any class of automobiles sold by dealers of General Motors Corporation, less than the finance charge then generally available to dealers of the Manufacturer within such area, nothing in this decree shall prevent the Manufacturer from making, and the Manufacturer may make, adjustments, allowances or payments to or with all of its dealers in such area who agree to reduce to an amount approved by the Manufacturer (but not less than that then made available by General Motors Acceptance Corporation) the finance charges which such dealers of the Manufacturer in such area receive from any class of retail purchasers of automobiles, provided that such adjustments, allowances or payments shall not discriminate among such dealers in such area."

to January 1, 1947. The present appeals followed. Although the particular extension of paragraph 12 appealed from has expired, the equity suit against General Motors has not yet been set down for trial and the Government's motion for a further extension has been held in abeyance pending the outcome of these appeals. It is not a moot question therefore whether the District Court properly granted the extension to January 1, 1947. See Southern Pacific Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 433, 452; Southern Pacific Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498, 514-16.

[Charge to the Jury]

The restraints imposed against Ford by sub-paragraphs 6 (e), 6 (i), 6 (k) and 7 (d) must survive the outcome of the conviction against General Motors if the language of the trial judge's charge to the jury in the criminal prosecution of General Motors can fairly be equated with the language of those sub-paragraphs. If, on the other hand, the judge's charge falls short of holding illegal what those sub-paragraphs proscribed, appellants are entitled to a suspension of sub-paragraphs 6 (i), 6 (k) and 6 (d) and a modification of sub-paragraph 6 (e).

First, then, to summarize the contents of these provisions of the decree.[2] Sub-paragraph 6 (i) precludes Ford from arranging with CIT or any other finance company "that an agent of the Manufacturer and an agent of the finance company shall together be present with any dealer or prospective dealer for the purpose of influencing the dealer to patronize" the finance company. Sub-paragraph 6 (k) provides that "the Manufacturer shall not recommend, endorse, or advertise the Respondent Finance Company or any other finance company or companies to any dealer or to the public . . ." Sub-paragraph 7 (d), the counterpart of 6 (i), is directed against CIT. Sub-paragraph 6 (e) restrains Ford from establishing "any practice, procedure or plan for the retail or wholesale financing of automobiles for the purpose of enabling Respondent Finance Company or any other finance company or companies to enjoy a competitive advantage in obtaining the patronage of dealers" not equally available to any other finance company. Modification of this sub-paragraph is asked only to the extent necessary to permit them freedom to act in a manner otherwise permissible, if suspension of sub-paragraphs 6 (i), 6 (k) and 7 (d) is granted.

[2] Their full text is as follows:

"[6.] (e) Except as provided by sub-paragraphs (j) and (k) of this paragraph 6,

"(i) the Manufacturer shall not establish any practice, procedure or plan for the retail or wholesale financing of automobiles for the purpose of enabling Respondent Finance Company or any other finance company or companies to enjoy a competitive advantage in obtaining the patronage of dealers through any service, facility or privilege extended by the Manufacturer pursuant to such practice, procedure or plan if such service, facility or privilege or a service, facility or privilege corresponding thereto, is not made available upon its written request to any other finance company upon substantially similar terms and conditions; and

"(ii) so long as the Manufacturer shall continue to afford any service, facility or privilege not otherwise specifically referred to in this decree to Respondent Finance Company or any other finance company or companies, it shall not refuse to afford similar or corresponding services, facilities or privileges upon substantially similar terms and conditions and upon written request to any other finance company for the purpose of giving Respondent Finance Company or any other finance company or companies a competitive advantage in obtaining the patronage of dealers; provided that it shall not be a violation of this decree for the Manufacturer to afford such service, facility or privilege only to registered finance companies as defined in sub-paragraph (j) of this paragraph 6 or only to a finance company designated in writing to the Manufacturer by the dealer or prospective dealer;

"the written request shall specify in each instance the particular service, facility or privilege desired;

. . . .

"[6] (i) The Manufacturer shall not, except in each instance upon written request of the dealer or prospective dealer, arrange or agree with Respondent Finance Company or any other Finance company that an agent of the Manufacturer and an agent of the finance company shall together be present with any dealer or prospective dealer for the purpose of influencing the dealer to patronize Respondent Finance Company or such other finance company; provided, however, that it shall not be a violation of this decree for the Manufacturer to assist any dealer or prospective dealer, because of said dealer's or prospective dealer's financial situation or requirements, by joint conference with him and a representative of a particular finance company, to obtain special facilities or services (such term not including only the financing of the shipment or delivery of automobiles to such dealer or prospective dealer and/or only the purchase or acquisition of retail time sales paper from him in the regular course of business) from the particular finance company and, in part consideration of such special facilities or services, for such dealer or prospective dealer to arrange to do business with such finance company on an exclusive basis for a reasonable period of time as may be agreed between them;

. . . .

"[6.] (k) The Manufacturer shall not recommend, endorse or advertise the Respondent Finance Company or any other finance company or companies to any dealer or to the public;

This brings us to the trial judge's instructions, which, insofar as relevant, are fully set forth below.[3] Their plain effect is to draw a line between such practices as cancellation of a dealer's contract, or refusal to renew it, or discrimination in the shipment of automobiles, as a means of influencing dealers to use GMAC, all of which fall within the common understanding of "coercion," and other practices for which "persuasion," "exposition" or "argument" are fair characterizations. As a mere matter of interpreting language, the Government hardly challenges the fitness of the terms "persuasion," "exposition" or "argument," which the jury was charged were open to General Motors, to cover acts such as arranging for the presence of agents of both Ford and CIT with a view to putting the claims of CIT to a dealer or recommending, endorsing, and advertising CIT to a dealer. But all these acts were specifically forbidden Ford by the consent decree. The Government's insistence is that since the indictment charged that advertising, endorsement and recommendation violated the Sherman Law and since evidence was introduced to support the charge, the jury might have found General Motors and GMAC guilty of "coercion" at least partly on the basis of that evidence. But sub-paragraph 12 (a) (2) was not designed to authorize speculative reconstruction of the jury's process in reaching its verdict. It provided a definite standard for ascertaining what rules of law were at a future date to be made binding on a competitor of Ford. The rules which the trial judge formulated against General Motors were thereafter to be the rules of law against Ford. The trial judge used the word "coercion" to summarize practices which, if the jury found them to exist, would call for a verdict against General Motors. He used the words "persuasion," "exposition" and "argument" to describe conduct which, in common usage, is not "coercion" and therefore would not support such a verdict. Nothing in other portions of the judge's charge erases or blurs this line of distinction. The restraints imposed by the paragraphs appellants seek to have suspended are properly described by the terms "ex-provided, however, that nothing in this decree contained shall prevent the Manufacturer in good faith:

"(1) From adopting from time to time a plan or plans of financing retail sales of new automobiles made by the Manufacturer or from time to time withdrawing or modifying the same;

"(2) From recommending to its dealers the use of such plans;

"(3) From advertising to the public and recommending the use of such plans.

. . . .

"7. The Respondent Finance Company:

. . . .

"(d) Shall not, except upon written request of the dealer or prospective dealer, arrange or agree with the Manufacturer that an agent of the Manufacturer and an agent of Respondent Finance Company shall together be present with any dealer or prospective dealer for the purpose of influencing the dealer or prospective dealer to patronize Respondent Finance Company; provided, however, that it shall not be a violation of this decree for Respondent Finance Company by joint conference with a dealer or prospective dealer and a representative of the Manufacturer to agree to furnish to such dealer or prospective dealer, because of his financial situation or requirements, special facilities or services (such term not including only the financing of the shipment or delivery of automobiles to such dealer or prospective dealer and/or only the purchase or acquisition of retail time sales paper from him in the regular course of business) and in part consideration of such special facilities or services to arrange for the dealer or prospective dealer to do business with Respondent Finance Company on an exclusive basis for such reasonable period of time as may be agreed between them."

[3] "It is not unreasonable for the General Motors Company to have a finance company. It is not unreasonable for the General Motors Company to have contracts with its dealers for a year or to have a cancellation clause in them. They have a perfect right to have a finance company and to recommend its use. They have a perfect right to cancel a contract from their dealer as long as they are not performing any unreasonable act.

"They have a right to determine whom they will sell their cars to, and they have a right to determine whom they will not sell their cars to because cars are their product and they are their property and no law compels them to sell them to any man they don't want to sell them to; but that is not the charge in this case. The charge is not that by having difficulty in contracts in itself, these defendants did anything wrong; it is not charged here that to recommend the use of GMAC there is anything wrong; it is not charged here that cancellation for cause is anything wrongful; but the Government's theory in this case is irrespective of these contracts and independent of them and outside of them the conditions have been asserted that they, under the designation of those to the grand jurors unknown, the actions have been such that the possibility, the ability to cancel, the ability to refuse to renew a contract, have been used as clubs upon the dealers to force them to use GMAC and that these acts that are complained of were acts that were used to force the dealers to use GMAC, the Government insists that these acts inspired by that motive have been such as to result in cancellations that otherwise would not have occurred; in discriminations that would not otherwise have occurred in the shipment of cars in interstate commerce and in refusals to renew that would not otherwise have occurred, position," "persuasion" and "argument." So long as these paragraphs remain in effect and so long as there is no comparable decree enjoining their substance against General Motors and GMAC, Ford and CIT cannot do without risk of violating the consent decree that which General Motors and GMAC are free to do. Only a lawyer who is obtuse or reckless would advise Ford and CIT that they could subject a dealer to "persuasion," "exposition" or "argument" without the hazard of contempt of the paragraphs under discussion. Thus the conditions have been fulfilled which entitled Ford and CIT to suspension of the restraints imposed by those terms of the decree.

[Illegality of Practices]

Quite apart from Ford's and CIT's consent to forego the opportunities outlawed by sub-paragraphs 6 (e), (i), (k) and 7 (d), the Government urges that a court of equity should refuse to suspend or modify them by claiming that the practices restrained by those paragraphs are in any event illegal under the Sherman Law. But since this has neither been admitted nor proven, and since ascertainment of illegality under the Sherman Law normally depends on the circumstances of a particular situation and the inferences they yield, the appellants have a right to insist that, so long as interdiction of these practices has not been decreed against General Motors, the Government be put to its proof. The lifting of the restraints imposed by the consent decree does not, of course, affect the liability of Ford for any violations of the Sherman Law that the Government may establish in court. Moreover, to the extent that such restraints may at some future date be imposed on General Motors, they will, by sub-paragraph 12a (3), equally fetter Ford.

[Propriety of Extension of Ban Against Affiliation]

There remains for consideration the question whether the District Court properly extended the prohibition against affiliation between Ford and a finance company. This was the sixth time that the Government had applied for extension. The equity suit begun more than six years earlier had not yet been brought to trial. The court was faced at the same time with a motion for suspension of the prohibition against affiliation which was made by appellants under the express provision of paragraph 12 reserving the right to such a motion. The court denied the appellant's motion and granted the Government's on the ground, (1) that the "time clause" of paragraph 12 was subsidiary to and in the use of GMAC when it otherwise would not have been used.

"In other words, the Government has no right to complain, and it may not complain of the defendants' right to limit its sales of cars to persons whom it may select, its right to determine who it shall sell to, its rights to determine upon what terms it will sell, its right to pick its own dealers.

"It can only complain if the defendants do sufficient of these acts charged in the indictment as constitute duress upon the dealer to accomplish a result that would have otherwise not have been accomplished, and to make a dealer do something that he would not have done of his own free will.

"That, almost, is the question in this case—whether the dealer could act as a free man; whether he could act of his own free will.

"The defendants say:

" 'We never imposed any restrictions upon that freedom of action.'

"The Government says it did and there is that question. If it did—if the defendants did that sort of thing—and if it resulted in an unreasonable restriction and unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce, then you would have a right to find them guilty.

"If they did not do it, this lawsuit is at an end, and that is a question which you have got to decide.

"You know, you have heard of the terms:

"Exposition;

"Persuasion;

"Argument;

"Coercion.

"They are different steps. They are graduated steps that I suppose every salesman goes through, except perhaps the last.

"In Exposition one may expound the merits of that which he has to sell; he may explain its nature and by his exposition make a clear picture of what he has.

"By persuasion he may endeavor to persuade the person to whom he is talking to accept that which he has to offer.

"There is little advancement in his further progress, to argue.

"Persuasion means something softer than argument, perhaps, but he may argue with him, and argue with him the respective merits of his product and other products being offered to the person to whom he makes his offer.

"All of these are proper.

"He may not go beyond that and use something that is within his power to use as a club to coerce the person to accept that which he has to offer.

. . . .

"You must remember that, after all, this coercion, if you find that coercion exists, then the ultimate question is: Has that resulted in unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce? And that is a question for you to determine from all of the evidence."

the "main purpose" of paragraph 12 which was "to provide that the test of the permanency of the bar against affiliation was to abide the outcome of the civil antitrust suit against General Motors Corporation," and (2) "That the purpose and intent of the decree will be carried out if Ford Motor Company is given the opportunity at any future time to propose a plan for the acquisition of a finance company, and to make a showing that such plan is necessary to prevent Ford Motor Company from being placed at a competitive disadvantage. . . ."

The Government seeks to support these conclusions by insisting on a mechanical application of the decision in Chrysler Corp. v. United States, 316 U. S. 556, involving a parallel prohibition against Chrysler. The Chrysler case was decided on June 1, 1942. In the intervening years the factors of the problem have drastically changed. More than nine years have elapsed since the criminal prosecution against General Motors was concluded; what was at the time of the Chrysler decision a two-year delay in obtaining a civil decree against General Motors has now stretched into a ten-year delay. Even then, six and a half years ago, this Court characterized the District Court's finding that the Government had proceeded "diligently and expeditiously" as "markedly generous." 316 U. S. at 563. At that time the Court also found support for the District Court in the fact that "the complete cessation of the manufacture of new automobiles and light trucks has drastically minimized the significance of the competitive factor." Id. at 564. But circumstances that were found extenuating on behalf of the Government two years after the entry of the decree are hardly compelling ten years afterward. While a showing that continuance of the bar against affiliation would cause competitive disadvantage may not, as a practical matter, unreasonably have been called for at a time when competition in the industry was completely suspended during the indeterminate period of war, the resumption of full-scale competition makes such a showing unnecessary. And this is unaffected by the fact that automobiles are still in short supply. The appellants agreed for a limited term to refrain from pursuing conduct which, in the absence of an adjudication that it was illegal, they were otherwise free to pursue and which General Motors has always been free to pursue. There has been no such adjudication and successive extensions of the term have expired. The crucial fact now is not the degree of actual disadvantage but the persistence of an inequality against which the appellants had secured the Government's protection. Yet the Government seeks a change in the express terms of the decree which would perpetuate that inequality. The Government has not sustained the burden of showing good cause why a court of equity should grant relief from an undertaking well understood and carefully formulated. If the Government seeks to outlaw possible arrangements by Ford with a finance corporation, it must establish its case in court against Ford as against General Motors and not draw on a consent which by its very terms is not available.

[Judgment Reversed and Remanded]

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

Mr. Justice Murphy and Mr. Justice Jackson took no part in the consideration or decision of these cases.

[Dissenting Opinion]

Mr. Justice Black, dissenting.

The Court appears to accept the argument of petitioner that this consent decree must be treated as though it were a contract between private persons for purchase of an automobile. But a consent decree is not a contract. A consent decree in an antitrust proceeding like a decree entered after a contest must be treated as a judicial determination and order made in the public interest. United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106, 114-115. That means, I would suppose, that before the restraints in this decree are lifted, a showing should be made that such action would not tend to generate future violations of the antitrust laws. No such showing has been made here. As I see the case, modification of the decree under the circumstances shown will aid and encourage destruction of competition contrary to law. For so far as existing effective court restraints are concerned, modification will give Ford freedom to help the appellant finance companies crush their competitors.

Even though Ford and Commercial Investment Trust Corporation (C. I. T.) made no admission of the facts charged in the original complaint, the undenied allegations of the bill were sufficient to support the decree's prohibition against future competition-destroying practices. Swift & Co. v. United States, 276 U. S. 311, 327. In very brief summary, those facts, so far as relevant to the view I take, are these:

Ford makes and sells about 25 per cent of all cars in the United States, Chrysler 25 per cent and General Motors 44 per cent. Ford and the others sell to dealers about four billion dollars' worth of cars yearly, requiring cash on delivery. The dealers then sell to retail customers. About 60 per cent of the retail sales are on credit. Dealers not permitted to sell other makes of cars are wholly dependent upon Ford's, G. M.'s or Chrysler's favorable treatment for their business lives. The dealer agencies are for one year, but the agency contracts can be canceled on short notice and without cause. The dealers are thus economic dependents of the company whose cars they sell. While there are about 375 independent finance companies, C. I. T. and its subsidiaries, appellants here, prior to entry of this court decree, furnished about 82 per cent of the money for Ford dealer purchases, and 70 per cent of that furnished for Ford retail purchases. The favored companies got this major percentage of Ford car loans because Ford supplied them with offices at its factories, kept them informed of sales, gave more liberal payment terms to its dealers who dealt with C. I. T., required dealers to keep their books and records open so that Ford could prevent transactions with other finance companies, sent Ford factory representatives with C. I. T. agents to help "persuade" dealers to do business with C. I. T., and required dealers who handled loans through others to make satisfactory explanations to Ford.

This Ford favored finance company, C. I. T., asks modification. One reason suggested for modification is that the C. I. T. group has lost a portion of Ford financing since the decree subjected them to competition with other finance companies. They complain of the decree not because it stifles competitive practice; quite the contrary, they complain because the decree infringes on C. I. T.'s monopolistic sanctuary.

In substance, the modifications requested are, (1) that Ford be permitted to acquire ownership, control, or an interest in a finance company; (2) that Ford be permitted to endorse, recommend, or advertise particular finance companies to its dealers; (3) that Ford be permitted to arrange with finance companies that its representatives go with agents of the favored company to dealers to "influence" those dealers to negotiate loans for themselves and retail purchasers only with the favored companies. Freedom to influence dealers would appear to offer a perfect opportunity for Ford and the favored finance companies to deprive Ford dealers and retail purchasers of all benefits in the way of low interest rates and liberal loan terms the dealers and retailers might otherwise obtain from competition among the hundreds of finance companies in the country. For it is sure, if the undenied allegations of the complaint be accepted, as they should be at this stage, that the economic power of Ford over its dealers is so great that dealers who desperately need Ford cars will be helpless to resist Ford's "influence" and "persuasion," whether legalistically called "coercion" or not. Due to Ford's power, what dealer could afford to draw nice distinctions between "persuasion" and "coercion"? I can hardly believe that the showing of an agreement between Ford and C. I. T. to return to their old methods of "persuasion" would fail to support a finding of unreasonable restraint of trade.

It must be remembered that Ford neither promised, nor is it required by this court's action, to refrain from using its overpowering influence to "persuade" its dealers in the same old way. Ford and C. I. T. rely here on no showing of an intent to abide by the antitrust law; they rely on the literal language of what they treat as a contract with government prosecutors. But government officers have no power, by contract or otherwise, to permit violations of the law, even should they attempt to do so, which in this case I do not think they did. Had General Motors been acquitted on the criminal charge of violating the antitrust laws, there would be merit in the contention of Ford that government officers should not insist on continuance of this injunction against Ford. General Motors was not acquitted, but was convicted under an indictment alleging the same type of economic pressure practices enjoined by this consent decree. And the trial judge charged the jury that they had "a right to find the Defendants guilty" if they found that the Government had "proved the acts beyond all reasonable doubt charged in this indictment."

True the court charged the jury that acts of mere "persuasion" were not enough, and that General Motors must have used its power "as a club to coerce." And the court explained dictionary differences in the abstract between "persuasion" and "coercion." But the jury was considering a concrete set of facts in which the language used by General Motors, in the abstract, might only amount to "persuasion," while the language plus General Motors' economic power might amount to "coercion." And the jury's verdict of guilty, viewed in the light of the court's charge, means to me that the persuasion plus economic power charged and proved in the General Motors case, which were in substance the identical acts and practices charged and enjoined in this case, showed "use of a club to coerce" in violation of the antitrust laws. I therefore agree with the finding of the District Court here in denying Ford's motion to modify, namely that the agreements, acts, and practices such as here enjoined constituted a proper basis for the general verdict of guilty in the General Motors case. Consequently, I think that the Government has fairly met the consent decree's condition with reference to the conviction of General Motors.

Nor do I believe that in the present state of the record this Court should lift the ban against Ford's acquisition of or affiliation with a finance company. The law prohibits acquisition by one corporation of the whole or any part of the stock of "another corporation . . . where the effect of such acquisition may be . . . to restrain . . . commerce in any section or community, or tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce." 38 Stat. 731-732, 15 U. S. C. § 18. There can be no doubt that affiliation between Ford and a certain group of finance companies will lessen the opportunity of other finance companies to compete for the automobile loan contracts both of dealers and retail purchasers. And where the volume of business as here involves 25 per cent of all automobile sales (and eventually 94 per cent) the tendency to monopoly is aggravated.

Ford relies upon allegations made in its motion to modify, to the effect that it will be competitively injured if denied an opportunity to affiliate with a finance company and to "persuade" its dealers to borrow from that company alone, so long as General Motors is allowed to "persuade" its dealers to borrow from a General Motors affiliate or subsidiary. But Ford has not proposed to the Court any legally allowable plan for affiliation, nor has it shown the Court that continuance of the decree will cause it to suffer a competitive disadvantage in the sale of cars. Failure of proof in these two respects was held an adequate ground for denying a motion of Chrysler Corporation to amend a decree precisely like this one. Chrysler Corp. v. United States, 316 U. S. 556, 564. We should take the same action in this case where the District Court specifically has found that Ford had failed to prove that continuance of the decree would subject Ford to a competitive disadvantage. Moreover, it is difficult to imagine how Ford could be suffering a competitive disadvantage in the sale of cars in today's famished car market. So far as this record shows, Ford would not lose the sale of a single car by leaving this decree as it is. And Ford does not rely on a desire to make a profit, secret or open, out of loans its dealers must obtain to pay Ford or loans retail purchasers must get to pay dealers. If Ford professed a desire to make loans as a finance company on open competition with other finance companies, that would be one thing. It is quite another to ask a court of equity to lift its ban in order that Ford may dictate loan terms for dealers and retail purchasers after Ford has sold the cars in the market. The only competitive disadvantage that this record reveals is that from which Ford dealers, Ford retail purchasers, and independent loan agencies will suffer when the modification of this decree gives Ford and C. I. T. the green light.

Furthermore, the Court's action here means that the Chrysler decree must be modified without the showing this Court required in the Chrysler case. And it means that future destruction of competition in automobile financing by Ford, Chrysler, and General Motors has the tacit approval of this Court. For if Ford should after today "affiliate" with C. I. T., or renew its "persuasion" of dealers, could it be expected that this Court would thereafter hold these other companies legally responsible, even if it should be thought that today's permitted conduct ran afoul of the antitrust law? Is it conceivable that if Ford now "affiliates" with C. I. T., Ford's "vested interest," acquired with this Court's tacit approval, would be taken from Ford by a federal court?

Much talk about refined distinctions in the court's charge in the General Motors case cannot create doubts as to the effect of the decision today. The result will be destruction of competition in automobile financing. Hereafter dealers and retail purchasers cannot depend on competition to keep interest rates at a fair level. Their sole hope for low interest rates and loans on liberal terms will be the spontaneous generosity of Ford, General Motors, and Chrysler. It may be that monopoly in automobile loans is a good thing, but the antitrust laws assume that competition is better.

I would affirm this judgment.

MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE concurs in this dissent.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS joins in this opinion insofar as its protests against lifting the ban on Ford's acquisition of or affiliation with a finance company.

[¶ 62,326] B. B. Nelson v. George R. Reilly, et al.

In the California Appellate Court, Second District, Div. Three. Civil No. 16202. November 3, 1948.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County.

Cartwright Antitrust Law

Conflict with Alcoholic Beverage Control Act—Later Legislation Controls.—If there is an irreconcilable conflict between the Cartwright Antitrust Law of 1907 and the provisions of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act of 1935 which legalize fair trade contracts in the liquor industry, the later legislation must control. In a proceeding in mandamus to compel members of the State Board of Equalization to rescind a regulation of the board requiring liquor licensees to enter into fair trade contracts, a judgment dismissing the proceeding is affirmed. An issue as to the reasonableness and legality of the rule is held to have become moot on appeal from the judgment.

See the Cartwright Antitrust Law, Vol. 2, ¶ 8075, and the Resale Price Maintenance Commentary, Vol. 2, ¶ 7375.

For appellant: Leslie S. Bowden, Frank Mergenthaler.

For respondents: Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Bayard Rhone, Deputy Attorney General.

SHINN, P. J.: Appellant, B. B. Nelson, filed his petition for a writ of mandate directed to the members of the State Board of Equalization, commanding them to rescind and set aside a certain regulation of the board, effective March 1, 1947, known as Amended Rule 99, which rule requires those licensed to sell whiskey or domestic brandy to enter into fair trade contracts for which provision is made by section 55.5 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. (Stats. 1935, p. 1123; 2 Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 3796.) He alleged that he is duly licensed under the laws of the State of California to engage in the business of retailing intoxicating liquors and is so engaged, and that the said regulation is unreasonable, contrary to law and will, if enforced, cause him irreparable damage in that it will deprive him of the right to fix or establish the retail selling price of his merchandise. The general demurrer of the respondents to the petition was sustained without leave to amend and the proceeding was dismissed by judgment rendered June 23, 1947. Petitioner appeals.

[1] Appellant's attack upon the rule is based upon a state of the law which no longer exists. A premise from which his argument proceeds is that at the time the regulation was promulgated by the board, fair trade contracts of the type described in the rule were declared by section 55.5 of the control act to be lawful but were permissible only, whereas, by the rule they are made compulsory. Appellant contends that no authority had been or could be delegated to the board by the Legislature to enact regulations having the force of law which would require retail licensees to enter into and comply with fair trade contracts. The theory appears to be that such a regulation would not be within the policy and purpose of the control act and that the Legislature alone had the power to require licensees to operate under fair trade contracts.

Section 55.5 declares that no contract relating to the sale or resale of any alcoholic beverage which bears the trademark, brand, or name of the producer or owner, and which is in fair and open competition with alcoholic beverages of the same general class produced by others, shall be deemed in violation of any law of the state by reason of provisions therein (1) that the buyer will not resell such alcoholic beverage except at the price stipulated by the vendor; (2) that the producer or vendee of the alcoholic beverage require, on the sale thereof to another, that such purchaser agree that he will not, in turn, resell except at the price stipulated by such producer or vendee. Further provision is made respecting conditions under which alcoholic beverages may be resold without reference to the agreement, but such provisions are not here involved

Said amended rule 99 requires every manufacture, manufacturer's agent, wholesaler and rectifier, to file with the board copies of his fair trade contracts stating, as to whiskey and domestic brandy, the containers of which bear labels stating the brand or name of the owner or producer, (1) the minimum resale price to consumers; (2) the minimum retail price that any purchaser from the vendee shall charge at the retail to consumers; (3) any discounts offered. Sales are required to be made at not less than the stipulated prices. Other provisions of the rule are incidental to the foregoing provisions.

In 1947 (Stats. 1947, p. 1698) a new section numbered 55.6 was added to the control act, reading, in part, as follows: "All distilled spirits sold at retail shall be, and any other alcoholic beverage may be, sold pursuant to a contract executed under the provisions of Section 55.5 of this act. No licensee shall violate any of the provisions of said contract.

"Every distilled spirits manufacturer, brandy manufacturer, rectifier and wholesaler shall file and maintain with the board a price list showing the prices at which distilled spirits are sold to retailers by such licensee. Sales of distilled spirits to retailers by each distilled spirits manufacturer, brandy manufacturer, rectifier and wholesaler shall be made in compliance with the price list of such licensee on file with the board.

"The board may adopt such rules and regulations as it may determine to be necessary for the administration of this section."

Although prior to the enactment of section 55.6 appellant was conducting his business under fair trade contracts because of and pursuant to the rule in question, his duty now is derived from the statute. The fact that the rule imposes the same duty presents no question as to the powers of the board to adopt the rule. The objection that at the time his petition was filed it was not obligatory under the control act to operate under fair trade contracts raises only a moot question. Other provisions of the rule with relation to the statement of minimum resale prices to consumers, the prices to be fixed for resale to consumers, discounts offered, and the obtaining of permission for "close out" sales are not questioned by appellant and are obviously valid. They set up reasonable means for administration of the act and were properly adopted under the powers of the board to make rules and regulations such as it may deem necessary for that purpose.

[2] Although the principal question argued by appellant has become moot, and the appeal would be subject to dismissal on that ground, there is an additional point raised by him that should be disposed of. He argues that if rule 99 was otherwise valid, as the law stood prior to the enactment of section 55.6, the requirement for fair trade contracts would be invalid for the reason that it would be in conflict with the Cartwright Anti-Trust Law of 1907. (Stats. 1907, p. 984; 3 Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 8702.) It is claimed that price fixing agreements, such as those authorized by the control act, would be illegal under the Cartwright Law. We need not consider that question. If there is an irreconcilable conflict between the earlier legislation and the provisions of the control act which legalize fair trade contracts in the liquor industry, the later legislation must control.

The judgment is affirmed.

Wood, J., and Vallée, J., concurred.

[¶ 62,327] Tivoli Realty, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al. I. B. Adelman v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the District of Delaware. Civil Actions Nos. 1077, 1109. October 18, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Antitrust Act

Treble Damage Suit—Allegations of Violation of Prior Decree—Allegations of Injury to Public Interest.—In an action brought by a motion picture theatre owner against several major producers and distributors and certain theatre operating companies for treble damages for an alleged conspiracy to restrain trade and monopolize commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures with the intent and result of injuring plaintiff and the public interest, allegations that certain defendants by reason of their participation in the present alleged conspiracy are in violation of a decree entered in a prior antitrust suit must be stricken. A violation of a decree of another court is not, per se, a relevant issue in this proceeding, and such allegations could prejudice the defendants if they were compelled to answer. Allegations that defendants' acts have injured the public interest may not be stricken. A complaint under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act must not only allege damages occurring to the private party-plaintiff but also injuries resulting to public rights. Unless there are injuries to public rights, there can be no such violation of the antitrust laws as is necessary to sustain a private suit under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act. Allegations to the effect that defendants attempted to drive plaintiff out of business long before the period for which plaintiff claims damages may not be stricken. While there may be no causal connection between the acts described in the allegations and the injury resulting to plaintiff, yet the allegations serve to provide background material which is helpful to the court, and does not prejudice the defendants. Allegations to the effect that by reason of the unlawful conspiracy and course of action the plaintiff was compelled to enter into certain agreements with defendants with a resultant loss of profits may not be stricken, inasmuch as they raise a substantial question of law as to whether plaintiff by entering into the agreements is in pari delicto, or whether there was economic coercion against plaintiff.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.121, and the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2024.19, 2036.76.

For plaintiffs: Clair J. Killoran, Killoran & Van Brunt, Wilmington, Delaware; Thurman Arnold, Arnold, Fortas & Porter, Washington, D. C.

For defendants: Caleb S. Layton, Richards, Layton & Finger; Ayres J. Stockley, Hastings, Stockley, Walz & Wise; Hugh M. Morris, S. Samuel Arsht, Morris, Steel, Nichols & Arsht; Clarence A. Southerland, Southerland, Berl & Potter, all of Wilmington, Delaware; Albert C. Bickford, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, New York, New York.

[Nature of Action]

RODNEY, D. J.: These two actions are treble damage suits brought under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and the Clayton Act[1] against several major motion picture producers and distributors, certain of their subsidiaries, and certain theatre operating companies in Texas and New Mexico and in which plaintiffs also seek injunctive relief. The defendants in each suit are identical and the plaintiff in C. A. 1109 is alleged to be the principal stockholder and president of the plaintiff in C. A. 1077.

[Motions to Strike]

The defendants in each action have moved under Rule 12 (f)[2] to strike certain allegations in the complaint upon the grounds of immateriality, impertinency and prejudice. Inasmuch as substantially identical questions are raised by the two motions and the parties in both actions are represented by the same counsel, the two actions were consolidated for argument upon the two 12 (f) motions.

Generally, each complaint alleges that the several defendants have been and are engaged in a nation-wide conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and to monopolize such trade and commerce with the intent and result of injuring plaintiff and the public interest.

[1] 15 U. S. C. A. Secs. 1, 2, 15, 22 and 26.

[2] Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U. S. C. A. following Sec. 723(c).

In C. A. 1077 the plaintiff complains more specifically of the conspiracy and unlawful course of action among the defendants in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in Dallas, Texas, all being a part of the alleged nation-wide conspiracy among the defendants. This alleged conspiracy and unlawful course of action in Dallas is averred to have resulted in illegal discriminations against plaintiff, which built and owns a theatre in Dallas, and in depriving plaintiff of its right to engage in the exhibition of motion pictures in Dallas free of illegal restraints.

In C. A. 1109 substantially the same allegations are made with respect to Houston, Texas and the plaintiff's theatre and business in that city. In C. A. 1109, however, there are additional questions raised by the motion to strike which are not raised in C. A. 1077, and these questions, and the facts giving rise to them, will be hereinafter considered.

Motions to strike are rather strictly considered and have often been denied even when literally within the provisions of Rule 12 (f) where there is no showing of prejudicial harm to the moving party. Vernor's Ginger Ale Bottling Corp. v. Hire's-Ideal Bottling Co., D. C. Neb., 1948, 11 Fed Rules Serv. 12f.21, Case 4; American Machine and Metals, Inc. v. De Bothezat Impeller Co., Inc., D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1948, 11 Fed. Rules Serv. 12f.12, Case 5; Contogeorge v. Spyron, D. C. N. Y., 1946, 7 F. R. D. 223, 229; Klages v. Cohen et al., D. C. N. Y., 1947, 7 F. R. D. 216, 217; see cases cited in 2 Moore's Federal Practice (2d) Ed.) p. 2318. Nor have the courts been willing to determine disputed and substantial questions of law or the legal consequences of pleadings upon a motion to strike. Klages v. Cohen et al., supra; O'Reilly v. Curtis Publishing Co., D. C. Mass. 1938, 22 F. Supp. 359, 361; Burke v. Mesta Machine Co., D. C. Pa., 1946, 5 F. R. D. 134, 139.

[Violation of Prior Decree]

The defendants urge first that there should be stricken from both complaints certain allegations concerning the case of Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 1938, 306 U. S. 208, and the decree of the lower court entered therein. In C. A. 1077 these allegations are contained in paragraph 51 of the complaint; in C. A. 1109 they are found in paragraphs 20 and 67 of the complaint.

Paragraph 51 of the C. A. 1077 complaint alleges that certain of the defendants by participating in the conspiracy and course of action described in the complaint are in violation of a decree entered in the cited Interstate litigation. I am of the opinion that such paragraph must be stricken for the reason that a violation of a decree entered in some independent action seems immaterial to the suit at bar and could prejudice the defendants if they be compelled to answer such allegations. If the paragraph had merely alleged the entry of the decree against certain of the defendants and set out the conduct enjoined thereby, thus constituting merely the background or historical material of value in the consideration of the present controversy, then the allegation might have been good but a violation of a decree of another court is not, per se, a relevant issue in this proceeding.

Paragraphs 20 and 67 of the complaint in C. A. 1109 allege, respectively, the entry of a decree against the defendants in favor of the United States with a description of the conduct enjoined thereby and the violation of such decree by certain of the defendants. Paragraph 67, alleging a violation of the decree, must be stricken for the same reason that paragraph 51 of the complaint in C. A. 1077 will be stricken, as above indicated. The latter two paragraphs are substantially identical.

The defendants' motion with respect to paragraph 20 of the complaint in C. A. 1109, however, must be denied. That paragraph merely alleges the entry of the decree and the conduct enjoined thereby. While it may be true that the entry of the decree antedated the establishment of the plaintiff's business (as to which I express no opinion), yet the matter furnishes background material as to the nature, extent and character of the alleged conspiracy. While not concerning a similar action, see Steckel v. Beeghly, D. C. Ohio, 1948, 8 F. R. D. 116. This type of action usually requires some background or setting and it would seem that the "short and plain statement" of Rule 8 (a)[3] is hardly sufficient without some explanatory remarks.

[3] 28 U. S. C. A. following Sec. 723(c).

See Perrott v. United States Banking Corp., D. C. Del., 1944, 53 F. Supp. 953, 956; 2 Moore's Federal Practice (2d Ed.), p. 2319; Irving Berlin, Inc. v. Anziano, D. C. N. Y., 1944, 4 F. R. D. 33, 34; Camfield Mfg. Co. v. McGraw Elect. Co., D. C., Del., 1947, 70 F. Supp. 477, 481. The Circuit Court of Appeals for this (Third) circuit has well recognized the burden upon a plaintiff in presenting this type of case and the necessity for showing a concert of action among defendants. William Goldman Theatres v. Loew's, Inc., 3 Cir., 1945, 150 F. 2d 738, 743. In order to understand fully the nature, character and extent of the action complained of, I think the presence of background or historical matter in these two complaints is not objectionable unless it is prejudicial to the adverse party.

I am of the opinion that the allegations in paragraph 20 of the complaint in C. A. 1109 are not prejudicial to the defendants and need not be stricken. Allowance of a motion to strike is within the discretion of the court under the permissive language of Rule 12 (f), Sinkbeil v. Handler, D. C. Neb., 1946, 7 F. R. D. 92, 98, and whether the allegations are immaterial or impertinent is a matter I do not determine at this time since I think they are not prejudicial.

Pleadings in this court are not given to juries and thus are in effect addressed only to the trial judge. If at the trial evidence of the allegations in question is deemed to be immaterial, it may be withheld from the jury, Sinkbeil v. Handler, supra, or if the allegations would be prejudicial before a jury they may likewise be withheld. Sinaiko Bros. v. Ethyl Gasoline Corp., D. C. N. Y., 1942, 2 F. R. D. 305, 306; see Minneapolis Gasoline & F. Co. v. Ethyl Gasoline Corp., D. C. N. Y., 1941, 2 F. R. D. 307.

Moreover, plaintiff may be entitled by Section 5 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 16, to treat a final judgment or decree such as the one rendered in the Interstate litigation as prima facie evidence in this action against those defendants here who were defendants in such prior case, and it has been held that in order to plead such a prima facie case the plaintiff must plead the result of the prior litigation. Sinaiko Bros. v. Ethyl Gasoline Corp., supra.

The recent Supreme Court opinion in Federal Trade Comm'n. v. Cement Institute et al., 1948, 333 U. S. 683, 703-706, lays down broad boundaries for the admission of evidence in a somewhat related field, but such case is no direct authority for determining which matters should or should not be stricken from a complaint. An even more recent decision has granted a motion to strike certain historical or background allegations of a complaint even though evidence of the matters stricken might be admissible at trial. Knight v. B. & O. Ry. Co., D. C. N. Y., 1948, 11 Fed. Rules Serv. 12f.21, Case 3.

Defendants also move to strike paragraphs 52 and 61 of the complaint in C. A. 1077 and paragraph 77 of the complaint in C. A. 1109. Paragraph 52 alleges that the defendant Paramount has been and is acting in violation of a decree entered by a United States District Court in the case of United States v. Paramount, D. C. N. Y., 1947, 70 F. Supp. 53, and the latter two paragraphs allege that the producer-distributor defendants have engaged and are engaging in arbitrary, collusive and discriminatory practices described in the Opinion, Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Decree of such court in the same case, reported at the above citation and also at 66 F. Supp. 323.

I believe that these three paragraphs are objectionable for the reasons indicated with respect to paragraphs 67 of the complaint in C. A. 1109 and 51 of the complaint in C. A. 1077, viz., immateriality and prejudice. The three paragraphs under consideration do not allege the entry of the decree and describe the conduct enjoined thereby, but rather they merely allege that defendants, or certain of defendants, have been and are acting in violation of and contrary to such decree. I believe this to be immaterial and prejudicial and therefore the paragraphs must be stricken.[4]

[Injury to Public Interest]

Defendants next object to certain allegations of both complaints which in general aver that defendants' acts have also injured the public interest and other unnamed independent exhibitors, not parties to these actions, and object to prayers which ask for injunctive relief in favor of such unnamed exhibitors. Defendants contend that a private litigant has no right to sue primarily on behalf of the public or anyone other than himself and that the only relevant matter in such a suit is whether there is a violation of the antitrust laws and a causal connection between that violation and the plaintiffs' business or property, and the amount of damages, if any, resulting therefrom to the plaintiff. With such contention this court is in accord.

[4] Whether the Paramount decree is final within the meaning of Section 5 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 16, need not be determined in view of my holding that each of these three paragraphs is prejudicial. In any event it would seem that the question of finality in the Paramount decree is a disputed and substantial question of law which, under the authorities hereinbefore cited, this court will not determine upon a motion to strike.

Section 4 of the Clayton Act[5] provides that any person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws"[6] may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages sustained by him. Section 16 of the Clayton Act[7] provides for equitable relief in the form of an injunction for any person upon substantially the same conditions.

It is well settled that a person suing under either of the two cited sections of the Clayton Act cannot have relief unless he pleads and proves a pecuniary loss or injury to his business or property.[8] The two sections are not for the benefit of the public as such and do not give a right to sue for injuries resulting solely to the public or to others.[9] A plaintiff recovers under either of the two sections only for his own injuries or losses. Consequently, that portion of the prayers for relief in each of the instant complaints which seeks relief for other independent exhibitors must be stricken for the reason that it is immaterial and prejudicial.

But, as the defendants contend, it is necessary to determine whether there is a violation of the antitrust laws. Such a violation is an express condition upon the right of a private person to sue under either section 4 or section 16 of the Clayton Act and it is well settled that such a violation is essential.[10] That the antitrust laws are a matter of public interest and were enacted as a matter of public policy to protect the public has long been recognized. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 1911, 221 U. S. 1, 50-58; Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 1940, 310 U S. 469, 492-500; see Hodges, Antitrust Act and the Supreme Court (1941), pp. 1-6. Obviously, therefore, a complaint stating a good claim under either section 4 or section 16 of the Clayton Act must not only allege damages occurring to the private party-plaintiff but also injuries resulting to public rights. Abouaf v. J. D. & A. B. Spreckels Co., D. C. Calif. 1939, 26 F. Supp. 830, 832; Neumann v. Bastian-Blessing Co., D. C. Ill. 1947, 70 F. Supp. 447, 449. Unless there is a violation of public rights, there can be no such violation of the antitrust laws as is necessary to sustain a private suit under sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act. For this reason, therefore, I deny the defendants' motions to strike those allegations of the complaint which aver injuries to the public and to other unnamed exhibitors.

With respect to C. A. 1109, the defendants move to strike certain other allegations in the complaint. Their motion is directed first toward allegations in paragraph 17 having reference to proceedings instituted in 1934 by the plaintiff before the Code Authority of the N. R. A. Defendants contend that such allegations are improper (1) because the N. R. A. was held unconstitutional and hence all proceedings under it are void, (2) because a decision by the said Code Authority is not the type of judgment or decree which plaintiff can take advantage of as prima facie evidence under section 5 of the Clayton Act[11] and (3) because such proceedings occurred long before the period for which plaintiff claims damages and are thus immaterial. While all that defendants contend in this connection may be true, I am of the opinion that the allegations should be retained for they furnish background and historical data by which the court can obtain a fuller understanding of the complaint. Of course, the proceedings and any decision rendered therein will not be treated as conclusive or as having any legal effect, but I do not perceive of any prejudice running against

[5] 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 15.

[6] Italics supplied throughout unless otherwise indicated.

[7] 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 26.

[8] Northwestern Oil Co. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 7 Cir., 1943, 138 F. 2d 967, 970, cert. den. 321 U. S. 792; Maltz v. Sax, 7 Cir., 1943, 134 F. 2d 2, 5, cert. den. 319 U. S. 772; Westmoreland Asbestos Co. v. Johns-Manville Corp., D. C. N. Y., 1939, 30 F. Supp. 389, 391, aff'd on rehearing 1940, 32 F. Supp. 731; Mid-West Theatres Co. v. Co-operative Theatres, D. C. Mich., 1941, 43 F. Supp. 216, 220; Westor Theatres v. Warner Bros. Pictures, D. C. N. J., 1941, 41 F. Supp. 757, 763.

[9] Maltz v. Sax, 7 Cir., 1943, 134 F. 2d 2, 5, cert. den. 319 U. S. 772; Westor Theatres v. Warner Bros. Pictures, D. C. N. J. 1941, 41 F. Supp. 757, 763.

[10] Neumann v. Bastian-Blessing Co., D. C. Ill., 1946, 71 F. Supp. 803, 805; Weinberg v. Sinclair Refining Co., D. C. N. Y., 1942, 48 F. Supp. 203, 205; Westor Theatres v. Warner Bros. Pictures, D. C. N. J., 1941, 41 F. Supp. 757, 763; Virtue v. Creamery Package Co., 1913, 227 U. S. 8, 24.

[11] 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 16.

the defendants by allowing the allegations to remain and therefore the defendants' motion to strike paragraph 17 is denied.

[Causal Connection]

The defendants also seek to have stricken certain allegations in the complaint in C. A. 1109 to the effect that defendants attempted to drive plaintiff out of business long before the period for which plaintiff claims damages. While it may be true that a causal connection between the wrongful acts of defendants and the injury to plaintiff for which he sues is necessary, and while there might be no such causal connection between the acts described in the allegations under consideration and the injury, if any, resulting to plaintiff, yet the allegations do serve to provide background material which is helpful in giving the court a fuller understanding of the complaint and they do not prejudice the defendants. It must be remembered that plaintiff must plead and prove a violation of the antitrust laws in order to recover and the matters contained in the allegations under consideration can be helpful in aiding the court to understand the complaint in this respect. The defendants' motion to strike such allegations in paragraphs 11 to 16, inclusive, 18 to 21, inclusive, and 24 to 27, inclusive, of the complaint in C. A. 1109 is denied.

The defendants finally object to paragraphs 22 to 31, inclusive, of the complaint in C. A. 1109 on the grounds that they do not state a good cause of action and are immaterial, impertinent and prejudicial. In substance, these paragraphs allege that by reason of defendants' unlawful conspiracy and course of action the plaintiff was compelled to lease his theatres in Houston and Fort Worth to defendant Interstate for 10 years under an agreement whereby Interstate jointly operated them with its own theatres in the same cities; that by the terms of the agreement plaintiff could obtain a one-half interest in any theatre acquired by Interstate within a certain radius of the leased theatres during the ten-year period upon payment of one-half the cost thereof; that three such theatres were acquired and plaintiff paid one-half the cost of each; that under the agreement plaintiff could, at his option, buy Interstate's interest in any such theatres or sell his own interest in such theatres at the termination of the agreement; that the total price fixed for either party's one-half interest in each of the three theatres was $529,207.00; that plaintiff was able to purchase Interstate's one-half interest at such price but knew that because of the alleged unlawful conspiracy and course of action among defendants he would not be able to operate the theatres profitably; and that for these reasons he elected to sell his one-half interest to Interstate rather than buy Interstate's one-half interest with a resultant loss of profits to plaintiff in the amount of $500,000.00.

Defendants contend that if Interstate was a party to the conspiracy and unlawful course of action as alleged, plaintiff by entering into the agreement with it is in pari delicto with all parties to such unlawful action and is therefore precluded from recovering any damages based upon such agreement and also cannot recover because an illegal contract cannot in any way be made the basis for a recovery. The defendants contend that if, on the other hand, there was no participation in a conspiracy by Interstate as alleged, the contract is valid and plaintiff is bound by its terms and has no complaint, since he freely exercised his election pursuant to the contract.

Plaintiff, of course, argues that under such circumstances as here existed, where there was allegedly economic coercion against the plaintiff, he could not be in pari delicto, and relies upon such cases as Ring v. Spina, 2 Cir., 1945, 148 F. 2d 647.

The contentions of the parties obviously raise a substantial question of law which I do not feel should be determined summarily upon a motion to strike. The authorities hereinbefore cited indicate that courts generally are unwilling to decide such questions upon a motion to strike, and the magnitude of the question herein raised illustrates the soundness of such reluctance.

Moreover, these allegations do provide background material for a better understanding of the complaint and I do not discern any prejudice that might run against the defendants by allowing them to remain in the complaint. The defendants' motion in this respect is therefore denied.

In summary, I grant the motions of defendants to strike paragraphs 51, 52 and 61 of the complaint in C. A. 1077, paragraphs 67 and 77 of the complaint in C. A. 1109 and that portion of the prayers for relief in each complaint which seeks relief for other unnamed independent exhibitors. The defendants' motions are denied in all other respects.

[¶ 62,328] Florence B. Bigelow, et al. v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. No. 9690. November 23, 1948.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Violation of Decree—Contempt of Court—Ownership of Theatres.—A decree enjoining defendant motion picture distributor from delaying the exhibition of any motion picture in the Chicago exchange territory by creating dead or waiting time between the conclusion of the first run of a picture in any theatre owned, leased or operated by any defendant and the next succeeding run of the same picture was held violated by acts of the defendant herein. On appeal, the finding of the lower court that the defendant operated the theatre in question is held not clearly erroneous, and the contempt judgment is affirmed. The finding was properly made in reliance upon the testimony and judicial admissions made in the original case, which reflected the realities of that case, rather than the fictional corporate set-up produced for the first time in the contempt proceedings.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1620.101, and the Clayton Act Annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2036.15.

Affirming the decision of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, reported at ¶ 62,242.

Before SPARKS, Chief Judge, MINTON, Circuit Judge, and SWYGERT, District Judge.

MINTON, C. J.: In one aspect or another of this case, the parties to this appeal have been here twice before. The previous opinions are reported in 150 F. 2d 877, reversed and the District Court affirmed in 327 U. S. 251, 66 S. Ct. 574, 90 L. Ed. 652; and in 162 F. 2d 520, certiorari denied, 332 U. S. 817, 68 S. Ct. 158, 92 L. Ed. 79. In the latter case, known as the equity case, a decree was entered against the respondent-appellant. In the proceedings now before us, the respondent was charged with and found guilty of contempt of court for a violation of that decree. From a judgment for contempt, the respondent has appealed.

The pertinent part of Section VII of the decree in the equity case is as follows:

> "VII. That defendants * * * their respective officers, directors, agents, servants, employees and all persons acting or claiming to act on behalf of them or any of them, be and they are enjoined from delaying the exhibition of any motion picture in the Chicago Exchange territory by permitting a run of such picture longer than two weeks on a first run in a theatre owned, leased or operated by any defendant * * * or by creating dead or waiting time between the conclusion of the first run of a picture in any such theatre in such territory and the next succeeding run of said picture * * *." (Italics supplied.)

The respondent licensed the picture "Tycoon" to the Palace Theatre in the Chicago Exchange territory and refused to license it to anyone else for twenty-three days after its first run was concluded by the Palace Theatre. Dead or waiting time of twenty-three days was thus created by the respondent. This was a violation of the court's order if the respondent owned, leased, or operated the Palace Theatre. If the respondent did, as the District Court found, operate the Palace Theatre, it is conceded that the other elements necessary to a finding of contempt are present.

The original suit was for treble damages and an injunction against the respondent and others for a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. The defendant there and respondent here, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., was the only corporation of the RKO hierarchy of corporations that was a party to that suit. In his opening statement to the jury at the time of the damage suit, counsel for the respondent said:

> "Here in Chicago they (respondent) do not have any theatres, except that RKO has two theatres in Downtown Chicago, the Palace Theatre and the Grand Theatre."

The District Manager of the respondent, testifying at that trial, said:

> "We have our own theatres in the Loop."
>
> "Q. You sold your first Loop release to your own theatres?"
>
> "A. The Palace Theatre."
>
> * * *

"A. All I know is that our Company that our District Manager for the Theatre Department is operating the theatre * * *."

The Western Division salesman for the respondent testified on the original hearing that the Palace Theatre was owned by RKO.

When the original case was appealed to the Supreme Court, the record there induced Chief Justice Stone to state in his opinion:

"Respondent RKO (the respondent here) also owns two large first-run theatres in the Chicago Loop."

This statement was never challenged.

When the second appeal was here, counsel for the respondent said in his brief, "RKO operates two first-run theatres in the Loop," and further that, "The evidence showed that at the time of the jury trial two of the defendants, B&K and RKO, operated all of the so-called first run theatres in the Loop." The Palace was one of them. In the injunction suit, the respondent's counsel also stated that RKO owned the Palace Theatre.

The branch manager of the respondent's Chicago office testified on the original hearing:

"We don't sell the Balaban & Katz theatres downtown. We have our own theatres."

"Q. All right. Where do you sell them first?"

"A. We sell them to the Palace and Grand Theatres; that is RKO theatres."

* * *

"Q. How many first run houses are there in the City of Chicago?"

"A. Well, we have the Palace, the RKO Palace, and then there is the RKO Grand, to whom we sell our products first run."

* * *

"Q. Well, the Palace and Grand are theatres which are owned by your company?"

"A. That is right, sir."

In the contempt proceedings he testified as follows:

"I do not know who the operator of those theatres is.

* * *

"Although I do not know who operates the RKO Palace and Grand Theatres, I do know that some company in the group of RKO companies operates these theatres. I do not know the name of the individual corporation, but I know it as RKO Theatres, Incorporated. I know nothing about the corporate relationship between that company and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc."

At the contempt hearing, it was stipulated that the respondent is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; that another wholly-owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, namely, RKO Theatres, Inc., owns all the stock of the Chicago Orpheum Company, and that the Chicago Orpheum Company leases the Palace Theatre from the Bismarck Hotel Company. The sum of this part of the stipulation is that RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. did not own or lease the Palace Theatre. The lease was to the Chicago Orpheum Company from the Bismarck Hotel Company. Operation of a theatre would seem to require actual possession thereof as well as exhibition of pictures to the public and collection therefor. Whether the respondent had a hand in these activities, that is, whether it operated the theatre, does not appear.

It was also stipulated who the officers of these corporations were. From an examination of this much of the stipulation, it is apparent that the officers and directors of these corporations interlocked to a very large extent. The control through stock ownership and interlocking officers and directors of these affiliates is in the hands of the same individuals.

From the above evidence the District Court found that the respondent operated the Palace Theatre and concluded that its operations were in violation of the District Court's decree.

It seems to us that it comes a little late for the respondent to say to the District Court that it did not operate the Palace Theatre. The admissions of record of counsel for the respondent and of witnesses in responsible positions with the respondent made no distinction between the corporate entities of the RKO hierarchy. The case was tried with only RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., the respondent here, as the only defendant from the corporate group. The court at all times understood that the respondent alone was referred to by the witnesses and counsel when they referred to RKO; and the case was tried upon the theory that the respondent was the only RKO corporation involved, and that the respondent was operating the Palace Theatre.

The respondent now for the first time drags from the closet the bare bone skeleton of an elaborate corporate structure to show to the court that not the respondent but another wholly-owned subsidiary of the corporation, of which the respondent is also a wholly-owned subsidiary, operates the Palace Theatre, nothwithstanding common control of the entire corporate pyramid through stock ownership and interlocking officers and directorates. The contention that under such circumstances the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing is a bit specious. The District Court, which was thoroughly familiar with the respondent's appearance in the other proceedings, very properly looked past this ghostlike corporate figure, and, viewing the matter realistically, recognized that after all one and the same group was in control and operation of the Palace Theatre.

The respondent was the old familiar face the court had in mind when it drafted its decree in which it intended to cover the respondent as an operator of the Palace Theatre. Just as the court believed when it entered its decree, "It would be to subordinate reality to legal form" to hold that the respondent did not operate the Palace Theatre. See United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 61, 40 S. Ct. 422, 64 L. Ed. 760.

It was the District Court's right and duty to protect its decree and to attend to its enforcement against the parties in the guise in which they appeared to contest the entry of the decree. Relying, as the court did, upon the testimony and judicial admissions made in the original case which reflected the realities of that case, rather than the fictional corporate set-up produced for the first time in the contempt proceedings which at best proved merely that the defendant did not own or lease the Palace Theatre, the court's finding that the respondent operated the Palace Theatre was not clearly erroneous. The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

[¶ 62,329] United States v. Abrasive Grain Association, Norton Company, American Abrasive Company, The Carborundum Company, The Exolon Company, General Abrasive Company, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of New York. Civil No. 3672. November 16, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Combinations in Restraint of Trade—Acts Enjoined.—A consent judgment entered in an action against an abrasive grain manufacturer and five corporate members charging a combination and conspiracy to fix prices in restraint of trade and commerce enjoins the defendants from entering into combinations or agreements with manufacturers of artificial abrasive grain to fix periods of time for which offers and obligations to buy and sell shall be made or entered into, to fix or maintain prices or other terms of sale, to establish or adhere to price lists, and to classify purchasers or distributors with the purpose or effect of affecting prices paid by them or of discrimination in respect to them. When grain is sold on a uniform delivered price basis, each defendant manufacturer is ordered to grant to the purchaser the option of taking delivery at the place either of manufacture or storage of said grain at its delivered price less the actual cost of the mode of transportation which such manufacturer would normally use from the actual shipping point if such option were not exercised. The defendant association is ordered to abolish its code of fair competition, and the manufacturer defendants are ordered to issue individual price lists on the basis of independent review of costs and prices.

See the Sherman Act annnotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.10.

For plaintiff: Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; George L. Grobe, United States Attorney; Sigmund Timberg, Manuel M. Gorman, Gerald J. McCarthy, Richard B. O'Donnell, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

For defendants: Thomas Penney, Jr., Penney, Penney, Buerger & Siemer, Buffalo, N. Y.; Hale & Dorr, Lawrence E. Green, Joseph N. Webb, E. Shayn, Boston Mass.; Francis T. Findlay, Findlay, Argy & Hackett, Niagara Falls, N. Y.; Edward A. Montgomery, Niagara Falls, N. Y.; Webster, Sheffield & Horan, New York, N. Y.; Charles W.

Schol, Buffalo, N. Y.; Stobbs, Stockwell & Tilton, George R. Stobbs, Worcester, Mass.

Final Judgment

Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on December 15, 1947, and all the defendants having appeared and filed their answers to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; and all parties hereto by their attorneys herein having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment herein without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by any defendant in respect of any such issue;

NOW, THEREFORE, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of all the parties hereto, it is hereby

ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

[Jurisdiction]

I

The Court has jurisdiction of the parties to this judgment; and for the purposes of this judgment and proceedings for the enforcement thereof, the Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof; and the complaint states a cause of action against defendants and each of them under Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. § 1).

[Terms Defined]

II

When used in this judgment the following terms have the meaning assigned respectively to them below:

A. "Artificial abrasive grain" means grain manufactured from silicon carbide or aluminum oxide, and any variety, type, or grade of such grain.

B. "Subsidiary" means a company in excess of 50% of the voting stock of which is held by another company.

C. "Parent" means any company owning in excess of 50% of the voting stock of any other company.

[Applicability]

III

The provisions of this judgment applicable to the defendants apply to their successors, officers, directors, agents, employees, and to any other persons acting under, through, or for such defendants.

[Acts Enjoined]

IV

Each of the defendants is hereby perpetually enjoined and restricted from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, or furthering any combination, conspiracy, agreement or understanding with any manufacturer of artificial abrasive grain:

A. To fix, determine, designate, or adhere to periods of time during which or for which offers, sales, contracts for sales, and obligations to buy and sell artificial abrasive grain shall be made or entered into with, or required of, others.

B. To fix, determine, establish or maintain prices, pricing, systems, discounts, or other terms or conditions of sale for artificial abrasive grain.

C. To establish, maintain, or adhere to any price lists or price quotations, or any other means of determining or fixing price lists or price quotations, or any other terms or conditions of sale or purchase of artificial abrasive grain to be quoted to or by, or required of or by, others.

D. To circulate or exchange, directly or indirectly, any price lists, or price quotations, with or among any manufacturer of artificial abrasive grain in advance of the publication, circulation, or communication of such price lists or price quotations to its purchasers and distributors.

E. To classify purchasers or distributors with the purpose or effect of affecting prices paid by them or of discrimination in respect to them; or to maintain or adhere to any such classsification of purchasers or distributors, or to any lists, formulae or other means for such classification.

V

Each defendant herein is hereby enjoined from circulating or exchanging, directly or indirectly, any price lists, or price quotations, with or among any manufacturer of artificial abrasive grain in advance of the publication, circulation, or communication of such price lists or price quotations to its purchasers and distributors.

[Delivered Price]

VI

Each defendant manufacturer is hereby ordered:

Whenever such manufacturer sells artificial abrasive grain on a uniform delivered price basis, to grant the purchaser the option of taking delivery at the place either of manufacture or storage of said grain at its delivered price less the actual cost of the mode of transportation which such manufacturer would normally use from the actual shipping point if such option were not exercised.

[Code Ordered Abolished]

VII

The defendant Association is hereby ordered to abolish its code of fair competition at its next regular meeting which shall in no event be later than February 1, 1949; and defendant manufacturers are hereby enjoined and restrained from renewing or reviving said code of fair competition.

[Issuance of Price Lists]

VIII

When, for the first time following the entry of this judgment, the third printing of the Bureau of Labor Statistics Monthly Wholesale Price Index for All Commodities Other than Farm Products or Foods for a given month is lower than the corresponding index published six months preceding and there has been a decline in said Monthly Wholesale Price Index for each of three consecutive months, each defendant manufacturer shall individually review its selling prices of artificial abrasive grain on the basis of its individual cost figures and individual judgment as to profits, and issue a new price list (or, where no price list has in the past been issued, issue new prices) on the basis of such independent review.

[Relationship Not Affected]

IX

Nothing contained herein shall be deemed to adjudicate, determine, or affect the legality or illegality of any agreement involving solely relationships between:

A. A defendant manufacturer and its subsidiaries.

B. A defendant manufacturer or its subsidiaries and a parent.

C. Subsidiaries of any such manufacturer or their subsidiaries.

X

Nothing in this judgment shall prevent any defendant from availing itself of the benefits of (a) The Act of Congress of April 10, 1918, commonly called the Webb-Pomerene Act, or (b) The Act of Congress of 1937, commonly called the Miller-Tydings proviso to Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies."

[Inspection for Compliance Purposes]

XI

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or any Assistant Attorney General, and on reasonable notice to any defendant manufacturer, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (a) reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any matters contained in this judgment, and (b) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference, to interview officers and employees of such defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment any defendant upon the written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, shall submit such reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this judgment. No information obtained by means permitted in this paragraph shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department except in the course of legal proceedings for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment in which the United States is a party or as otherwise required by law.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

XII

Jurisdiction of this action is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, for the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 62,330] United States v. Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corporation, et al.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil No. 4583. October 25, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Agreements in Restraint of Trade—Acts Enjoined.—A consent judgment entered in a civil suit charging 18 stainless steel companies with entering into a combination in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act enjoins defendants from: entering into agreements to fix, maintain, determine or adhere to prices or other terms of sale; printing, publishing, circulating, quoting or using any prices, price lists, discounts, differentials of any other term or condition of sale to be required of others in connection with the purchase or sale of stainless steel products pursuant to or resulting from any agreement or plan among defendants; conferring as to prices or extras to be quoted or charged to others for stainless steel products; preparing, circulating, exchanging or using "advance information" or any other information concerning prices and conditions of sale; publishing, quoting or charging prices on any basis other than (1) F.O.B. at the actual place of manufacture or origin of shipment, or (2) on a basis which at destination at no time shall be higher than the F.O.B. price at the actual place of manufacture or origin of shipment, plus actual transportation and other delivery charges, with every purchaser having an option to purchase F.O.B. at the actual place of manufacture or origin of shipment. A defendant is ordered to grant to any applicant a non-exclusive license under certain patents at reasonable and non-discriminatory royalties, and a non-exclusive grant of immunity from suit under any foreign patents owned or controlled by that defendant corresponding to the domestic patents.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.10.

For plaintiff: Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; Isaiah Matlack, United States Attorney; Manuel M. Gorman, Sigmund Timberg, J. Francis Hayden, Samuel Flatow, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

For defendants: Carpenter, Gilmour & Dwyer, James S. Carpenter, Jr.; Stryker, & Horner, Stryker; John A. Hartpence; Pitney Hardin Ward & Brennan, Charles B. Hardin; C. Laud; Riker, Marsh & Scherer, Riker, Emery & Danzig; Cravath, Swaine & Moore, Hoyt A. Moore; Minton & Dinsmore, V. Lane.

Final Judgment

The complainant, the United States of America, having filed a complaint herein on January 19, 1945; the defendants having appeared and filed their answers to such complaint, denying the substantive allegations thereof; plaintiff and the defendants, by their attorneys herein, having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment herein, without any trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without an admission by any party in respect of any such issue;

Now, therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of plaintiff and each of the defendants, it is hereby

ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED as follows:

[Jurisdiction]

I

That this Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all the parties hereto; that the complaint states a cause of action against each of the defendants herein under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies", as amended.

II

Definitions

As used in this judgment the term:

(a) "Stainless steel" means a steel with high corrosion or heat resistant qualities, or both such qualities, which consists of an alloy of iron and chromium (known as straight chrome stainless steel), or of an alloy of iron and both chromium and nickel (known as chrome nickel stainless steel), with or without the addition of supplementary alloying agents, such as molybdenum, columbium, titanium, selenium, and others;

(b) "Stainless steel products" means bars, double bevels, single bevels, ingots, wire, structurals, plates, sheets, hot rolled strip, cold rolled strip, billets and similar products made of stainless steel;

(c) "Free machining patents" means United States Letters Patent Nos. 1,835,960, 1,846.140, 1,961,777, 2,009,713, and any division, continuation, reissue or extension thereof and any additional patents or patent rights covering or pertaining to improvements upon the inventions, processes, methods or apparatus covered by the aforementioned patents, or any division, continuation, reissue or extension thereof.

III

Reference to any defendant herein shall be deemed in each case to include the directors, officers, employees, agents, successors and assigns of that defendant, and any wholly owned or controlled subsidiary thereof, and any person acting or claiming to act under, through, or for them or any of them.

[Acts Enjoined]

IV

Each of the defendants is individually restrained and enjoined from:

(a) Entering into, creating, performing or giving effect to any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program among or with any of the defendants (1) to fix, maintain, determine or adhere to prices, discounts, charges, differentials, including freight rate factors or applicators, or terms or conditions of sale to be quoted or charged to or required of others in the purchase or sale of any stainless steel products; (2) to establish, enforce, provide or use any price list, extra list, base price list or any classification of stainless steel products into base prices and extras, or activities in connection therewith; or (3) to use, enforce, or adhere to any formula or any designated means or source for determining prices, charges, discounts, classifications as base price or extras, or any other element or term, condition or differential, including freight rate factors or applicators, in connection with the sale or pricing of stainless steel products to others;

(b) Printing, publishing, circulating, quoting or using any prices, price lists, or extra lists, cash or courtesy discounts, transportation charges, differentials, including freight rate factors or applicators, or any other term or condition of sale to be quoted or charged to, or required of, others for or in connection with, the purchase or sale of stainless steel products pursuant to or resulting from any agreement or understanding, plan or program among or with any of the defendants;

(c) Conferring or consulting as to or discussing prices or extras to be quoted or charged to others for stainless steel products or any terms or conditions of sale thereof at any meeting of representatives of any of the defendants, or by any correspondence or communications among or with any of the defendants and from exchanging among or with any of the defendants any information as to prices, extras, or differentials including freight rate factors or applicators to be quoted or charged to, or required of, others for stainless steel products or any proposed terms or conditions for sale to others of such products;

(d) Preparing, circulating, exchanging or using so-called A. I.s, or Advance Information, or any other information concerning the prices and terms or conditions of sale which any defendant proposes or intends to quote on a bid to any prospective purchaser, or has quoted or charged to any purchaser on a bid, for any sale of stainless steel products, or to disclose to any competitor bids or quotations made to others for stainless steel products;

(e) Compiling, printing, publishing or circulating as defendant's list of prices for stainless steel products, or as defendant's list of extras, or as terms and conditions of sale, for stainless steel products any prices, extras, or terms or conditions of sale applicable to any type or grade of stainless steel or stainless steel products not now or are hereafter being manufactured, sold or of-

ered for sale by such defendant or any affiliated company;

(f) Publishing, printing, quoting or charging prices for stainless steel products on any basis other than (1) F. O. B. at the actual place of manufacture or origin of shipment of said products, or (2) on a basis, which at destination at no time shall be higher than the F. O. B. price at the actual place of manufacture or origin of shipment of said products plus actual transportation and other delivery charges, with every purchaser having an option to purchase F. O. B. at the actual place of manufacture or origin of the shipment of said products;

(g) Instituting or threatening to institute, or maintaining any suit, counterclaim or proceeding, judicial or administrative, for infringement of any free machining patent, alleged to have occurred prior to the date of the entry of this judgment.

[Patent Licensing]

V

Defendant, The Carpenter Steel Company, its officers, directors, agents, employees, successors and assigns, are hereby ordered and directed:

(a) To grant to any applicant upon each written request therefore a non-exclusive license to manufacture, use and sell under any one or more free machining patents without any condition or restriction whatsoever except (1) a reasonable and non-discriminatory royalty may be charged and collected, and (2) where such royalty is charged, provision may be made for inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor who may report to the defendant licensor only the amount of royalty due and payable and no other information;

(b) To grant to any applicant making written request therefore to the extent that the defendant, The Carpenter Steel Company has or acquires the power to do so, a nonexclusive grant of immunity from suit under any foreign patents owned or controlled by defendant, The Carpenter Steel Company, corresponding to free machining patents, to import into and sell or use and to have imported, sold or used in any country, products made in the United States, without any condition or restriction whatsoever, except that a reasonable and non-discriminatory royalty may be charged and collected, and where such royalty is charged, provision may be made for inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor who may report to the defendant licensor only the amount of royalty due and payable and no other information;

(c) To include in each license issued pursuant to this Section V, a provision under which the licensee may cancel such license any time after one year from the date of issuance of such license.

[Webb-Pomerene Act]

VI

Nothing in this judgment shall have any effect with respect to activities or operations, authorized or permitted by the Act of Congress of April 10, 1918, commonly called the Webb-Pomerene Act.

[Practices, Proceedings Not Affected]

VII

Nothing contained herein shall be deemed to adjudicate the legality of any act or practice not prohibited herein, nor to bar or affect any proceeding under any law of the United States involving or relating to any act or practice not prohibited herein.

[Inspection for Compliance Purposes]

VIII

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) upon reasonable notice to any defendant corporation made to its principal office, reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any matters contained in this judgment, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of the defendants and without restraint or interference from the defendants, to interview officers or employees of the defendants, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters, and (3) upon any such request said defendants shall submit such reports with respect to the licensing of stainless steel patents as may from time to time be appropriate for the purpose of enforcement of this judgment; Provided, however, that information obtained by the means permitted in this paragraph shall not be divulged by any representatives of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceeding for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment in which the United States is a party or as otherwise required by law.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

IX

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof or the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 62,331] Suni-Citrus Products Company v. Daniel Boscawen Vincent, et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. No. 12309. November 19, 1948.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Pooling of Patents—Licensing Agreement—Suit to Enjoin Execution of Agreement Premature.—In an action brought by a manufacturer of stock feed from waste citrus products under two patents, the District Court refused to enjoin the execution by defendants, the State of Florida, certain of its boards and officials, and manufacturers of stock feed from citrus waste, of a patent pooling and licensing agreement which would suppress competition and fix prices in violation of the antitrust laws. On appeal, it is held that the suit was premature, inasmuch as the agreement which plaintiff alleges constitutes per se the conspiracy charge has not yet been fully signed and made effective, and the patent under which prices are to be fixed has not as yet been issued. No controversy exists, and there is no actual threatened injury to be redressed. The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded with directions to dismiss it without prejudice.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1270.151, 1270.160, 1270.251.

Reversing and remanding the decision of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, reported in 1946-1947 Trade Cases, at ¶ 57,632.

For appellant: Harry Aubrey Toulmin, Jr., Dayton, Ohio; LeRoy Allen, Tampa, Florida; Max F. Goldstein, Atlanta, Georgia.

For appellees: Charles F. Miller, Jr., John J. Darby, both of Washington, D. C.; Lewis H. Hill, Jr., Paull E. Dixon, both of Tampa, Florida; J. Tom Watson, Attorney General, Frank J. Heints, Sumter Leitner, Assistant Attorneys General, all of Tallahassee, Florida.

Before HUTCHESON, SIBLEY, and WALLER, Circuit Judges.

HUTCHESON, C. J.: Brought for injunction and for treble damages, the suit was to restrain, as violative of the anti-trust laws [1] of the United States, the completion and putting into effect of a partially completed trust agreement [2] for pooling conflict-

---

[1] The Sherman Act, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A. Secs. 1 & 2. The Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A., Secs. 15 & 16.

[2] The trust agreement, between Vincent, the State and the Trustee, purported to pool certain patents by assigning them to the trustee, and to create a trust committee under whose directions the trustee would act. The powers of the committee included: the right to fix royalties; the right to include, in licenses, price fixing limitations upon the licensed products covered by the Neal patent when the prices had been fixed by members of the committee appointed by the State or other state representatives acting by virtue of legal authority in the State of Florida; and the right to include, in the licenses, price restrictions on products manufactured and sold in the State of Florida if and when these prices are fixed by virtue of legal authority in the State of Florida. The trust agreement also fixed the percentage of royalties to be paid to the persons entitled.

ing patents, granting licenses,[3] and fixing minimum prices in the citrus feed industry.

Alleging: that plaintiff is a manufacturer of a citrus waste product suitable and desirable as a cattle feed; that, prior to the complained of agreements of defendants, the market price for plaintiff's products, as well as for that of other manufacturers in competition with plaintiff had been established by free competition; that defendants, owning and claiming to be the owners of, letters patent and an application for letters patent by one Wayne M. Neal, had entered into an agreement for the purpose of combining and pooling their patents and patent claims, of fixing royalties, and of fixing prices of products manufactured under the Neal application and the patent to be granted on it; plaintiff's claim was that the complained of agreements are in violation of the anti-trust laws and their effect will be to injure and harass plaintiff and other citrus waste processors. There was a further claim that the subject matter of the Neal application was public property and not patentable because the payment of Neal's salary, while working for the State of Florida, had been made out of Purnell Act funds.

The State of Florida admitted that it is the owner of the Neal application for letters patent, and that the application was filed by Neal while an employee of the State of Florida and while the State was the recipient of the Purnell funds. It denied that the subject matter of the application was thereby made a part of the public domain. Denying that it and the other defendants were joined in an agreement or combination in restraint of trade, it alleged that it had conducted negotiations with Vincent and the other defendants, with the result that a tentative trust agreement had been formulated but not yet signed by the trustee for the purpose of protecting processors of citrus waste against destructive patent suits, and when and if minimum prices are established by the State, to insure that products covered by patent claims resulting from the Neal application are not sold below cost of the product.

The defendant Vincent made substantially the same answer and also filed a counterclaim, in which, setting out that he had been charged with conspiracy to restrain trade, he denied that this was so. Pleading his patents and the contests over them, he further alleged that in an effort to settle these patent conflicts and bring peace to the citrus waste industry, he had entered into negotiations with the State of Florida looking to the settlement proposed in the tentative trust and license agreements, Exhibits A and B. Alleging that they are not in violation of the anti-trust acts, he sought a declaratory judgment to that effect.

There was a reply by plaintiff to both counter-claims, a pre-trial conference at which a long statement, afterward made a part of the record, was made by defendant Vincent, an amendment to Vincent's answer showing that since the filing of the suit and the pre-trial conference, Vincent's patent had been reissued and that it would be assigned to the trustee in substitution of the original Vincent patent.

Thereafter, plaintiff filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, stipulations, the report of proceedings, and the statement of counsel for the defendants at the pre-trial conference,[4] and argument was joined on [3] The license agreement contained an agreement recognizing the authority of the State of Florida to fix prices for the sale of products manufactured or sold within the State of Florida when authorized by the laws of the State and on any products wherever in the United States manufactured or sold if they are embraced in the claims of any United States patents issued on the Neal application. There was also a provision that if 50 per cent of the persons engaged in the processing of citrus pulp in any season refused to obtain a license or pay royalties, then the royalties payable under this license shall abate.

[4] The stipulations, statements, etc. show: that the defendants would furnish witnesses to testify, and the plaintiff would not controvert them, that in negotiating for and preparing the tentative trust and license agreements, the parties had not intended to oppress or harass plaintiff, or anybody else, but had intended merely to bring order and prosperity to the citrus business, which was harassed by conflicting patents.

In the same way they showed that the royalty intended to be exacted if the agreement should be put into effect would not exceed $1.00 per ton; that licenses would be available without discrimination to all responsible persons in the United States; that the price of citrus feed in Florida has increased since Jan., 1944, from $32.50 to $42.50 per ton; that the cost of manufacturing citrus feed under Vincent's patent would be approximately $18.00 or less per ton.

In his statement, Vincent said that the original and other copies of the trust agreement had been duly executed by the Board of Commissioners and by Vincent, although the arrangement had not been completed through acceptance by the trustee and assignment of the patents. "However, it is admitted that unless restrained by the court it is the purpose and intent of all parties to complete the arrange-two questions [5] of law: (1) the primary question, whether the entering into the trust agreement was per se a violation of the anti-trust laws; and (2), the subsidiary one, whether the Neal invention had been dedicated to the public.

The district judge, of the opinion that the pooling of the various patents and the Neal application, for the purpose set forth in the trust and license agreements was not illegal, cited in support: Standard Oil v. U. S., 283 U. S. 163; Westinghouse v. Formica, 266 U. S. 342; Mumm v. Decker, 301 U. S. 170; U. S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476; and State v. Neal, 152 Florida 582, 12 So. (2) 590. He, therefore, held that: "Upon the uncontradicted evidence in this case, plaintiff has not carried the burden of showing that the proposed trust and license agreements if finally approved and executed in their present forms would constitute a violation of the anti-trust laws of the United States, and plaintiff's prayer to enjoin and prohibit their execution and putting into effect is denied".

As to the cross-complaints of the State and Vincent for declaratory judgments, declaring the trust and license agreements valid and not in violation of the anti-trust laws of the United States, the court held: "Their prayer for a declaratory judgment is premature, the trust agreement has not yet been executed by all parties and for this reason has not yet matured to a point where this court has the authority to pass upon its legality. Moreover, the court entertains grave doubt as to the applicability of the declaratory judgment act to this case. The prayer, therefore, for a declaratory judgment declaring proposed agreements valid is denied".

Upon the basis of these views thus announced, there was a judgment: (1) "That the complaint should be and hereby is dismissed on the merits"; (2) that the defendants recover costs; and (3) "that defendant's prayer for declaratory judgment be, and it is hereby denied"; and plaintiff has appealed.

Here appellant, upon the authority of U. S. v. Line Material Co., 333 U. S. 287; U. S. v. Gypsum Co., 333 U. S. 364; U. S. v. Griffith, 324 U. S. 100; Fed. Trade Comm. v. Morton Salt, 332 U. S. 850; International Salt Co. v. U. S., 332 U. S. 392; U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, 324 U. S. 131; insisting that the judgment was wrong, seeks its reversal.

Appellees, upon the basis of the authorities relied on by the court below, insist that the judgment was right and should be affirmed.

---

ment. In view of plaintiff's suit no further proceedings were taken or would be taken by any of the parties until the suit was determined, since it was felt only proper to await the decision." Vincent further stated: "We believe and desire that the court at this time pass upon the anti-trust features of this complaint 1163, and on the question presented concerning the Purnell Act. I am authorized to state on behalf of all parties to the proposed trust agreement that if the court agrees with our contention that there is nothing illegal about such proposed trust agreement and that no free use attaches to any patent issued in the Neal application, then it is the purpose of these defendants to proceed as expeditiously as possible to conclude the trust arrangement."

Mr. Toulmin, for defendant, stated, "We propose to rest our case on the pleadings in this case". Again he stated, "The issue fundamental is whether or not the proposed trust agreement and the proposed license agreement, which have been partially executed and which the defendants say they will execute and carry out if they are not restrained by the court, constitute violations of the anti-trust laws of the United States."

Mr. Darby, for the defendants, stated: "First of all, as far as the State and Vincent are concerned, the trust agreement is a completed agreement. All that is necessary is for the trustee to accept the trust, the license is a typical form of license which has been agreed upon, as the pleadings show, contrary to the suggestion that this is a request for an advisory opinion, that is not correct. We completed it, we have said we are going through with it unless the court holds that we should not do so".

In the course of these discussions, the district judge said:

> "But you gentlemen must remember that in submitting this case to me that I cannot acquiesce in you gentlemen making a moot Court case issue before me in passing upon the legal questions involved in a moot case. In passing upon the legal questions involved in a moot case, the Supreme Court and all of the Courts say we can not lend ourselves to that kind of practice, * * *."

[5] This is the way appellant, plaintiff below, states them:

> "(1) The execution of the trust agreement by the State and Vincent and the agreement and concerted action by all defendants in combining to bring about the execution of the trust agreement and approval of the form of the licensing agreement constitute a violation of the Anti-trust Laws of the United States, as being an unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce.
>
> (2) The payment of the salary of Dr. Wayne M. Neal, the inventor of the process for which patent application has been made by the State, from Purnell Act funds and the contribution of those funds to the support of the State Agricultural Experiment Stations through whose facilities the Neal invention was perfected constitute a dedication of the State's invention to the public at large."

Interesting as these contentions are, we find it unnecessary to resolve, or even to consider, them. We agree with the district judge's view that defendants' prayer for a declaratory judgment was premature for the reason he gave, that the trust agreement had not yet been executed by all parties and for that reason had not yet matured to a point where the court had authority to pass upon its legality.

For the same reason plaintiff's suit was premature, and should have been dismissed as such. But it was premature for other reasons. The agreement, which plaintiff alleges constitutes per se the conspiracy charge, provides in terms for the appointment of a committee to act with the trustee in carrying out the trust. It is undisputed that the trustee has not accepted the trust and that no committee has been formed. The trust agreement provides for fixing prices interstate only in respect of licensed products covered by claims under a Neal patent issued upon the Neal application, and then only if the price "is determined solely by those members of the committee appointed by the state or by other duly appointed state representatives acting by virtue of legal authority in the State of Florida". It is admitted that no Neal patent has issued and that until one does issue, no price fixing will be attempted, and no authority in this respect exercised. It is admitted that no members of the committee have been appointed by the state, and that no other duly appointed state representatives acting by virtue of legal authority in the State of Florida have appeared to exercise the power.

Matters standing thus, what the plaintiff has presented to the court is not an actual controversy for decision or an actual threatened injury for redress. It is a request for an advisory opinion on a purely hypothetical situation, which has not arisen, and which may or may not arise according to whether the trust instrument is or is not fully signed and made effective by the appointment of the committee under it and the obtaining of legal authority from the State of Florida with respect to fixing prices, and whether a Neal patent containing product claims is granted.

In these circumstances, instead of declining merely to entertain defendants' counterclaim, the district judge should also have declined to take cognizance of plaintiff's complaint and dismissed it without prejudice.

The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded with directions to dismiss it without prejudice.

[¶ 62,332] Rene Douglas d. b. a. Douglas Laboratories v. Wisconsin Alumni Research Foundation, Standard Brands, Incorporated, Gelatin Products Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 46 C 1535. October 25, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Treble Damage Suit—Compulsory Counterclaim—Motions to Amend and for Summary Judgment.—In an action for damages for a conspiracy to monopolize trade in vitamins and vitamin products, a motion by a defendant to amend its answer so as to allege that an action had been previously brought by it against the plaintiff for patent infringement, that the answer filed in that suit was substantially the same as the present complaint, and that plaintiff, therefore, had a compulsory counterclaim in the former action and is estopped from maintaining the present suit against the moving defendant, is denied. It is held that under the rule announced by the United States Supreme Court in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., the fact that a right of action may have been asserted as a counterclaim in the prior suit by reason of Rule 13 (b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure does not mean that the failure to do so renders the prior judgment res judicata as respects it. Additional reasons for denial of the motion are the facts that (1) in the prior suit the complaint was dismissed as to the present plaintiff before a trial on the merits, so that at the time of the dismissal it would have been still possible for him to have aserted a counterclaim by way of amendment, but in view of the dismissal order, such action became unnecessary, and (2) even if the complaint were now dismissed as to the moving defendant, a trial must be conducted as to the remaining defendants, at which the moving defendant would be a necessary or indispensable party. A motion for summary judgment on the same ground is denied.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.636, and prior opinions reported in 1944-1945 Trade Cases, ¶ 57,312, 57,433, and in 1946-1947 Trade Cases, at ¶ 57,565, 57,585.

For plaintiff: Johnson & Wiles, Chicago, Illinois.

For defendants: Weymouth Kirkland, Howard Ellis, A. L. Hodson & John C. Butler; George I. Height; Lee J. Gary; all of Chicago, Illinois; Paul Marco, Detroit, Michigan.

Memorandum

CAMPBELL, D. J.:—Plaintiff brought this action under the Anti-Trust laws of the United States (15 U. S. C. Sections 1 to 27 inclusive), seeking to recover treble damages for the alleged conspiracy existing between the three defendants to monopolize trade in the field of vitamins and vitamin products. The defendants filed separate answers to the complaint, denying such a conspiracy. Subsequently, defendant Wisconsin Research moved to amend its answer so as to allege that an action had been previously brought by it against this plaintiff for patent infringement; that the answer filed in that suit by plaintiff was substantially the same as the present complaint; that plaintiff, therefore, had a compulsory counterclaim in the former action under Rule 13 (a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and is estopped from maintaining the present suit against Wisconsin Research. Simultaneously, Wisconsin filed a motion for summary judgment based on the same theory as its motion to amend. It appears from the briefs of the parties that the former action was dismissed as to Douglas, with prejudice, by stipulation before a trial of the cause was had upon its merits.

An anlaysis of the applicable law reveals that certain modifications to the fundamental concept of compulsory counterclaims have been introduced by means of judicial decision. The case of Moore v. New York Cotton Exchange, 270 U. S. 593 (1925) sets forth the basic rules for determining whether or not a compulsory counterclaim exists:

"Two classes of counterclaims are thus provided for: (a) One 'arising out of the transaction which is the subject matter of the suit,' which must be pleaded, and (b) another 'which might be the subject of an independent suit in equity' and which may be brought forward at the option of the defendant. We are of the opinion that this counterclaim comes within the first branch of the rule; and we need not consider the point that, under the second branch, federal jurisdiction independent of the original bill must appear.

"The bill sets forth the contract with the Western Union and the refusal of the New York Exchange to allow appellant to receive the continuous cotton quotations, and asks a mandatory injunction to compel appellees to furnish them. The answer admits the refusal and justifies it. The counterclaim sets up that, nevertheless, the appellant is purloining or otherwise illegally obtaining them, and asks that this practice be enjoined. 'Transaction' is a word of flexible meaning. It may comprehend a series of many occurrences, depending not so much on the immediateness of their connection as upon their logical relationship. The refusal to furnish the quotations is one of the links in the chain which constitutes the transaction upon which appellant here bases its cause of action. It is an important part of the transaction constituting the subject matter of the counterclaim. It is the one circumstance without which neither party would have found it necessary to seek relief. Essential facts alleged by the appellant enter into and constitute in part the cause of action set forth in the counterclaim. That they are not precisely identical, or that the counterclaims embrace additional allegations, as, for example, that the appellant is unlawfully getting the quotations, does not matter. To hold otherwise would be to rob this branch of the rule of all serviceable meaning, since the facts relied upon by the plaintiff rarely, if ever, are, in all particulars, the same as those constituting the defendant's counterclaim.

"So close is the connection between the case sought to be stated in the bill and that set up in the counterclaim, that it only needs the failure of the former to establish a foundation for the latter; but the relief afforded by the dismissal of the bill is not complete without an injunction restraining appellant from continuing to obtain by stealthy appropriation what the court had held it could not have by judicial compulsion."

The case of Hancock Oil Co. v. Universal Oil Prod. Co., 115 F. 2nd 45 (1940), coincides directly with the present action, in that the plaintiff brought suit for patent infringement and the defendant counterclaimed under the Clayton Act, alleging an unlawful conspiracy to create a monopoly.

"Since the counterclaim arises out of the 'transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposite party's claim,' i. e., the ownership and introduction to the public of the plaintiff's patents, and since the counterclaim's allegations would warrant the relief against the plaintiff without the presence of the other parties to the conspiracy, the counterclaim is 'compulsory' in character and 'shall' be stated in the answer or the right to recover thereon is lost."

Normally, the Hancock case would be sufficient authority for dismissing the plaintiff's action as against Wisconsin here. However, a more recent decision of the Supreme Court would appear to establish a contrary rule. In Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661 (1943), plaintiff sued defendant for contributory infringement of a patent, and defendant counterclaimed, alleging violation of the anti-trust laws by plaintiff. In a previous suit plaintiff had sued one Smith for patent infringement, and the present defendant, although not made a party to the action, had provided the defense.

"'Courts of equity may, and frequently do, go much further both to give and withhold relief in furtherance of the public interest than they are accustomed to go when only private interests are involved'. Virginia Ry. Co. v. System Federation, 300 U. S. 515. 'Where an important public interest would be prejudiced', the reasons for denying injunctive relief 'may be compelling'. (Citing cases.) That is the principle which has led this court in the past to withhold aid from a patentee in suits for either direct or indirect infringement where the patent was being misused. Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., 314 U. S. 488. That principle is controlling here. The parties cannot foreclose the courts from the exercise of that discretion by the failure to interpose the same defense in an earlier litigation.

"What we have just said does not, of course, dispose of Mercoid's counterclaim for damages. That was based on Sect. 4 of the Clayton Act which provides ' . . . ' Though Mercoid were barred in the present case from asserting any defense which might have been interposed in the earlier litigation, it would not follow that its counterclaim for damages would likewise be barred. The claim for damages is more than a defense; it is a separate statutory cause of action. The fact that it might have been asserted as a counterclaim in the prior suit by reason of Rule 13 (b) [Permissive counterclaims] of the Rules of Civil Procedure does not mean that the failure to do so renders the prior judgment 'res judicata' as respects it. (Citing cases.) The case is then governed by the principle that where the second cause of action between the parties is on a different claim the prior judgment is 'res judicata' not as to issues which might have been tendered but 'only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered.' It was held in Fleitman v. Welsbach Street Lighting Co., 240 U. S. 27, that the statutory liability in question may be enforced only through the verdict of a jury in a court of common law. But there is no rule under the Rules of Civil Procedure why that may not be done under this counterclaim. Rules 12 (h), 13, 38, and 42 (b). Whether the evidence will show damages within the rule of Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., 282 U. S. 555, is of course a distinct question on which we intimate no opinion.

"We have mentioned the statutory claim for damages because both the District Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals denied that relief. But since the cause must be remanded to the District Court we think the question whether 'res judicata' bars any other part of the relief sought by the counterclaim may appropriately be reserved for it."

A consideration of the nature of a compulsory counterclaim would appear to indicate certain inherent weaknesses in the rationale of the Mercoid decision. A compulsory counterclaim, by definition, is one that "arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim". In an action for patent infringement, the subject matter is the patent, its use, and its infringement. And since it is recognized as a valid affirmative defense, misuse by the patentee must also be included as a necessary ingredient of the subject matter. It is logically related to, and intimately interwoven with, the other elements so as to render it indispensable to the whole. Nor does the mere fact that a separate right of action is granted by statute for misuse by the patentee, alter its character. More than one right of action can be created by a single transaction, but the method of enforcing these rights can be restricted or qualified. Rule 13 (a) is an example of this type of restriction. A defendant has a right to defend on the ground of misuse, and he also has a right to maintain a counterclaim for damages for that same misuse; but he is restricted insofar as he must assert the one while asserting the other.

Although this Court may not concur with the conclusion reached by the Supreme Court, it is, nevertheless, bound by the rule declared therein. The statement contained in the Mercoid case that "The fact that it might have been asserted as a counterclaim in the prior suit by reason of Rule 13 (b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure does not mean that the failure to do so renders the prior judgment res judicata as respects it", appears almost too casually interjected; but its presence still results in the establishment of a rule of law. Apparently, it was the intention of the Supreme Court to remove this particular type of counterclaim from the dictates of Rule 13 (a) in the interest of public policy.

In the case at bar there are additional reasons for refusing to permit Wisconsin Research to assert the plea of a former compulsory counterclaim. In the prior suit the complaint was dismissed as to Douglas before a trial of the cause was had upon its merits. At the time of the dismissal, it would have been still possible for Douglas to have asserted a counterclaim by way of amendment; but, in view of the dismissal order, such action became unnecessary. Furthermore, even if the complaint were now dismissed as to Wisconsin, a trial, nevertheless, must be conducted as to the other two defendants, at which Wisconsin would at least be a necessary, if not an indispensable, party.

The motions of the Wisconsin Research Foundation to amend its answer and for summary judgment are, therefore, denied.

[¶ 62,333] United States v. Yellow Cab Company; Chicago Yellow Cab Company, Inc.; Parmelee Transportation Company; Cab Sales and Parts Corporation; Checker Taxi Company; Checker Cab Manufacturing Corporation; and Morris Markin.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 46 C 1339. November 1, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Conspiracy to Restrain and Monopolize Trade—Transportation of Railroad Passengers Between Stations—Taxicab Companies.—An amended complaint alleging a conspiracy to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce in (1) the sale of motor vehicles for use as cabs to the principal cab operating companies in four cities, and (2) the transportation of railroad passengers and their luggage between railroad stations in Chicago pursuant to contractual arrangements with railroads is held not supported by the evidence. It is found that a cab operating company defendant did not acquire the stock of another cab operating company defendant in order to control commerce in the sale of cabs in Chicago or elsewhere; that the differences in equipment, personnel and services between two local cab operating companies and a company engaged in transporting railroad passengers between stations under contracts with railroads are such that competition with the transfer company for such contracts would be impractical and unlikely; that the cab operating companies have never agreed not to compete with the transfer company, or not to engage in such inter-station transfer business; and that none of the defendants has ever forbidden the cab operating companies to compete with the transfer company or to engage in such inter-station transfer business. Since on the proof, the stock relationships of the defendants did not arise as a result of a "deliberate, calculated purchase, for control" over commerce in the sales of cabs, the affiliation of the defendants does not constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. Nor does the proof show that the purchases of the manufacturing company's purpose-built cabs were made in violation of the Act.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.161, 1021.271, 1021.581, 1210.337.

Opinion

LaBuy, D. J.: The amended complaint in this action alleges that the defendants, commencing in early 1929, conspired in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (26 Stat. 209, as amended) to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce in (1) the sale of motor vehicles for use as cabs to the principal cab operating companies in Chicago, New York City, Pittsburgh and Minneapolis, and (2) the transportation of railroad passengers and their luggage between railroad stations in Chicago pursuant to contractual arrangements with railroads and railroad associations.

The original complaint additionally alleged that such conspiracy extended to the business of furnishing taxicab services for hire in Chicago, but this was deleted after decision by the Supreme Court that such taxicab services were local and not interstate commerce and that in this respect the original complaint failed as a matter of pleading to state a claim for relief. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218.

The defendant Checker Cab Manufacturing Corporation (CCM) manufactures taxicabs in Michigan and sells them to purchasers in various states. The defendant Yellow Cab Company (Yellow), all of whose stock is owned by the defendant Chicago Yellow Cab Company, Inc. (Chicago Yellow), operates taxicabs in Chicago. The defendant Cab Sales and Parts Corporation (Cab Sales) also operates taxicabs in Chicago under licenses leased from Checker Taxi Company (Checker). The defendant Parmelee Transportation Company (Parmelee) owns all the stock of three subsidiaries which respectively operate taxicabs in New York City, Pittsburgh and Minneapolis. Parmelee also has contractual arrangements with railroads and railroad associations under which it transports railroad passengers and their luggage between railroad stations in Chicago. The defendant Morris Markin (Markin) is the president and general manager of CCM.

CCM was first incorporated in 1922 and has ever since manufactured a purpose-built cab. In 1923 its stock was publicly issued and in 1928 a second public issue was effected through the underwriting firm of J. A. Sisto & Co. Markin, in 1928, was the general manager and president of CCM, and CCM, in 1928, produced its Model K cab which received widespread acclaim.

In 1928 Ernest H. Miller, president of Yellow Taxi Corporation, New York, which operated "Yellow" cabs in New York City, initiated negotiations which led to Parmelee's formation. These nogtiations, commencing in 1925, took place against a background of voluntary withdrawal by substantial interests of the "Yellow" organization in Chicago.

The Yellow organization in Chicago traces back to 1910. In 1925 its components included Yellow, Chicago Yellow and Yellow Cab Manufacturing Company, the last of which manufactured the "Yellow" purpose-built cab and supplied Yellow's cab requirements. In 1925, Yellow Cab Manufacturing Company was sold to General Motors Corporation, and shortly afterwards its name was changed, its plant was transferred, and it began to engage principally in the business of bus and truck manufacture.

In 1928 Miller informed Markin that persons owning substantial interests in Yellow Taxi Corporation, New York and Chicago Yellow desired to sell those interests. Miller asked Markin whether Markin could aid in arranging financing for such purpose. Markin consulted J. A. Sisto & Co., the underwriters through whom CCM earlier in 1928 had effected its public issue of stock. Negotiations ensued among Miller, Charles A. McCulloch, vice-president of Chicago Yellow and chairman of the board of The Parmelee Company, Markin, and J. A. Sisto & Co. in connection with which McCulloch also offered for sale stock of The Parmelee Company. J. A. Sisto & Co. investigated the proposed purchase, arranged for its financing and evolved the financial and operating structure of Parmelee.

Parmelee was formed April 12, 1929, with a capitalization of $10,600,000 consisting of $5,000,000 of debentures, $1,000,000 of preferred shares, and 250,000 common shares of the value of $4,600,000. Only the common shares possessed voting power. The $5,000,000 of debentures and the 250,000 common shares were publicly issued through J. A. Sisto & Co. and White Weld & Co. as underwriters. The $1,000,000 of preferred shares were purchased by CCM.

Shortly after its formation, Parmelee acquired 26 per cent of the stock of Chicago Yellow, 68 per cent of the stock of Yellow Taxi Corporation, New York, and 96 per cent of the stock of The Parmelee Company.

In connection with Parmelee's formation and the preceding negotiations, Markin, aside from discussions concerning CCM's purchase of Parmelee's preferred shares, acted in his personal capacity. Markin personally bought for himself and an associate 6 per cent of Parmelee's common shares. He also entered into an employment contract with Transportation Management Corporation, a newly formed and wholly owned subsidiary of Parmelee, to act as an adviser to Miller, president of Transportation Management Corporation. Markin's salary as such adviser was $25,000 per year and Miller's salary as such president was $50,000 per year.

Prior to his subscription to Parmelee's common shares and to his employment contract with Transportation Management Corporation, Markin disclosed his personal negotiations to CCM, both at director and stockholder meetings, and requested a modification of his employment contract with CCM, under which he was required to devote his whole time to CCM's business, so that he might enter into this employment contract with Transportation Management Corporation. CCM recognized that Markin was acting in his personal capacity, and modified Markin's employment contract with itself to permit Markin to enter into this employment contract with Transportation Management Corporation.

In purchasing the $1,000,000 of Parmelee preferred shares, CCM hoped to receive, in addition to a profitable investment, the continuing good will of Parmelee as a potential customer for cabs. CCM declined, however, a prior offer to purchase common voting shares of Parmelee rather than the non-voting preferred shares because CCM desired the safer investment.

At Parmelee's formation, Markin was neither an officer nor a director of Parmelee or any of its affiliates; nor did Markin or CCM possess any control over Parmelee or its affiliates or any of their officers or directors.

During 1929 after Parmelee's formation both Yellow and Yellow Taxi Corporation, New York, purchased Model K cabs from CCM. No agreements, express or implied, were made, however, between CCM and Parmelee or any of Parmelee's affiliates for the exclusive or continuous purchase of CCM cabs; the 1929 purchases by Yellow and Yellow Taxi Corporation, New York, were limited to a specified number delivered that year.

Subsequent to Parmelee's acquisition of stock of Yellow Taxi Corporation, New York, and Chicago Yellow, Parmelee acquired the stock of two Pittsburgh taxicab operating companies, and later organized as a wholly owned subsidiary a Minneapolis taxicab operating company. These Pittsburgh acquisitions occurred in 1929 and neither Markin nor CCM participated in them. The organization of the Minneapolis taxicab operating company occurred in 1931 and followed the receivership of a prior Minneapolis taxicab operating company owned by a local street railway company. Parmelee supplied $16,305 to purchase the receivership assets which subsequently were transferred to the Minneapolis corporation organized by Parmelee.

From the evidence the court finds that in 1929 neither CCM nor Markin possessed the power to compel Parmelee or any of its affiliates to purchase only CCM cabs; that in 1929 neither CCM, Markin nor any of the defendants formed an intent or plan to compel Parmelee or any of its cab operating affiliates to purchase only CCM cabs; and that in 1929 neither CCM, Markin nor any of the defendants formed an intent or plan to control commerce in the sales of cabs in any city or place.

At the time of Parmelee's formation Markin owned 12 per cent of CCM's stock and possessed no control over CCM's directorate. By mid-1930 Markin's ownership of CCM stock declined to 5 per cent, and of Parmelee's common stock to less than 1 per cent. At that time, CCM's largest stockholder was a group represented by John J. Raskob and Pierre duPont which owned more than 34 per cent of CCM's stock. This group and later duPont interests continued until mid-1933 to be CCM's largest stockholders. For several years thereafter representatives of Cord Corporation constituted the majority of CCM's directors. During none of this period was Markin in control of CCM.

In 1930 the following events occurred. J. A. Sisto & Co. was in financial difficulties as a result of the stock market crash of October 1929 and subsequent depression, and continued to hold without likelihood of public sale, $1,442,000 of the Parmelee debentures plus some Parmelee common shares and warrants. It sold these securities to CCM. Parmelee was incurring substantial losses, partly because of business conditions and partly because of a severe strike in Pittsburgh. Markin personally owned substantially all the stock of Motor Cab Transportation Corporation which he had previously formed and whose subsidiaries operated a large fleet of CCM cabs in New York City. The Raskob-duPont group requested that Markin dispose of his Motor Cab stock so that he would not be, through this corporation, in competition with other New York City customers of CCM. Parmelee suggested that its financial strain would be eased if the $1,442,000 of debentures and the $1,000,000 of preferred shares of Parmelee then owned by CCM, carrying a current burden of interest charges, sinking fund requirements and cumulative preferred dividends aggregating over $330,000 yearly, were exchanged for Parmelee common shares. As a result of ensuing negotiations Markin, on the insistence of the Raskob-duPont group, transferred his Motor Cab stock to CCM in exchange for shares of CCM, and CCM transferred this Motor Cab stock plus all CCM's holdings of Parmelee debentures and preferred stock plus some incidental securities, to Parmelee in exchange for 422,787 Parmelee common stock. In consequence of this transaction, CCM in the latter part of 1930 became the owner of a majority of Parmelee's common stock. This transaction, however, was not related to any sales of CCM cabs to Parmelee or any of its taxicab operating affiliates and no accompanying intent or plan connected with any control over commerce in the sales of cabs existed on the part of any of the defendants.

At the present time, CCM owns 61.75 per cent of the stock of Parmelee, and Parmelee owns 29.5 per cent of the stock of Chicago Yellow and all the stock of three subsidiaries which respectively operate cabs in New York City, Pittsburgh and Minneapolis. Yellow, whose parent is Chicago Yellow, presently operates 1,595 licensed cabs out of 3,000 licensed and 950 temporarily licensed cabs in Chicago, or 1,595 out of an aggregate of 3,950. One of Parmelee's cab operating subsidiaries presently operates 1,932 licensed cabs out of 11,814 licensed cabs in New York City; another presently operates 485 licensed cabs out of 690 licensed cabs in Pittsburgh; and the third presently operates 125 licensed cabs out of 214 licensed cabs in Minneapolis.

Checker was formed in 1919 by a group of taxicab drivers who became its stockholders and operated their cabs under its common name. Checker performed services for these driver-stockholders, including telephone, cab stand, garage, repairs, insurance and the like, for which it received service payments. Orders from Checker for CCM cabs were among CCM's first orders in 1922. In 1925 a five year contract was made between CCM and Checker for the exclusive supply by CCM of Checker's requirements of cabs. Disputes occurred, however, with respect to this contract. These disputes were finally settled in 1930, after findings by a Special Master in CCM's favor, by the substitution of a new five year exclusive contract expiring in 1935.

Cab Sales was formed in 1930 as a method of compensating Paul C. L'Amoreaux, CCM's attorney in the CCM-Checker litigation. He became Cab Sales' sole stockholder and Cab Sales became entitled to receive a commission on CCM sales to Checker during the substituted five year contract. In 1931 Checker's president desired to withdraw from Checker and suggested the sale to Cab Sales of the majority of Checker's stock. Cab Sales thought this a good purchase and obtained for this purpose a substantial sum from Markin personally and loans from subsidiaries of Yellow. Numerous business factors unrelated to sales of cabs and turbulent cab operating conditions in Chicago motivated this investment by Markin and these loans by subsidiaries of Yellow. Between 1931 and 1935 Checker continued its previous form of individual-driver operation. During this period, however, large arrearages accumulated in the service charges owing by the drivers and the drivers also defaulted on purchase installments of their cabs with the result that cabs were abandoned or Cab Sales was required to repossess them. In 1935 Cab Sales commenced fleet operation of 500 cabs within Checker. This was a minority of the total number of cabs operated within Checker but Cab Sales operated these 500 cabs as a fleet while the individual drivers of Checker operated their cabs individually. Between 1935 and 1941 the individual drivers gradually dropped out as a result of their difficulties of operation and their inability or unwillingness to pay their service charges and purchase installments on cabs, so that by 1941 all "Checker" cabs were operated as a fleet by Cab Sales.

L'Amoreaux died in 1933 and since 1934 Markin has been the owner of substantially all the stock of Cab Sales. Since 1942 substantially all the stock of Checker has been owned by associates of Markin.

From the evidence, the court finds that Cab Sales did not acquire Checker's stock to compel the purchase of CCM cabs by Checker drivers or to control commerce in the sales of cabs to Chicago or elsewhere; and that the transition in Checker to a fleet operation was in adaptation to the difficulties confronting its individual-driver operation, and was not part of any intent or plan of any of the defendants to compel purchases of CCM cabs or to control commerce in the sales of cabs to Chicago or elsewhere.

At the present time Cab Sales operates 1,000 licensed cabs out of the aggregate of 3,950 licensed and temporarily licensed cabs in Chicago.

During the period 1929 through 1942 the cab operating companies affiliated with Parmelee, and Cab Sales have generally purchased only CCM cabs; between 1942 and 1947 CCM was engaged in war production and reconversion from war production and sold no cabs. In 1947 all the Parmelee cab operating affiliates, except in New York City, and Cab Sales replaced their fleets with pleasure cars manufactured by General Motors Corporation, Ford or Chrysler Corporation.

During the period 1922 through 1928 CCM manufactured and sold an aggregate of 8,019 cabs or an average of 1,336 cabs per year. During the period 1929 through 1942 CCM manufactured and sold an aggregate of 29,260 cabs or an average of 2,090 cabs per year. CCM's pre-1929 customers included all present cab operating companies under consideration in this action or one or more of their predecessors, except Yellow. Of the 29,260 cabs manufactured and sold between 1929 and 1942, 16,996 were sold to cab operating companies named in this action and 12,264 were sold to others.

The annual average number of taxicabs operated in the United States since 1928 is estimated at approximately 85,000. The bulk of these are manufactured by General Motors Corporation, Ford and Chrysler Corporation. The CCM cab has always been a purpose-built cab. The vehicles used as cabs which are produced by the large automotive manufacturers have generally been pleasure cars converted or adapted to use as taxicabs. A purpose-built cab is a vehicle built for the purpose of use as a taxicab; its essential characteristics are safety, assembly of parts in such manner as to afford low maintenance cost, driver appeal, and passenger appeal. During the period 1928 through 1942 CCM was the only manufacturer continuously engaged in the production of purpose-built cabs. The business judgment of Checker, Yellow and the cab operating subsidiaries of Parmelee has been that the CCM purpose-built cab better served their large city needs than converted pleasure cars.

Municipal regulation of taxicabs prevails throughout most of the large cities of the United States. In most of these large cities cab operations are conducted through fleets rather than as individual driver operations and in most a large proportion of the cab licenses are held by one or two operating companies. These fleet operations generally utilize a uniform cab and replacements are commonly obtained from the same manufacturer.

In Chicago taxicabs are regulated by ordinances of the City of Chicago. These ordinances control the physical requirements of the taxicabs and also establish and control the rates. Municipal regulations likewise control taxicabs and rates in the cities of New York, Pittsburgh and Minneapolis.

On May 9, 1853 Frank Parmelee formed the firm of Frank Parmelee & Company to specialize in the transfer by coaches of railroad passengers and their luggage between railroad stations in Chicago; in 1919 this firm became known as The Parmelee Company. Arrangements for such transfer service have existed continuously since 1853 between Parmelee or its predecessors and the railroads or railroad associations.

In the conduct of this inter-station transfer business Parmelee operates limousine coaches for passengers, trucks for luggage, and collects its compensation from the railroads. Passengers surrender to Parmelee coupons attached to their railroad tickets and furnished to them when they buy such railroad tickets. Their checked luggage is transported separately by Parmelee on trucks. Parmelee's routes between Chicago railroad stations are fixed. Its limousine coaches cannot be hired separately by any one person and passengers can travel only between railroad stations. Parmelee has offices at the several stations and its personnel is established and trained. Parmelee does not operate taxicabs for the general public in Chicago and is not subject to the taxicab ordinances of the City of Chicago.

Yellow, Checker and Cab Sales, however, have engaged only in the business of furnishing taxicab services for hire to the general Chicago public and their operations are subject to the ordinances of the City of Chicago. As part of their taxicab services for the general Chicago public, Yellow and Cab Sales furnish cab services to and from Chicago railroad stations. None of them has or has ever had limousine coaches or trucks or the type of personnel used by Parmelee and has never engaged in the kind of service rendered by Parmelee under its contractual arrangement with railroads and railroad associations.

On the evidence the court finds that the differences between these cab operating companies and Parmelee in equipment, personnel and services are such that competition with Parmelee for such contractual arrangements with railroads or railroad associations would be impractical and unlikely; that neither Yellow, Checker nor Cab Sales has ever agreed, expressly or impliedly, not to compete with Parmelee or not to engage in such inter-station transfer business; and that none of the defendants has ever, expressly or impliedly, forbidden Yellow, Checker or Cab Sales to compete with Parmelee or to engage in such inter-station transfer business.

In respect of sales of taxicabs the theory of the Government is that the defendants deliberately and calculatedly purchased control of taxicab operating companies in four cities in order to monopolize and restrain interstate sales of cabs to those cities. In considering the complaint as a matter of pleading the Supreme Court, United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, 227, thus stated this theory:

> "The theory of the complaint, to borrow language from United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57, is that 'dominating power' over the cab operating companies 'was not obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management, but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control.' If that theory is borne out in this case by the evidence, coupled with proof of an undue restraint of interstate trade, a plain violation of the Act has occurred."

Later, in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 522, the Supreme Court said in reference to its decision in the Yellow Cab case:

> "In the complaint the government charged that the defendants had combined and conspired to effect the restraints in question with the intent and purpose of monopolizing the cab business in certain cities, and on motion to dismiss that allegation was accepted as true."

The evidence adduced at the trial consisted of voluminous documents as well as oral testimony. On consideration of the evidence as a whole it appears to the court that the Government's theory is not borne out by the proof.

From the evidence it appears to the court that the stock relationships which developed among the defendants were not part of a design to compel the purchase of CCM cabs and were not accompanied by an intent to control commerce in the sales of cabs to any of the four cities under consideration. The affiliations which occurred were occasioned by other business factors. Thus, without reviewing each instance, the status of Parmelee, which is the pivot of the Government's theory, may be considered. At Parmelee's formation in April 1929, CCM not only was without any control over Parmelee but actually refused the opportunity to take common shares of Parmelee which possessed voting power, and took instead non-voting preferred shares of Parmelee. CCM's later acquisition, in the latter part of 1930, of a majority of Parmelee's common shares was the result of a series of supervening factors consequent on the stock market crash of October 1929, none of which could reasonably have been foreseen at Parmelee's formation and none of which was connected with sales of cabs by CCM to cab operating affiliates of Parmelee. During the entire depression period conditions of financial stress continuously beset cab operating companies in general and Parmelee in particular. cf. International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U. S. 291, 301. Nor did Markin possess any control over Parmelee or CCM. In the latter part of 1930 Markin's ownership of Parmelee shares declined to less than 1 per cent and his ownership of CCM shares to 5 per cent, which contrasts with an ownership of CCM shares of more than 34 per cent by the Raskob-duPont group. Raskob and duPont interests in CCM continued until 1933 and commencing in 1933 and continuing for several years afterwards Cord Corporation controlled CCM's management.

Since, on the proof, the relationships of the defendants did not arise as a result of a "deliberate, calculated purchase for control" over commerce in the sales of cabs, the affiliation of the defendants does not constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., supra, 227; United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc.; United States v. Columbia Steel Co., supra.

Nor, on the evidence as a whole, does the proof show that the purchases of CCM's purpose-built cabs were made under compulsion or, except for the five year and substituted five year agreements between CCM and Checker expiring in 1935, under exclusive contracts. Included in the proof to the contrary are the sale to General Motors Corporation in 1925 of Yellow Cab Manufacturing Co. which manufactured the "Yellow" purpose-built cab, and the subsequent devotion of that company principally to the production of trucks and busses; the acclaim accorded in 1928 and 1929 to CCM's Model K cab; the practice even before 1929 of many of the cab operating companies under consideration or their predecessors of buying only purpose-built cabs; the status of CCM during the period since 1929 as the only manufacturer which continuously produced purpose-built cabs; and the tendency of cab operating companies usually to replace their fleets with cabs of the same manufacture. The government has suggested that pleasure cars, rather than purpose-built cabs should, perhaps, have been bought by the cab operating companies under consideration. This, however, is within the area of business judgment and, on the evidence it appears that the business judgment of these cab operating companies was that the CCM purpose-built cabs better served their large city needs than converted pleasure cars. In Yellow Cab Co. v. City of Chicago, 396 Ill. 388, the Illinois Supreme Court thus referred to some of the advantages of operation in the City of Chicago of purpose-built cabs: (page 395)

> "It further appears that there are certain advantages to the operation of taxicabs of special construction since they have many specially designed features for the safety, convenience and enjoyment of the passengers, and for easier operation on the public streets. Certain of these features are extra heavy frames, especially constructed bodies, specially designed brakes and steering mechanism, finger guards on door hinges, specially padded partitions, specially designed wheels, tires, ventilators and other features. Their weight is approximately 1000 pounds more than the average passenger car."

The evidence in the present case amply sustains the right of the cab operating companies under consideration to determine, as a matter of business judgment, that the CCM purpose-built cab best suits their large city needs. This business judgment should not, on the evidence, be disturbed by the court. Under these business circumstances, it appears both reasonable and natural for these cab operating companies to buy the purpose-built cab produced by its affiliate.

In United States v. Columbia Steel Co., supra, 523, the Supreme Court said:

> "Nothing in the Yellow Cab case supports the theory that all exclusive dealing arrangements are illegal per se.
>
> "A subsidiary will in all probability deal only with its parent for goods the parent can furnish. That fact, however, does not make the acquisition invalid."

The evidence does not disclose any unreasonable restraint. An additional factor affecting any question of unreasonable restraint is the control by the four cities concerned through existing municipal regulations over the issuance of taxicab licenses, the physical specifications of taxicabs, and the rates of fare.

In respect of Parmelee's contractual arrangements with the railroads and railroad associations for inter-station transfer of railroad passengers and their luggage, the Government alleges that the defendants agreed with Yellow, Checker and Cab Sales would not compete with Parmelee for such contracts. No adequate proof supports this charge nor is it shown that the defendants ever forbade Yellow, Checker or Cab Sales, expressly or impliedly, from competing with Parmelee. Nor, in view of the evidence to the contrary, does any inference of an agreement of non-competition arise from Parmelee's continued contractual arrangements with the railroads and railroad associations after 1929. The historical relationship and the contractual arrangements of Parmelee and its predecessors with the railroads and railroad associations have been continuous for nearly a century. Exclusive contract arrangements have been sustained as valid. Donovan v. Pennsylvania Company, 199 U. S. 279; United States v. Yellow Cab Company, supra, 229. For years prior to 1929 the year of the commencement of the alleged conspiracy, Yellow and Checker operated taxicabs in Chicago without attempting to compete for such contracts with the railroads or railroad associations. Yellow and Cab Sales furnish taxicab services for hire to the general Chicago public. Their equipment, personnel and services adapted to this business differ from Parmelee's to such an extent that it would be "impractical and unlikely" for them to compete with Parmelee for its inter-station transfer business. United States v. Yellow Cab Co. supra, 229.

In arriving at the findings of fact made above this court has considered the various matters of proof presented: those not specifically mentioned in the findings have been deemed intermediate in the process of ascertaining the ultimate facts. Included in this category, for example, is the 1937 ordinance of the City of Chicago, under which the number of outstanding taxicab licenses in Chicago was reduced to 3,000. This ordinance, as its preamble recites, was plainly the result of a determination of public convenience and necessity and the surrenders of licenses by Yellow and Checker in pursuance of this ordinance have, under the proof, no relation to any problems of sales of CCM cabs or inter-station transfer by Parmelee.

The court finds that the defendants have not combined or conspired to restrain or monopolize, and no unreasonable restraint or any monopolization was effected by any of them, and that they have not restrained or monopolized interstate commerce either in the sale of motor vehicles for use as cabs to the principal cab operating companies in Chicago, New York City, Pittsburgh or Minneapolis or in the transportation of railroad passengers and their luggage between railroad stations in Chicago pursuant to contractual arrangements with railroads or railroad associations.

Counsel will submit an order in accordance herewith.

[¶ 62,334] United States and Tom C. Clark, Attorney General, as successor to the Alien Property Custodian v. Rohm & Haas Company.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil No. 9068. Filed November 18, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Restrictive Practices in Acrylic and Plastics Industry—Acts enjoined.—A consent judgment entered in an action charging a domestic manufacturer of acrylic products with having participated in a world-wide cartel with its German subsidiary and two other foreign manufacturers of such products to divide sales territories and suppress competition in the manufacture and sale of plastics, cancels agreements among the manufacturers, directs the defendant to issue to any applicant a non-exclusive license under certain domestic patents, and immunity under foreign patents, and enjoins defendant: from instituting infringment suits based upon certain patents; from filing any suit against the Attorney General to recover any patent rights or assets vested in him as successor to the Alien Property Custodian; from conditioning the sale or distribution of any acrylic product to any person on such person's refraining from reselling or exporting for resale such product in competition with the foreign manufacturers at any place in the world; from entering into or maintaining any combination or agreement to refrain from competing in any market in the manufacture, sale, distribution, importation or exportation of any acrylic product, or to allocate markets, territories or customers, to establish terms and conditions to be imposed in licensing patents or in the sale of acrylic products, to fix prices to be charged or quoted by or to any other person, to restrict the production, distribution or sale of acrylic products, or to limit research in that field; from discriminating in price, terms or conditions of sale against purchasers on the basis of the use of such product or on the basis of the type of product manufactured, used or sold by such manufacturer; and from entering into any patent or general marketing arrangement with any of the foreign manufacturers without filing a copy thereof with the Attorney General. The defendant is also directed to make available certain products to dental companies on non-discriminatory terms, and to furnish technical assistance to licensees on request.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.70.

For plaintiffs: Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General, Sigmund Timberg, Special Assistant to the Attorney General; David L. Bazelon, Assistant Attorney General, Director, Office of Alien Property, Harold I. Baynton, Deputy Director, Office of Alien Property, Gerald A. Gleeson, United States Attorney, Manuel M. Gorman, Stanley E. Disney, Special Assistants to the Attorney General, Malcolm S. Mason, Chief, Legal Branch, Office of Alien Property, W. Perry Epes, Special Attorney, Walter T. Nolte, Chief Trial Attorney, Office of Alien Property.

For defendant: John F. Bergin.

Final Judgment

The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on November 18, 1948; the defendant, Rohm & Haas Company, having appeared and filed its answer to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; the plaintiff, Tom C. Clark, Attorney General, as successor to the Alien Property Custodian, having intervened and filed its complaint herein on November 18, 1948; the defendant, Rohm & Haas Company, having filed its answer to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; all parties hereto by their attorneys herein having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment herein without trial of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by the defendant in respect of any such issue;

NOW, THEREFORE, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of all parties hereto, it is hereby

ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED AS FOLLOWS:

[Jurisdiction]

I

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all the parties hereto; the complaint of the United States of America states a cause of action against the defendant under the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopoly;" and the complaint of the Attorney General states a cause of action against the defendant Rohm & Haas Company under Title 28, United States Code, Sections 1345, 2201 and 2202, and Section 17 of the Trading with the Enemy Act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat. 425; Title 50, Appendix, U. S. C., Section 17).

[Terms Defined]

II

As used in this judgment:

1. "Defendant" means Rohm & Haas Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware with offices and principal place of business at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and each of its officers, directors, agents, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and all persons acting or claiming to act under, through or for it; provided that, for purposes of this judgment, the Attorney General shall not, by reason of his or the Alien Property Custodian having vested some of the United States letters patent and applications for United States letters patent to which this judgment relates or for any other reason, be deemed to be a successor or assignee of Rohm & Haas Company.

2. "I. G. Farben" means I. G. Farbenindustrie Aktiengesellschaft, a corporation or association organized and existing under the laws of Germany with offices and principal place of business at Frankfurt am Main, Germany; provided that, for purposes of this judgment, the Attorney General shall not, by reason of his or the Alien Property Custodian having vested some of the United States letters patent and applications for United States letters patent to which this judgment relates or for any other reason, be deemed to be a successor or assignee of I. G. Farbenindustrie Aktiengesellschaft.

3. "Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt" means Rohm & Haas G.m.b.H., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Germany with offices and principal place of business at Darmstadt, Germany, provided that, for purposes of this judgment, the Attorney General shall not, by reason of his or the Alien Property Custodian having vested some of the United States letters patent and applications for United States letters patent to which this judgment relates or for any other reason, be deemed to be a successor or assignee of Rohm & Haas G.m.b.H.

4. "I. C. I." means Imperial Chemical Industries, Limited, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Great Britain and with offices and principal place of business at London, England.

5. "Acrylic products" means products consisting of monomeric or polymeric acrylic acid or methacrylic acid or a salt, ester, nitrile, or amide thereof including monomers or polymers of methyl methacrylate and any polymer, copolymer, or interpolymer made in whole or principal part therefrom, including, but not limited to, cast sheets, rods, tubes, finishes, molding powders, denture materials, laminated glass, adhesives, and synthetic rubber intermediates but as used in Section VIII does not include products intended for use as additives to petroleum products.

6. The term "person" as used in this judgment includes individuals, partnerships, associations, firms, corporations and other companies and for the purposes of this judgment persons associated directly or indirectly as subsidiaries, affiliates, partners or otherwise through a substantial common ownership other than through the Attorney General are to be considered the same person.

7. "Patent" or "patent application" shall include continuations, reissues, divisions and extensions of any such patent or patent application.

8. "I. G. Farben Agreements" means the written agreements, copies of which are attached hereto and made a part hereof, dated October 30, 1934, as amended on April 4, 1935 and on June 14, 1940, between I. G. Farben and the defendant.

9. "Darmstadt Agreements" means the written agreements, copies of which are attached hereto and made a part hereof, dated October 14, 1927 and dated January 30, 1935, as amended on July 5, 1939, between the defendant and Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt.

10. "I. C. I. Agreement" means a written agreement, dated October 30, 1936, between ICI and Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt.

11. "Agreement" or "Agreements" shall include all amendments, renewals and extensions of any of the agreements defined in subpargaraphs 8, 9, and 10 of Paragraph II hereof.

[Agreements Cancelled]

III

1. The I. G. Farben Agreements and the Darmstadt Agreements are hereby cancelled and the defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from the further performance of any of the provisions of the I. G. Farben Agreements or the Darmstadt Agreements, and from adopting or following any course of conduct for the purpose or with the effect of reviving or reinstating any of the provisions of said I. G. Farben or Darmstadt Agreements. This paragraph shall not be deemed to terminate any patent license or immunity, as a non-exclusive, royalty-free patent license or immunity, held by defendant on the date of this decree to manufacture, use or sell under any existing patent, application, process, or invention, nor to prevent defendant from enforcing or asserting such rights or immunities as it may possess for the use in its business of the trade names and tradmarks it has adopted.

2. The defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from carrying out, abiding by, adhering to or enforcing any of the provisions of the I. C. I. Agreement.

[Patent Licensing Required]

IV

The defendant is hereby ordered and directed to issue to any applicant making written request therefor a non-exclusive, non-assignable license in the form annexed hereto and marked Exhibit A under any one or more of the United States letters patent and patents issued under applications for United States letters patent, the patent numbers and application numbers of which are listed in Exhibit B, attached hereto and made a part thereof, [omitted herein] without any restriction or condition whatsoever, and without royalty or charge of any kind therefor to make, use and sell the inventions claimed by the patents and patent applications listed in said Exhibit B, for the lives of said patents.

[Immunity Under Foreign Patents]

The defendant is hereby ordered and directed to issue to any applicant making written request therefor, to the extent that the defendant has or acquires the power do so, and unrestricted and unconditional grant of immunity under foreign patents or applications for foreign patents corresponding to the United States letters patent and applications for United States letters patent listed in Exhibit B, attached hereto, [omitted herein] to import into, to use, or to sell and to have imported, sold or used in any country and product made in the United States.

[Acts Enjoined]

VI

The defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Instituting or threatening to institute or maintaining any suit or proceeding for patent infringement, or to collect royalties:

(1) Based upon any of the United States letters patent or applications for United States letters patent listed in Exhibits B, C, and D, attached hereto, or

(2) Based upon any foreign patent or application for a foreign patent corresponding to the United States letters patent or application for United States letters patent listed in Exhibits B, C, and D, attached hereto, on account of the importation, sale or use in any country of any product made in the United States.

(B) Filing, prosecuting, or threatening to file, prosecute, any suit, claim or proceeding against the Attorney General, his successors or assigns, for the purpose of

(1) claiming or recovering any right, title or interest in, to or under any United States letters patent or application for United States letters patent or application for United States letters patent listed in Exhibits C and D, or any interest therein or thereunder, or any of the proceeds therefrom derived from any source, except insofar as the defendant may have acquired non-exclusive rights thereunder by virtue of its undated agreement, entered into on or about October 26, 1934, with I. G. Farben, and its agreement of May 12, 1939 with I. G. Farben, copies of which are attached hereto and made a part hereof, and except insofar as non-exclusive, royalty-free patent license or immunity is preserved to the defendant by the provisions of the last sentence of Paragraph III, 1 of this judgment;

(2) recovering from the Attorney General or from any funds or assets now in the United States, its territories or possessions, vested by or in the custody of the Attorney General, any sums or damages, including royalties under patent licenses, on account of any claim or cause of action asserted by defendant against Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt, or against I. G. Farben under the Darmstadt Agreements and I. G. Farben Agreements, respectively.

(C) Reserving or undertaking to reserve for Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt, or I. G. Farben or any person or persons designated by Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt or I. G. Farben any right or immunity to use, or to control the use of, in any market or country, any trademark, trade name, or other designation adopted by the defendant for any acrylic product.

(D) Vesting in Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt or I. G. Farben control of any of the business or any business policy of the defendant.

(E) Claiming or asserting as exclusive any right or immunity relating to an acrylic product received from Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt or I. G. Farben prior to the date of the entry of this judgment under any patent or patent application or as to any process or invention.

(F) Conditioning in any way the sale or distribution or availability for sale or distribution of any acrylic product to or by any person, upon such person refraining from reselling or distributing or refraining from exporting for resale or distribution such product in competition with Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt, I. G. Farben or I. C. I. at any place in the world.

(G) Entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering directly or indirectly any combination, conspiracy, contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any person:

(1) To refrain from competing in any market or country in the manufacture, sale distribution, importation or exportation of any acrylic product, or to allocate markets, territories, or customers for the sale or distribution of any acrylic product;

(2) To establish, adopt or agree upon terms and conditions to be imposed, observed, or required in the licensing or granting of immunities to or by others under patents, patent applications, inventions or processes relating to any acrylic product, or in the sale or distribution by or to others of acrylic products;

(3) To fix, maintain or determine prices to be quoted or charged by or to, or impose upon, any other person for any acrylic product;

(4) To restrict, determine or limit the production, distribution or sale of acrylic products;

(5) To limit research in the field of acrylic products; provided, however, that the provisions of this subparagraph (G) shall not be deemed to prohibit defendant from appointing territorial distributors of its acrylic products.

(H) Discriminating in price, terms, or conditions of sale against purchasers or prospective purchasers of an acrylic product on the basis of the use of such product by such purchaser or on the basis of the type of product manufactured, used or sold by such purchasers.

(I) Entering into or adhering to, maintaining or furthering any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any distributor or purchaser to control the resale price or terms of resale of any acrylic products.

(J) Entering into any patent or general marketing arrangement, contract, or agreement relating to an acrylic product with

I. G. Farben, I. C. I. or Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt, or any of their successors, or affiliates, without filing within Thirty days after the execution thereof copies with the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division. The failure of the Attorney General of the United States or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division to take any action following receipt of any information pursuant to this Paragraph VI (J) shall not be construed as an approval of any action taken by the defendant and shall not operate as a bar to any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, which may later be instituted or then be pending.

[Products To Be Made Available]

VII

The defendant is hereby directed to make avaiable to dental companies on non-discriminatory prices, terms and conditions of sale unmixed powder and liquid methyl methacrylate as long as such a product is sold to any purchaser.

[Furnishing of Technical Information]

VIII

The defendant is hereby directed during the period ending three years after the date of the entry of this judgment to furnish for a reasonable charge to any licensee under any of the patents, or of the patents issued upon the patent applications, listed in Exhibits B, C, and D, who requests assistance in producing an acrylic product pursuant to such patent or patents, a written description of commercial practice under the patent known to the defendant on the date of the entry of this judgment. Where defendant is producing an acrylic product similar to one intended to be produced by the licensee, such description shall be sufficiently full to enable a person with technical competence to produce an acrylic product that is competitive with such similar acrylic product of the defendant.

[Inspection for Compliance Purposes]

IX

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on the written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, and on reasonable notice to the defendant, be permitted (1) access, during the office hours of said defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession of or under the control of said defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this judgment; (2) without restraint or interference from the defendant, to interview officers or employees of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters; and the defendant, on such request, shall submit such reports on applications for licenses and licensing under Paragraph IV of this judgment, or with respect to any relationship with Rohm & Haas, Darmstadt, I. C. I., or I. G. Farben, or on exports or sales for exports by the defendant, as may from time to time be reasonably necessary for the enforcement of this judgment; provided, however, that information obtained by the means permitted in this paragraph shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States of America is a party or as otherwise required by law.

[Juridiction Retained]

X

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, for the amendment, modification, or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[Patent Rights]

XI

(A) With the exception of any non-exclusive rights which defendant may have acquired with respect to United States Letters Patent Nos. 2,123,599, 2,140,048 and 2,086,506, by virtue of its undated agreement, entered into on or about October 26, 1934, with I. G. Farben, and its agreement of May 12, 1939, with I. G. Farben, copies of which are attached hereto and made a part thereof, and subject to the provisions of the last sentence of paragraph III 1, of this judgment, it is adjudged and decreed that all right, title and interest in and to the United States Letters Patent and application for United States Letters Patent listed in Exhibit C, is in the Attorney General.

(B) Subject to the provisions of subsection (C) of this paragraph XI, this judgment shall not be deemed to affect any right of the Attorney General or his successors and assigns with respect to his ownership of, or to issue licenses or immunities under, any patent, patent application, process, or invention now or hereafter vested in him, or to sell or otherwise dispose of any such patent, patent application, process, or invention, pursuant to the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended, and in accordance with his policy in the administration thereof, or the right of the Attorney General to royalties or payments accrued prior to the date of this judgment. Subject likewise to the provisions of subsection (C) of this paragraph XI, this judgment shall not be deemed to prohibit or restrict in any way the Attorney General or his successors or assigns for instituting or maintaining any suit or proceeding for patent infringement with respect to patents now or hereafter vested in him or from taking such action with respect to any vested patents, patent applications, process, or inventions as the national interest may require.

(C) A royalty-free, non-exclusive, unconditional and unrestricted license under any one or more of the United States Letters Patent, the patent numbers of which are listed in the aformentioned Exhibit C shall be granted by the Attorney General, his successors and assigns to any applicant making written request therefor; provided, that the department, agency or officer of the United States duly authorized to administer them may, upon a determination that the national interest so requires, withhold, and upon sale or other disposition of any such patents require any subsequent owner thereof to withhold, licenses thereunder from any corporation or other business organization organized under the laws of or having its principal place of business in Germany or Japan, or individuals who are subjects, citizens, or residents thereof, or any corporation, business organization, or individual acting for or on behalf of any such German or Japanese corporation, business or organization, or subject, citizen or resident of Germany or Japan or from any person who was or is named in "The Proclaimed List of Certain Blocked Nationals", or any similar list; and provided further, that any license issued by a duly authorized department, agency, or officer, of the United States may contain the terms and conditions set forth in the form annexed hereto and marked Exhibit E.

(D) A royalty-free, non-exclusive license but only for the field specified in Exhibit D under any one or more of the United States Letters Patent, the patent numbers of which are listed in the aforementioned Exhibit D, shall be granted by the Attorney General, his successors and assigns to any applicant making written request therefor; provided, that any license issued by a duly authorized department, agency, or officer of the United States may contain the terms and conditions set forth in the form annexed hereto and marked Exhibit F; and provided further, that in all other respects the provisions of subsection (C) shall be applicable to this subsection (D).

[¶ 62,335] United States v. Paramount Pictures, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Equity No. 87-273. November 8, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Divorcement of Motion Picture Distributor from Theatre Operating Affiliates.—A consent judgment entered against one of the major defendants in an antitrust suit charging the eight largest motion picture production and distribution companies with violations of the Sherman Act, which judgment is contingent upon approval by the stockholders of that defendant within 90 days of a plan of reorganization, requires the defendant to be reorganized into two new companies, one to hold its production and distribution assets, and the other to hold its theatres, the two new companies to be controlled and managed independently of each other. The defendant's theatre circuit is required to dispose of its interest in 241 theatres jointly owned with independent exhibitors within one year by a sale to independents, and must terminate similar ownerships in 30 additional theatres within a year, but may do so by a purchase of the independent's interest if such disposition is agreeable to the independent. The defendant's controlling stockholder agrees to dispose of his interest in one of the new companies not later than one year after the entry of the judgment.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.90, 1590.

For plaintiff: Herbert A. Bergson, Robert L. Wright, Sigmund Timberg, George H. Davis, Jr.

For defendants: William J. Donovan, Ralstone R. Irvine, Gordon E. Youngman; Roy W. McDonald, Donovan Leisure Newton Lumbard & Irvine, of counsel.

Consent Decree as to the RKO Defendants

The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its Amended and Supplemental Complaint in this action on November 14, 1940; the defendants, including Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation, and Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "RKO defendants"), having filed their Answers to such Complaint, denying the substantive allegations thereof; the Court after trial having entered a decree herein, dated December 31, 1946, as modified by order entered February 11, 1947; the plaintiff and the RKO defendants, among others, having appealed from such decree; the Supreme Court of the United States having in part affirmed and in part reversed such decree, and having remanded this cause to this Court for further proceedings in conformity with its opinion dated May 3, 1948; and this Court having, on June 25, 1948, by order made the mandate and decree of the Supreme Court the order and judgment of this Court; and

The RKO defendants having represented to the plaintiff and to this Court that they propose to put into effect within ninety days of the date hereof a plan of reorganization which will have as its object and effect the divorcement of RKO's production-distribution assets from RKO's theatre assets; that pursuant to such plan two new holding companies will be formed, one of which (hereafter called the New Picture Company) will own and control the subsidiaries of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation presently engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures, and the other of which (hereafter called the New Theatre Company) will own and control the subsidiaries of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation presently engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures; and that thereafter Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation will be dissolved and its stockholders will own all of the capital stock of the New Picture Company and of the New Theatre Company; and that on October 9, 1948, Howard R. Hughes was the owner of record of approximately 24 per cent of the common stock of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and that on such date no other person or corporation was the beneficial owner of record of as much as 1 per cent of such stock;

The RKO defendants having consented to the entry of this decree before the taking of any testimony upon the issues and matters open upon the remand of this cause, and without any findings of fact upon such issues and matters, and upon condition that neither such consent, nor this decree, nor the entry of this decree, nor any statement, provision or requirement contained in this decree, shall be or shall be construed as being an admission or adjudication or evidence that the allegations of the Petition or of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint, or any of them, are or is true in so far as they relate to the issues and matters so open, or that the RKO defendants, or any one or more of them, have or has violated or are or is violating any statute or law with respect to the issues and matters so open; and The United States of America by its counsel having consented to the entry of this decree and to each and every provision thereof; and the Court having considered the matter,

Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

[Complaint Dismissed as to RKO]

I.

The Complaint is dismissed as to all claims made against the RKO defendants based upon their acts as producers of motion pictures, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

[Acts Enjoined]

II.

A. The defendants, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., their officers, agents, servants and employees are each hereby enjoined:

1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means.

2. From agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances; the term "clearances" as used herein meaning the period of time stipulated in license contracts which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

3. From granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustained the legality thereof.

5. From further performing any existing franchise to which it is a party from making any franchises in the future, except for the purpose of enabling an independent exhibitor to operate a theatre in competition with a theatre affiliated with a defendant. The term "franchise" as used herein means a licensing agreement or series of licensing agreements, entered into as a part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of agreement.

6. From making or further performing any formula deal or master agreement to which it is a party. The term "formula deal" as used herein means a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. The term "master agreement" means a licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal," covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres usually comprising a circuit.

7. From performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. To the extent that any of the features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject twenty per cent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect the feature.

B. Upon the dissolution of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation in accordance with the plan of reorganization outlined in the recitals of this decree, and upon the New Picture Company succeeding to the production-distribution assets, the RKO defendants shall cause the New Picture Company to file with the Court its consent to be bound by the terms of sections II, IV, V, VII and VIII of this decree, and thereafter the New Picture Company shall be in all respects bound by the terms of such sections.

C. At any time after the entry of a final decree in this cause as to the defendants Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, or either of them, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and the New Picture Company, and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., or either, or the successor or successors of either, may file herein a written notice of election to be relieved from further compliance with this decree and to comply with the provisions of such decree against said defendants Universal Corporation or Columbia Pictures Corporation or either of them, as it shall elect; and thereupon an order or supplemental decree shall be entered on the application of such party or parties so electing, which shall subject such party or parties to the provisions of such other decree and entitle it or them to the benefits of any terms thereof, and relieve it or them from further compliance with the provisions of this section of this decree. The New Picture Company further agrees that this decree may be amended at any time after the entry of such other decree to include such new provisions against film licensing discriminations as may be included in such other decree.

III.

A. The defendants Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, and RKO Midwest Corporation (herein referred to as "the RKO exhibitor-defendants"), their officers, agents, servants and employees are each hereby enjoined:

1. From performing or enforcing agreements referred to in paragraphs A-5 and A-6 of the foregoing section II hereof to which it may be a party.

2. From making or continuing to perform pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors normally in competition are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to prearranged percentages.

3. From making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in a competitive area where a pool operates without first offering them for inclusion in the pool.

4. From making or continuing leases of theatres under which it leases any of its theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the same competitive area in return for a share of the profits.

5. From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or shares of stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant. The existing relationships which violate this provision shall be terminated by December 31, 1948. In dissolving such relationships one defendant may acquire the interest of another defendant if such defendant desiring to acquire such interest shall show to the satisfaction of the court, and the court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures.

6. (a) From acquiring a beneficial interest in any theatre, other than those named in paragraph 9 hereof, unless the acquiring defendant shall show to the satisfaction of the court, and the court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures.

(b) At any time after the entry of a final decree in this cause in which Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Incorporated, Warner Bros. Pictures, Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, or National Theatres, Inc., or either of them, are bound by any provisions relating to the acquisition of beneficial interests in theatres other than acquisition in conjunction with other exhibitors, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation and the New Theatre Company, or any of them, or their successor or successors, may file herein a written notice of election to be relieved from further compliance with subparagraph (a) of this paragraph 6 and to comply with such provisions; and thereupon an order or supplemental decree shall be entered on the application of such party or parties so electing, which shall subject such party or parties to the provisions of such other decree relating to the acquisition of beneficial interests in theatres, and entitle it or them to the benefits of any terms thereof, and relieve it or them from further compliance with the terms of subparagraph (a) of this paragraph of this decree.

7. From operating, booking, or buying features for any of its theatres through any agent who is known by it to be also acting in such manner for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliate.

8. From making or enforcing any agreement which restricts the right of any other exhibitor to acquire a motion picture theatre.

9. From acquiring or continuing to own in conjunction with any actual or potential independent exhibitor any beneficial interest in motion picture theatres. The theatres in which such ownership now exist are the following:

Theatre	Location
Academy	New York, New York
Ace	Ozone Park, New York
Alba	Brooklyn, New York
Albany	New Brunswick, New Jersey
Alden	Jamaica, New York
Alhambra	Brooklyn, New York
Ambassador	Brooklyn, New York
Appollo	Jersey City, New Jersey
Astoria	Queens, New York
Bay	Bay City, Michigan
Bayside	Bayside, New York

Theatre	Location
Benson	Brooklyn, New York
Beverly	Brooklyn, New York
Big Rapids	Big Rapids, Michigan
Bijou	Battle Creek, Michigan
Biltmore	Brooklyn, New York
Boulevard	Jackson Heights, New York
Broad	Trenton, New Jersey
Broadway	Astoria, Queens, New York
Broadway	Haverstraw, New York
Broadway	Nyack, New York
Bronxville	Bronxville, New York
Brook	Bound Brook, New Jersey
Brunswick	Trenton, New Jersey
Caldwell	St. Joseph, Michigan
Cameo	Ossining, New York
Capitol	Brooklyn, New York
Capitol	Flint, Michigan
Capitol	Jackson, Michigan
Capitol	Jersey City, New Jersey
Capitol	Kalamazoo, Michigan
Capitol	Lansing, Michigan
Capitol	Owosso, Michigan
Capitol	Portchester, New York
Capitol	Trenton, New Jersey
Carroll	Brooklyn, New York
Casino	Ozone Park, New York
Castle Hill	Bronx, New York
Center	Bay City, Michigan
Center	Cadillac, Michigan
Center	Grand Rapids, Michigan
Center	Holland, Michigan
Center	Ionia, Michigan
Center	Ludington, Michigan
Center	Owosso, Michigan
Center	Saginaw, Michigan
Center	Willow Run, Michigan
Centre	South Haven, Michigan
Claridge	Brooklyn, New York
Clinton	Brooklyn, New York
Colonial	Brooklyn, New York
Colonial	Holland, Michigan
Colony	Brooklyn, New York
Commodore	Brooklyn, New York
Congress	Brooklyn, New York
Corona	Corona, New York
Cove	Glen Cove, New York
Crescent	Astoria, Queens, New York
Cross Bay	Ozone Park, New York
Crosswell	Adrian, Michigan
Crotona	Bronx, New York
Culver	Brooklyn, New York
Dawn	Hillsdale, Michigan
Della	Flint, Michigan
Desmond	Port Huron, Michigan
Duffield	Brooklyn, New York
Dumont	Dumont, New Jersey
Eagle	Pontiac, Michigan
Eastern Parkway	Brooklyn, New York
Eastown	Grand Rapids, Michigan

Theatre	Location
Elm	Brooklyn, New York
Embassy	Brooklyn, New York
Embassy	Portchester, New York
Englewood	Englewood, New Jersey
Family	Adrian, Michigan
Family	Monroe, Michigan
Family	Port Huron, Michigan
Folly	Brooklyn, New York
Forest Hills	Forest Hills, New York
Four Star	Grand Rapids, Michigan
Franklin	Saginaw, Michigan
Fuller	Kalamazoo, Michigan
Fulton	Jersey City, New Jersey
Garden	Flint, Michigan
Garden	Ozone Park, New York
Gem	Brooklyn, New York
Gibson	Greenville, Michigan
Gladmer	Lansing, Michigan
Glen	Glen Cove, New York
Glenwood	Brooklyn, New York
Granada	Corona, New York
Grand	Astoria, Queens, New York
Grand	Chicago, Illinois
Grand	Grand Haven, Michigan
Hackensack	Hackensack, New Jersey
Halsey	Brooklyn, New York
Hamilton	Hamilton Township, New Jersey
Hempstead	Hempstead, New York
Highway	Brooklyn, New York
Hill	Hillsdale, Michigan
Hillstreet	Los Angeles, California
Holland	Holland, Michigan
Interboro	Bronx, New York
Ionia	Ionia, Michigan
Jackson	Jackson Heights, New York
Jamaica	Jamaica, New York
Jerome	Ozone Park, New York
Keith-Albee	Huntington, West Virginia
Kent	Grand Rapids, Michigan
Kew Gardens	Kew Gardens, New York
Kinema	Brooklyn, New York
Lafayette	Suffern, New York
Lake	Benton Harbor, Michigan
Lansing	Lansing, Michigan
Lefferts	Richmond Hill, New York
Liberty	Benton Harbor, Michigan
Liberty	Elizabeth, New Jersey
Lincoln	Kearny, New Jersey
Lincoln	Trenton, New Jersey
Lynbrook	Lynbrook, New York
Lyric	Alpena, Michigan
Lyric	Cadillac, Michigan
Lyric	Ludington, Michigan
Lyric	Manistee, Michigan
Lyric	Traverse City, Michigan

Theatre	Location
Majestic	Columbus, Ohio
Majestic	Grand Rapids, Michigan
Majestic	Jackson, Michigan
Majestic	Jersey City, New Jersey
Majestic	Port Huron, Michigan
Maltz	Alpena, Michigan
Manhasset	Manhasset, New York
Marble Hill	Bronx, New York
Marboro	Brooklyn, New York
Marcy	Brooklyn, New York
Martha Washington	Ypsilanti, Michigan
Maspeth	Maspeth, New York
Mecca	Saginaw, Michigan
Meserole	Brooklyn, New York
Michigan	Ann Arbor, Michigan
Michigan	Battle Creek, Michigan
Michigan	Jackson, Michigan
Michigan	Kalamazoo, Michigan
Michigan	Lansing, Michigan
Michigan	Muskegon, Michigan
Michigan	Saginaw, Michigan
Michigan	South Haven, Michigan
Michigan	Traverse, Michigan
Midway	Forest Hills, New York
Model	South Haven, Michigan
Monroe	Monroe, Michigan
Monticello	Jersey City, New Jersey
Nemo	New York, New York
Northtown	Lansing, Michigan
Oakland	Pontiac, Michigan
Oasis	Ridgewood, New York
Ogden	Bronx, New York
Orpheum	Ann Arbor, Michigan
Orpheum	Huntington, West Virginia
Orpheum	Kalamazoo, Michigan
Orpheum	Pontiac, Michigan
Our	Grand Rapids, Michigan
Palace	Bergenfield, New Jersey
Palace	Flint, Michigan
Palace	Trenton, New Jersey
Pantages	Hollywood, California
Parkhill	New York, New York
Park Plaza	Bronx, New York
Parthenon	Brooklyn, New York
Pascack	Westwood, New Jersey
Pelham	Bronx, New York
Pilgrim	Bronx, New York
Playhouse	Great Neck, New York
Plaza	Englewood, New Jersey
Post	Battle Creek, Michigan
Rainbow	Brooklyn, New York
Ramsdell	Manistee, Michigan
Reade	Highland Park, New Jersey
Reade's Trent	Trenton, New Jersey
Ready	Niles, Michigan
Regent	Allegan, Michigan
Regent	Battle Creek, Michigan
Regent	Bay City, Michigan
Regent	Flint, Michigan
Regent	Jackson, Michigan
Regent	Kearny, New Jersey
Regent	Muskegon, Michigan
Republic	Brooklyn, New York
Rex	East Rutherford, New Jersey
Rex	Jackson, Michigan
Rialto	Jersey City, New Jersey
Rialto	Pontiac, Michigan
Rialto	Three Rivers, Michigan
Ridgewood	Brooklyn, New York
Rivera	Brooklyn, New York
Riverside	New York, New York
Riviera	New York, New York
Riviera	Niles, Michigan
Riviera	Three Rivers, Michigan
Rivoli	Hempstead, New York
Rivoli	New Brunswick, New Jersey
Rivoli	Rutherford, New Jersey
RKO Proctor's	Newark, New Jersey
Robinhood	Grand Haven, Michigan
Rockland	Nyack, New York
Roosevelt	Flushing, New York
Roosevelt	Woodhaven, New York
Roxy	Flint, Michigan
Roxy	Sturgis, Michigan
Royal	Grand Rapids, Michigan
Savoy	Brooklyn, New York
Scarsdale	Scarsdale, New York
Senate	Brooklyn, New York
Silver	Greenville, Michigan
Southtown	Lansing, Michigan
Square	Bronx, New York
Squire	Great Neck, New York
Stadium	Brooklyn, New York
State	Ann Arbor, Michigan
State	East Lansing, Michigan
State	Flint, Michigan
State	Huntington, West Virginia
State	Jersey City, New Jersey
State	Kalamazoo, Michigan
State	Muskegon, Michigan
State	New Brunswick, New Jersey
State	Pontiac, Michigan
State	Trenton, New Jersey
Steinway	Astoria, Queens, New York
Stoddard	New York, New York
Stone	Brooklyn, New York
Strand	Battle Creek, Michigan
Strand	Flint, Michigan
Strand	Jersey City, New Jersey
Strand	Niles, Michigan
Strand	Owosso, Michigan
Strand	Pontiac, Michigan
Strand	Rockville Center, New York
Strand	Saginaw, Michigan
Strand	Sturgis, Michigan
Sunnyside	Woodside, New York
Supreme	Brooklyn, New York
Surf	Brooklyn, New York

Theatre	Location
Teaneck	Teaneck, New Jersey
Temple	Saginaw, Michigan
Times	Cincinnati, Ohio
Tipton	Huntington, West Virginia
Tivoli	Jersey City, New Jersey
Trabay	Traverse, Michigan
Triboro	Astoria, Queens, New York
Tuxedo	Bronx, New York
Uptown	Kalamazoo, Michigan
Utica	Brooklyn, New York
Valentine	Bronx, New York
Valley Stream	Valley Stream, New York
Victoria	Ossining, New York
Victory	Bayside West, New York
Vogue	Manistee, Michigan
Waldorf	Brooklyn, New York
Walker	Brooklyn, New York
Ward	Bronx, New York
Wealthy	Grand Rapids, Michigan
Westown	Bay City, Michigan
Westwood	Westwood, New Jersey
Whitney	Ann Arbor, Michigan
Wilson	Brooklyn, New York
Wolverine	Saginaw, Michigan
Wuerth	Ann Arbor, Michigan
Wuerth	Ypsilanti, Michigan
43rd Street	Long Island City, New York
77th Street	New York, New York

The existing joint ownership in the above enumerated theatres shall be terminated within one year from the date hereof in accordance with the following provisions:

(a) As to not to exceed thirty theatres from the above list, the RKO exhibitor-defendants or the New Theatre Company may elect to terminate such ownership either by acquiring the interest of the co-owner or co-owners therein, or by sale of the interest of RKO therein in accordance with paragraph (b) hereof. Such thirty theatres may include the Alden Theatre, Jamaica, N. Y.; the Midway Theatre, Forest Hills, N. Y.; and two of the following theatres: Castle Hill, Marble Hill, and Pelham Theatres, Bronx, New York. Except for such four theatres, none of such thirty theatres shall be located in New York City. In the event that the existing joint interest in the RKO Proctor's Theatre at Newark, N. J., is not terminated within one year in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph, such joint interest may continue, provided that one of the joint owners shall have the sole management of the theatre and the other shall exercise no control of any kind over the theatre, except to receive fixed payments during the balance of the agreements, which shall not be determined by the net earnings of the theatre.

(b) As to the remainder of the theatres above listed, including all other of such listed theatres located in New York City, the RKO exhibitor-defendants shall terminate such relation by a sale or other disposition of the interest of RKO therein, which may be either (i) to a co-owner or co-owners; or (ii) to a party not a defendant and not owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant in this cause.

B. In the event that the RKO exhibitor-defendants shall, pursuant to the provisions of section III-A-9(a), acquire the interest of their co-owners in all the theatres now owned, leased, or operated by Trenton-New Brunswick Theatres Company in Trenton, New Jersey, the RKO exhibitor-defendants shall dispose of all of their interest in one first-run theatre in Trenton. The RKO exhibitor-defendants shall effect such disposition within one year from the date of their acquisition of such theatres, and shall effectuate this provision by a sale to a party not a defendant herein or owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein.

C. Within one year of the date hereof, the RKO exhibitor-defendants shall dispose of all their interest in two of the theatres now operated by them on first-run in the central business district of Cincinnati, Ohio. The RKO exhibitor-defendants shall effectuate this provision by a sale to a party not a defendant herein or owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein.

D. For the purpose of any application or applications for approval of any proposed acquisition, the plaintiff and the RKO exhibitor-defendants hereby waive the necessity of convening a court of three judges pursuant to the expediting certificate filed herein on June 13, 1945; and agree that any application, after reasonable notice of hearing has been given to the Attorney General, may be determined by any judge of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

E. Upon the dissolution of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation pursuant to the plan of reorganization outlined in the recitals of this decree, and upon the New Theatre Company succeeding to the theatre assets, the RKO defendants shall cause the New Theatre Company to file with the Court its consent to be bound by sections III, IV, V, VII and VIII of this decree, and thereupon the New Theatre Company shall become and thereafter be in all respects bound by the terms of such sections of this decree.

IV.

Commencing one year after the entry of this decree the New Theatre Company and the New Picture Company shall be operated wholly independently of one another and shall have no common directors, officers, agents, or employees. Each of them shall thereafter be enjoined from attempting to control or influence the business or operating policies of the other by any means whatsoever.

V.

Howard R. Hughes represents that he now owns approximately 24 percent of the common stock of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation. Within a period of one year from the date hereof, Howard R. Hughes shall either:

A. Dispose of his holdings of the stock of (1) the New Picture Company, or (2) the New Theatre Company, as he may elect, to a purchaser or purchasers who is or are not a defendant herein or owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant in this cause; or

B. Deposit with a trustee designated by the court all of his shares of the New Picture Company or the New Theatre Company, as he may elect, under a voting trust agreement whereby the trustee shall possess and be entitled to exercise all the voting rights of such shares, including the right to execute proxies and consents with respect thereto. Such voting trust agreement shall thereafter remain in force until Howard R. Hughes shall have sold his holdings of stock of the New Picture Company or the New Theatre Company to a purchaser or purchasers who is or are not a defendant herein or owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein, and upon such sale and transfer such voting trust agreement shall automatically terminate. Such trust shall be upon such other terms or conditions, including compensation to the trustee, as shall be prescribed by the Court. During the period of such voting trust, Howard R. Hughes shall be entitled to receive all dividends and other distributions made on account of the trusteed shares, and proceeds from the sale thereof.

For the purpose of evidencing his consent to be bound by the terms of section V of this decree, Howard R. Hughes individually has consented to its entry and it shall be binding upon his agents and employees.

VI.

A. Nothing contained in this decree shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., during the period required for the completion of the reorganization of the RKO defendants, which shall in any event occur within one year of the entry of this judgment, to license or in any way to provide for the exhibition of any or all of the motion pictures which it may distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this decree a proprietary interest of ninety-five percent or more either directly or through subsidiaries.

B. From and after the effective date of the reorganization of the RKO defendants, the provisions of the preceding paragraph shall terminate and be of no effect; and from and after such date all licenses of motion pictures distributed by the New Picture Company or RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. for exhibition in any theatre, regardless of its owner or operator, shall be in all respects subject to the terms of this decree.

VII.

A. For the purpose of securing compliance with this decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this decree, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant company may be present. For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment any defendant upon the written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, shall submit such reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this decree as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this decree.

B. Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

VIII.

[Contingent Upon Approval]

A. This decree is rendered and entered in lieu of and in substitution for the decree of this court dated December 31, 1946. This decree shall be of no further force and effect and this cause shall be restored to the docket without prejudice to either party if the proposed reorganization of the RKO defendants shall not have been approved by the stockholders of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation within 90 days from the entry of this decree.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

B. Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this consent decree to apply to the Court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, modification or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

[¶ 62,336] United States v. District Court for the Southern District of New York.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Docket No. 19396. December 1, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Petition for Writ of Mandamus—Deletion of Clause Reserving Jurisdiction, Dismissal of Petition Denied.—An action brought by the government to terminate an alleged monopoly in the manufacture and sale of aluminum was dismissed by the District Court; on appeal to the Supreme Court, that body disqualified itself, and certified the question to a special court of three circuit judges, which reversed and remanded the case. A petition by plaintiff for a writ of mandamus directing the district judge to execute the mandate of the special court to vacate so much of its judgment on the mandate as reserves jurisdiction to enable the defendant to apply for a determination whether it still has a monopoly was denied by the special court, which held that its jurisdiction had expired. The Supreme Court reversed this ruling, and on remand for decision of the petition on the merits it is held that the clause which gives leave to defendant to seek a determination of the question as to whether it still has a monopoly is not equivalent to making that issue determine the question of dissolution; that the continuance of the monopoly in ingot aluminum may in the Court's judgment be enough to justify dissolution, but its absence will forbid neither dissolution nor any other remedy. The prayer to vacate the clause is denied. The prayer to dismiss defendant's petition filed in accordance with the mandate is denied. The Court recognizes no principle that a defendant may not bring on any proceeding in an action for determination, when the plaintiff unreasonably delays doing so.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1610.612, and prior opinions reported in 1946-1947 Trade Cases, ¶ 57,642, and at ¶ 62,256.

For plaintiff: Leonard J. Emmerglick.

For defendant: William Watson Smith.

Before L. Hand, Swan and A. N. Hand, Circuit Judges.

On petition for a writ of mandamus (1) to direct the district court to vacate a clause of Article XII of the judgment of the district court in the United States v. Aluminum Company of America, et al., entered on April 23d, 1946, which reserved jurisdiction in that court to decide whether the defendant still retained a monopoly of the ingot market; and (2) to direct the court to dismiss the defendant's petition filed on March 31st, 1947, under the same clause.

[Nature of Action]

PER CURIAM: We dismissed the plaintiff's petition on October 28th, 1947, because we thought that it was properly a part of a second possible appeal in the action, over which we should have no jurisdiction.* The Supreme Court granted certiorari, and reversed our order, holding that, regardless of whether it would have jurisdiction over a second appeal—a question as to which it reserved judgment—the petition raised only the question whether the district court had acted in accordance with our mandate; and that this was not so inextricably enmeshed in a second appeal that we should not decide it, even though we shall not have jurisdiction over a second appeal itself. It remitted the case without any expression of opinion, for us to decide the petition on the merits.

[Deletion of Clause]

The prayer for relief is twofold: (1) that we direct the district court to strike out from Article XII of the judgment a clause, which gives leave to "Alcoa" to apply to the district court "for a determination of the question whether it still has a monopoly of the aluminum ingot market in the United States"; and (2) that we direct the court to dismiss "Alcoa's" petition, filed in accordance with the leave so granted. The purport of the article as a whole may be compressed as follows: after the Surplus Property Administrator shall have propounded an overall plan for the disposal of government owned aluminum plants, the Attorney General may ask the district court (1) to dissolve "Alcoa" in whole or in part; (2) to enforce the plan, "if the same shall establish competitive conditions" in the industry; (3) for such other relief as will "establish" such conditions, if the plan does not; and, on its part "Alcoa" may ask the court to decide "whether it still has a monopoly of the aluminum ingot market." The plaintiff's position, as we understand it, is that the clause which gives leave to "Alcoa" to ask the court to decide whether it still has a monopoly, is equivalent to making that issue determine the question of dissolution. We do not so interpret it; it must be read in harmony with the leave given to the Attorney General which we have just quoted, and, when it is so read, the article as a whole conforms with our mandate, in which we tried to make it plain that the final judgment must secure the establishment of those "competitive conditions" which the Anti-Trust Acts demand. Dissolution is one remedy which may be necessary to that end; and in any event it will not depend upon the single issue whether "Alcoa" at the time of the judgment shall have a monopoly of the ingot market. On the contrary, it will depend upon what is "Alcoa's" position in the industry at that time: i. e., whether it must be divided into competing units in order to conform with the law. The continuance of the monopoly in ingot aluminum may in the court's judgment be enough to justify dissolution; but its absence will forbid neither dissolution, nor any other remedy. We, therefore, deny the prayer for the deletion of the challenged clause in Article XII.

[Dismissal of Petition]

We also deny the prayer to direct a dismissal of "Alcoa's" petition. The plaintiff apparently wishes the initiative to rest in its hands alone; but we know of no principle, either at law or in equity, that a defendant may not bring on an action or any proceeding in an action, for determination, when the plaintiff unreasonably delays doing so. If it be the plaintiff's understanding that it stands in this respect upon a footing different from that of a private suitor, we cannot agree. Only by virtue of the challenged passage in Article XII does "Alcoa" retain any power to stir the plaintiff to action; and it was within its rights to avail itself of that power as it did. Now that the Attorney General has also made use of the leave given him to move under Article XII, there is no reason why the court should not proceed to decide the two petitions together.

[Petition Denied]

The petition is denied.

---

* 164 Fed. (2) 159.

 334 U. S. 258.

[¶ 62,337] Suckow Borax Mines Consolidated, Inc.; Mojave Borax Company, Ltd.; Paul O. Tobeler, Executor of the Last Will and Testament of John K. Suckow, deceased; and Ruth E. Suckow v. Borax Consolidated, Ltd.; Pacific Coast Borax Company; United States Borax Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division. No. 27646-R. November 22, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Antitrust Act

Treble Damage Suit—Failure to State Cause of Action—Statute of Limitations.— An action at law based upon a continuing conspiracy, which originated in 1929, to violate the antitrust laws, with overt acts shown only for the purpose of demonstrating such conspiracy, is barred by the California statute of limitations. The only cause of action available to private parties under the antitrust laws is that for damage suffered, not the mere existence of a conspiracy in violation of such statutes. In order to obtain treble damages for an alleged conspiracy and combination in restraint of trade, the complaint must affirmatively show injuries to plaintiff's business or property and it is insufficient merely to allege violations of the antitrust laws and to claim damages resulting therefrom. The instant case fails affirmatively to allege any injuries suffered by reason of the defendants' alleged violation of the antitrust laws. Defendants' motion to dismiss the action is granted.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.435, and the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2024.19.

For plaintiffs: Thurman W. Arnold, Washington, D. C.; Sterling Carr, San Francisco, California.

For defendants: Ray J. Coleman, Coleman & McDonald, Los Angeles, California; Maurice E. Harrison, Moses Lasky and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, San Francisco, California; Vincent H. O'Donnell, San Francisco, California; John L. Reith, Oakland, California; Oliver & Donnally, Fulton, Walter & Halley, New York, New York; Charles A. Beardsley, Oakland, California.

Memorandum Opinion

[Nature of Action]

ROCHE, D. J.: Plaintiffs bring this treble damage action under the Federal Anti-Trust Laws, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15 and 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1 and 2, to recover $15,000,000.00 for damages alleged to have been sustained by them as a result of a general conspiracy on the part of the defendants, unlawfully and in violation of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, to monopolize and restrain trade in the borax industry.

[Allegations]

Plaintiffs allege that this said conspiracy came into existence in 1929 and continued in force up to and through the date of the commencement of this action, September 11, 1947. Plaintiffs complain that this conspiracy was a fraud upon them which resulted in the destruction of their businesses and that they, the plaintiffs, only acquired knowledge of the existence of such conspiracy in 1944 as a result of an action brought at that date by the United States against certain of the defendants for alleged violations of the Federal Anti-Trust Laws.

The complaint further alleges that certain overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy took place from 1913 to 1942, with the following results.

In 1913, John K. Suckow, whose estate is a party plaintiff, sold to the defendant United States Borax Company (hereafter referred to as U. S. B. C.), for $4,500.00, all of his interest in a certain piece of California property containing a deposit of colemanite, which is a source of borax. In 1917, John K. Suckow (hereafter referred to as Suckow) sold a 75% interest in a similar piece of property to defendant Stauffer Chemical Company for the sum of $60,000.00 and in consideration of the holding by him of the position of manager in the operating company that was to work the mineral deposit. In 1918, Suckow, the Stauffer Chemical Company and defendant Pacific Coast Borax Company (hereafter referred to as P. C. B. C.) entered into an agreement creating the Suckow Chemical Company, with Suckow controlling the company and owning certain shares of its stock. Plaintiffs allege that Suckow was prevented from ever carrying on or operating the Suckow Chemical Company as had been contemplated and that for this reason, Suckow, in 1925, sold all of his stock in the Suckow Chemical Company to defendant P. C. B. C. for $150,000.00 Suckow paid $10,000.00 as commission for such sale to one Victor C. Emden, in ignorance of the alleged fact that Emden was acting as agent for P. C. B. C. at the time of the sale.

In 1918, an agreement was entered into between Suckow and U. S. B. C. providing that each should have a full one half interest in certain mining locations (for which claims had been filed by Suckow in 1916) to which patents were to be acquired by U. S. B. C. (whose interest was derived from a third party who had made adverse claims to certain of the locations in 1917). This agreement of 1918 was performed in part, but subsequent events led to the declaration by each that the other was failing to perform according to the agreement. This led to an action which was instituted by the Borax Consolidated, Ltd. (hereafter referred to as B. C. L.) in 1927 in the Superior Courts of California, whereby an injunction was sought against mining operations by Suckow on certain of the property involved in the 1918 agreement, an accounting by Suckow to the plaintiff B. C. L. and a determination of the rights of B. C. L. This action was dismissed by B. C. L. in 1930. In 1929 Suckow brought action against U. S. B. C. and certain of the other defendants herein to compel the transfer to him of an interest in certain mining properties according to the 1918 agreement. This action ended in a consent judgment being entered according to an agreement of 1934 as hereafter described.

In 1929 the Suckow Borax Mines Consolidated, Inc. was created and John K. Suckow transferred all of his mining properties to such company (hereafter referred to as the Suckow Company).

In 1930 B. C. L. brought an action in the United States District Court, seeking an injunction restraining the Suckow Company from further mining operations, damages and an accounting from the Suckow Company. The injunction was denied but the plaintiffs allege that the Suckow Company was forced to cease its mining operations because of the allegedly exorbitant value placed upon the ore as a result of the trial upon this action in 1932. In 1931 P. C. B. C. and others of the defendants caused an involuntary petition in bankruptcy to be filed against the Suckow Company, causing the Suckow Company to be duly adjudged a bankrupt in 1933, with a trustee appointed to manage it. The Suckow Company made an appeal to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, but dismissed such appeal as a part of the agreement of 1934. In 1934, P. C. B. C. secured a lease of the mining properties of the bankrupt company for a period of five years. Plaintiffs then proceeded upon further litigation to contest this lease. In 1932, P. C. B. C. brought a patent infringement action against the Suckow Company and an injunction was issued by the U. S. District Court restraining the Suckow Company from using a particular method for calcining borax. An appeal was likewise taken from this order.

In 1934, an agreement was entered into between the plaintiffs and P. C. B. C. providing for the transfer of certain parcels of real property to P. C. B. C., the payment of $150,000.00 to Suckow, the release of all possible claims against any of the defendants, the mutual dismissal of all legal actions by each of the parties against any of the others and the granting of another lease from the trustee of the bankrupt company's property. In 1938, the bankruptcy proceedings were terminated and the property restored to the Suckow Company, subject to the terms of the lease mentioned. In 1942, the plaintiffs sold to the defendants all of the mining property that had been involved in the prior transactions, receiving therefor the sum of $350.000.00.

The plaintiffs further allege that the defendants caused a destruction of some of their mining properties during the period defendants were in possession under the lease and that the defendants also caused the destruction of the business possessed by the plaintiffs with certain European companies, which offered the only outlet for plaintiff's product.

Plaintiffs claim that all of these events were caused or entered into by them only because of harassments, persecutions and threats on the part of the defendants and that plaintiffs were unaware of the general conspiracy among the defendants to monopolize the borax industry.

[Plaintiffs' Contentions]

It is plaintiffs' position that this action is brought upon the existence of the general conspiracy and the damages suffered therefrom. The above described affairs are presented by plaintiffs not as the basis of the cause of action for damages, but as evidence of overt acts on the part of the defendants for the purpose of proving the existence of such conspiracy.

To summarize, plaintiffs present their case according to the following points. This is an action in equity upon the continuing conspiracy, which originated in 1929, with overt acts shown only for the purpose of demonstrating such conspiracy. The statutes of limitation are not controlling, since this is not an action at law, but if they were controlling, they would be tolled by reason of a Federal moratorium statute running from 1942 to 1946. In addition, an action by the United States under the Anti-Trust Laws against certain of the defendants, commenced in 1944 and terminating in 1945, suspended any statutes of limitations for that period by reason of the provisions of 15 U. S. C. A. 16. Fraud on the part of the defendants in denying their violations of the Anti-Trust Laws prevents, under the applicable California law, the statute of limitations from beginning to operate until discovery by the plaintiffs of their cause of action.

[Defendants' Arguments]

Defendants answer with the following arguments. This is a legal action to which the statutes of limitation are applicable. The only cause of action available to private parties under the Anti-Trust Laws is that for damages suffered, not the mere existence of a conspiracy in violation of such statutes. The California statute of limitations has run on all of plaintiffs' possible causes of action as established by the pleadings, except for any injuries or damages that might have been suffered in 1942. The statute has not been tolled by reason of fraud on the part of the defendants, since a denial of a violation of law does not constitute fraud. The Federal moratorium statute is not applicable to suits by private parties. There is a failure on the part of the plaintiffs to state a cause of action for any damages alleged to have been suffered in 1942. There were releases made by the plaintiffs of all existing or possible causes of action in agreements contracted by them with the defendants. The defendants move to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, to dismiss because the action is barred by the statute of limitations and for a summary judgment.

[Issues]

The questions immediately presented are: (1) is this an action at law or an action in equity; (2) if this be an action at law, does the California statute of limitations bar any of the plaintiffs' possible causes of action; and (3) is there any cause of action pleaded by the plaintiffs upon which relief may be granted?

[Ruling]

This is an action at law, Burnham Chemical Company v. Borax Consolidated, Ltd., et al. (C. C. A. 9), — F. (2d) —, decided October 27, 1948; Meeker v. Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., 162 F. 354; Hartford-Empire Co. v. Glenshaw Glass Co., 3 F. R. D. 50; and not a suit in equity, Fleitman v. Welsbach Street Lighting Co., 240 U. S. 27; Burnham Chemical Company v. Borax Consolidated, Ltd., supra; Meyer v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 84 F. (2d) 411; to which the state statute of limitations applies. Chattanooga Foundry etc. v. Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390; Barnes Coal Corp. v. Retail Coal Merchants Assn., 128 F. (2d) 645; Foster & Kleiser Co. v. Special Site Sign Co., 85 F. (2d) 742, cert. den. 299 U. S. 390; Momand v. Paramount Pictures Distributing Co., 36 F. Supp. 568.

California Civil Code § 338, subd. 1, provides a three years statute of limitations for liabilities created by statute other than for a penalty or forfeiture.

The cause of action in a suit brought under 15 U. S. C. A. § 15 is for injuries suffered as a result of a conspiracy in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws and not the existence of the conspiracy itself. Burnham Chemical Company v. Borax Consolidated, Ltd., supra; Foster & Kleiser Co. v. Special Site Sign Co., supra. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has expressed the law in Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., 72 F. (2d) 885, at page 887:

> "In a civil suit under this section, the gist of the action is not merely the unlawful conspiracy or monopolization . . . , but is damage to the individual plaintiff resulting proximately from the acts of the defendant which constitute a violation of the law. A mere conspiracy with intent to violate the law while it may be the basis of a valid indictment under the criminal sanction of the Anti-Trust Act, does not give rise to a personal civil suit for damages."

All of the cases cited by the plaintiffs as upholding their contention that the existence of a conspiracy is in itself sufficient basis for a cause of action are cases of criminal prosecution by the government. A private action for damages is not an action for the common good, Shurtz v. Foster & Kleiser Co., 29 F. Supp. 162; and the fact that a criminal action may be instituted by the government by reason of the existence of a conspiracy to violate the Anti-Trust Laws does not add to the right given to private individuals to sue for damages caused by such a conspiracy. Burnham Chemical Company v. Borax Consolidated, Ltd., supra.

The statute of limitations in California runs from the date when the injury was inflicted and the damage was suffered. Rose v. Dunk-Harrison Co., 7 Cal. App. (2d) 502; Lathing v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317. While the existence of fraud may create an exception to this rule, Pashley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 25 Cal. (2d) 226; such fraud needs, as appears from the cases cited by the plaintiffs themselves, to be a positive concealment of the facts giving rise to the cause of action despite a duty to disclose such facts. In none of the cited cases is there any rule to the effect that a mere denial of a violation of law constitutes a fraud upon the injured party so that the statute is tolled by reason of the exception to the general rule. Too, the record seems to firmly establish the fact that the plaintiffs knew, or had reason to believe, that the acts of the defendants which caused the claimed damages were a violation of the Anti-trust Laws. Such fact precludes plaintiffs from availing themselves of this exception which would toll the statute of limitations until the alleged date of discovery in 1944.

The complaint recites at length a series of events taking place between 1913 and 1934 and culminating finally in the sale of property by the plaintiffs to the defendants in 1942. Allegedly, these events were caused by the conspiracy which is the basis of this action. It is these events themselves however, which form the basis of any causes of action under the Anti-Trust Laws. As the above discussion shows, the California statute of limitations is a bar for any of the plaintiffs' possible causes of action arising from 1913 to 1934. Apart from such bar however, no cause of action is stated by any of the claims made by the plaintiffs, including any claim with respect to the transaction of 1942.

In order to obtain treble damages for an alleged conspiracy and combination in restraint of trade, the complaint must affirmatively show injuries to plaintiffs' business or property and it is insufficient merely to allege violations of the Anti-Trust Laws and to claim damages resulting therefrom. Westmoreland Asbestos Co. v. Johns-Manville Corp., 30 F. Supp. 389. The instant complaint fails to affirmatively allege any injuries suffered by reason of the defendants' alleged violations of the Anti-Trust Laws. In every transaction with the defendants the plaintiffs have received consideration or an adjudication of their rights by a court having jurisdiction.

The 1942 sale well illustrates this failure common to all of the plaintiffs' possible causes of action as stated in the complaint. Plaintiffs allege a sale of property to the defendants in consideration of receiving $350,000.00 and further allege that such sale was caused by the conspiracy of the defendants. There is no allegation of damages suffered or injuries received by the plaintiffs. On the face of the complaint, the price received by the plaintiffs does not appear to be inadequate consideration. In a like manner, the complaint fails to affirmatively show injuries to plaintiffs' business or property for any of the transactions or events delineated. Simply stated, the complaint alleges damages by reason of the alleged existence of the conspiracy. A mere claim of damages by reason of the existence of a conspiracy is not sufficient to state a cause of action, for a plaintiff must have received some injury in order to be able to sue under the Anti-Trust Laws. Gibbs v. McNeeley, 102 F. 594; Noyes v. Parson, 245 F. 689.

[Complaint Dismissed]

In accordance with the foregoing and in answer to the questions raised at the beginning of this discussion, this Court holds that this is an action at law, in which no cause of action lies by reason of the bar of the applicable California statute of limitations, and by reason of the failure of the complaint to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Therefore, it is hereby ordered that the motion of the defendants to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted be and the same hereby is granted and said complaint is hereby dismissed.

[¶ 62,338] United States v. Technicolor, Inc., Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, and Eastman Kodak Company.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Central Division. Civil Action No. 7507-WM. November 24, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Color Cinematography—Acts Enjoined.—A consent judgment entered in an action charging three corporations with entering into a conspiracy in restraint of trade in the business of professional color cinematography requires one of the defendants, a film manufacturer, to license all of its current patents to any applicant on a royalty-free basis, and to license all patents which it may acquire in this field during the next five years on a reasonable royalty basis. Defendant is also required to furnish technical information to all licensees and to sell professional color motion picture film to all applicants without discrimination. Defendant is enjoined from selling, licensing, processing, conducting research, disclosing inventions and technical information, or providing personnel or laboratory facilities in connection with professional color cinematography, on condition that the person with whom defendant is dealing purchase professional color motion picture film exclusively from defendant, resell such film at a price or on terms fixed by defendant, refrain from selling or manufacturing such film, or have such film processed by certain specified persons.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.90, 1590.

For plaintiff: Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; William C. Dixon, Sigmund Timberg, Manuel M. Gorman, Special Assistants to the Attorney General; James M. McGrath, W. Perry Epes, Nora B. Padway, Special Attorneys.

For defendant: Donovan, Leisure, Newton, Lumbard & Irvine, James R. Withrow, Jr.; Nixon, Hargrave, Middleton & Devans, Arthur L. Stern; McCutchen, Thomas, Matthew, Griffiths & Greene, George Harnagel, Jr.

Final Judgment Against Defendant Eastman Kodak Company

Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on August 18, 1947, and defendant Eastman Kodak Company, by its attorneys, having appeared and filed its answer to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof, and having consented to the entry of this final judgment herein without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by said defendant in respect to any such issue;

NOW, THEREFORE, before any testimony has been taken and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and upon consent of the plaintiff, United States of America, and defendant Eastman Kodak Company, it is hereby

ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED as follows:

I. That this Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of defendant Eastman Kodak Company; that the complaint states a cause of action against said defendant under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled, "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, and acts amendatory thereof.

II. As used in this judgment:

A. "Kodak" refers to the Eastman Kodak Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey.

B. "Person" means any individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association, trustee, or any other business or legal entity.

C. "To process" or "processing" means to develop, duplicate, finish or print positive or negative film or prints but does not include any step or operation in connection with the manufacture of raw or unexposed film.

D. "Professional color cinematography" means:

(1) the selling and distributing of negative or positive film for use in the production of motion pictures in color, or

(2) the processing of such film, or

(3) the printing, processing, selling, and distributing of motion-picture color film prints for exhibition in theatres and for industrial, scientific, advertising, educational, and other similar purposes, but does not include any step or operation in connection with the manufacture of raw or unexposed film.

E. "Professional color motion-picture film" means negative and positive film made for and to be used in professional color cinematography.

F. "Technicolor Agreements" means the following contracts and agreements:

The agreement dated June 25, 1934, between Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, Technicolor, Inc., and Kodak, attached to the complaint herein as Exhibit "A";

The agreement dated December 14, 1945, between Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, Technicolor, Inc., and Kodak, attached to the complaint herein as Exhibit "B";

The agreement dated April 5, 1938, between Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation and Kodak, attached to the complaint herein as Exhibit "C";

The agreement dated January 2, 1942, between Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation and Kodak, attached to the complaint herein as Exhibit "D";

The agreement dated October 22, 1936, between Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, Technicolor, Inc., and Kodak, attached to the complaint herein as Exhibit "E".

III. Whenever reference is made in this judgment to defendant Kodak, such reference shall also include its successors and assigns, each of its officers, directors and employees, and each of its subsidiaries. The provisions in this judgment shall apply to defendant Kodak and also to each person acting or claiming to act under the direction or for or on behalf of Kodak.

IV. A. Kodak is hereby ordered and directed to grant to each applicant making written request therefor a nonexclusive and unrestricted license, for which Kodak may receive no royalty or other compensation, conveying full rights under any, some, or all of the claims of the following United States patents relating to professional color cinematography, and all divisions, continuations, reissues, or extensions of said patents:

1,897,866	1,969,479
1,900,869	2,019,718
1,954,346	2,059,884
1,969,469	2,108,602
2,258,976	2,295,013
2,271,238	2,362,598
	2,417,060

B. Kodak is hereby ordered and directed to grant to each applicant making written request therefor a nonexclusive and unrestricted license for which Kodak may charge a nondiscriminatory royalty equal to but not in excess of any royalty it may be obligated to pay on account of the granting of such license, provided such obligation on the part of Kodak existed prior to July 1, 1947, conveying full rights under any, some, or all of the claims of the following United States patents relating to professional color cinematography and all reissues, divisions, continuations, or extensions of said patents:

1,954,452	2,008,989
1,980,941	2,039,691
1,997,493	2,047,282
2,143,762	2,095,826
2,191,038	2,382,604
1,976,300	2,058,409
1,912,661	1,997,325

V. Kodak is hereby ordered and directed to grant to each domestic applicant making written request therefor a nonexclusive and unrestricted license, for which Kodak may charge a reasonable nondiscriminatory royalty, conveying full rights for processing, selling or distributing professional color motion-picture film under any, some or all of the claims of United States patents, applied for by or issued to Kodak within five (5) years from the date of this judgment; any, some, or all claims of all such patents or patent applications which Kodak acquires within such five years; and any, some or all claims of all such patents or patent applications of which Kodak becomes a licensee within such five years with power to sublicense.

VI. A. Kodak is hereby enjoined and restrained from

(1) making any assignment, sale or other disposition of any of the patents referred to in Sections IV and V of this judgment which would deprive it of the power or authority to grant the licenses referred to in said Sections, unless it requires, as a condition of such assignment, sale, or other disposition, that the purchaser, transferee, or assignee, shall observe the requirements of Sections IV, V, VII, X and XI of this judgment and the purchaser, transferee, or assignee shall file with this Court, prior to consummation of said transaction, an undertaking to be bound by the provisions of said Sections of this judgment; or

(2) becoming, within five years from the date of this judgment, an exclusive licensee under any patents or patent applications for professional color cinematography, unless the license gives Kodak the power to grant sublicenses under said patents.

B. Any license granted by Kodak pursuant to the provisions of Sections IV or V of this judgment:

(1) Must refer to and identify this judgment;

(2) May provide that the license be nontransferable;

(3) Must provide that the licensee shall have the benefit of any more favorable terms granted other licensees licensed under this judgment under the same claims effective as of the time such more favorable terms are granted;

(4) Must provide that the licensee may cancel the license at any time after one year from the initial date thereof by giving thirty (30) days' notice in writing to the licensor;

(5) Where a royalty is charged, as permitted in subsection B of Section IV and Section V,

a. may make reasonable provision for inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor or any person acceptable to both the licensor and licensee, who shall report to the licensor only the amount of the royalty due and payable, and

b. may make reasonable provision for cancellation of the license upon failure of the licensee to pay the royalties or to permit the inspection of his books and records as hereinabove provided.

C. Upon receipt of written request for a license under the provisions of Section V, Kodak shall advise the license applicant in writing of the royalty which it deems reasonable for the claim or claims of the patent or patents to which the request pertains. If the parties are unable to agree upon a reasonable royalty within sixty (60) days from the date such request for the license was received by Kodak, the license applicant may forthwith apply to this Court for the determination of a reasonable royalty, and Kodak shall, upon receipt of notice of the filing of such court application, promptly give notice thereof to the Attorney General. In any such court proceeding, the burden of proof shall be on Kodak to establish the reasonableness of the royalty requested by it and the reasonable royalty rates, if any, determined by the Court shall apply to the license applicant and to all other licensees under this judgment under the same claim or claims of the same patent or patents. For said sixty (60) day period, and pending the completion of any such court proceeding, the applicant shall have full rights under the said patent claim or claims to which his application under Section V pertains without payment of royalty, but subject to the final judgment and order of the court in such proceeding, and further subject to the following provision: Kodak may apply to the Court to fix an interim royalty rate pending final determination of what constitutes a reasonable royalty, if any. If the Court fixes such interim royalty rate, Kodak shall then issue and the court applicant shall accept a license, or, as the case may be, a sublicense, providing for the periodic payment of royalties at such interim rate from the date of the filing of such court application by the applicant. If the court applicant fails to accept such license or fails to pay the interim royalty in accordance therewith, such action shall be ground for the dismissal of his application and for the rescission of any and all of the applicant's rights under this subsection. Where an interim license or sublicense has been issued pursuant to this subsection, or where the applicant has exercised any right under any patent hereunder, reasonable royalty rates, if any, as finally determined by the Court shall be retroactive for the applicant and for all other licensees under this judgment under the same claim or claims of the same patent or patents, to the date the applicant files his application with the Court.

D. Nothing herein shall prevent any applicant from attacking at any time the validity or scope of any of said patents nor shall this judgment be construed as imputing any validity or value to any of said patents.

VII. Defendant Kodak is enjoined and restrained from instituting or threatening to institute, or maintaining, or continuing any action, suit, or proceeding for acts of infringement of any patent referred to in Section IV of this judgment occurring prior to the date of said judgment.

VIII. Kodak is hereby ordered and directed to furnish within a reasonable time, to each licensee who has been licensed pursuant to Sections IV and V of this judgment and who has made a written application therefor, during the term of its license:

A. A written manual without charge describing the methods known to and used by Kodak at the date of the entry of this judgment in its practice of processing for professional color cinematography;

B. Supplements to said manual without charge describing any changes in such methods, respectively, on January 1, 1950, and January 1, 1951;

C. On request, by any such licensee at any time during a period of five years after January 1, 1951, supplements to said manual describing any changes in such methods applicable to the licensed patent or patents, for which supplements Kodak may charge the separate cost to Kodak directly allocable to preparing the same.

IX. A. Kodak is hereby ordered and directed, as long as it shall manufacture, sell, or deal in professional color motion picture film, to the extent that any type of such film is available, to make quantities of such type available to any domestic user requiring such type, without discrimination among such users and in accordance with his bona fide requirements and on regularly offered prices, terms and conditions of sale.

B. In making such film available, whenever, during a period of five (5) years from the date of this judgment, Kodak is unable, for a period of four (4) successive weeks, to make deliveries to all domestic users in good faith requiring any type of such film, Kodak shall cause such type to be distributed among such users on the basis of their bona fide requirements. For the purposes of this subsection B of this Section IX, bona fide requirements shall be based on current needs rather than past purchases of professional color motion-picture film

C. Nothing contained in this Section IX shall be construed to create in any one other than the plaintiff, United States of America, rights or claims against Kodak that do not otherwise exist.

X. Except as otherwise provided for in this judgment, defendant Kodak is hereby enjoined and restrained from (a) selling or offering to sell any professional color motion-picture film; (b) licensing any patent or patents for professional color cinematography; (c) processing professional color motion-picture film; (d) under taking or conducting research and development work in professional color cinematography; (e) disclosing inventions, improvements, "know-how", and technical information and advice used and useful in professional color cinematography; or (f) providing personnel or laboratory facilities in connection with professional color cinematography, on condition that the other person or persons with whom defendant Kodak is dealing do any of the following things:

A. Purchase professional color motion-picture film exclusively or in any determinant amount or quotas from one or more specified sellers thereof, or refrain from purchasing such film from one or more specified sellers thereof;

B. Resell professional color motion-picture film at a price or on other terms or conditions fixed by defendant Kodak;

C. Refrain from selling or renting professional color motion-picture film;

D. Restrict the use of professional color motion-picture film;

E. Refrain from manufacturing or processing professional color motion-picture film;

F. Have professional color motion-picture film processed by any one or more specified persons.

XI. Except as otherwise provided for in this judgment, defendant Kodak is hereby enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, performing, enforcing or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, undertaking, arrangement, or understanding with any manufacturer or processor of professional color motion-picture film whereby:

A. Defendant Kodak or any other person or persons refrains from engaging in the manufacturing, processing, use, sale, or distribution of professional color motion-picture film or leaves any person (including defendant Kodak) free from competition in any territory, field or market in the manufacturing, processing, use, sale or distribution of such film; provided, however, that this section shall not be deemed to determine, adjudicate or affect the legality or illegality of any grant of preferential sales or distribution rights;

B. Defendant Kodak or any other person or persons refuses to sell to any user professional color motion-picture film to be manufactured according to technical specifications supplied by such user;

C. Defendant Kodak or Technicolor, Inc., or Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, within five years after the date of this judgment, is given the exclusive right to process professional color motion-picture film for professional color cinematography utilizing methods or materials evolved as a result of joint research in professional color cinematography unless defendant Kodak has the unlimited right to sublicense thereunder.

XII. Should this Court adjudicate the illegality of any of the provisions of any of the Technicolor agreements, as defined in this judgment, in a final judgment entered against defendants Technicolor, Inc., and Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, defendant Kodak is hereby enjoined and restrained to the same extent and in like manner, beginning on the date of entry of such a final judgment against Technicolor, Inc., and Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation,

A. From the further performance of such adjudged illegal provisions of any of said agreements or of any agreements amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto;

B. From entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan, program, or course of conduct with any person or persons for the purpose or with the effect of continuing, reviving or renewing any of such illegal provisions in any of said agreements.

XIII. A. Nothing contained in this judgment shall prevent defendant Kodak from availing itself of the benefits of the following acts and laws, and any amendments thereto: (1) the Act of Congress of April 10, 1918, commonly called the Webb-Pomerene Act; or (2) the Act of Congress of 1937, commonly called the Miller-Tydings proviso to Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies."

B. The provisions of this judgment shall be limited to transactions in or affecting commerce as defined in Section 1 of the Clayton Act.

XIV. For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on the written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in Charge of the Anti-Trust Division, and on reasonable notice to Kodak be permitted:

A. Access, during office hours of Kodak, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession of or under the control of Kodak relating to any of the subject matter of this judgment;

B. Subject to the reasonable convenience of Kodak and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of Kodak, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters; and upon such written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in Charge of the Anti-Trust Division, Kodak shall submit such reports concerning matters directly related to compliance with this judgment as may from time to time be reasonably necessary to check compliance with the provisions of this judgment or which otherwise may be directly related to matters prohibited or required to be done under the terms of this judgment, provided, however, that information obtained by the means permitted in this Section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States of America is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

XV. Jurisdiction of this cause is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling either of the parties to this judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, for the amendment, modification, or termination of any provisions thereof, the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 62,339] Commercial Laundry Inc. and The Judge Linen Supply Co., Inc. v. Linen Supply Association of Greater New York, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 47-100. December 1, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Robinson-Patman Act, Donnelly Act

Treble Damage Suit—Conspiracy to Violate Antitrust Laws—Motion to Sever or Amend Complaint.—A complaint alleging that on or about certain dates, and continuing thereafter to the date of the commencement of the action, defendants engaged continuously in a conspiracy to monopolize the business of furnishing linens and flatwork to consumers thereof and to restrain competition, in violation of the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, the Robinson-Patman Act, and the Donnelly Act, as a result of which plaintiffs have been damaged, is held sufficient as against a motion to sever or amend. It is held immaterial that one of the plaintiffs entered the field after the conspiracy had been instituted and put into operation; it is sufficient that such plaintiff has been in existence during a part of the period, that the conspiracy had operated upon it as it has upon the other plaintiff, and that it has been damaged by the conspiracy and the acts done in effectuation thereof. There is sufficient identity in occurrences and transactions, and in the question of fact and law which will be involved, to entitle the plaintiffs to join in bringing the action, and they are not required to allege their claims separately. However, a cause of action alleging that the acts therein complained of were committed by "the defendants, or some of them" is required to be amended, inasmuch as it appears that there is no allegation against any identifiable defendant. Although any defendant as to whom the allegations of this cause of action are untrue could deny them, no defendant should be required to plead to allegations which are not made against him, and until it appears which of the defendants are claimed to have committed the acts referred to, none of them may be called upon to plead to it.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.605, the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2212.600, and the Donnelly Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 8615.14.

Memorandum

KAUFMAN, J.: Plaintiffs sue to recover treble damages and for an injunction, alleging conspiracy by defendants to violate, and violations by them, of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, the Clayton Act, the Robinson-Patman Act, and the New York State General Business Law. Three of the defendants—Standard Coat, Apron & Linen Service, Inc. (a New York corporation), Standard Coat, Apron & Linen Service, Inc. (a New Jersey corporation) and Charles Maslow—move for an order requiring plaintiffs either to sever from the complaint the claims of one of the plaintiffs or to state their claims separately in an amended complaint.

The complaint contains three separately numbered causes of action. The first cause of action alleges (par. 29) that on or about February 1933, June 1937 and December 1939, respectively, the exact dates being unknown to plaintiffs, and continuing thereafter to the date of the commencement of the action in August 1948, defendants engaged continuously in a conspiracy to commit specified acts, which conspiracy was in violation of the Sherman Act, and (par. 31) that the defendants, by agreement and concerted action, have done the things which they so conspired to do. Various overt acts are alleged to have been committed by the defendants (par. 36) as steps in the conspiracy (par. 38), as a result of which, it is alleged (pars. 32, 39), plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of $200,000 for which they are entitled to recover threefold under the Act and to an injunction against continuance of the acts complained of.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff Commercial Laundry Inc. is now and at all the times mentioned in the complaint was, engaged in competition with certain of the defendants, and that plaintiff The Judge Linen Supply Co. Inc. is presently so engaged.

The second cause of action repeats all the allegations of the first cause of action and alleges that the aforesaid conduct of the defendants and the acts committed by them as aforesaid constitute a violation of Section 340 of the General Business Law of the State of New York, commonly known as the Donnelly Act.

The third cause of action repeats all the allegations of the first cause of action and alleges (pars. 43, 44, 45) that "the defendants, or some of them" have discriminated against plaintiffs in certain specified respects, in violation of the Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act (par. 48), with intent to drive plaintiffs out of business and to suppress competition (par. 46), thereby damaging plaintiffs in the sum of $200,000 (par. 47), for which plaintiffs are entitled to recover threefold (par. 49).

The relief demanded is an injunction against continuance by defendants of any acts in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy and in interference with plaintiffs' conduct of their business, and for a judgment against the defendants and each of them in the amount of $600,000 with interest, reasonable counsel fees, and the costs and disbursements of the action.

The moving defendants contend that since plaintiff The Judge Linen Supply Co. Inc. is not alleged to have been in existence and in competition with defendants throughout the period during which the conspiracy is alleged to have been in operation, the relief which that plaintiff is claiming cannot be based upon the same transaction, occurrence or series of transactions as the transaction, occurrence or series of transactions upon which plaintiff Commercial Laundry Inc. is claiming relief; that therefore they may not be joined as plaintiffs (Rule 20) and one or the other should be dropped as such (Rule 21).

Although it is alleged in paragraph 29 that defendants conspired "beginning on or about February 1933, June 1937 and December 1939," it would appear from the complaint, giving plaintiffs the benefit of all reasonable intendments from the allegations thereof, that plaintiffs are relying on a single continuing conspiracy by all the defendants to fix prices, monopolize the business of furnishing linens and flatwork to consumers thereof, to apportion the customers among themselves, to prevent others from entering the field, and to restrain competition; that this conspiracy has continued up to the commencement of the action, that among the objects of said conspiracy has been the elimination of both plaintiffs from the field, and that both of them have been damaged by the effectuation thereof. In these circumstances, it is immaterial that one of the plaintiffs entered the field after the conspiracy had been hatched and put into operation; it is sufficient that such plaintiff has been in existence during a part of the period, that the conspiracy has operated upon it as it has upon the other plaintiff, and that it has been damaged by the conspiracy and the acts done in effectuation thereof. Since the complaint alleges a conspiracy on the part of all defendants which contemplated the elimination and financial destruction of concerns like plaintiffs, and, in effectuation thereof, a series of acts directed against, and which damaged, both plaintiffs, there is sufficient identity in occurrences and transactions, and in the question of fact and law which will be involved, to entitle the plaintiffs to join in bringing the action, and they are not required in the complaint to allege their claims separately, except as hereinafter stated.

The third cause of action alleges that the acts therein complained of were committed by "the defendants, or some of them." Although no motion is addressed to this cause of action, except as above indicated, it thus appears that there is no allegation against any identifiable defendant. While it is not necessary that all the relief be demanded against all the defendants, it is necessary that each defendant know the wrongs which are alleged against it. Although any defendant as to whom the allegations of this cause of action are untrue could deny them, no defendant should be required to plead to allegations which are not made against him, and until it appears which of the defendants are claimed to have committed the acts referred to in the third cause of action, none of them may be called upon to plead to it.

Plaintiffs are therefore directed to serve an amended complaint within ten days after service of notice of entry of the order to be entered hereon, repleading the third cause of action so as to allege which of the defendants are claimed to have committed the acts alleged in paragraph 43 of the complaint. In all other respects the motion is denied.

[¶ 62,340] Oscar L. Vines v. General Outdoor Advertising Company, Inc.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Docket No. 20967. December 2, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Summary Judgment—Quantum Meruit Action—Claim Based on Antitrust Violations. —In an action upon a quantum meruit for work and services rendered to the defendant by the plaintiff as a solicitor for outdoor advertising, the lower court summarily dismissed the complaint. On appeal, it is held that the dismissal of a claim based on the antitrust laws was erroneous. In holding that, since the employment contracts reserved to the defendant the privilege of withdrawing any assigned advertiser at its pleasure, it could not be a wrong to withdraw a certain account from plaintiff by classifying it as a national account and assigning it to a company with whom it had entered into a contract which had been declared to be a violation of the antitrust laws by a decree in an action brought by the United States, the lower court denied to the plaintiff an opportunity to prove that he was injured by a violation of the antitrust laws. Those laws give a right of action to "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden" therein, and those are within this language who have been so injured though they have no contract with the wrongdoer, but only an expectation of future dealings with him.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1220.507.

Reversing and remanding the decision of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, reported in 1946-1947 Trade Cases at ¶ 57,543.

For appellant: Lyman Stansky.

For appellee: Maxwell S. Mattuck.

[Nature of Action]

L. HAND, C. J.: This is an appeal from a judgment, summarily dismissing a complaint in four counts, upon a quantum meruit for work and services rendered to the defendant by the plaintiff as a solicitor for outdoor advertising. The defendant before answer moved to dismiss the action by producing four written contracts under which the plaintiff served from March 1st, 1936, to March 1st, 1943, when he resigned; and, so far as is relevant to the disposition of the four counts, there is no dispute of fact. The first contract, executed on March 1st, 1936, provided that the defendant "employed" the plaintiff "to solicit" advertisements and "to render such other services as may be required of him"; and that he accepted the employment and agreed to give all his time to it, each party being free to end the employment at will by written notice. The plaintiff was to solicit only such advertisers as the defendant should "from time to time" assign to him, and these assignments might be "withdrawn * * * at any time," whether the "solicitation" or "negotiation" were "pending" or "prospective." The plaintiff was to have no "compensation" for securing any contract after any "assigned" advertising had been withdrawn, even though he might have "solicited" the contract, and "wholly or in part negotiated" it before the withdrawal. The pay was based upon a "quota" for each solicitor, fixed from time to time by a complicated computation, depending upon the contracts which he should "procure" from the advertisers "assigned" to him. No contract would be included, if the advertiser was "withdrawn" before "the acceptance and signing of the contract" by the defendant. The contract also contained the following clause: "Upon the termination of this agreement all rights of the salesman to compensation for any services rendered to the company hereunder or otherwise shall thereupon cease and terminate, and the salesman hereby waives and relinquishes any and all rights to any compensation from the Company for any services he may have so rendered." The three later contracts executed on April 8th, 1941, January 7th, 1942, and January 1st, 1943, did not differ in the provisions relevant to the action at bar, although the pay was a fixed weekly stipend, to which was added a bonus computed on the contracts procured by the solicitor. The "termination" clause and the clause permitting the withdrawal of "assigned" advertisers were incorporated in each, substantially unchanged.

[Portions of the opinion dealing with the issues of mutuality, duress and fraud are omitted herein as not pertinent to the scope of these reports.]

[Antitrust Issue]

There remains the amorphous claim, based upon the Anti-Trust Acts. The judge held that, since the contracts reserved to the defendant the privilege of withdrawing any "assigned" advertiser at its pleasure, it could not be a wrong to withdraw the Liebmann Breweries by classing it as a "national" account and assigning it to Outdoor Advertising Company, Inc. In this we think he failed to consider the basis of such a claim. The Anti-Trust Acts * give a right of action to "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws"; and it has been repeatedly held that those are within this language who have been so injured though they have no contract with the wrongdoer, but only an expectation of future dealings with him. There has been indeed much difference of opinion as to what is adequate proof that the "forbidden" act has caused "injury," and how great the "injury" was; but with that we have nothing to do upon a motion for summary judgment. We cannot deny the plaintiff an opportunity to prove that the defendant would have allowed him to continue to be the solicitor of the Liebmann Breweries, if it had not transferred the account to Outdoor Advertising Co., Inc.; or to prove that that transfer was in pursuance of an unlawful agreement between the two companies. If he should succeed on both issues, it would be no defense that the defendant was not bound to him by contract not to take away assigned advertisers. The absence of any contract obligation gave the defendant no more immunity from that tort than from any other tort. Decisions such as Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co.,† A. B. Small Co. v. Lamborn & Co.,[1] and Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co.,[2] are beside the point; they held that the buyer of goods from a seller, who is engaged in violating such a statute, may not keep the goods without paying the price. The theory was that the seller's unlawful enterprise did not forfeit his title to the goods and that, since the buyer got his own title from the seller, he was obliged to conform to the conditions imposed upon its transfer. In the case at bar the wrong had nothing to do with any contract between the parties; it would have made no difference if there had been no contract of any kind between them. Continental Wall Paper v. Voight[3] helps the plaintiff as little as the decisions, on which the defendant relies, help it.

The release provisions in the contracts do not protect the defendant; they were all limited to "compensation for services rendered," and the claim is for damages for depriving the plaintiff of the opportunity to render services. The case is not so clear as to the release of April 8th, 1941, which described the claims released as follows: "all claims and demands of any kind whatsoever to the date hereof, and particularly * * * any claims or demands for salary, commissions or other compensation under any employment or contract of employment between the undersigned and the said General Outdoor Advertising Co., Inc." Although the plaintiff says that on April 8th, 1941, he did not know that the transfer of the Liebmann Breweries had been made in pursuance of an illegal contract between the defendant and Outdoor Advertising Co., Inc., that ignorance might not alone be enough to avoid the release, had it contained only the general words.[4] Moreover, the fact that words of general import were followed by particular instances, did not inexorably leave no scope to the words of general import. In releases, as elsewhere, the intent of the parties is to be gathered from the instrument as a whole.[5] Nevertheless, the courts of New York accept the common law doctrine that in a release words of general import, followed or preceded by words relating to specific claims, are, ceteris paribus, limited to the specific claims.[6] For the present, we need say no more than that the release of April 8th, 1941, did not inevitably release claims which the plaintiff might have under the Anti-Trust Acts, of which he was ignorant at the time.

---

* § 15, Title 15, U. S. Code.

 Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U. S. 359; Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U. S. 555; Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, 327 U. S. 251; Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 297 Fed. Rep. 791 (C. A. 2); Roseland v. Phister Mfg. Co., 125 Fed. (2d) 417 (C. A. 7); Package Closure Corp. v. Seabright Co., 141 Fed. (2d) 972 (C. A. 2); McWhirter v. Monroe Calculating Machine Co., 76 Fed. Supp. 456.

† 184 U. S. 540.

[1] 267 U. S. 248.

[2] 330 U. S. 743.

[3] 212 U. S. 227.

[4] Kirchner v. New Home Sewing Machine Co., 135 N. Y. 182.

[5] Murphy v. City of New York, 190 N. Y. 413.

[6] Haskell v. Miller, 221 App. Div. 48; aff'd. 246 N. Y. 618; Romaine v. Sweet, 57 App. Div. 613; Matter of Quick, 147 Misc. 28, 34.

[Reversed and Remanded in Part]

The judgment will be affirmed insofar as it dismissed the four counts of the complaint; but it will be reversed insofar as it dismissed any claim the plaintiff may be able to establish under the Anti-Trust Acts. The cause will be remanded and judgment will be entered in the district court in accordance with the foregoing opinion.

[¶ 62,341] Bernard M. Shotkin, Trustee v. General Electric Company, et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. No. 3604. December 2, 1948.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Colorado.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Antitrust Act, Robinson-Patman Act

Action for Treble Damages—General Allegations—Failure to Allege Specific Acts.— A complaint in an action brought by a wholesale dealer of electrical equipment against manufacturers and distributors of such equipment, alleging in general language that the defendants combined and conspired to restrain trade and commerce in the manufacture, sale and distribution of electrical equipment, that they fixed prices, and that they stifled competition, without any averment of specific acts on the part of the defendants from which it could be determined as a matter of law that the defendants did in fact violate the antitrust laws with resulting damages to plaintiff, is held to be fatally infirm, and the dismissal of the action by the trial court is affirmed.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.121, the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2024.19, and the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2212.475.

For appellant: Bernard M. Shotkin pro se.

For appellees L. A. Goalby and Westinghouse Electric Corporation: Donald S. Stubbs (Irving Hale, Jr., and Lewis, Grant, Newton, Davis & Henry were with him on brief). For appellees General Electric Company, Edison General Electric Appliance Company, now Hotpoint, Inc., and Hendrie & Bolthoff Company; Henry W. Toll (Grant, Shafroth & Toll were with him on brief). For appellees Mine & Smelter Supply Company: O. H. Johnson, and John D. Nicholson; Winston S. Howard, and Pershing, Bosworth, Dick & Dawson were on brief. For appellee New England Electric Company; Merrill A. Knight, and Schnaetzel and Knight were on brief.

Before PHILLIPS, Chief Judge, and BRATTON and MURRAH, Circuit Judges.

[Nature of Action]

BRATTON, C. J.: This was an action instituted in the United States Court for Colorado by Bernard M. Shotkin, as trustee for his minor children, against General Electric Company, General Electric Supply Company, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, Westinghouse Electric Supply Company, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Edison General Electric Appliance Company, and approximately seventy-five other corporations and individuals. Drawn without the aid of counsel, the amended complaint alleged that the action was filed under sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, and 15 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, sections 14 and 16 of the Clayton Act, and the Robinson-Patman Act. It further charged in general language that fluorescent and incandescent lamps, fixtures, apparatuses, appliances, devices, parts, and materials were manufactured by various of the defendants in different localities and were shipped and distributed through the channels of interstate commerce; that the defendants controlled and monopolized the manufacture, sale, and distribution of such commodities; that trading under the names Edison Light & Power Company, Dison Power & Light Company, and Chicago Wholesale Merchandise Company, plaintiff was engaged at Denver, Colorado, in the sale as wholesale distributor of electric lamps, light fixtures, apparatuses, appliances, devices, and other electric goods; and that most of his business was in interstate commerce. The complaint further alleged that the defendant Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company agreed to furnish plaintiff lamps at the highest distributor's discount for sale and distribution in the course of his business in Denver; that such defendant did furnish plaintiff lamps for a period of time; that the defendants entered into a combination or conspiracy to drive plaintiff out of business, with the intent to monopolize or attempt to monopolize a part of the interstate trade in fluorescent and incandescent lamps and fixtures originating in Denver; that as part of such combination or conspiracy or as the result thereof, the defendant Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company ceased to furnish lamps to plaintiff and thereafter refused to furnish them to him; that the effect of driving him out of business in that manner would be substantially to lessen competition and create a monopoly in the sale of lamps to the great injury of the public; and that the defendants were discriminating against plaintiff. The complaint contained allegations respecting the decree entered against some of the defendants in a civil action previously pending in the United States Court for New Jersey but plaintiff was not a party to the action and had no personal interest in its subject-matter. And the complaint contained further allegations relating to a criminal prosecution against some of the defendants in the United States Court for Illinois, but that was long prior to the time plaintiff entered business at Denver and it had no bearing whatever upon any justiciable issue appropriate for determination in this case. The prayer was for injunctive relief and treble damages. The court dismissed the action for failure of the amended complaint to state a claim for which relief could be granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The general principles of the common law relating to contracts for the restriction or suppression of competition in the markets, agreements to fix prices, concerts to divide marketing territories, understandings to apportion customers, meeting of minds to restrict production, unity of purpose to furnish inferior products, and other like practices which tend to raise prices or otherwise take from buyers or consumers the advantages which accrue to them from free competition in the markets are familiar to all and therefore do not call for elaboration here. But the resulting restraints of trade were not penalized and they did not give rise to any actionable wrong. The Sherman Act, approved July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, took its origin from that common-law background, and its primary purposes were more effective protection of the public from the evils of restraints on the competitive system. It extended the inhibition to any combination or conspiracy, whatever its form, having injurious effects of that kind upon the competitive system, and it provided both public and private remedies for the injuries flowing from the restraints. United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, affirmed 175 U. S. 211; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U. S. 469.

Founded upon these broad concepts of public policy, the Act is limited in operative scope and effect to combinations, agreements, or concerts which tend to prejudice the public interest by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the due course of trade, or which because of their evident purpose or inherent nature injuriously restrain trade in the competitive markets. Wilder Manufacturing Co. v. Corn Products Co., 236 U. S. 165; Ramsay Co. v. Bill Posters Assn., 260 U. S. 501; United States v. American Oil Co., 262 U. S. 371; Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30. A common form of such combination, agreement, or concert is one having for its purpose or tendency the raising or fixing of prices, or one having for its purpose or tendency the dividing of territories, or one having for its purpose or tendency the apportionment of customers, or one having for its purpose or tendency the controlling or narrowing of outlets in order to raise or maintain prices.

In determining whether a contract, combination, or concert constitutes restraint of trade or commerce in violation of the Act, the intention of the parties may or may not be material, depending on whether the necessary effect of the agreement or concert or acts done is to directly restrain such trade or to create a monopoly. A specific intent to restrain such trade or commerce or to build up a monopoly in order for an agreement or concert to come within the scope of the Act is not always necessary. Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375; United States v. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100. But regardless of the intent of the parties, if the inherent tendency of the combination, agreement, or concert is substantially to lessen, hinder, or suppress competition in the channels of the trade or commerce, it comes within the sweep of the Act. Fashion Guild v. Trade Commission, 312 U. S. 457.

It is essential to recovery in an action of this kind that plaintiff allege and prove two things, a violation of the Act, and damages to plaintiff proximately resulting from the acts and conduct of the defendants which constitute the violation of the Act. Injury to plaintiff, of itself and alone, is not sufficient to warrant a civil action of this nature for injunctive relief and damages. There must be harm to the general public in the form or undue restriction of trade and commerce as the result of the wrongful contract, combination, or concert. Wilder Manufacturing Co. v. Corn Products Co., supra; Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., 72 F. (2d) 885. The injury to the public need not be nationwide in geographical scope. If it involves monopolistic effect upon interstate commerce, it is enough even though it be narrow in geographical extent. Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U. S. 219; William Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. (2d) 738, 164 F. (2d) 1021, certiorari denied, 334 U. S. 811. But it must injuriously affect public interest, and the effect must be appreciable.

The amended complaint in this case alleged in very general language that the defendants combined and conspired to restrain trade and commerce in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of fluorescent and incandescent lamps, fixtures, appliances, devices, parts, and materials; that they fixed prices; and that they stifled competition. The pleading further alleged in general terms that the action of the defendant Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company in discontinuing to furnish plaintiff lamps and in refusing further to furnish lamps to him was a part of such conspiracy or was in furtherance of it. And it further alleged in equally general terminology that the effect of such refusal to furnish lamps to plaintiff was substantially to lessen competition and to create a monopoly. But these were general allegations in the nature of conclusions, without any averment of specific acts on the part of the defendants from which it could be determined as a matter of law that the defendants did in fact violate the Act with resulting damages to plaintiff. The complaint did not allege that the defendants combined and conspired to refrain from competing with each other in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of the enumerated commodities. It did not allege that the defendants conspired to raise prices. It did not charge that they combined to divide trade territory. It failed to allege that they conspired to apportion customers. It did not aver that they agreed to furnish the public commodities of inferior quality. And it was barren of any charge that the defendants engaged in any trade practices of that kind in furtherance of a combination or conspiracy. While it was alleged that the refusal to furnish merchandise to plaintiff for sale in connection with the conduct of his business was in furtherance of the conspiracy and that the public was injured, it was not charged generally or specifically that as the result of that refusal the prices of such merchandise were enhanced or that the volume thereof in the competitive markets was diminished. In other words, the complaint failed to allege facts from which it could be determined as a matter of law that a combination or conspiracy was entered into whch brought about an increase in prices to the consuming public, a diminution in the volume of merchandise in the competitive markets, a deterioration in the quality of the merchandise available in the channels of commerce, or any other like evil consequence in the free flow of interstate commerce. Instead, the pleading bore clear internal indications of a personal grievance on the part of plaintiff based solely and exclusively upon the declination of the defendant Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company further to transact business with him as an outlet for its manufactured merchandise, with no evil consequence to the consuming public. During all of the time referred to in the amended complaint, the defendant General Electric Company and its related companies, the defendant Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company and its related companies, and the defendant Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and its related companies, sold their products in all parts of the United States through dealers in virtually every city, town, and village; and the inability of plaintiff to sell the products of all or any of them in interstate commerce as a part of his business in Denver would in the very nature of things have infinitesimally little effect upon such commerce. The amended complaint was fatally infirm and therefore the court providently dismissed the action. Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

[¶ 62,342] Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, et al. v. United Detroit Theatres Corporation, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division. No. 7589. November 17, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Antitrust Act

Suit for Damages and Injunction—Motion to Vacate Notice of Taking Depositions—Place of Taking Depositions.—In an action by ten independent motion picture producers and an association of which they are members against motion picture exhibitors for damages for and injunctive relief against violations of the antitrust laws, plaintiffs' motion that defendants' notice of taking depositions be vacated is denied in view of the provisions of Rule 26(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure which authorizes either party to take depositions without leave of court if the notice to take the depositions is served more than twenty days following the commencement of the action. The notice in this case was served thirty-six days after filing of the complaint. Plaintiffs' request that the depositions be taken by interrogatories is denied where the complexity and ramifications foreseeable in the case indicate that interrogatories will not adequately serve the defendants' purposes. The request that the place of the taking of depositions be changed from Detroit to Los Angeles, for the reason that the proposed deponents are engaged in the production and direction of motion pictures and are unable to come to Detroit without disrupting such work to the great loss and damage of their respective organizations, is denied. Plaintiffs' objection can be obviated by deferring the taking of each proposed deponent's testimony until such time as each of them completes the production or direction of the motion pictures now in process of being produced or directed by any proposed deponent now so engaged. Plaintiffs' motion to quash the notice insofar as it purports to compel some of the proposed deponents to produce certain described documents is denied, and defendants' notice is treated as a motion to produce the documents requested, and as such is granted. The notice to take depositions and for the production of documents is vacated as to a proposed deponent who is not a party to the suit, without prejudice to a showing at any later time that he is an officer or director of, or is acting in a managerial capacity for, any of the plaintiff corporations.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.593, and the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2036.76.

For plaintiffs: Robert J. Rubin, Beverly Hills, California; Joseph L. Alioto, San Francisco, California; Crawford, Sweeney & Dodd, Detroit, Michigan.

For defendants: Rockwell T. Gust; William Henry Gallagher; James E. Haggerty; David Newman; all of Detroit, Michigan.

[Nature of Action]

A complaint was filed against the defendants under Sections 15 and 26 of Title 15, USCA, being part of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled: "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and monopoly", as amended, commonly known as the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, for damages and injunction.

Time for filing answers was by stipulation extended by counsel and within that time defendants, United Theatres Corporation and Earl J. Hudson, filed identical notices to take depositions of the following officers or managing agents of plaintiffs or their assignors, whose respective addresses are set forth after their names: Marvin L. Faris, 357 N. Canon Dr., Beverly Hills, Cal.; Samuel Goldwyn, 1041 N. Formosa Ave., Los Angeles 46, Cal.; Walt Disney, 2400 W. Alameda Ave., Burbank, Cal.; David O. Selznick, 9336 Washington Blvd., Culver City, Cal.; Walter Wanger, 7324 Santa Monica Blvd., Hollywood 46, Cal.; Seymour Nebenzal, 1041 N. Formosa St., Hollywood 46, Cal.; Edward Small, 846 N. Cahuenga, Hollywood 38, Cal.; Benedict Bogeaus, 1040 N. Las Palmas Ave., Hollywood 38, Cal.; Hunt Stromberg, 1040 N. Las Palmas Ave., Hollywood 38 Cal.; and William Cagney 1040 N. Las Palmas Ave., Hollywood 38, Cal. The place at which depositions are to be taken is 733 Majestic Building, City of Detroit, County of Wayne and State of Michigan. Six of the above named persons were requested to produce documents and records listed under their respective names.

Plaintiffs filed timely motions to vacate notice for taking depositions; that depositions be taken on written interrogatories, or, in the alternative, that depositions be taken in Los Angeles, California; and that the notice be quashed insofar as it purports to compel the production of documents. This motion is based on the grounds (1) that the witnesses reside at or near Hollywood and Los Angeles, California, approximately 2000 miles from the City of Detroit; that the corporations with which they are connected have their principal offices and place of business in the County of Los Angeles, California; (2) that the matters concerning which the witnesses will be examined are believed to relate to assignment of claims and can be inquired into effectively by written interrogatories, as evidenced by documents demanded in the notices of taking depositions; (3) that the taking of depositions in Detroit, Michigan, would be unduly oppressive to plaintiffs in the conduct of their business and will cause excessive hardship and great inconvenience to the persons designated in the notices; (4) that Paramount Pictures, Inc., the parent organization of defendant, United Detroit Theatres Corporation, has its place of business in Los Angeles, California, and retained legal counsel there.

Supporting affidavits were filed by each side. Following oral arguments in open court, counsel filed supplemental affidavits and briefs.

Plaintiffs' objections are filed under Rule 30(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Ordinarily, depositions of corporation executives and officers should be taken at the principal place of business of the corporation. This rule, however, is no more inflexible than is the rule that depositions of plaintiffs choosing a certain forum should be taken there. In this case ten witnesses who are residents of California will be required to travel 2000 miles to Detroit for a relatively short stay for any one of them, or, defendants' counsel would be obliged to travel 2000 miles from Detroit to Los Angeles for a more or less extended stay, during the taking of the depositions of all ten witnesses required, and be denied the benefit of material and relevant records which are in Detroit, during the taking of the depositions in California.

Each situation must be examined and decided in the light of its own peculiar facts and circumstances.

It is represented by defendants, and not seriously denied by plaintiffs, that proposed deponents make frequent trips from California to New York and either pass through or are near Detroit on such trips. On the part of the plaintiffs it is contended that proposed deponents have little knowledge of the business transactions or contracts entered into for the distribution of motion-picture films, and that their activities are confined largely to directing and to artistic features of motion-picture production industry; that their presence is required in Hollywood for the next several weeks or months because motion pictures are being produced and the production of pictures cannot proceed without them. It is claimed by the defendants, on the other hand, that the proposed deponents are the principal officers of the plaintiff corporations who dominate and control the actions and policies of plaintiff corporations and their assignors herein, and that, furthermore, they are the persons who actually make or pass upon and finally control all decisions regarding licensing of their feature pictures for exhibition in the Detroit area and elsewhere; that, also, in noticing the depositions to be taken at Detroit defendants had subpoenas issued for certain material and relevant records in possession of various members of the motion-picture industry at Detroit, and that these records must necessarily be referred to and be used at the time of taking the depositions here in Detroit; that, furthermore, if the depositions were taken at Los Angeles defendants' counsel would not have the benefit of these exhibits and information therein contained during the taking of these depositions.

The locale of the alleged unlawful practices is the Detroit area. Plaintiffs allege that defendant United Detroit Theatres Corporation is an exhibitor of motion pictures in the Detroit area and owns and controls four of seven first-run theatres and twelve of the most important neighborhood theatres in that area. Defendant Earl

J. Hudson is the manager of the "United" and supervises and controls its operation. It is further alleged by plaintiffs that defendant Cooperative Theatres of Michigan, Inc., is a Michigan corporation engaged in the business of negotiating for the licensing and booking of motion pictures in theatres operating principally in the Detroit area. It is owned by theatre-owning member stockholders; it is also alleged that defendant James F. Sharkey is the general manager of the "Cooperative" and is in charge of and controls the operation thereof and supervises the services rendered by "Cooperative" to its member stockholders.

Plaintiffs further allege that the remaining forty defendants are either corporations or partnerships, whose names are not known to plaintiffs at this time, and all forty of such defendants are named only as "Doe" defendants and numbered from one to forty.

After describing in detail the alleged unlawful practices of defendants, the plaintiffs ask for a decree adjudging that defendants have combined and conspired to restrain unreasonably and have conspired to monopolize, attempted to monopolize and have monopolized the interstate trade and commerce in the licensing, supply, and exhibition of motion pictures, in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act; that membership contracts of "Cooperative" be adjudged illegal per se, and that "Cooperative" be dissolved; that a receiver be appointed for "United", and that all theatres owned, operated or controlled by it be sold; further, that an injunction issue prohibiting the alleged unlawful practices; and that treble damages be awarded to plaintiffs in the aggregate of $8,750,000.00.

Prior to being served with the motion to vacate the notice of taking depositions defendants' counsel caused subpoenas to be issued directed to the Detroit offices of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., United Artists Corporation, and Eagle Lion Films, Inc., represented as being the agents and distributors of motion pictures produced by plaintiffs, to produce at the time and place of taking of said depositions in Detroit the documentary evidence in their possession relating to the licensing for exhibition in the Detroit area.

No problem of advancing traveling costs to proposed deponents is involved in this proceeding.

Plaintiffs' first request is that the notice of taking depositions be vacated. This request must be denied in view of the provisions of Rule 26(a) of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure which authorizes either party to take depositions without leave of court if the notice to take the depositions is served more than twenty days following the commencement of the action. The notice in this case was served thirty-six days after filing of the complaint.

Plaintiffs' second request is that the depositions be taken by interrogatories. Because of the complexity and ramifications even now foreseeable in this case, it is the considered judgment of this court that interrogatories will not serve the defendants' purposes adequately. The defendants not only vigorously deny plaintiffs' suggestion that the scope of oral deposition will apparently be restricted to information contained in the assignments of contracts to plaintiffs, but charge that the proposed deponents are the dominant and controlling force in each of the plaintiff corporations and that they set the policies of the motion-picture distribution and licensing. Whether this be so or not, defendants ought to have their choice of the method to be used by them in obtaining such information as will be necessary in filing answers to the plaintiffs' complaint, and to definitely determine the issues foreshadowed by the complaint.

The alternative to plaintiffs' second request is that the place of the taking of depositions be changed from Detroit to Los Angeles. Counsel for both sides have filed exhaustive briefs on this issue. It is interesting to note that both sides quote from the same decisions to buttress their respective contentions as to place of taking the depositions. Plaintiffs' serious objection to the taking of the depositions in Detroit is the representation that the proposed deponents are engaged in production of certain moving pictures at this time and that they are unable to come to Detroit without disrupting such work to the great loss and damages of their respective organizations. This, however, can be obviated by deferring the taking of each proposed deponent's testimony by deposition until such time as each of them in turn completes the production or directing of the motion pictures now in process of being directed or produced by any proposed deponent so engaged. And, as it is not denied that most, if not all, of the proferred deponents travel to and from New York from time to time, no unusual hardship will be imposed on them by requesting their presence in Detroit for the taking of their testimony. Their agents for licensing and exhibiting their productions in the Detroit area are in Detroit with all their local records. Defendants should have the benefit of referring to these records while taking the proposed deponent's depositions in Detroit. Therefore, motion to transfer the taking of depositions from Detroit to Los Angeles will be denied.

The depositions will be taken in Detroit, as requested by defendants. Counsel may arrange the time to suit the convenience of each individual proposed deponent. In general, proposed deponents should be given a reasonable time to complete the production of the motion pictures, the making of which they are now actively engaged in, including cutting, retaking, and such other necessary work in readying the motion picture for public exhibition. Should counsel be unable to agree, the court will fix the time upon application and notice to opposing counsel.

There is one remaining problem to be resolved. Plaintiffs seek to quash the notice insofar as it purports to compel some of the proposed deponents to produce certain described documents. It is contended by plaintiffs that this can be accomplished by subpoenas duces tecum, subject to provisions of Rule 45(d). The proposed deponents have already submitted themselves to the jurisdiction and process of this court. Under the provisions of Rules 30(a) and 45 (d) (2) the court has authority to fix the place at which the order of the court is to be complied with, regardless of their residence. No claim is made by plaintiffs that the desired documents do not contain evidence material to the issues in this case. Clearly, the defendants have the undoubted right to have the described documents produced for their examination under Rule 30(a). Accordingly, defendants' notice to take depositions and to produce the documents described, will be treated as a motion to produce the documents requested, and as such it is granted.

Plaintiffs' motion to quash the notice for production of the documents at the time of taking the depositions is denied.

Proposed deponent Nebenzal is not a party to this suit. It has not been made apparent to the court that he is either an officer or a managing agent of any of the plaintiffs. The notice to take his deposition and produce documents will be vacated, without prejudice to a showing at any later time that he is an officer, director, or is acting in a managerial capacity of any of the plaintiff corporations.

An order, not inconsistent with this opinion, may be presented.

[¶ 62,343] Sun Cosmetic Shoppe Inc. v. Elizabeth Arden Sales Corporation.

Mirror Cosmetic Shoppe Inc. v. Elizabeth Arden Sales Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 47-258, 47-259. December 4, 1948.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Motion for Summary Judgment—Jurisdiction of Court—Sufficiency of Complaints.—Complaints alleging price discrimination by a New York manufacturer of cosmetics between plaintiffs, New York cosmetics dealers, and their competitors in New York, fail to meet the jurisdictional requirement of the Robinson-Patman Act, which requires that the goods or commodities be in the flow of commerce. If the goods or commodities are not wholly within that flow, they at least must be touched by it. A motion to dismiss the complaints is granted, with leave to plaintiffs to amend.

See the Robinson-Patman Act, Vol. 1, ¶ 2212.170.

For plaintiffs: Morris Siegel, New York, New York.

For defendant: Townley, Updike & Carter, J. Howard Carter, John R. Schoemer, New York, New York.

Opinion

HULBERT, D. J.: Defendant moves for summary judgment or in the alternative seeks an order dismissing the complaint in each action, urging that this court lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter of the actions and further contends that the complaints are insufficient in law.

The plaintiffs, Sun Cosmetic Shoppe Inc. and Mirror Cosmetic Shoppe Inc., are New York corporations, and bring these actions under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 13, to recover from the defendant $46,800 in each action, as treble damages for alleged violations of the Act.

Plaintiffs, engaged in the retail sale of cosmetics, allege that defendant designated plaintiffs in 1938 as agencies to sell its products, that up to May 1948 defendant represented to plaintiffs that it sold its goods to plaintiffs at the same price and upon the same terms as it was affording to plaintiffs' competitors. It is further claimed by plaintiffs that demonstrators were furnished to some of defendant's customers, who were competitors of plaintiffs, but not to the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs also allege that they continued to purchase defendant's products until May 1948, when they learned of the alleged discrimination, i. e. defendant was making rebates or allowances to plaintiffs' competitors in the City of New York and furnishing some of them with services and facilities not afforded to plaintiffs.

Defendant, Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp., is a Delaware corporation, and "it has its offices and principal place of business at 681 Fifth Avenue New York, New York." All of defendant's officers have business addresses in this state, and most of them reside here as well.

Prior to January 1, 1948 all cosmetics manufactured by Elizabeth Arden Inc., a New York corporation, were purchased from it by defendant for resale to cosmetic retailers. These cosmetics were manufactured in New York.

On January 1, 1948, defendant leased the manufacturing plant from Elizabeth Arden Inc., and since that time has manufactured the cosmetics. "It is at that location alone that Elizabeth Arden cosmetics are manufactured, packaged in containers, and made ready for shipment to retailers."

Plaintiffs' orders were made and filled in New York from stocks held by defendant at its Long Island City, N. Y., plant. Deliveries were made wholly within the City of New York, where they were offered by plaintiffs for sale to the retail trade.

On the argument of these motions it was admitted that defendant is generally engaged in interstate commerce. Defendant also admits that some of the raw materials used in the manufacture of cosmetics were acquired by Elizabeth Arden Inc. or by Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp. from sources outside the state of New York.

Defendant argues that since the wrongs complained of took place wholly within intrastate commerce there has been no violation of the Robinson-Patman Act; that merely because defendant is generally engaged in interstate commerce does not mean that defendant is subject to that Act in regard to the transactions in question here.

Plaintiff's position, on the other hand, is that since the defendant has engaged in interstate commerce generally it "thereby became amenable to the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act in all of its transactions including those that might have been local or intrastate." The transactions involved in these actions, according to plaintiffs, are part of the overall picture of interstate activity engaged in by the defendant.

The applicable sections of the statute involved in this case are subdivisions (a) dealing with unlawful price discriminations, (d) and (e) of section 1 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13, which read as follows:

"(d) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities.

"(e) It shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms." (Italics supplied.)

While the latter subdivision does not contain the clauses "engaged in commerce" and "in the course of such commerce" that subdivision (d) contains, this language is to be read into subdivision (e). Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp. v. Gus Blass Co., 150 F. (2d) 988 (C. C. A. 8th, 1945) cert. den. 326 U. S. 773; Elizabeth Arden Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 156 F. (2d) 132 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1946).

The Robinson-Patman Act grew out of an investigation made by the Federal Trade Commission, aided by a strong lobby. Its purpose was to curb the advantageous buying position of large chain stores. 46 Yale Law Journal 447. The act does not, however, affect chain stores alone; rather by the use of broad language it is applicable to all classes of marketing. 80 Cong. Record 6674 (April 30, 1936).

There is no doubt that the defendant is a "person engaged in (interstate) commerce." Thus the ultimate question for determination here is whether the transactions which form the basis of plaintiffs' causes of action occurred "in the course of such commerce."

In considering this question it is well to look into the background of the Robinson-Patman Act to determine so far as possible the Congressional intent in using the phrase. Discussing subdivision (a) of section 13 of Title 15 U. S. C. (§ 2a of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act) which contains the jurisdictional test above referred to, the Senate Report contains the following:

> "Section 2 (a) attaches to competitive relations between a given seller and his several customers, and the clause is designed to extend its scope to discriminations between interstate and intrastate customers, as well as between those purely interstate. * * * When granted by a given seller to his customers in other States and denied to those within the State, they involve the use of that interstate commerce to the burden and injury of the latter. When granted to those within the State and denied to those beyond, they involve conversely a directly resulting burden upon interstate commerce with the latter. Both are within the proper and well-recognized power of Congress to suppress." Sen. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong. 2nd Session (1936).

In discussing jurisdiction under the Act, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit said the following in Shaw's Inc. v. Wilson-Jones Co., 105 F. (2d) 331 (1939):

> "Section 2 of the Act was designed, however, to prevent interference with the current of commerce. For the provisions of the Section to be operative, goods or commodities must be in the flow of commerce, or services must have been rendered or have been contracted to be rendered in connection with goods or commodities so placed. We may surmise that if the goods or commodities are not wholly within that flow, they at least must be touched by it, affected by it, so to speak. This we think to be the limitation imposed by Congress."

This test is quite broad, but it appears to be in line with the Congressional intent in enacting the statute, as evidenced by the above quotation from the Senate Report. An examination of the complaint in this action reveals that it does not meet this test as it now stands. The facts alleged have been referred to above. The discrimination complained of is referred to [in] paragraphs eighth and eleventh which read as follows:

> "EIGHTH: That during the time that the plaintiff maintained such agency for the sale and distribution of the defendant's products, the defendant represented to the plaintiff that the goods and merchandise which it sold and would sell to the plaintiff would be sold at the same prices and upon the same terms as similar goods and merchandise which it was then selling and intended to sell to its other customers located in the City of New York, State of New York.
>
> "ELEVENTH: That subsequent to May, 1948, the plaintiff learned that the defendant had discriminated against it in the price of the goods and merchandise sold to it, and had paid and contracted to pay to its competitors in the City of New York, State of New York, by rebate or allowance, something of value, and furnished to a number of its competitors in the City of New York, services and facilities connected with the sale and offering for sale of such goods and merchandise so purchased upon terms not accorded to the plaintiff, * * *." (Italics supplied.)

It is to be noted that all the discrimination alleged in the complaint was between the plaintiffs and its competitors in the City of New York. However, on the argument of the motion, and in their brief, plaintiffs aver that they were "in competition with similar establishments in the State of New York, New Jersey, and other states." And "Demonstrators' services were furnished to many of defendant's customers in the City and State of New York and in other States of the United States."

The court, in its reluctance to dismiss a pleading, often follows one of two courses: (1) it exercises its discretion under Rule 12 and defers the determination of any legal issues raised thereunder by motion until the trial, cf. Equitable Life Insurance Society v. Saftlas, 35 F. Supp. 62 (E. D. Penn., 1940); Dysart v. Remington Rand Inc., 31 F. Supp. 296 (D. Conn., 1939); Hawn v. America S. S. Co., 26 F. Supp. 428 (W. D. N. Y., 1939); or (2) the court may grant the motion to dismiss the pleading but grant the pleader leave to amend his pleading to correct the defects, cf. Rule 15 (a). F. R. C. P.

It appears that if plaintiffs amend their complaints to include the allegations made on the argument of this motion, the jurisdictional defects of the complaints will be remedied.

In accordance with the foregoing discussion the motions to dismiss the complaints are granted with leave to the plaintiffs to amend the complaints within 20 days after entry of an order hereon.

In view of this disposition of the motion to dismiss the complaints, the motion for summary judgment is denied without prejudice, and defendant's time to answer is hereby extended to 20 days subsequent to the filing of the amended complaint.

Settle order on notice.

[¶ 62,344] Office Machine Dealers Ass'n of New York, Inc. v. Tytell Typewriter Co., Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, Special Term, Part III. 120 N. Y. L. J. 119. December 22, 1948.

New York Fair Trade Act

Motion for Injunction—Disputed Facts—Proper Party.—An application for injunctive relief under the Fair Trade Act is denied where the facts are in such sharp dispute that the drastic relief sought may not be granted on motion. Defendant's contention that plaintiff trade association is not a proper party is overruled. Since it has been held that a retailer may obtain relief under Section 369-b of the Act, it follows that an association of retailers is a proper party.

See the New York Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.30, and the Resale Price Maintenance Commentary, Vol. 2, ¶ 7361.

[Application for Injunction]

COHALAN, J.: This is an application for injunction relief under the Fair Trade Law. The application is denied. Plaintiffs, if they so elect, may, however, have an early trial, in which event the clerk, upon payment of his proper fees, is directed to accept a note of issue setting the cause down for the tenth court day after the joinder of issue. The facts are in such sharp dispute that the drastic relief sought will not be granted on motion. Defendant's contention that the plaintiff trade association is not a proper party within section 369-b is overruled. It has been held that a retailer may obtain relief under this section. It would seem to follow, therefore, that an association of retailers would be a proper party. Order signed.

[¶ 62,345] Excelsior Laboratory, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 76—October Term, 1948. Decided December 20, 1948.

Petition by Excelsior Laboratory, Inc. to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission. Petition dismissed and enforcement granted.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Petition to Set Aside Order Denied—Sufficiency of Evidence.—Petition to set aside a Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting misrepresentation as to the therapeutic value of a medicinal preparation designated "Gosewisch's Odorless Garlic Tablets" as a remedy for high blood pressure is denied. There was sufficient evidence based on expert testimony to show that it was deceptive to use the word "Garlic" as a distinguishing part of the name of the preparation when the average garlic oil content of each tablet was 1.5 millionth of a gram, and that garlic has no therapeutic value in the treatment of high blood pressure or its symptoms.

Petition to set aside Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order denied in Dkt. 5394.

See Federal Trade Commission Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 6125.378, 6630.37.

For petitioner: Frank & Frank, David Frank, of counsel.

For respondent: W. T. Kelley, General Counsel, James W. Cassedy, Assistant General Counsel, A. B. Hobbes, Special Attorney.

Before SWAN, CHASE and FRANK, Circuit Judges.

[Nature of Action]

CHASE, Circuit Judge: After due notice and hearings, the Federal Trade Commission found upon adequate evidence that the petitioner manufactured at its plant on Staten Island in New York a product which it sold and distributed in interstate commerce as "Gosewisch's Odorless Garlic Tablets" by means in part of advertisements in newspapers and periodicals published in various states. By these advertisements, and otherwise, the petitioner represented that the use of the tablets was an effective treatment for the effects of high blood pressure, including symptoms of dullness, tiredness, nervousness, dizziness and involuntary naps. The therapeutic value of the garlic in tablets as a remedy for such disorders was emphasized together with the opportunity the use of these tablets afforded to obtain the benefit of garlic treatment without fear of having an offensive breath.

The Commission also found upon undisputed evidence, which the petitioner contends was nevertheless inadequate, that the tablets contained but a negligible amount of garlic and that garlic has no therapeutic value in the treatment of high blood pressure or its symptoms.

[Practices Prohibited by Order]

It ordered the petitioner forthwith to cease and desist from:

"1. Disseminating or causing to be disseminated by means of the United States mails or by any means in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, any advertisement which:

(a) Represents, directly or by implication, that respondent's preparation possesses any therapeutic value in the treatment of high blood pressure or the symptoms thereof, or any other pathological condition;

(b) Represents, directly or by implication, that garlic possessed any therapeutic value in the treatment of high blood pressure or the symptoms thereof;

(c) Uses the word 'Garlic' or any other word of similar import in the product name of any preparation not containing a substantial quantity of garlic; or otherwise uses the word 'Garlic' or any simulation thereof in such manner as to represent or imply when such is not the fact, that a preparation contains garlic in substantial quantity.

(2) Disseminating or causing to be disseminated any advertisement by any means for the purpose of inducing or which is likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of respondent's preparation in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, which advertisement contains any representative prohibited in paragraph 1 (a), 1 (b), or 1 (c) above."

Thereupon this petition was duly filed to review and set aside the order. The Commission has opposed the petition and requested its affirmance and enforcement as provided in § 5 (c) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 52 Stat. 112, 15 U. S. C. § 45 (c).

[Cases Cited]

It is familiar law that the findings of the Commission are conclusive if there is substantial support for them in the evidence. Benton Announcements Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 2 Cir., 130 F. 2d 254. Moreover, reasonable inferences drawn from facts found on substantial evidence are adequate to support findings. Federal Trade Commission v. Pacific States Paper Trade Ass'n, 273 U. S. 52, 63. And when there is room for choice among reasonable inferences which may be drawn the Commission may make the choice which in its best judgment should be made. Phelps Dodge Refining Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 2 Cir., 139 F. 2d 393, 395; National Labor Relations Board v. Nevada Consolidated Copper Corp., 316 U. S. 105.

[Problem Presented]

The problem here presented is, therefore, not so much one of law as one of fact and we shall go directly to the record to see what evidence there was to support the findings.

[Testimony by Experts]

A chemist, Dr. Wright, who had been employed by the government continuously since 1912 "mostly on the analysis of drugs and related products" distilled with steam two hundred of the tablets, the average weight of each being 0.609 of a gram, and found that the distillate contained less than 0.0003 of a gram of garlic oil. The remainder consisted of substances other than garlic oil, and for the most part of sucrose; the residue insoluble in water was 0.34%. He testified that this amount of garlic oil in two hundred tablets showed that the average garlic oil content of each tablet was 1.5 millionth of a gram.

Another chemist who had been employed by the government since 1937 examining food and drug products to determine their content received from Dr. Wright three of the whole tablets and the residue of solids insoluble in water left when Dr. Wright made his analysis. This second chemist made a microscopic examination of this residue and found that it "consisted of insoluble siliceous particles and a small amount of plant tissues closely resembling garlic." He testified that the identification of these plant tissues could not be more definite "because the particles were so scarce." Also that the "amount of plant tissues in the tablet was extremely small compared to the bulk of the tablet."

A doctor of medicine who had been employed in the United States Public Health Service since 1923 as a pharmacologist studying the action of drugs on health and disease testified that he was familiar with the garlic tablets of the petitioner. He testified that in the treatment of disorders caused by an above normal increase of blood pressure garlic had been used and years ago was thought to be beneficial. Modern controlled scientific tests had, however, shown otherwise. When asked whether the quantity of garlic or garlic oil in these tablets was of any therapeutic value he testified, "It would be too small to be of any pharmacological action in any dose that you could give of the tablet. Even if the dose were a hundred times greater however, I would feel that there would be no therapeutic value to be expected from the extract."

[Sufficient Evidence to Support Commission's Findings]

These witnesses were qualified experts. Cross-examination of them left this positive testimony unretracted and the petitioner did not offer any evidence at all. The Commission was free to believe and base findings upon it as it did. It, with the other evidence in the record was, if believed, undoubtedly sufficient to support findings which the Commission made to the effect that petitioner's advertisements were "erroneous, and misleading and * * * false" and that the use of "Garlic" on the name of the tablets was a representation that there was a substantial amount of garlic in their content. That being so, the findings are to be given effect. They show that it was deceptive to use the word "garlic" as a distinguishing part of the name of the preparation and the Commission was justified in forbidding its use unless the garlic content was increased to a substantial amount. Even if the descriptive part of the petitioner's trade-name and advertising had been accurate the ascription of therapeutic properties would have been deceptive and its prohibition justified.

[Petition to Set Aside Order Denied]

Petition to set aside the order denied and prayer for its enforcement granted.

[¶ 62,346] United States v. Bendix Home Appliances, Inc. and Telecoin Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 39-247. December 17, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Restrictive Distribution System—Practices Enjoined.—A consent judgment entered against a manufacturer of automatic washing machines and a distributor of those washing machines for rental purposes terminates certain restrictive distribution arrangements between the manufacturer, its distributors and dealers. The defendants are ordered to cancel agreements under which the defendant distributor is required to buy all of its automatic washing machines from the defendant manufacturer, and under which the manufacturer is prohibited from selling washing machines for rental purposes to any one other than the defendant distributor. Arrangements by which a distributor of the manufacturer's products is confined to a designated territory and is prohibited from reselling or servicing machines outside the designated territory are ordered terminated. The defendant distributor is prohibited from limiting the number of rental machines any operator may purchase or lease and from controlling the location at which any such machine may be installed.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.40, 1590, and the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2023.

For plaintiff: Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; John F. X. McGohey, United States Attorney; Sigmund Timberg, Manuel M. Gorman, J. Francis Hayden, Irving B. Glickfeld, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

For defendants: Goldwater & Flynn; Hawkins, Delafield & Wood.

Final Judgment

The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on December 13, 1946, both of the defendants having appeared and severally filed their answers to such complaint, denying the substantive allegations thereof, all parties hereto, by their respective attorneys herein, having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party in respect to any such issue:

NOW, THEREFORE, without any testimony or evidence having been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and upon the consent of the parties hereto, the court being advised and having considered the matter;

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

[Jurisdiction]

I

This court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties hereto; the complaint states a cause of action against the defendants under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress dated July 2, 1890, as amended, commonly known as the Sherman Act, and under Section 3 of the Act of Congress of October 15, 1914, as amended, commonly known as the Clayton Act.

[Terms Defined]

II

When used in this final judgment, the following terms have the meanings assigned respectively to them below:

(A) "Bendix" means defendant, BENDIX HOME APPLIANCES, INC., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with offices and principal place of business at South Bend, Indiana.

(B) "Telecoin" means defendant, TELECOIN CORPORATION, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with offices and principal place of business in New York City, New York.

(C) "Machine" means an automatic washing machine which washes, rinses and damp dries clothes automatically, and any parts thereof.

(D) "Bendix Laundry" means a machine sold under the name of defendant Bendix.

(E) "Rental Machine" means a machine used for commercial purposes, or otherwise than in ordinary home use. Rental machines are used in the following ways, among others: by multiple patrons in apartment, store, or public laundry locations, or in hospitals, industrial plants, and in similar institutions.

(F) "Person" means any individual, firm or corporation.

(G) "Distributor" means a person who purchases machines from Bendix for resale.

(H) "Dealer" means a person who purchases Bendix laundries from distributors for resale.

(I) "Operator" means a person engaged in the business of renting rental machnies. Operators usually install their rental machines in apartment, store or public laundry locations.

[Applicability of Provisions]

III

The provisions of this judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to its subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to each of their officers, directors, agents, nominees, or employees, and to any other person acting under, through, or for such defendant.

[Agreements Ordered Terminated]

IV

Defendant Bendix be, and it hereby is, directed to terminate and cancel all contracts, understandings and agreements concerning machines with its distributors whereby, and is enjoined and restrained from entering into, maintaining, enforcing or adhering to any contract, understanding or agreement concerning machines by which, any distributor is excluded from any designated territory; or by which any distributor is required, induced or agrees:

A. Not to resell, service, or repair Bendix Laundries outside of any designated territory; or

B. To pay a penalty or become subject to any discrimination because of sales, rentals or services made or performed by the distributor outside of any designated territory; or

C. To use or sell for use in the repair or servicing of Bendix Laundries only parts manufactured by or approved by Bendix; or

D. To resell machines only to or through dealers approved or suggested by Bendix.

E. Not to sell machines for use as rental machines other than to or through Telecoin, or through any other person designated by Bendix; or

F. To sell identical parts to any operator at higher or lower prices than to any other operator; or

G. To sell Bendix Laundries at prices fixed by Bendix or at not less than minimum prices stipulated by Bendix.

[Future Practices Enjoined]

V

Defendant Bendix be, and it hereby is, directed to advise distributors to terminate and cancel all contracts, understandings and agreements whereby, and is enjoined and restrained from entering into, maintaining, enforcing, adhering to, requiring or suggesting any future practice, contract, understanding or agreement by which, any dealer is required, induced or agrees:

A. Not to resell, service or repair machines outside of any designated territory; or

B. To pay a penalty or become subject to any discrimination because of sales, rentals or services made by the dealer outside of any designated territory; or

C. Not to sell machines for use as rental machines; or

D. To use or sell for use in the repair or servicing of Bendix Laundries only parts manufactured or approved by Bendix; or

E. To sell Bendix Laundries at prices fixed by Bendix or at not less than minimum prices stipulated by Bendix.

[Agreements Ordered Terminated]

VI

Defendants Bendix and Telecoin be, and they hereby are, directed to terminate and cancel any contracts, understandings and agreements between them whereby, and are enjoined and restrained from entering into, maintaining, enforcing or adhering to any contract, understanding or agreement by which:

A. Telecoin has or acquires the sole and exclusive right to buy rental machines, provided that this provision does not apply to or affect, or determine the legality or illegality of, the contract entered into between defendant Bendix and defendant Telecoin on April 14, 1948; or

B. Bendix induces or causes its distributors to sell machines exclusively to Telecoin for use as rental machines; or

C. Telecoin uses only Bendix Laundries; or

D. Telecoin submits to Bendix agreements it executes with operators.

VII

A. Defendant Telecoin be, and it hereby is, directed to terminate and cancel all contracts, understandings and agreements with operators whereby, and is enjoined and restrained from entering into, maintaining, enforcing by litigation or otherwise or adhering to any contract, understanding or agreement by which:

1. Telecoin limits or restricts the number of rental machines any operator may purchase, lease or operate; or

2. Telecoin limits or restricts the location at which any operator may install or operate rental machines; or

3. Any operator is required, induced or agrees not to resell or remove rental machines; or

4. Any operator is required, induced or agrees to purchase soap, laundry bags and other materials and accessories to be used in connection with the operation of the rental machines exclusively or preponderantly from Telecoin, or from any source or sources designated by Telecoin; or

5. Telecoin agrees not to sell or lease or refuse to sell or lease rental machines to any person because such machines are to be installed or used in any existing operator's territory; or

6. Any operator is required, induced or agrees to obtain Telecoin's approval in connection with the installation or use of rental machines; or

7. Any operator is required, induced or agrees to buy, sell or use only parts manufactured or approved by Bendix; or

8. Any operator is required, induced or agrees to purchase parts only from a distributor or other source designated by Bendix or Telecoin; or

9. Any operator is required, induced or agrees to buy parts at prices fixed by Bendix or Telecoin; or

10. Any operator is required, induced or agrees to charge rental fees for the use of rental machines in accordance with terms and conditions fixed or determined by Bendix or Telecoin.

B. Defendant Telecoin be, and it hereby is, enjoined and restrained from selling or leasing rental machines in any manner unless it sells or leases them to all bona fide operator applicants and without any discrimination whatsoever.

C. Defendant Telecoin be, and it hereby is, enjoined and restrained from selling or leasing rental machines upon any condition whatsoever other than payment of purchase price on a sale or rental fee on a lease.

VIII

Nothing in this judgment shall prevent defendants Bendix and Telecoin from availing themselves of the benefits, if any, of the Act of Congress of 1937, commonly called the Miller-Tydings proviso to Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies."

[Copies of Judgment]

IX

Defendant Bendix be, and it hereby is, directed to cause copies of this final judgment to be mailed, postage prepaid, within fifteen (15) days from the effective date of this judgment, to each of its distributors, and to dealers through its distributors.

X

Defendant Telecoin be, and it hereby is, directed to cause copies of this final judgment to be mailed, postage prepaid, within fifteen (15) days from the effective date of this judgment to each of its operators.

[Inspection Authorized]

XI

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice, upon the written request of the Attorney General or Assistant Attorney General, and on reasonable notice to the defendants made to their principal offices, shall be permitted: (a) access, during the office hours of said defendants, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession of or under the control of said defendants relating to any of the matters contained in this judgment, such access to be subject to any legally recognized privilege; and (b) subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendants and without restraint or interference from them, to interview officers or employees of defendants, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment any defendant upon the written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, and upon reasonable notice to its principal office, shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this paragraph shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

XII

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to the court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, for the amendment, modification, or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 62,347] Opinion of the Attorney General of Wisconsin.

Addressed to Kenneth L. Swanson, District Attorney, Ellsworth, Wisconsin, by —— Attorney General. Vol. ——, page 530. September 16, 1948.

Wisconsin Fair Trade Act

Marketing and Trade Practices—Trading Stamps.—The use of trading stamps if given with the purchase of a product as to which a valid minimum resale price has been established by the producer or distributor is prohibited by the Trading Stamp Law, sec. 100.15(2), Stats. if the sale price less the cash value of the stamps is less than the minimum resale price so fixed under the Fair Trade Act.

See the Commentary on Resale Price Maintenance, Vol. 2, ¶ 7314, and the Wisconsin Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8944.

[Question]

You inquire whether the following situation constitutes a violation of the trading stamp law, sec. 100.15, Stats.

Several Ellsworth and River Falls merchants, dealing respectively in drugs, feed, clothing, furniture, hardware, photography and a filling station, have joined in a plan to give trading stamps to customers at the rate of one for each 10 cents of merchandise or services purchased. Customers are given booklets containing 60 pages, on each of which 25 stamps may be pasted. When the book is half filled it will be redeemed for $1.50 or when entirely filled, for $3. According to pictures submitted with your request the stamps appear to bear no cash value on their face but do not appear to be redeemable in merchandise. The scheme is said to represent a 2 per cent cash discount.

[Trading Stamp Law]

Section 100.15 (1), Stats., provides, so far as is material here, as follows:

"No person, firm, corporation, or association within this state shall use, give, offer, issue, transfer, furnish, deliver, or cause or authorize to be furnished or delivered to any other person, firm, corporation, or association within this state, in connection with the sale of any goods, wares or merchandise, any trading stamp, token, ticket, bond, or other similar device, which shall entitle the purchaser receiving the same to procure any goods, wares, merchandise privilege, or thing of value in exchange for any such trading stamp, token, ticket, bond, or other similar device, except that any manufacturer, packer, or dealer may issue any slip, ticket, or check with the sale of any goods, wares or merchandise, which slip, ticket or check shall bear upon its face a stated cash value and shall be redeemable only in cash for the amount stated thereon, upon presentation in amounts aggregating twenty-five cents or over of redemption value, and only by the person, firm or corporation issuing the same * * *."

Since the stamps do not bear on their face a stated cash redemption value, and are not redeemable in amounts aggregating 25 cents or more, the plan is clearly illegal under this section so far as it applies to sales of merchandise but not as applied to services. See XX Op. Atty. Gen. 1107.

[Fair Trade Act]

You inquire further whether the use of these stamps may be in violation of sec. 100.15 (2) if given with the purchase of a product as to which a minimum resale price has been fixed or established by the producer or distributor, if the sale price less the cash value of the stamps is less than the minimum resale price so fixed. This situation is fully covered in the case of Ed. Schuster & Co. v. Steffes, (1941) 237 Wis. 41, 295 N. W. 737, 133 A. L. R. 1071. Under that decision such use of the stamps is prohibited by sec. 100.15 (2) if a valid minimum resale price has been fixed under the fair trade act, sec. 133.25, Stats.

[¶ 62,348] Opinion of the Attorney General of Minnesota.

Addressed to James W. Clark, Commissioner, Department of Business Research and Development, by J. A. A. Burnquist, Attorney General, Charles E. Houston, Assistant Attorney General. December 30, 1948.

Minnesota Trusts and Combinations Law

Refusal to Sell—No Agreement or Understanding—No Violation Disclosed.—The refusal of a corporation manufacturing, distributing and servicing business machines, on which it holds patents, to sell repair parts to independent service repairmen does not violate the Minnesota Trusts and Combinations Law. In the absence of an agreement or understanding with another corporation, by virtue of which agreement the corporation refuses to sell to independent repairmen, there is no violation of the provision which prohibits the making of agreements in restraint of trade. The statute does not compel a concern to do business with persons with whom it does not choose to deal.

See the Minnesota Trusts and Combinations Law, Vol. 2, ¶ 8435.

[Facts]

Your letter of December 28 informs the Attorney General that it has come to your attention that:

"A corporation manufacturing, distributing and servicing business machines, on which it holds numerous United States patents, refuses to sell repair parts to independent service repairmen who have the requisite skills and abilities to repair and service the business machines sold by the aforementioned manufacturer and distributor. This refusal makes it impossible for independent service repairmen to obtain the requisite parts required to maintain the business machines owned by their customers and is in fact forcing them out of business."

You have submitted the question:

Question

Do these facts disclose that the corporation conducts such business in violation of M. S. A., Sec. 623.01?

Opinion

So far as the facts disclose, it does not appear that the corporation has entered into any pool, trust agreement, combination, or understanding with another by virtue of which agreement it conducts its business as disclosed. The facts stated fail to disclose that any agreement has been made between the corporation and another which tends in any way or degree to limit, fix, control, maintain or regulate the price of any article of trade, manufacture, or use bought and sold within the state. Such facts do not disclose that an agreement has been made which limits or tends to limit the production of any article. They do not disclose that any such agreement has been made which prevents or limits competition in the purchase or sale of any article. They do not disclose that the corporation has made an agreement which tends or is designed to do any of the things mentioned.

It appears to me that the most that can be said concerning this state of facts is that the corporation selects the person with whom it chooses to do business. It is not a public service corporation as disclosed by the facts. An individual or corporation not operating a public utility does not hold itself out to the public as offering to do business with all persons who may choose to do business with it.

We have statutes which prevent discrimination between different sections of the state by selling a commodity, such as petroleum or its products, at a lower rate in one section than is charged for the same commodity by such party in another section after making due allowance for the difference, if any, in the quality and cost of transportation. For example, see M. S. A., Sec. 623.08. But this statute does not compel the owner of the petroleum to sell to any one who applies to buy it. It relates merely to the price.

But Sec. 623.01 relates to the agreement itself and prohibits the making of agreements in restraint of trade. It does not by its terms prohibit discrimination on the part of vendors between purchasers.

Although not on the precise point here considered, the case of Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company v. Paine & Nixon Company, 182 Minn. 159, decided in 1930, considered this statute. The opinion of the court is interesting. It was there held that this statute in relation to the restraint of trade, etc., should be construed in the light of reason; and, so construed, the contract mentioned in the opinion, which restrained trade and limited competition in a reasonable way only, was not obnoxious to the statute.

[No Violation of Statute]

It is my conclusion that a corporation manufacturing, distributing and servicing business machines on which it holds patents may, if it chooses, refuse to sell repair parts to independent service repairmen who have the requisite skills and abilities to repair and service the business machines sold by the manufacturer or distributor. This statute does not compel such concern to do business with persons with whom it does not choose to deal.

[¶ 62,349] United States v. Bendix Aviation Corporation, Westinghouse Air Brake Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 44-284. December 22, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Braking System Industry—Acquisition of Shares in Co-defendant Prohibited.—A consent judgment entered in an action charging several manufacturers of braking systems with conspiring to monopolize the automotive and industrial brake business in violation of the Sherman Act, prohibits one of the defendants from acquiring further shares in or participating in the business acts of one of the corporate defendants.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1220.211, 1530, 1590.

Consent Judgment—Braking System Industry—Price Fixing and Related Practices.—The defendant, a manufacturer of braking systems, is restrained from contracting with any other manufacturer in this field so as to allocate markets, restrict the importation or exportation of braking systems, or fix prices.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.10.

Consent Judgment—Braking System Industry—Exclusive Dealing Prohibited.—A consent judgment enjoins a manufacturer of braking systems from entering into agreements designed to supress competition, from attaching monopolistic conditions to the sale of the product, and from cancelling dealer contracts because the dealer refuses to deal exlusively with the defendant.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.40.

Consent Judgment—Braking System Industry—Patent Monopolies—Action for Patent Infringement Abrogated.—Legal action by a manufacturer of braking systems for infringement of any braking patent is forbidden and the defendant is required to license its existing automotive brake patents to all applicants on a royalty-free basis and to license all patents acquired or applied for during the next five years on a reasonable royalty basis.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.50.

For plaintiff: Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; Sigmund Timberg, Special Assistant to the Attorney General; John F. X. McGohey, United States Attorney; J. Francis Hayden, Marcus A. Hollabaugh, Irving Glickfeld, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

For the defendant Westinghouse Air Brake Company: Bruce Bromley of Cravath, Swaine & Moore; Homer Cummings of Cummings, Stanley, Truitt & Cross.

Final Judgment

JOHN C. KNOX, United States District Judge: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on December 9, 1947; the defendant, Westinghouse Air Brake Company, having appeared and filed its answer to such complaint denying any violation of law; plaintiff and defendant Westinghouse Air Brake Company by their respective attorneys herein having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or of law and without admission by either party herein in respect of any such issue;

NOW, THEREFORE, before any testimony has been taken herein and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of plaintiff and defendant Westinghouse Air Brake Company, it is hereby

Ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

[Jurisdiction]

I

That this Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of all parties hereto; that the complaint states a cause of action against the defendant Westinghouse Air Brake Company under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," as amended, commonly known as the Sherman Act, and under Section 3 of the Act of Congress of October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to Supplement Existing Laws Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies and for other Purposes," commonly known as the Clayton Act.

[Terms Defined]

II

As used in this judgment:

"Bendix" means Bendix Aviation Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal place of business at South Bend, Indiana;

"B-W" means Bendix-Westinghouse Automotive Air Brake Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal place of business at Elyria, Ohio;

"Westinghouse" means Westinghouse Air Brake Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania with its principal place of business at Wilmerding, Pennsylvania;

"Person" means any individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association, trustee, or any other business or legal entity;

"Braking system" or "braking systems" means any apparatus, and each part thereof, by which an automotive vehicle outside of the railway field is brought to a stop.

"Braking system patents" means all United States Letters Patent and Applications therefor, all reissues, divisions, continuations or extensions thereof, and patents issued upon said applications, owned or controlled by defendant Westinghouse, covering braking systems.

[Applicability of Provisions]

III

The provisions of this judgment applicable to defendant Westinghouse shall apply to defendant Westinghouse, its officers, directors, agents, employees, successors, assigns, and all other persons acting under, through or for Westinghouse.

[Acts Enjoined]

IV

Defendant Westinghouse is hereby enjoined and restrained from:

(1) Instituting or threatening to institute, or maintaining or continuing any action or proceeding for acts of infringement of any braking system patent occurring prior to the date of this judgment.

(2) Bringing against any person any action or proceeding for acts of infringement of any braking system patent (other than those listed in Schedule A attached hereto) owned or controlled by defendant Westinghouse and issued or applied for within five years after the entry of this judgment, unless such person has refused to enter into a license agreement as provided for in Section VI of this judgment after being requested so to do by defendant Westinghouse.

[Patent Licensing Required]

V

Defendant Westinghouse is ordered and directed, in so far as it has the power to do so, to grant to any applicant therefor, a non-exclusive royalty-free license under any, some, or all of the patents listed in Schedule A, which license shall continue during the entire term of such patent. Defendant Westinghouse is furthermore enjoined and restrained from making any disposition of any of said patents which deprives it of the power or authority to grant such licenses, unless it sells, transfers or assigns such patents and requires, assignment, that the purchaser, transferee or assignee thereof shall observe the provisions of Sections IV and V of this judgment with respect to the patents so acquired and the purchaser, transferee or assignee shall file with this Court, prior to consummation of said transaction, an undertaking to be bound by the provisions of said Sections IV and V of this judgment with respect to patents so acquired.

VI

A. Defendant Westinghouse is hereby ordered and directed, in so far as it has the power to do so, to grant to any applicant therefor a non-exclusive license under any, some, or all braking system patents (other than those listed in Schedule A attached hereto [omitted herein]) now owned or controlled by Westinghouse and issued or applied for within five years from the date of this judgment, and is hereby enjoined and restrained from making any sale or other disposition of any of said patents which deprives it of the power or authority to grant such licenses, unless it sells, transfers or assigns such patents and requires a condition of such sale, transfer or assignment that the purchaser, transferee, or assignee shall observe the requirements of this Section of this judgment with respect to the patents so acquired and the purchaser, transferee, or assignee shall file with this Court, prior to consummation of said transaction, an undertaking to be bound by the provisions of this Section of this judgment with respect to the patent so acquired.

B. Defendant Westinghouse is hereby enjoined and restrained from including any restriction or condition whatsoever in any license or sublicense granted by it pursuant to the provisions of this Section except that (1) the license may be non-transferable; (2) a reasonable non-discriminatory royalty may be charged; (3) reasonable provisions may be made for periodic inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor or any person acceptable to the licensee who shall report to the licensor only the amount of the royalty due and payable; (4) reasonable provision may be made for cancellation of the license upon failure of the licensee to pay the royalties or to permit the inspection of his books and records as hereinabove provided; (5) the license must provide that the licensee may cancel the license at any time after one year from the initial date thereof by giving thirty days' notice in writing to the licensor.

C. Upon receipt of a written request for a license under the provisions of this Section, defendant Westinghouse shall advise the applicant in writing of the royalty which it deems reasonable for the patent or patents to which the request pertains. If the parties are unable to agree upon a reasonable royalty within 60 days from the date such request for the license was received by defendant Westinghouse, the applicant therefor may forthwith apply to this Court for the determination of a reasonable royalty, and defendant Westinghouse shall, upon receipt of notice of the filing of such application, promptly give notice thereof to the Attorney General. In any such proceeding, the burden of proof shall be on defendant Westinghouse to establish the reasonableness of the royalty requested, and the reasonable royalty rates, if any, determined by this Court shall apply to the applicant and all other licensees under the same patent or patents. Pending the completion of negotiations or any such proceeding, the applicant shall have the right to make, use and vend under the patents to which its application pertains without payment of royalty or other compensation as above provided, but subject to the provisions of Subsection D of this Section.

D. Where the applicant has the right to make, use and vend under any patents pursuant to Subsection C of this Section, said applicant or defendant Westinghouse may apply to this Court to fix an interim royalty rate pending final determination of what constitutes a reasonable royalty. If this Court fixes such interim royalty rate, defendant Westinghouse shall then issue and the applicant shall accept a license or, as the case may be, a sublicense, providing for the periodic payment of royalties at such interim rate from the date of the filing of such application by the applicant. If the applicant fails to accept such license or fails to pay the interim royalty in accordance therewith, such action shall be ground for the dismissal of his application, and his rights under Subsection C shall terminate. Where an interim license or sublicense has been issued pursuant to this Subsection, reasonable royalty rates, if any, as finally determined by this Court shall be retroactive for the applicant and all other licensees under the same patents to the date the applicant files his application with this Court.

E. Nothing herein shall prevent any applicant from attacking in the aforesaid proceedings or in any other controversy, the validity or scope of any of the patents nor shall this judgment be construed as importing any validity or value to any of the said patents.

[Agreements Terminated]

VII

A. The following agreements, and any agreements or arrangements amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto having been terminated:

(1) Agreement dated April 1, 1932, between B-W and Canadian Westinghouse Company, Ltd;

(2) Agreement executed August 28, 1934, between B-W and Compagnie des Freins Westinghouse;

(3) Agreement executed August 28, 1934, between B-W and Westinghouse Bremsen, g. m. b. h.;

(4) Agreement executed August 28, 1934, between B-W and Westinghouse Brake & Saxby Signal Co., Ltd.;

(5) Agreement executed September 4, 1934, between B-W and Campagnia Italiana Westinghouse Freni a Signali, defendant Westinghouse is hereby enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program which has as its purpose or effect the continuing or renewing of any of the agreements above listed.

B. Defendant Westinghouse is hereby enjoined and restrained from the performance of the so-called "1931 agreement" between B-W and Westinghouse Pacific Coast Brake Company of California, which agreement, made effective as of January 1, 1931, consists of a transmittal letter dated June 12, 1931 of a service sales agreement executed April 22, 1931 and two memoranda of conferences dated February 23rd and 25th, 1931, and any agreements or arrangements amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto. Defendant Westinghouse is further enjoined and restrained from enfering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, or claiming any rights under, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program which has as its prupose or effect the continuing or renewing of the said so-called 1931 agreement.

[Acts Enjoined]

VIII

A. Defendant Westinghouse is hereby enjoined from:

(1) Acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, any increased proportion of the ownership or beneficial interest in any shares of stock in B-W beyond that presently held by defendant Westinghouse in B-W;

(2) Participating in, controlling or directing, in any manner whatsoever, any commercial policy or act of B-W, except as contemplated in subparagraph (3) following;

(3) After the first regular meeting of the stockholders of B-W held after entry of this judgment, causing, authorizing or permitting any director, officer, employee or agent of defendant Westinghouse, or any other person having any affiliation with or interest in defendant Westinghouse, to serve as a director, officer, employee or agent of B-W.

B. In order to carry out the provisions of Subsection A(2) and (3) of this Section:

(1) Defendant Westinghouse is hereby enjoined and restrained from exercising the right to vote the stock it holds in B-W except for the purpose of electing two directors of B-W (hereinafter referred to as "the Westinghouse directors") at the regular annual stockholders' meeting held for such purpose, and except for such necessary business acts as, under B-W's certificate of incorporation, require the vote of the Westinghouse stock in B-W to be effectuated and are approved by the Attorney General;

(2) The Westinghouse directors are to have no affiliation with or interest in defendant Westinghouse, which absence of affiliation and interest is to be certified to by affidavits of defendant Westinghouse filed with this Court, and are to perform their duties in accordance with the provisions of this judgment;

(3) Removal or replacement of the Westinghouse directors shall only be for cause shown to this Court, with opportunity for hearing by the plaintiff and the defendant Westinghouse. Both the election and removal of the Westinghouse directors shall be subject to the approval of this Court, upon reasonable notice to the Attorney General.

C. After entry of a judgment terminating this action against Bendix and after expiration of the time period for review, if any, of such judgment, defendant Westinghouse shall have the right to apply to this Court for whatever modification of the provisions of Subsections A and B of this Section VIII it considers appropriate and to be heard and to present any relevant facts thereon. Defendant Westinghouse shall give the Attorney General reasonable notice of such application and, upon the hearing of such application, plaintiff shall have the right to make such recommendations as it considers appropriate and to present any relevant facts thereon.

D. In the event of a finding by this Court, upon motion by the Attorney General, that any of the preceding subsections of this Section VIII have been violated, defendant Westinghouse shall be required within ninety (90) days of such finding to submit for the approval of this Court a plan to establish a trust under which a trustee, acting independently of defendant Westinghouse, shall exercise all the powers and voting rights in any and all shares of stock in B-W held or owned by defendant Westinghouse. Upon approval of this Court of such a plan, this Court shall appoint a trustee who shall have no affiliation or interest, direct or indirect, with defendant Westinghouse. Such trustee shall act as an officer of the Court and under its direction and shall assume the obligation of exercising all necessary and appropriate powers vested in him so as to conform with the provisions of this judgment and, consistently therewith, to protect the financial investment of defendant Westinghouse in B-W.

IX

Without in any way affecting the relief which the plaintiff may subsequently obtain against B-W and Bendix:

A. Defendant Westinghouse is hereby enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any manufacturer of braking systems, their officers, directors, employees, or agents to:—

(1) Allocate or divide territories, markets or fields of production for the distribution, sale or use of braking systems;

(2) Restrict or prevent the importation into or exportation from the United States, its territories or dependencies of braking systems;

(3) Fix, determine, maintain or adhere to prices, differentials, discounts or other terms or conditions of sale of braking systems to or by others.

B. Defendant Westinghouse is hereby enjoined and restrained from:

(1) Refraining from competing in the manufacture, sale or distribution of braking systems on the condition that any person will not compete with defendant Westinghouse in the manufacture, distribution or sale of compressed air brakes for other uses and purposes;

(2) Conditioning the sale, distribution or use, or any discount, differential or other term or condition of sale of braking systems upon:

(i) the purchaser, distributor or user not buying, selling, using, servicing or distributing braking systems for others than defendant Westinghouse, or braking systems made or sold by others than defendant Westinghouse;

(ii) the purchaser or user compelling or influencing manufacturers to install only braking systems manufactured or sold by defendant Westinghouse;

(iii) the purchaser or user using only replacement parts manufactured or sold by defendant Westinghouse.

(3) Cancelling or threatening to cancel any dealer or distributor contract or arrangement, refusing to deal with or in any way discriminating against any dealer, distributor, purchaser or user, because such dealer distributor, purchaser or user distributes, deals in or uses braking systems manufactured or sold by others than defendant Westinghouse.

[Inspection for Compliance Purposes]

X

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, and on reasonable notice to defendant Westinghouse, made to its principal office, be permitted subject to any legally recognized privilege (1) access during the office hours of defendant Westinghouse to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of defendant Westinghouse relating to any matters contained in this judgment, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of defendant Westinghouse and without restraint or interference from it to interview officers or employees of defendant Westinghouse, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment defendant Westinghouse upon the written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, and upon reasonable notice to its principal office, shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment or as otherwise required by law.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

XI

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment or for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, and for the purpose of the enforcement of compliance therewith and the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 62,350] United States v. Imperial Chemical Industries, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 24—13. January 3, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Answers to Interrogatory Directed—Objection Overruled.—The defendant objects to certain interrogatories on the ground that the evidence would be irrelevant and that its compilation would impose an unreasonable burden. The Court, in overruling the objection on both grounds, holds that the answer would constitute evidence of intent, the search for which should not be unduly hampered. Although the interrogatory requires the compiling of an overwhelming list of patents, this task is not unduly burdensome for a large concern.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1610.345.

For plaintiff: Leonard J. Emmerglick, Special Assistant to the Attorney General; Ephraim Jacobs, Attorney, Department of Justice.

For defendant: Covington, Burling, Rublee, Acheson & Shorb, Attorneys for E. I. duPont de Nemours; John Lord O'Brien & Gerhard Gesell, of Counsel; Charles E. Hughes, Attorney for Imperial Chemical Industries (New York) Ltd.; Charles E. Hughes, Richard Hogue & Mahlon Doing, of Counsel.

[Nature of Motion]

RYAN, J.: This motion by defendant E. I. duPont de Nemours and Company is addressed to interrogatories served by plaintiff. DuPont asks for time within which to answer certain of the interrogatories and also objects to interrogatory No. 1(f).[1]

We determined at the hearing of the motion that duPont shall answer interrogatories Nos. 1(a) to 1(e) inclusive and 2 by February 15, 1949, and interrogatories Nos. 3 and 4 by January 3, 1949.

[Objection]

We are concerned then only with the objection to subsection (f) of interrogatory No. 1, which reads as follows:

> "(f) A designation of whether the invention claimed by the patent was used by duPont or any of its wholly-owned subsidiaries in the commercial manufacture of any product."

The patents included in subsection (f) are those relating to products embraced in the written agreements, and are set forth in subsections (a) and (b) of interrogatory No. 1. They are of two categories:

> "(a) The United States patents issued to duPont and duPont's pending patent applications, and
>
> "(b) United States patents and pending patent applications assigned or licensed to duPont by any defendant or co-conspirator named in the complaint, . . ."

DuPont does not object to interrogatory No. 1(f) insofar as it asks for information concerning the patents designated by subsection (b), that is, the patents which have been licensed or assigned to duPont by any alleged co-conspirators. DuPont objects to interrogatory No. 1(f), only in so far as it relates to the patents in subsection (a).

The objection is predicated upon two grounds, (1) that the information sought as

---

[1] Interrogatory No. 1 reads: "With respect to each class of products coming within the provisions of the written agreements, referred to in paragraphs 32 to 193 of the Complaint herein, and listed in the appendix attached hereto, list in tabular form under appropriate column headings:

(a) The United States patents issued to duPont and duPont's pending patent applications, and

(b) United States patents and pending patent applications assigned or licensed to duPont by any defendant or co-conspirator named in the complaint, and

(c) The date of issue of each such patent,

(d) The name of the assignor or licensor of each such patent, the date of acquisition, and a designation of whether the rights were acquired by license or assignment,

(e) In case of license, whether it was exclusive or non-exclusive,

(f) A designation of whether the invention claimed by the patent was used by duPont or any of its wholly-owned subsidiaries in the commercial manufacture of any product.

Note: Products 'within' the provisions of a written agreement are intended, in these interrogatories, to include all products named or designated in the product descriptions of the agreement and in addition products which the parties, subsequent to the execution of the agreement, treated as being within, or added to, the agreement."

to the use or non-use of these particular patents by duPont or its subsidiaries is irrelevant and immaterial to the issues in this action, and (2) that the expense and labor required to assemble the information sought would impose on duPont a burden so great and unreasonable as to outweigh any possible probative value as evidence on the main issues of conspiracy in this case.

"It is not questioned," by duPont, however, "that in a case of this importance evidence which is clearly and certainly relevant to the issues should be produced with little regard for the burden and expense which its compilation may entail. Further, the information requested by this interrogatory need not, in and of itself, be material and relevant evidence which could be introduced at the trial of this case." And, all of this we accept as correct and accurate.

[Interrogatory of Probative Value]

Interrogatories may relate to any matter which "appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." Fed. R. Civ. P., 26(b) and 33. Meeting this requirement interrogatories are subject to such protective orders, under Rule 30(b) and (d), as may be made when justice requires, to save a party from interrogatories made in bad faith and which serve only to unreasonably annoy, embarrass or oppress.

Plaintiff's good faith is not questioned; that the inquiry may incidentally annoy is immaterial, (interrogatories do this frequently); the reasonableness of the interrogatory must be judged in the light of whether it appears "calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence," and must be determined by the relative importance of such evidence. It is to this that we address ourselves.

The complaint alleges a world-wide conspiracy to withdraw the markets of the world, to suppress competition between duPont and Imperial Chemical Industries in the United States and elsewhere, to control the technology involved through an exchange of patents, processes and "know-how," and to restrain the foreign and domestic trade and commerce of the United States. It is alleged by way of defense that the challenged agreements between the defendants were valid patent agreements.

It is plaintiff's contention that patents of no commercial value were used to keep Imperial Chemical Industries out of the United States, and that by unlawful use and non-use of duPont United States patents, duPont was able to secure a division of world markets. Proof in support of this contention is admissible within the allegations of the complaint. The extent of duPont's use or non-use of these patents would throw light upon the intent and purpose with which duPont entered into the alleged illegal agreements with its alleged co-conspirators. Intent and purpose are at times most difficult of proof and evidence bearing upon either is to be received with great liberality. A search for proof of intent should not be unduly hampered. The extent to which these patents were commercially used will be of help in determining whether the patents were the inducing reason for the agreements or simply a screen to conceal a hidden purpose to restrain trade. Plaintiff states that it expects to show by the answer to this interrogatory that but a trifling number of these many patents was used. If this hope is fulfilled, it appears that it will have disclosed by the interrogatory evidence of considerable probative value. The interrogatory concerns relevant and material matters, vital to plaintiff's case.

[Interrogatory Not Burdensome]

We now consider the reasonableness of the extent and scope of the interrogatory.

When preparing its answer to interrogatories No. 1(a) to 1(e) inclusive, duPont must set out its patents, stating whether they were duPont developments, or acquired by license, and if so the nature of the license. This will, of necessity, entail an examination of all its patents. All that is further required by interrogatory No. 1(f) is that information be given as to whether the United States patents issued to duPont, and pending patent applications, were used by it in the commercial manufacture of any product. This does not appear to be unreasonably burdensome, when considered with its relevancy to the issues and the ever present possibility that it will result in the discovery of admissible evidence.

DuPont points out that all of this can only be accomplished by personal inquiry of duPont employees at its various manufacturing plants, because "there are no records available which contain this information." It taxes credulity almost beyond bounds to hear that in the entire duPont organization information concerning the use of these patents rests not in recorded writings but solely in the memory and recollection of mortal employees. Be that as it may, it does appear that within the last several months duPont placed upon the United States Register some 4,500 patents. Common sense urges that at least in regard to some (if not most) of these patents, consideration was given to commercial use, past as well as present.

This interrogatory, duPont states, will cover classification of approximately 8,000 patents and 1,700 applications according to commercial use. This is truly an impressive and overwhelming number. The task would be incapable of performance by a smaller business venture, but duPont is alleged to be a world-wide business organization and a vast enterprise, which has during a period of the last 45 years, produced, manufactured and marketed some 4,600 different products. The complaint alleges that duPont is "by far the largest manufacturer of chemical products in the United States, and has total assets of approximately one billion dollars." When considered in the light of operations of such magnitude, the interrogatory is not unduly burdensome.

It is suggested that knowledge of the commercial use of some of these patents may no longer be available, having gone with the passing of former employees and that others, at one time in duPont's employ, may be unable to be located. Should this be so and information as to any particular patent, after thorough and diligent efforts have been made, be unobtainable, as to such patent or patents, duPont may so state under oath, setting forth in detail the efforts which it made.

[Objection Overruled]

The objection to plaintiff's interrogatory No. 1(f) is therefore overruled. Defendant duPont is directed to answer not later than April 11, 1949.

Settle order on notice.

[¶ 62,351] Office Machine Dealers Ass'n of N. Y., Inc. v. Tytell Typewriter Co., Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, Special Term, New York County. 121 N. Y. L. J. 228, January 19, 1949.

New York Fair Trade Act

Sales Below Established Price.—Motion for examination of plaintiffs before trial is granted where plaintiff association, having no rights in and of itself, seeks to restrain the defendant from selling typewriters below the price fixed under Section 369-b of the New York Fair Trade Act. Special circumstances exist which make the testimony of the true plaintiffs, members of the association, material and necessary.

See the New York Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.

PECORA, J.: This is an action by a dealers association and one of its members to restrain the sale of typewriters below the price fixed under the "Fair Trade Act" pursuant to section 369-B, of the General Business Law. The complaint alleges that the action is brought on behalf of the members of the plaintiff dealers association and sets forth the various acts done to their detriment, and states that pecuniary compensation will not afford adequate relief to the plaintiffs and all the members of the plaintiff corporation. This motion for examination before trial seeks to examine the named plaintiffs and some named members as well as unnamed members of the plaintiff corporation, the latter as witnesses. The dealers association has no rights in and of itself. The true plaintiffs are the members of the corporation. Such special circumstances exist as to make their testimony material and necessary. Accordingly, the plaintiff corporation, by Jessie Taylor, its secretary, and the individual plaintiff, Bela A. Engel, and the ten named members of the association only will appear for examination at Special Term, Part II, of this court, on January 21, 1949, at 11 A.M., and be examined as follows: The corporation as to items 1, 2, 3 and 4 A-B; B. A. Engel as to items A, B and C; the ten named members as to items A, B, C and D. Pertinent books, records and documents to be produced pursuant to section 296, C. P. A.

[¶ 62,352] United States v. General Electric Company, International General Electric Company, Inc., Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, Corning Glass Works, American Blank Company, Empire Machine Company, N. V. Philips' Gloeilampenfabrieken, Consolidated Electric Lamp Company, Hygrade Sylvania Corporation, Ken-Rad Tube & Lamp Corporation, Chicago Miniature Lamp Works, and Tung-Sol Lamp Works Incorporated.

In the District Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey. Civ. 1364. January 19, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Monopolization of Incandescent Lamp Industry—Restraint of Competition—Deprivation of Markets for Independent Manufacturers.—Domestic and foreign manufacturers charged with monopolization of the entire incandescent lamp industry in the United States in violation of the antitrust laws are adjudged guilty where the evidence establishes that (1) defendants monopolize the glass bulb, tubing and cane industry, (2) one defendant individually monopolizes the lamp base industry, (3) one defendant individually monopolizes patents employed in the incandescent electric lamp industry, and (4), defendants entered into foreign license agreements to restrict competition in the United States. Two of the defendants cooperated in a joint effort to restrain competition by seeking to deprive independent manufacturers of a market through the design of restricted specifications. The defendants who were subordinate, or "B," licensees, by adhering generally to the program, became co-conspirators and hence violated Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The foreign defendant, by virtue of its contractual relations with other of the defendants, became a party to the monopoly and restraints of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and was in violation of Section 2 of that Act, together with other defendants, by aiding and assisting in the maintenance of a domestic defendant's monopoly of the incandescent lamp industry in the United States.

See Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.361, 1210.315, 1220.175, 1220.211, 1270.201; and Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2023.63.

For plaintiff: Alfred E. Modarelli, United States Attorney; Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General; John S. James, Robert B. Hummel, Horace A. Robbins, Burton R. Thorman, Special Attorneys; Leonard J. Emmerglick, Bartholomew A. Diggins, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

For defendants: Katzenbach, Gildea & Rudner, by George Gildea, Attorneys for General Electric Company and International General Electric Company, Incorporated; Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett, by Whitney North Seymour, Albert C. Bickford, Stephen P. Duggan, Jr., R. E. Anderson, Charles J. Colgan, Irving Parker, George G. Gallantz, and James H. Sheils. Fish, Richardson & Neave, by Alexander C. Neave, H. R. Ashton, Charles H. Walker, and Harry Pugh. Quincy D. Baldwin, of Counsel. Lindabury, Depue & Faulks, by Josiah Stryker, Attorneys for Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company; Cravath, DeGersdorff, Swaine & Wood, by Robert T. Swaine, and Roy Weidman, Harold Smith, Donald C. Swatland, and Edwin H. Todd, of Counsel. Hobart, Minard & Cooper, by Ralph E. Cooper, and Donald O. Hobart, Attorneys for Corning Glass Works, American Blank Company, and Empire Machine Company, John Lord O'Brian, Halsey Sayles, and William P. Stewart, of Counsel. Edgar W. Hunt, Attorney for N. V. Philips' Gloeilampenfabrieken; George C. Sharp, and Emery H. Sykes, of Counsel. Wall, Haight, Carey & Hartpence, by Edward J. O'Mara, Attorneys for Consolidated Electric Lamp Company; Edwin Foster Blair, and Gregory H. Doherty, of Counsel. Pitney, Hardin, Ward & Brennan, by John R. Hardin, Arthur J. Martin, Jr., and William R. Lockridge, Attorneys for Sylvania Electrical Products, Inc. Ropes, Gray, Best, Coolidge & Rugg, by John B. Hopkins, Charles B. Rugg, and Warren F. Farr, of Counsel. Wicoff & Lanning, by Kenneth H. Lanning, Attorneys for Chicago Miniature Lamp Works; Leonard & Leonard, by Gordon McL. Leonard, and Ernest Freeman, Jr., of Counsel. Martin & Reiley, by Blair Reiley, Attorneys for Tung-Sol Lamp Works, Inc.; Bartlett, Eyre, Keel & Weymouth, by Richard Eyre, of Counsel.

The Pleadings

[Digest] Pursuant to § 4 [1] of the Sherman Act, § 15 [2] of the Clayton Act and § 74 [3] of the Wilson Tariff Act, the plaintiff, the United States of America, filed a complaint to prevent and restrain alleged continuing violations of §§ 1 [4] and 2 [5] of the Sherman Act, § 3 [6] of the Clayton Act and § 73 [7] of the Wilson Tariff Act respectively. It named the following defendants:

1. General Electric Company.
2. International General Electric Company, Inc.
3. Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company. [8]
4. Corning Glass Works. [9]
5. American Blank Company [10]
6. Empire Machine Company. [10]
7. N. V. Philips' Gloeilampenfabrieken. (Jurisdiction over Philips was obtained by service on its officers who had taken refuge in this country to escape Nazi domination.)
8. Consolidated Electric Lamp Company.
9. Hygrade Sylvania Corporation.
10. Ken-Rad Tube and Lamp Corporation. [11]
11. Chicago Miniature Lamp Works.
12. Tung-Sol Lamp Works Incorporated.

The complaint was filed January 27, 1941 and trial commenced in 1942, but was suspended at the request of the Secretaries of War and Navy and not resumed until March 1946.

At the opening of its case, General Electric attacked the complaint of the Government with the assertion that the matters offered in proof in this action would be shown to be in all substantial respects the same as those of which the complaint was made or could have been made in the former action against it in 1926. At the end of its case, General Electric argued that this was established and that the doctrine of res adjudicata applied to the principal issues in this case. General Electric pointed out that its operations under its agency system of distribution and under its license agreements with Westinghouse and its "B" licensees were substantially identical in all material respects to its operations prior to 1926; that its position in legal effect remained the same and that its position in the lamp industry, if it has changed, has become less prominent than it was prior to the 1926 suit. It cited the case of Straus v. American Publishers', 201 F. 306, as authority for the proposition that successive suits may not be maintained when they are based upon a continuing conspiracy where the defendants' course of conduct remained substantially similar although the basic agreements had been modified in some respects. The fact that additional parties were added and that different statutes were invoked in the second suit, it is pointed out, were held to be immaterial. It cited a number of other cases to support this view and claims that the present suit violates the rule against splitting a cause of action. It contended that even if the two causes of action are somewhat different that those matters actually litigated in 1926 are res adjudicata here.

It is true that the complaint in the 1926 case and the present one were filed for violation of the anti-trust laws. It is equally true that new matters are brought forward in the present controversy which make it different. Also a different period of time is involved. That very passage of time has evolved new activities upon the part of the defendants and is essentially a factor bearing upon the continuing validity of patents and their efficacy as a basis for contractual relationships. It is sufficient to say that there are such differences in the time element, the parties, and their activities and relationships and the prayers for relief that the doctrine of res judicata cannot be applied as a complete bar to this entire action.

The result of the 1926 case was to grant General Electric a legal monopoly in the manufacture and sale of the incandescent lamps. General Electric operated under a system of licenses permitting use of its patents, 527 in number at the commencement

1 15 U. S. C. A. § 4.
2 15 U. S. C. A. § 25.
3 15 U. S. C. A. § 9.
4 15 U. S. C. A. § 1.
5 15 U. S. C. A. § 2.
6 15 U. S. C. A. § 14.
7 15 U. S. C. A. § 8.
8 Consent decrees were entered without prejudice against Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company and Corning Glass Works, but the operation of the decrees is conditioned upon the final outcome of this suit.
9 See note 8.
10 These companies were dissolved prior to the institution of this suit.
11 Ken-Rad Tube and Lamp Corporation was acquired by Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company since the institution of this suit and was subsequently dissolved.

of this action, under specified conditions. The license system involved two types, "A" and "B" with considerable differences in their requirements.

The Alleged Adjuvant Monopolies

The Government primarily contended that General Electric monopolized the incandescent lamp industry. In order to support and maintain this monopoly, it asserted that General Electric maintained separate illegal monopolies which it termed "Adjuvant Monopolies" claiming that separate anti-trust actions could have been maintained on each and listed them as follows:

(1) "All modern high-speed automatic lamp-making machinery manufactured and distributed in the United States is made and directly controlled by General Electric."

(2) "All machinery for producing all types of glass bulbs, tubing, and cane manufactured in the United States for electrical purposes is made or directly controlled by General Electric and Corning."

(3) "All lamp base-making machinery manufactured in the United States is made or controlled by General Electric."

(4) "General Electric is the only manufacturer in the United States thates lls a complete line of lamp bases."

(5) "General Electric and Corning produce practically all of the large glass bulbs, tubing, and cane used in the manufacture of incandescent lamps in the United States."

(6) "General Electric manufactures or controls approximately 90% of the tungsten filament wire, lead-in wire, and support wire used in incandescent lamps in the United States."

(7) "General Electric expanded its distribution outlets from 39,777 to 83,391 in the period in question, and by this means, together with the 30,000 odd Westinghouse agents, who are tied to the General Electric marketing scheme, dominates lamp marketing in the United States."

(8) "General Electric has a monopoly of lamp patents. This was secured by means of its license agreements with Westinghouse, the B Licensees and foreign companies, agreements with large domestic industrial concerns, namely, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and Radio Corporation of America, and by its deliberate effort to obtain from the Patent Office patents covering every aspect of the lamp and its manufacture no matter how trivial and without regard to validity."

The Government undertook to show that each of the foregoing alleged "adjuvant monopolies" was in itself illegal as a separate, choate monopoly in addition to its claim that in each instance the structure described was in support of the monopoly over the incandescent electric lamp industry. Separated into water tight compartments that the Government places each of these activities of General Electric and viewed therein, the Government proved that General Electric in combination with Corning monopolizes the glass bulb, tubing and cane industry; that it individually monopolizes the lamp base industry; and that it individually monopolizes patents employed in the incandescent electric lamp industry. As for the remaining alleged "adjuvant monopolies", the Government's proof failed but it did prove individual restraints of trade and competition. Permitting all these activities, however, to intermingle in the general stream of evidence, they support the theory that General Electric has acquired the power to and in fact does monopolize the entire incandescent lamp industry in the United States. U. S. v. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100, 105-109; U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 333 U. S. 364, 401; Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 283 U. S. 163; U. S. v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324, 357; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. U. S., 226 U. S. 20, 41, 48; U. S. v. Pullman Co., 50 F. Supp. 123, 135.

Agency

Two of the same adverse parties to this litigation—the Government and General Electric—litigated substantially the same agency contract issue in the Supreme Court case in 1926. All of the circumstances we have considered are almost identical with those which appeared in the 1926 case. The question of the validity of the agency agreements was put in issue by the Government at that time and the ruling of the Court was adverse to the Government. It now appears that the exposure of the same issue a second time is barred by reason of the rule of res adjudicata. Whether the decision is induced by that doctrine or estoppel upon the part of the Government to raise the question again or by the precedent created by the 1926 case is immaterial. The ultimate conclusion must be that the Supreme Court has passed judgment favorably upon the form of agency agreements in question in this case which in their present aspects are no different from what they were when under consideration in 1926. Commr. of Internal Revenue v. Sumner, 333 U. S. 591, 597-598.

However, there is a phase of relationship to the agency system which was not litigated in the 1926 case and which raises an issue of conflict with the anti-trust laws. General Electric and Westinghouse operate their agency systems under the joint supervision of a Supervisor appointed by General Electric. This supervisory mechanism was superimposed by General Electric as a governor to completely synchronize and coordinate the perfect enmeshment of the agency systems of itself and Westinghouse. In holding that the agency system of General Electric in itself has not been shown to be violative of the standards set by the 1926 case, reservations are maintained as to the effect of the operations of the supervisor as they are referred to later in this opinion.[12]

Foreign Agreements

It has been all too evident that the primary purpose of the foreign licenses was to restrict competition in the United States by dividing markets in the foreign countries, all geared to the Phoebus agreement and domestic licenses to reduce interest of potential foreign competition in United States trade. There is in the foreign licenses a striking similarity to the situation interdicted in United States v. National Lead Co., supra. General Electric's objections to the use of the word "cartel" are immaterial for the criterion is not one of semantics.

General Electric has contended that there was no competition between the domestic licensees and the foreign companies. This contention loses force in the fact of the revelations made in the series of exhibits, 88-G to 129-G that show a lively competition might have developed but for the territorial restrictions placed upon the General Electric domestic licenses. It is true that General Electric's domestic licensees sought to evade these restrictions and were subjected to pressures from it (Exs. 106-G, 107-G, 108-G, 117-G and 121-G) but notwithstanding, they deemed it to their best interests to succumb.

Philips is the only foreign licensee before the court and while the restraints were primarily precipitated by General Electric through IGE, Philips participated therein and is equally responsible. IGE is chargeable with unlawful conduct by virtue of its being the direct tool of General Electric in the manipulation of the foreign agreements. Westinghouse[13] and the "B" licensees[14] are likewise violators by virtue of their engagements in and practical fulfillment of the clauses in their licenses prohibiting them from engaging in the export trade. A conspiracy and combination to restrain trade and competition in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act have been made out and General Electric, International General Electric, Philips, Westinghouse, Sylvania, Consolidated, Kenrad, Tungsol, and Chicago Miniature were co-conspirators.[15]

Mazda

There can be no doubt that General Electric organized and maintained at the expense of many millions of dollars, research laboratories in which scientists, technicians, and the most modern agencies of investigation were employed to promote maximum efficiency in the manufacture of incandescent electric lamps and the machinery for their production. There can be no doubt that the research field was regarded by General Electric as a very fundamental department of its great business. Indeed, this intelligent policy is very probably one of the factors accountable for the phenomenal growth and advances that were made in the business. It took pains to show the public the depth of its scientific and technical investigations in its advertisements devoted to the "Research-Laboratories" of General Electric Company (Ex. GE-135, tabs 9 to 22). There can be no doubt that it applied its mark "Mazda" to the results of its research as that was embodied in the incandescent electric lamp and other of its products. The proof adduced by the Government fails to show,

[12] See discussion in "Suppression of Domestic Trade," "Monopoly of Incandescent Electric Lamps," "Mazda" and "Public Business."

[13] Although not stressed in the opinion, Exs. 2137-G, 2142-G, 2145-G, 2147-G, 2148-G, 2153-G, 2156-G and 2161-G weigh heavily against Westinghouse and further show this defendant to have been actively engaged in the foreign aspects of this case. These documents further rebut General Electric's contentions that Westinghouse did not conspire with it.

[14] Other links between GE and the "B" licensees are discussed under the heading "Suppression of Domestic Trade."

[15] Corning was not discussed in this section although it was found to have violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act where it applied to the glass agreements.

however, that the "Mazda" mark per se was invalid. Its contention that "Mazda" was keyed to tungsten incandescent lamps and passed into the public domain upon expiration of the Langmuir patent also falls because of lack of proof that the word "Mazda" became a general trade name of the tungstem filament lamp. Under ordinary circumstances there would be no vice in General Electric licensing the use of the "Mazda" symbol conditioned upon observance of its technical specifications as the American Viscose and similar cases hold or in denying a license to any one.

But in a consideration of the use made by General Electric of the mark "Mazda" within the area of the anti-trust laws different implications arise. General Electric contended that a department of its business was devoted to the sale of its collected and selected specifications "directly to lamp manufacturers selected by General Electric as 'Mazda' licensees, and indirectly to the public as actually embodied in lamps by General Electric and its 'Mazda' licensees".

Who were the customers in this department in the United States? The only "Mazda" license granted by General Electric was that to Westinghouse in 1927 (Ex. 26-G) and its duration was conditioned upon Westinghouse remaining a patent licensee of General Electric. Insured of a production quota based upon General Electric's total lamp production with its prices similarly fixed by General Electric (Ex. 25-G), Westinghouse was in the status of a controlled competitor. The "B" licensees craved the use of the "Mazda" mark but were denied it. Similarly no independent manufacturer was granted this right. It is therefore apparent that the second branch of the business was illusory. It was for the benefit of General Electric and only one customer of its choice —Westinghouse.

When consideration is given to this aspect in conjunction with the conduct of General Electric and its sole "Mazda" licensee, Westinghouse, in their joint use of the mark, as discussed in "Public Business" and "Suppression of Trade by Domestic Licensees" and the General Electric activities discussed in "Electrical Testing Laboratory", the design in the general pattern of monopoly by General Electric of the incandescent electric lamp industry become very vivid. "Mazda" formed a panoply to screen interrelated General Electric-Westinghouse activities.

Public Business

The evidence fully sustains the contention that General Electric and Westinghouse cooperated in a joint effort to restrain competition in this area by seeking to deprive independent manufacturers of a market through the design of restricted specifications and by so doing violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act § 1.

General Electric has objected to the Westinghouse correspondence as being inadmissible against it but under the co-conspirator rule such declarations are admissible since independent evidence demonstrates that Westinghouse and General Electric combined to restrain trade and competition.

Electrical Testing Laboratories

A consideration of the evidence of the Government and the testimony adduced by General Electric leads to the conclusion that ETL (Electrical Testing Laboratories) was substantially supported financially by General Electric and was utilized by it to obtain information in its aggressive pursuit of incandescent electric lamp business. It further served as one of the means whereby General Electric could maintain a surveillance over the entire incandescent lamp industry. That employees and officials of both ETL and General Electric were in close and intimate contact is beyond question. Undoubtedly the influence of General Electric was such that it obtained information, sometimes of a confidential nature, which no other customer of ETL was able to obtain. However, the showing made fails to support the theory of the Government that such influence as General Electric had over ETL constituted a direct violation of the antitrust laws. At most, it illustrates the aggressive tendencies General Electric exhibited in seeking to maintain its dominant position.

Public Utilities

Another activity by which the Government claimed General Electric acquired and maintained its monopoly in the manufacture of incandescent electric lamps was in seeking to coordinate its acts with those of public utilities so as to promote their individual interests at the expense of the public and suppress newcomers who might disturb this activity. It asserted that public utilities were interested in increasing and maintaining a kilowatt hour load at the highest peak and General Electric was interested in not merely selling lamps to and through public utilities but in preventing the other manufacturers from selling their lamps through them. An additional objective alleged to be accomplished by the harmonization of activities was to strengthen the notion that "Mazda" was the only acceptable standard electric lamp. Thus it is claimed that General Electric and Westinghouse influenced public utilities to discourage the use of competitive lamps.

There may be an anti-trust case against the public utilities and General Electric in this particular phase, but the proofs developed by the Government fail to do other than to prove that General Electric pushed an aggressive advertising campaign and sought to utilize all avenues by which its lamp products could be distributed and sold. The early history of the lighting industry shows that utilities were important distributors of incandescent lamps and in a number of cases were the only source of such lamps. As the industry grew and lighting fixtures were gradually standardized, it was but a natural evolutionary process for General Electric as well as other lamp producers to seek to continue relationships whereby their products would be more extensively employed. It would be lacking in realism, however, if it were supposed that General Electric or the public utilities were conducting their business for purposes other than to create the maximum demand for their respective products. The most that the Government has shown in this section under consideration is that officers and employees of General Electric endeavored to sell a maximum number of lamps. If the lamps General Electric sold induced the sale of additional electrical current by the public utilities as the Government suggested, there is still no convincing proof offered by it that the anti-trust laws were violated or that this was a design that gave General Electric its monoply in the industry. The proofs fail to show any combination with public utilities to restrain trade and competition, and evidence only the concomitants of an aggressive policy of seeking market outlets.

Argon Gas

The Government charged that "General Electric's argon gas activities tend to prove a purpose to monopolize and General Electric's great power". It claimed that as a result of agreements and understandings between General Electric and the principal suppliers of argon gas in the United States, General Electric controlled the sales of argon gas and forced lamp manufacturers to look to General Electric for their supply of high ratio argon. This resulted in arbitrary and non-competitive price figures and as the supplier of high grade argon to its incandescent lamp licensees, no incentive was left to independent producers of argon gas to maintain high ratio argon production facilities to supply unlicensed lamp manufacturers.

The proofs are at most in such a state of balance that there is not a sufficient preponderance that General Electric illegally dominated the argon gas industry or that its control of argon arose to the level of a byproduct of a monopoly and the Government's contentions in this regard must fall.

Suppression of Trade by Domestic Licensees

(A) Competition Between General Electric and Westinghouse Eliminated.

The Government charged that in furtherance of the maintenance of General Electric's monopoly competition between Westinghouse and General Electric was eliminated in that: (1) General Electric required Westinghouse to follow the agency system; (2) the provisions of the licensing agreement relating to price fixing were in effect a bilateral agreement between Westinghouse and General Electric to fix prices; (3) there was agreement between the two organizations not to compete in the solicitation of agents; (4) they eliminated competition between themselves and others in the sale of Christmas tree lamps; (5) they eliminated competition between themselves and large consumers and distributors; and (6) they combined to eliminate non Mazda competition.

There can be no doubt that General Electric followed an aggressive policy to persuade agents to handle only General Electric or Mazda lamps and that it conducted intensive sales campaigns to increase the efforts of its salesmen to gain that objective. During one of these campaigns in 1939 the Government showed that General Electric offered bonuses to them in the way of credits for securing new agencies, and for such agencies as would handle exclusively General Electric or Mazda line lamps where these intentions were recorded in writing. The thread of the urge upon agents to carry only General Electric or Mazda lamps appeared from the top to the bottom of the sales organizations of General Electric and agents were persuaded, or otherwise decided, to handle General Electric or Mazda lamps to the exclusion of all other kinds. There is, however, no proof of reprisals taken against an agent for carrying other lines and General Electric's assertion that more agents carried multiple lines than exclusively General Electric or Mazda lamps was never rebutted by the Government.

The Government proved that suggestions were made by some of the General Electric sales force that inducements for exclusive handling of its or Mazda lamps should be made by way of holding out distributorships of General Electric products other than lamps but it has not shown that these suggestions ever ripened into activity. The comment by a Westinghouse sales force representative (Ex. 1722-G) that he understood General Electric had acted unethically in threatening to cancel a distributorship of one of its other products in the hands of a DB lamp agent if he cancelled its lamp agency is plain hearsay and, in the absence of any other evidence to connect it to some action, it proves nothing.

Westinghouse consistently followed an identical policy with General Electric in accordance with the requirements of the license agreement. Agents were submitted for the scrutiny of the Supervisor and waivers were granted where the protection of General Electric or other mutual Mazda interests was concerned. The primary consideration of General Electric and Westinghouse was to create the maximum distribution of Mazda lamps. The quota allowance of Westinghouse increased only as the volume of this distribution increased. The secondary consideration was the sharing by General Electric and Westinghouse of the product of maximum distribution of Mazda lamps within the quota set by the framework of the license. With the expiration of the basic and controlling patents in 1933, the framework of the license collapsed and two competitors were joined in a common effort under a common symbol. Any rivalry that existed between them was devoid of the elements of normal competition as is sought to be preserved by the anti-trust laws and their association was designed to and did eliminate such competition between themselves.

* * * * *

The price of Westinghouse's cooperation with General Electric is evident. Under the Corning-General Electric agreements, it received the benefits accruing therefrom. It was the favored beneficiary of all that flowed from employment of the "Mazda" symbol. It was granted a share in the foreign lamp markets by virtue of the agreements negotiated by International General Electric. Granted a larger share of the domestic lamp business, its policy and program were those of General Electric since both operated under the "Mazda" symbol. Competition that menaced General Electric menaced Westinghouse and correspondingly reduced its percentage of production. Westinghouse proved to be a valuable ally to General Electric in extending and maintaining dominance over the incandescent electric lamp industry in the United States.

The conclusion is that the Government has prevailed in its contention that in furtherance of the maintenance of the General Electric monopoly of the incandescent electric lamp industry in the United States, competition between Westinghouse and General Electric was eliminated. The joint activities engaged in by Westinghouse and General Electric operated to suppress competition in the United States and thereby violated § 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

(B) "B" Licensees

The Government charged that the "B" licensees joined with General Electric and other defendants in carrying out the unlawful monopolies, conspiracies and combinations in restraint of trade alleged in the complaint beginning with the dates upon which the renewed licenses and agreements were entered into. It alleged that the purpose and effect of the licenses and agreements as to General Electric, Westinghouse and the "B" licensees were to limit the production of the "B" licensees, thereby preventing their free and uncontrolled competition with General Electric and Westinghouse in the United States, preventing the exportation from the United States to foreign countries of lamps manufactured by the "B" licensees in order to assure to General Electric the continued operation of its restrictive agreements with foreign companies, thereby precluding such foreign companies from competing or aiding other domestic manufacturers to compete with General Electric in the sale of lamps in the United States, enlarging and extending the patent monopoly of General Electric by giving it rights under all patents relating to lamps, machinery and appliances having to do with the manufacture of lamps owned or acquired during the term of each of the agreements by each of such "B" licensees or by each of their officers and directors for the lives of such patents; precluding such "B" licensees from questioning or attacking the validity of the patents of General Electric and Westinghouse relating to lamps and to the manufacture of lamps; assuring to General Electric and Westinghouse the continued control and domination of the domestic lamp industry and lamp market after the expiration of General Electric's controlling lamp patents; assuring to each "B" Licensee sources of supply of lamp machinery, materials and parts, particularly at advantageous prices.

The "B" licensees fully conceived their positions as favored beneficiaries under the protection of the General Electric licenses although at times they chafed under the restrictions. By their general adherence, however, to the General Electric program they became co-conspirators with it and as such violated Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act: U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U. S. 131; United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U. S. 287, 315; U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 333 U. S. 364, 388, 389; U. S. v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 275; Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 226-227.

Clayton Act

The Government additionally charged that General Electric and Westinghouse have violated § 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 14).[16] It referred to the evidence submitted to show how non-Mazda competition was eliminated and charged that in their sales, contracts for sale, or contracts for the distribution of incandescent lamps manufactured by General Electric and Westinghouse for use, consumption or resale within the United States, they imposed the condition that the purchaser or distributors should not use or deal in any other incandescent electric lamps. General Electric insisted that there is no basis for the claim that its transactions with its agents were in effect "sales". It contends that they were true agency relationships, and that all of the Government's evidence which constituted the basis for the alleged violation of the Clayton Act dealt with agency appointments except three purchase contracts in which any inference that they were violations of the Clayton Act is likewise unjustified.

In the discussion under "Agency" it was pointed out that General Electric followed a firm policy of adhering to an agency relationship as approved in the 1926 case. The evidence submitted by the Government fails to support its contentions of sale or resale. The cases cited by it, such as Butterick Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 4 F. 2d 910, cert. denied 267 U. S. 602, are not persuasive that the General Electric and Westinghouse agency contracts were unlawful contracts of sale in violation of the Clayton Act in the light of the definitive holding of the Supreme Court as to the General Electric agency status in the 1926 case. Accordingly, the Government has failed to sustain the burden of showing that any contract of General Electric or Westinghouse was violative of the Clayton Act.

Philips

The Government contended that Philips violated § 73 of the Wilson Tariff Act in making agreements to unlawfully restrain the importation of glass bulbs, tubing, can and glass machinery into the United States; § 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by unlawfully restraining the importation and exportation from the United States of incandescent electric lamps and machinery; and that by the combination of these foregoing activities it was unlawfully conspiring with General Electric to assist the latter to secure

[16] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

and maintain a monoply of the incandescent electric lamp industry in the United States in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

There was no violation of § 73 of the Wilson Tariff Act by Philips, General Electric or Corning when they became parties to the glass agreements in 1937. Economic, political and legal interferences had taken place which Philips claimed reduced the potentiality of American trade in glass bulbs within the next ten years to something less than a hope. It alleged that it was motivated by the realities of the situation and sought to capitalize upon some property remaining to it since there remained no possible trade in bulbs. It urged that it simply exercised its judgment that the possibilities were not worth as much as it could derive out of its agreement with Corning and in signing the glass agreements it was capitalizing upon what it could obtain from its patents. The Wilson Act, § 73, requires that the combination, conspiracy, trust agreement, or contract should be between persons either of whom as agent or principal "is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States." There is no proof that either General Electric, Corning, or International General Electric was engaged in importing glass bulbs. The Government supported its charge of the Wilson Act violation by the cases of United States v. Sisal Sales Corp., 274 U. S. 268, and United States v. General Dyestuff Corp., 57 F. Supp. 642. It is plain that the appellees in the Sisal case were importers. The General Dyestuff case is on a demurrer to an indictment and the point is not raised.

It was a fortuitous circumstance that officers of Philips happened to be refugees in the United States and available for service of process when this action was commenced. Philips contended that it had been haled before the court because of agreements it entered into in its native land which were entirely legal there and that it has been put to great trouble and expense in defending this suit. It contended that the court should seize this opportunity to announce the rule that foreign corporations like Philips engaged in business abroad may enter into agreements among themselves or with American corporations or with individuals freely and without fear of anti-trust suits here, so long as what they do is not done wilfully to restrain United States trade and does not have a direct and substantial restrictive effect upon it. Thus, it claimed, " a different test must be applied when considering the legality of acts of foreign corporations whose activities are wholly abroad, and a fortiori if such acts are done abroad than if Americans are involved."

It is admitted that the industrial climate of Europe was that of cartelized operation often with governmental participation. The norm of Europe was such that cartels were a matter of course and not limited by any public policy as in the United States. See League of Nations, Review of the Economic Aspects of Several International Agreements (1930); Knorr, The Problems of International Cartels and Intergovernmental Commodity Agreements, 55 Yale Law Journal 1097. Philips transgressed no law of Holland in entering into the agreements with IGE or the Phoebus Agreement. Nor is it necessarily a wrong doer simply because it entered into a number of agreements in Europe with European manufacturers. The question herein revolves around the course of conduct followed by Philips in its relations with IGE and the resulting effect of such conduct upon United States trade and commerce.

After a review of all the facts and circumstances concerning Philips brought forward by the Government as well as the evidence adduced by Philips and its arguments, forcefully made, the conclusion appears inevitable that Philips knew full well that its activities, though with parties other than General Electric, were dictated by it. If it did not know, it should have known, particularly after 1933, that they were a substantial contribution to the scheme whereby the domination of General Electric over the United States market of incandescent electric lamps would be perpetuated and competition thwarted. It is not sufficient for the defense of its position that it considered itself well compensated for that contribution and was not aware that the anti-trust laws of this country were affected. Philips was perhaps the chief leader in its industry in Europe, as skillfully managed, intelligent, efficient and effective in its own sphere as General Electric was on its larger scale. In its enlightened state its very apathy to the impact of its real relationship with General Electric upon those laws was an indifference to them that amounted to a willingness to be a party to a breach of them. There was actual knowledge on the part of Philips of the United States anti-trust laws and it governed itself accordingly. Just as it was concerned with the anti-trust laws in the X-ray situation, it is a reasonable inference that such a concern governed its actions in signing the 1931 agreement and the glass agreements.

As to the second requirement for the finding of a violation on the part of Philips that its activities must have had a direct and substantial effect upon trade, its allegations and arguments that conditions made it impossible for it to conduct business abroad after 1933 have been given all the credit which they deserve. They did not thwart the glass agreements where Philips procured an annual stipend for ten years to refrain from the use of its United States patents in glass, among other things, and Philips is left upon the ground that it was, at least to the extent of its own power and ability, willing to prevent any birth or rebirth of trade here. Even though there is no showing as to the extent of commerce restrained, it deleteriously affected commerce by entering into the agreements with IGE and Corning since it lent itself to the General Electric plan of throttling potential sources of foreign lamp parts. Cf. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 139-141, 183-185. Philips was aware of the relationship existing between IGE and General Electric and understood General Electric's position in the incandescent electric lamp industry in the United States, and it knew of the Corning-General Electric relations. Competition was aborted by the agreements to which it became a party and it thereby came into conflict with the anti-trust laws for they "are as much violated by the prevention of competition as by its destruction." United States v. Griffith, supra, p. 107. "For acquiescence in an illegal scheme is as much a violation of the Sherman Act as the creation and promotion of one." United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U. S. 131, 161. By virtue of its contractual relations with Corning and IGE, it became a party to the restraints of trade and monopoly exercised by General Electric and was in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

For reasons stated herein together with those discussed under the heading "Monopoly of Incandescent Electric Lamps," Philips is likewise found to have violated § 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act for having aided and assisted in the maintenance of General Electric's monopoly of the incandescent lamp industry in the United States.

General Electric's Monopoly of the Incandescent Electric Lamp Industry

(1) Dominant Position

The fact stands out that General Electric and its licensees exerted a combined position that presented an almost impregnable front to those manufacturers not part of their combination. General Electric's emphasis upon its individual percentage decrease over the course of years does not hide the clear cut picture that the supposed loss of percentage was absorbed by its licensees who were combined with it. The size of the combination herein coupled with General Electric's intent to dominate the industry serves as an indicia of monopoly.

(2) Profits

It is an undisputed fact that General Electric and the Lamp Department enjoyed substantial profits. Standing alone this, of course does not render it violative of the anti-trust laws. Like size, itself, it can only be given consideration along with myriad other circumstances for the purpose of determining whether in combination they are elements in the generation of that power to monopolize that constitutes violation of the law. Cf. U. S. v. Columbia Steel Co., et al., 334 U. S. 495, 527.

(3) General Monopoly Powers

The Government argued generally that due to its size, financial position and dominance in the incandescent electric lamp industry, General Electric had the power

(a) to intimidate businesses from selling to purchasers who might compete with General Electric;

(b) to deteriorate the quality of the lamps it produced and with its technical knowledge to produce a better product; and

(c) to exclude lamp companies from domestic licenses.

(a) Intimidation of Business

The Government has offered no direct proof that General Electric intimidated business. However, when it is considered that the position of General Electric, its licensees and independent lamp manufacturers has remained relatively unchanged over the years as reflected in Exhibit 21-G, analyzed under the heading "Dominant Position"; that this position together with the very nature of the restraints exercised by General Electric as discussed throughout the opinion, limited the entry of newcomers into the industry; and the actual decrease of independent manufacturers; the conclusion must be that General Electric has at least the power to intimidate other businesses from selling their products to purchasers who might compete with it. Cf. American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 328 U. S. 781.

(b) Deterioration of Product

The claim of the Government of deterioration of the product was based upon the testimony of Dr. William David Coolidge, who testified that the efficiency of light production of the tantulum lamp was approximately six lumens, that this was doubled to "perhaps twelve lumens" with the advent of the vacuum tungsten filament lamp, and again doubled to "let's say 24 lumens" when the gas filled tungsten lamp was introduced (R. 1627). Against this the Government referred to Exhibit GE-14, a schedule showing approximate lamp efficiencies in initial lumens per watt which indicated that from 1927 to 1942 the 60 watt gas filled tungsten lamp increased from 11.1 lumens per watt to 14 lumens in 1942. From this the Government concluded that General Electric does not produce a commercial standard line lamp better than 14 lumens, although Dr. Coolidge testified that 24 lumens were possible.

Although the Government's contention that it has proved that General Electric could have produced a 60 watt lamp giving 24 lumens of light has been rejected, these latter contentions with regard to flashlight bulbs and Christmas tree lamps illustrate an existing ability upon the part of General Electric to shorten the life of a lamp. At the same time it should be borne in mind that the life of a lamp is inextricably related to the power of its light in that the greater the strength of the light the shorter will be the life of the lamp. It is realized that flashlight and Christmas tree lamps are lines of lesser importance in the incandescent electric lamp industry, although the overall production and profit in them is far from inconsequential. Despite assertions of good faith, sound business discretion, great technical research, and consideration for the interest of the consuming public, there was manifested in the two situations a paramount concern in what would afford the maximum return in profits to the manufacturer and that General Electric had the power in the instance of the flashlight lamp, to shorten the life of the lamp, and in the instance of the Christmas tree lamp, at least to promote a product with a short life for a specific use over one that had four times its life. However, the total proof leads to the conclusion that by virtue of General Electric's dominating position in the industry and relative lack of competition it had the power to set the standard of efficiency of incandescent electric lamps for the entire industry and in so doing to determine what should be their length of life, and this constitutes an attribute of monopoly.

(c) Power to Exclude

In connection with the Government's argument as to the manifestations of monopoly, it contended that General Electric had been capable of excluding from the manufacture of incandescent lamps those seeking to enter the field.

The power to exclude does not flow from the fact that General Electric denied licenses but is the direct result of its being the dominant force in the industry. General Electric controlled certain sources of essential parts necessary to manufacture lamps and restricted access to those sources. Similarly, it maintained a widespread system of surveillance whereby it was able quickly to determine newcomers in the field. Applying its massive dominance over the industry it could by asserting patent control, by controlling and restricting domestic sources of parts and machines, by sealing off the foreign source of parts and machinery through the foreign agreements, and by its exertions in behalf of the Mazda mark seriously limit domestic competition. All of these conditions generated the power to exclude competitors from the industry. Cf. American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 328 U. S. 781, 809.

(4) Industrial Surveillance

In the normal conduct of a business there is a valid interest in the progress and status of a competitor. The sources of information correspondingly can be as varied as can be the means of securing such information. There have been cited numerous instances of how General Electric kept itself informed of the state of the incandescent electric industry in all its phases whether under its control or not.

From time to time, officials and employees of General Electric visited the facilities of other manufacturers and distributors of incandescent electric lamps. Certain of these visits were for the legitimate purpose of detecting infringement of General Electric patents. Reports of these visits found their way into the files of General Electric which contained information, however, totally unrelated to patent infringement. During the course of its efforts to establish the Mazda marked product as the standard specification to be set by public bodies, General Electric obtained various pieces of information concerning possible competitors. It prosecuted aggressive quests for information at the Bureau of Standards and ETL directed at other manufacturers and distributors. The very act of filling orders for lamp bases by General Electric's Providence Works provided means whereby reports were made from which the probable number of lamps to be manufactured by those purchasers could be calculated. A wealth of information was funneled through the Supervisor from sales personnel of both Westinghouse and General Electric in all parts of the country. General Electric accumulated this data at a central point in its organization for strategical and tactical planning by the Lamp Department in halting encroachments upon its frontiers of the incandescent electric lamp industry.

Although these activities in collating information may have been innocent isolated by themselves and might be readily countenanced as between genuine competitors, here they emanated from a dominant force in the industry to envelope its controlled allies and the few remaining independent manufacturers. In that light, viewed in their aggregate, they represent a picture of espionage and policing activity. This surveillance was not for the ordinary purpose of sharpening competition but rather designed to reinforce and maintain the domination of the industry; and to inhibit the growth of existing, and abort the birth of, new competition. These activities, part of the general pattern of conduct, do not of themselves rise to the level of a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act but they disclose a manifestation of monopoly in the incandescent electric lamp industry by General Electric. Cf. United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 226 F. 62, 78.

(5) Conclusion

Without atempting to enumerate them in the order of their importance, the previously determined individual restraints of trade and competition and the activities manifesting a monopoly are summarized as follows:

(1) Dominant position in the industry of General Electric.

(2) Lack of a valid patent support to sustain price, quantity and expert limitations in the incandescent electric lamp domestic licenses in existence after 1933.

(3) Combination with and integration of Westinghouse resulting from and evidenced by the following:

(a) Westinghouse's enjoyment of a favored position under the glass agreements.

(b) Mutual use of the Mazda trademark by General Electric and Westinghouse.

(c) Common solicitation and elimination of agents.

(d) Joint use of the Supervisor.

(e) Joint effort in soliciting public business.

(f) Cooperative efforts in Mazda sales campaigns.

(g) Westinghouse's adherence to the restrictions established in the "A" license.

(4) Combination with Corning to monopolize the manufacture and distribution of glass bulbs, tubing and cane.

(5) Combination with Corning, American Blank and Empire to restrain trade and competition in the manufacture and distribution of machinery for manufacture of glass bulbs, tubing and cane.

(6) Employment of International General Electric as a means of eliminating foreign competition through

(a) Foreign subsidiaries,

(b) Phoebus Agreement and the 1941 agreement,

(c) Separate agreements between International General Electric and the individual members of the Phoebus combination encompassing the general terms of the Phoebus Agreement and coordinated with General Electric's domestic licenses.

(7) Lamp base monopoly.

(8) Lamp machinery restraints.

(9) Filament and leading-in wire restraints.

(10) General Electric's profits in the incandescent electric lamp industry.

(11) Public business activities.

(12) The monopoly of incandescent electric lamp patents.

(13) Invalid restriction in fluorescent licenses.

(14) The power to intimidate and exclude manufacturers from the incandescent electric lamp industry and to fix the standards for the industry.

(15) Industrial surveillance.

The aggregation of the foregoing activities and manifestations inevitably leads to the conclusion that General Electric monopolized the incandescent electric lamp industry in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act § 2. United States v. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100, 105-109; American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781, 809-810; Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, 12; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, 431-432.

By virtue of their having acted in combination with General Electric and acquiescence in the relationships established with it as previously determined, Westinghouse, Philips, Corning, Sylvania, Tungsol, Ken-rad, Chicago Miniature and Consolidated have violated § 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U. S. 131, 161.

General Conclusion

The record of General Electric's industrial achievement has been impressive. Its predecessors pioneered the lamp industry and it organized through the years an establishment that stands as a model of industrial efficiency. It early established the policy of making the best lamps as inexpensively as possible and to this end developed a lamp research, engineering, and production system which established it in the first position of industrial leadership in the incandescent electric lamp field not only in the United States but in the world. By means of extensive research initiated by such scientists as Steinmetz, Whitney, Langmuir and Coolidge, mechanical and technological advances were accomplished (Ex. GE-235) which made possible a progressive price reduction policy (Ex. GE-239). Therefore, it was able in the twenty year period between 1922 and 1942 to reduce the prices of large lamps, 78.6%; miniature lamps, 70.3%; with an average for both types of 77.2% (Ex. GE-239). It can take just pride in the more graphic statistic that the price of a 60 watt bulb was 45 cents in 1922 and 10 cents in 1942. By the efficiency which it employed in its business, the use of research to improve its lamps, the development of new lamps and new uses for old lamps to increase the market, there was established a firm foundation for leadership.

On the other hand there can be no doubt that it paced its industrial achievements with efforts to insulate itself from competition. It developed a tremendous patent framework and sought to stretch the monopoly acquired by patents far beyond the intendment of those grants. It constructed a great network of agreements and licenses, national and international in scope, which had the effect of locking the door of the United States to any challenge to its supremacy in the incandescent electric lamp industry arising from business enterprise indigenous to this country or put forth by foreign manufacturers. Its domestic licenses gave fiat to a few licensees whose growth was carefully limited to fixed percentages of its own production and expansion so that over the years its share of the business was not materially diminished and its dominant proportion was never exposed to any hazard in that direction.

Admiration for the business acumen of General Electric, however, cannot avoid adherence to the philosophy of political economics enunciated in the anti-trust laws of the United States.

General Electric, as has been indicated herein, must be held to have violated § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. International General Electric, Philips, Sylvania, Tungsol, Consolidated and Chicago Miniature are likewise so held. Corning and Westinghouse are therefore bound by their consent decrees.

Concededly many of the practices which are adjudged in this opinion to be violative of the law by force of the consent decrees, lapse of time, and other circumstances, have been discontinued. Ordinarily the issues involving them might have been rendered moot, but, under the stipulated conditions governing this case, the hiatus of time involved and changed conditions are to be disregarded and continuity is to be given to the case as if it were tried in regular order.

A motion should be made by the Government for a day when the form of the findings of fact, conclusions of law and the decree may be considered in accordance with the findings and conclusions set forth in this opinion.

[¶ 62,353] In the Matter of the Grand Jury.

In the United States District Court, Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division. Cr. 19609. January 3, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Contempt Proceeding—Failure to Respond Properly to Subpoena Duces Tecum and Ad Testificandum.—Where the president of a corporation was served with a subpoena duces tecum and ad testificandum to appear before the grand jury, but, instead of appearing personally with the required documents, on the advice of counsel sent the documents to a member of the Antitrust Division, the president is guilty of contempt. However, since failure to respond properly to the subpoena was not wilful or contumacious, the judgment of contempt and the payment of costs will be considered a purge of the contempt.

See Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1610.345.

For plaintiff: Don C. Miller, U. S. District Attorney, Federal Building, Cleveland, Ohio; George L. Derr, 237 Leader Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

For defendant: C. W. Sellers, Guardian Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Before JONES, United States District Judge.

Memorandum on Proceedings in Contempt

On November 16, 1948, A. A. Chilcote was duly served with a subpoena duces tecum and ad testificandum as president of The Chilcote Company. The subpoena was directed to the Chilcote Company and ordered it to appear and produce certain documents "in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio" on December 1, 1948 at 9:30 a. m., "then and there to testify on behalf of the United States and not depart the court without leave of the United States Attorney."

On December 1, 1948, counsel for The Chilcote Company tendered some documents to Mr. Oberg, an assistant to Mr. Derr of the Antitrust Division, together with a letter from the law firm of Thompson, Hine and Flory stating that "the documents delivered herewith constitute the complete response of this company to the subpoena heretofore served upon it."

Although Mr. Oberg stated that he had no authority to appear before the Grand Jury he accepted the papers and signed the receipt. No person appeared before the Grand Jury on either December 1st or December 2nd to produce the papers or to testify for the corporation in response to the subpoena.

The subpoena was a valid one directed to The Chilcote Company and served personally upon the company's president. Counsel for respondents conceded that it was a valid subpoena and for that reason had made no earlier challenge or motion to quash. The subpoena contained duces tecum provisions requiring the production before the Grand Jury of specific, as well as other papers, relating to correspondence with named concerns. Also, the subpoena contained an ad testificandum clause.

Although respondents' counsel made objection to the method of procedure adopted by the Government, and probably it was not strictly in accordance with Rule 42, nevertheless adequate notice was given of the hearing and counsel for respondents stated that his case was fully prepared.

Treating the Government's motion and notice as tantamount to a rule to show cause the matter was heard fully upon the merits and submitted on oral argument and briefs.

It was the duty and responsibility of the president as chief executive officer of the corporation either to present himself or to send such officer or responsible representative of the corporation who could respond to the requirements of the subpoena, and he or the one selected by him should have attended the session of the Grand Jury on the date fixed by the subpoena and awaited questioning, dismissal or other action by that body. This required response seems clearly implicit in the decisions of the Supreme Court relied upon, and this is so even if the Wilson case did not involve ad testificandum provisions. I cannot subscribe to the proposition that an ad testificandum provision in a subpoena directed only to a corporation is mere surplusage. These matters must of necessity be handled in a practical manner so long as corporate and personal rights are observed and preserved. It certainly would not be desirable even from the standpoint of the corporation to subpoena all the officers or responsible executives of the company to make sure that the papers or information desired by the Grand Jury would be produced.

There could be no point, as it seems to me, in holding, as the High Court does, that a corporation is amenable to subpoena but place no responsibility upon its chief executive for fulfilling the requirements of the subpoena. A corporation only can act or respond by and through its responsible executives and certainly not through a messenger when a subpoena calls for attendance and testimony.

It is assumed that the principal defense for failure to respond to the subpoena is, that it was upon advice of counsel that the president or other responsible executive was not legally required to attend the Grand Jury session and testify if called upon. Of course, action taken on advice of counsel can not thus be defended, but it may be considered in mitigation of failure to comply. It is the duty of an attorney-at-law to advise his client and preserve his rights to the best of his understanding, but compelling legal reason and genuine apprehension of irreparable loss of rights only would justify advice to disregard the clear and solemn mandate for attendance issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction. Candidly, I can see no sound reason why the president or other responsible officer of the corporation could not just as conveniently have presented himself before the Grand Jury with the papers requested as to have them delivered, unidentified, by a messenger to the office of a member of the Antitrust Division attorneys' staff, who had no authority to waive the requirements of the subpoena of this Court. This was not an appearance in the District Court as commanded by the subpoena; and there was no response to the express command of the subpoena, even if one should concede that a delivery of papers to the Grand Jury by a messenger was all that was required.

Certainly I should not believe that any court would reject a claim of immunity, timely asserted, by an officer or a representative of a corporation, on any theory that such officer or representative responding to a subpoena directed only to a corporation, was a volunteer and not entitled to make such claim. But no question of immunity ever arose in this case since no one appeared before the Court or the Grand Jury in response to the subpoena.

Failure of a responsible officer, or some one designated by him, to appear before the Grand Jury in response to a subpoena duces tecum with ad testificandum clause, duly served upon him, although directed only to the corporation of which he is the responsible head, hardly can be considered other than contempt of court.

Judgment in contempt is therefore ordered; but, since the failure to respond to the subpoena according to its command does not appear to have been wilful or contumacious, the judgment of contempt and the payment of costs will be considered, at once, as vindication of the Court's authority in such matters and a purge of the contempt.

[¶ 62,354] Opinion of the Attorney General of Louisiana.

Addressed to James L. Earhart, State Representative, New Orleans, Louisiana, by M. E. Culligan, Assistant Attorney General. January 12, 1949.

Louisiana Unfair Sales Act

Condition of Sale Warranting Offer of Gift Merchandise.—A gift of an item of merchandise in connection with the sale of another item or items, is not prohibited by Section 2 of the Louisiana Unfair Sales Act, but the "gift" item is then considered as if it were also a "sale" item, so that the practical effect would be that the selling price of the "sale" item would have to be based upon the costs of both the "sale" and "gift" items, as provided in Section 2 of the Louisiana Unfair Sales Act, the cost of the "gift" item being added to the cost of the "sale" item.

See the Louisiana Unfair Sales Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8328.

[Request for Information]

Your letter of January 3, addressed to Honorable Bolivar F. Kemp, Jr., Attorney General, has been referred to me for attention.

You have quoted Section 2, subsection (e) of Act 338 of 1940, as amended by Acts 79 of 1942, 256 of 1946, and 486 of 1948, and desire to be advised if a merchant can give away any merchandise in his store as a gift.

["Gift" Items]

If an item is given away by itself, it violates this Act. If the item is given away in connection with the sale of another item or items, such gift is not prohibited, but the gift item is then considered as if it were also a "sale" item, so that the practical effect would be that the selling price of the "sale" item would have to be based upon the costs of both the "sale" and "gift" items as provided in the Act, the cost of the "gift" item being added to the cost of the "sale" item.

[Meaning of Term "Cost of the Retailer"]

Subsection 2 also defines what is meant in the Act by the term "cost of the retailer." As shown therein, this term means the invoice cost of the merchandise to the retailer at the time he purchased the item or if there has been a reduction in the cost to the retailer since he purchased the item and he can at the time of sale or at the time he offers the same for sale he could have within thirty days prior thereto purchased the item in the same quantity he originally purchased the same, then he must base his selling price on whichever "cost" figure is lowest as provided in Section 2 (d).

[Section 3 of Unfair Sales Act Quoted]

I respectfully call your attention to the fact that the gravamen of the offense is set forth in Section 3, reading as follows:

"It is hereby declared that any advertising offer to sell, or sale of any merchandise, either by retailers or wholesalers, at less than cost as defined in this Act, plus any State, County or Municipal sales tax that is then payable under any existing law or ordinance, with the intent, or effect of inducing the purchase of other merchandise or of unfairly diverting trade from a competitor or otherwise injuring a competitor, impairing and preventing fair competition and thus injuring public welfare are unfair competition and contrary to public policy and the policy of this Act, where the result of such advertising, offer or sale is to tend to deceive any purchaser or prospective purchaser, or to substantially lessen competition, or to unreasonably restrain trade, or to tend to create monopoly in any line of commerce."

I trust this gives you the information desired, but if I can be of further assistance, do not hesitate to call on me.

[¶ 62,355] A. J. Goodman & Son, Inc. v. United Lacquer Mfg. Corp.

In the United States District Court of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 7687. January 7, 1949.

Clayton Antitrust Act, Robinson-Patman Act

Action for Treble Damages—Proof of Cause of Injury Required.—There is no recovery in an action for treble damages even though a violation of the antitrust laws may be established, unless it can be proven that the violation was the causative factor of the plaintiff's alleged injury. Loss of expected profits from a contract still in negotiation is purely speculative damage, the cause of which can not be attributed to any action on the part of the defendant.

See the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2024.19.

Interpretation of the Clayton Act—Purchasers and Prospective Purchasers.—Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act as amended requires that there be actual sales at two different prices to two different actual buyers. Discrimination against prospective buyers is not an offense within this section.

See the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2212.165.

Interpretation of the Robinson-Patman Act—Contracts to Sell.—Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act covers price discrimination in contracts to sell as well as actual sales.

However this section is limited to cases where a price in one region is lower than the price exacted by the same seller in another.

See the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2219.

Offense under the Robinson-Patman Act—Sufficiency of Allegation.—The defendant contracted to sell lacquer to the plaintiff at a price set out in the plaintiff's bid to the State of New Hampshire. The defendant also submitted a bid to the State at a price lower than that agreed upon in the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, which bid was accepted in preference to that of the plaintiff. Such conduct supports an allegation of an offense under Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act which makes it unlawful "to sell, or contract to sell, goods at unreasonably low prices for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor."

See the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2219.

For the plaintiff: Kaplan & Linsky, Irving M. Fanger.

For the defendant: Max J. Zieman.

Memorandum In Re Defendant's Motion to Dismiss

FORD, D. J.: This is an action by A. J. Goodman & Son, Inc., against the United Lacquer Mfg. Corp., brought under the Clayton Act, C. 323, 38 Stat. 730, 15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 12-27, as amended, and the Robinson-Patman Act, C. 592, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. A., Sections 13 and 13a. Defendant has moved to dismiss the action for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

[Allegations]

Plaintiff in its complaint has alleged that on March 10, 1948 the State of New Hampshire, Office of the Purchasing Agent, issued a Proposal 802 calling for bids for 18,000 gallons of Yellow Traffic Lacquer to conform to certain specifications, and to be delivered in accordance with a certain delivery schedule to a warehouse of the State in Concord. On March 17, 1948, the plaintiff, a New Hampshire corporation doing business in that state, and defendant, a New York corporation having a place of business in Massachusetts entered into a contract by which defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff 18,000 gallons of lacquer conforming to the specifications of Proposal 802 and to be delivered in accordance with the schedule therein. The price was to be $1.85 per gallon (less 2% if paid within 10 days) and the contract was expressly conditioned on the plaintiff's being awarded the contract as successful bidder under Proposal 802. Thereupon plaintiff submitted its bid to the State of New Hampshire under Proposal 802 at a price of $1.97 per gallon.

Plaintiff further alleges that the defendant then, unknown to the plaintiff, and for the purpose of destroying or eliminating plaintiff as a competitor, submitted a bid on the same proposal at a price of $1.75 per gallon which the plaintiff alleges was unreasonably low, and the state subsequently awarded the contract to defendant at that price.

Plaintiff contends that the facts alleged, if established, would constitute a violation of Sec. 2 (a) of the Clayton Act as amended (15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 13 (a) and of Sec. 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 13a) and therefore gives it a right to sue for treble damages under Sec. 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 15).[1] Defendant contends that the complaint sets forth no conduct on its part which violates these acts, and that even if it has so violated,

[1] Sec. 13. Discrimination in price, services, or facilities—Price; selection of customers

(a) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them; * * *.

Sec. 13a. Discrimination in rebates, discounts, or advertising service charges; underselling in particular localities; penalties

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to be party to, or assist in, any transaction of sale, or contract to sell, which discriminates to the complaint makes no showing that any injury suffered by plaintiff was due to any such violation.

The alleged violation of the law consists in the sale of the lacquer by the defendant to the state at a price of $1.75 per gallon, either because this price, compared with the price of $1.85 per gallon at which it would have been sold to the plaintiff, is an act of discrimination falling within the ban of Sections 13 (a) and 13a, supra, or because the price taken in itself is unreasonably low within the meaning of Sec. 13a.

[Purchasers and Prospective Purchasers]

It is clear that there is an allegation that the prices asked by the defendant from two different prospective buyers is not the same. But Sec. 13 (a) deals only with price discrimination between purchasers. Here there is only [one] purchaser, the State of New Hampshire. It is not enough that a prospective purchaser, the plaintiff, would have had to pay a higher price if it did buy. There must be actual sales at two different prices to two different actual buyers. Shaw's, Inc. v. Wilson-Jones Co., 105 F. (2d) 331; Sorrentine v. Glen-Gery Shale Brick Corporation, 46 F. Supp. 709. Sec. 13a, on the other hand, does not require price discrimination in actual sales but also expressly includes discrimination in contracts to sell. But this section is limited to cases where a price in one part of the United States is lower than the price exacted by the seller in other parts of the United States. That does not apply to the situation here set forth, for there is here only one lot of lacquer which was to be delivered to the same warehouse whether sold directly to the state or sold to plaintiff for resale to the state.

[Unreasonably Low Price]

However, Sec. 13a also makes it unlawful "to sell, or contract to sell, goods at unreasonably low prices for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor." Plaintiff claims that the price of $1.75 at which defendant sold to the state was unreasonably low, for the purpose of eliminating plaintiff as a competitor. The complaint sets forth sufficient facts to show that plaintiff and defendant were competitors, since they were rivals for the business of selling lacquer to the State of New Hampshire. It describes the basic facts of an alleged course of conduct by defendant which might on further proof justify a finding that defendant acted for the purpose of eliminating plaintiff as a competitor. Nor can I hold, in the absence of further evidence, that the price of $1.75 was not unreasonably low. Consequently, I hold that on this point, the complaint properly alleges a violation of Sec. 13a.

[Insufficient Injury]

But, in order for the plaintiff to recover in a suit for treble damages under Sec. 15, it is necessary to show not only a violation of the antitrust laws but also injury to the plaintiff which is the result of defendant's violation of those laws. Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., 72 F. (2d) 885. The injury here claimed is the loss of profit of 12¢ per gallon which the plaintiff would have made had it been awarded the contract. But even though plaintiff alleges that if defendant had charged the same price both to it and to the state, it would have been awarded the contract, the rest of the complaint shows that this conclusion is far from certain. In the first place, the copy of Proposal 802 attached to the complaint shows that "The State reserves the right to accept all or part, or decline the whole bid." Thus there is no assurance that had the plaintiff been the lowest bidder it would have received the contract.

But even assuming that the lowest bidder would have been assured of receiving the his knowledge against competitors of the purchaser, in that, any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge is granted to the purchaser over and above any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge available at the time of such transaction to said competitors in respect of a sale of goods of like grade, quality, and quantity; to sell, or contract to sell, goods in any part of the United States at prices lower than those exacted by said person elsewhere in the United States for the purpose of destroying competition, or eliminating a competitor in such part of the United States; or, to sell, or contract to sell, goods at unreasonably low prices for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor.

* * *

Sec. 15. Suits by persons injured; amount of recovery

Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the anti-trust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

contract, it still appears that the cause of plaintiff's loss of the contract was not the fact that defendant's price to the state may have violated the statute, but rather the fact that defendant itself entered the bidding, which did not violate the law. Defendant, if it desires to bid, can always, without violating the law, submit a bid lower than any at which the plaintiff could offer to sell to the state. It would not violate the law by selling to the state at the same price at which it was willing to sell to the plaintiff. Nor would there be any violation if it sold to the state at a price equal to the lowest price at which any of its competitors would supply lacquer to the plaintiff. In either case defendant's price to the state could be equal to the price plaintiff paid, and hence less than the price at which plaintiff could offer to sell to the state and still make any profit on the transaction. The contract would already be lost to plaintiff, and the fact that defendant lowered his price still further, so that it was either discriminatory or unreasonably low in itself, could add nothing to the injury.

[Motion to Dismiss Granted]

Hence, if the contract were assured to the lowest bidder, a violation of the statute by defendant does not harm plaintiff; if, as seems to be the case, the lowest bidder is not ssaured of the contract, any harm resulting from a violation by defendant becomes purely speculative. In either case there is no injury sufficient to support an action for treble damages under Sec. 15.

Defendant's motion to dismiss is granted.

[¶ 62,356] U. S. v. Scophony Corporation of America, General Precision Equipment Corporation, Television Productions, Inc., and Scophony, Limited.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 34-184. January 12, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Television Industry—Divesting of Ownership Ordered.—A consent judgment entered in an action charging television equipment manufacturers with violating the Sherman Act requires two of the companies to divest themselves of ownership interests in a holding and licensing defendant company.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1220.211, 1530, 1590.

Consent Judgment—Television Industry—Price Fixing and Related Practices.—By a consent judgment, manufacturers of television equipment are enjoined from allocating markets, excluding any person from the manufacture of television equipment, limiting the importation or exportation of installations, refraining from competition, or exchanging technical information exclusively.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.10.

Consent Judgment—Television Industry—Patent Monopolies—Action for Patent Infringement Abrogated.—A television company is enjoined from instituting action for patent infringement and required to license its patents on a reasonable royalty basis.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530.50.

For the plaintiff: Sigmund Timberg, Mervin C. Pollak, Special Assistants to the Attorney General; Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; John F. X. McGohey, United States Attorney; Manuel M. Gorman, Special Assistant to the Attorney General; J. Francis Hayden, Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

For the defendants: Joseph O. Ollier, Attorney for Scophony Corporation of America; Mudge, Stern, Williams & Tucker, Attorneys for General Precision Equipment Corporation; Simpson, Thacker & Bartlett, Attorneys for Paramount Television, Inc., formerly Television Productions, Inc.

Final Judgment

CONGER, E. A., District Judge: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on December 18, 1945; all defendants except defendant Scophony, Limited having severally filed answers to the complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; defendant Scophony, Limited having unsuccessfully moved to dismiss this action and to quash service of process as to it for lack of jurisdiction over said defendant, and defendant Scophony, Limited being now in all respects in default herein, and defendants, Scophony Corporation of America, General Precision Equipment Corporation and Television Productions, Inc., by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment without admission by said defendants with respect to any issue of fact or law,

Now, therefore, no testimony or evidence having been taken herein except the deposition of W. G. Elcock by plaintiff used on the motion of defendant Scophony, Limited, hereinabove mentioned, and without any trial or finding or adjudication of any issue of law or fact herein, and upon consent of plaintiff United States of America and defendants Scophony Corporation of America, General Precision Equipment Corporation and Television Productions, Inc.;

It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed:

[Jurisdiction]

I

That this Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties thereto; and that the complaint states a cause of action under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890 entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies" and sets amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

[Applicability of Provisions]

II

That the provisions of this judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply with equal force to its successors and assigns, its directors, officers, agents, representatives or employees, and any person or corporation acting or with authority to act under, through, or for such defendant.

[Agreements Terminated]

III

That the following licenses and agreements and all amendments, modifications, or supplements of the same, are hereby terminated and cancelled as to defendants Scophony Corporation of America, General Precision Equipment Corporation and Television Productions, Inc. as of December 18, 1945, and said defendants are hereby enjoined and restrained from the performance, observance or enforcement of any of the terms or provisions thereof, and from directly or indirectly adopting, adhering to or furthering any course of conduct for the purpose or with the effect of maintaining, reviving, or reinstating the terms and provisions of said licenses and agreements:

A. Agreement dated July 31, 1942, between Scophony, Limited, William George Elcock, General Precision Equipment Corporation, and Television Productions, Inc., a copy of which is annexed to the complaint herein as Exhibit 1;

B. Agreement dated August 11, 1942, between Scophony, Limited, William George Elcock and Scophony Corporation of America, a copy of which is annexed to the complaint herein as Exhibit 2;

C. Agreement dated August 11, 1942, between Scophony Corporation of America, General Precision Equipment Corporation and Television Productions, Inc., a copy of which is annexed to the complaint herein as Exhibit 3.

[Acts Enjoined]

IV

That each of the defendants Scophony Corporation of America, General Precision Equipment Corporation and Television Productions, Inc., is hereby enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any agreement, combination, plan or program with each other or with defendant Scophony, Limited:

(a) To allocate, divide or restrict territories, customers, or markets for the manufacture, use or distribution of processes, inventions, products, apparatus or installations for, or relating to television;

(b) To exclude any person from or to restrict or limit any person in the manufacture, use or distribution of any process, invention, product, apparatus or installation for, or relating to television;

(c) To limit, restrict or prevent the importation into, or exportation from the United States, its territories or possessions, of any process, invention, product, apparatus or installation for, or relating to television;

(d) To refrain from competition or to leave any person free from competition in any territory or market in the manufacture, use or distribution of processes, products, inventions, apparatus or installations for, or relating to television;

(e) To exchange exclusively among said defendant, or any of them, patent licenses or technical information with respect to the manufacture, use or distribution of any process, product, invention, apparatus or installation for, or relating to television.

[Dispossession of Ownership]

V

That each of the defendants, General Precision Equipment Corporation and Television Productions, Inc., divest themselves forthwith of any and all stock or ownership interests in defendant Scophony Corporation of America; and are hereby further severally enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly:

(a) Acquiring any stock or ownership interest in defendant Scophony Corporation of America;

(b) Having any officer, director, representative, agent or employee who is at the same time an officer, director, representative, agent or employee of defendant Scophony Corporation of America;

(c) Dominating, controlling or interfering with, or attempting to dominate, control, or interfere with, the business, financial or promotional policies, practices, operation, management, expansion or other activities of defendant Scophony Corporation of America.

[Patent Licensing Ordered]

VI

A. That defendant Scophony Corporation of America is hereby ordered and directed to grant to each applicant making written request therefor a non-exclusive and non-assignable license, or sublicense, to make or have made for them, use and vend under any or all United States patents.

(1) Issued on or before the date of the entry of this judgment which are owned or controlled by defendant Scophony Corporation of America; or

(2) Issued or to be issued under any or all applications for United States patents filed by or on behalf of Scophony Corporation of America pending on the date of the entry of this judgment; or

(3) Issued or to be issued under any or all applications for United States patents filed after the date of entry of this judgment by or on behalf of Scophony Corporation of America covering inventions or discoveries, the rights in and to which were owned or controlled by Scophony Corporation of America or to which it was entitled on or before December 18, 1945; or

(4) Issued or to be issued under any or all applications for United States patents filed or to be filed after the date of entry of this judgment by or on behalf of Scophony Corporation of America on the basis of patents owned or controlled by defendant, Scophony, Limited, in the United Kingdom on or before December 18, 1945, or on the basis of patent applications of defendant Scophony, Limited, pending on December 18, 1945, in the United Kingdom; including, without limitation, all patents, reissue and patent applications listed in Appendix A annexed hereto, and any and all divisions, continuations, reissues or extensions thereof, all of such patents whether or not listed in Appendix A, and whether issued or to be issued, being hereinafter referred to as the Licensed Patents; and defendant Scophony Corporation of America is hereby enjoined and restrained from making any disposition of any said Licensed Patents which deprives it of the power or authority to grant such licenses, unless it sells, transfers or assigns such patents and requires, as a condition of such sale, transfer or assignment, that the purchaser, transferee or assignee thereof shall observe the requirements of this Section of this judgment and the purchaser, transferee or assignee shall file in this Court, prior to consummation of said transaction, an undertaking to be bound by the provisions of this Section of this Judgment.

B. That defendant Scophony Corporation of America is hereby enjoined and restrained from including any restriction or condition whatsoever in any license or sublicense granted by it pursuant to the provisions of this Section, except that (a) a reasonable non-discriminatory royalty may be charged; (b) reasonable provision may be made for a periodic inspection of the books and records of licensee by an independent auditor who shall report to the licensor only the amount of the royalty due and payable; (c) reasonable provision may be made for cancellation of the license upon failure of the licensee to pay the royalties or to permit the inspection of its books and records as hereinabove provided.

C. Upon receipt of written request for a license under the Licensed Patents, or any of them, defendant Scophony Corporation of America shall advise the license applicant in writing of the royalty which it deems reasonable for the claim or claims of the patent or patents to which the request pertains. If the parties are unable to agree upon a reasonable royalty within sixty (60) days from the date such request for the license was received by defendant Scophony Corporation of America, the license applicant may forthwith apply to this Court for the determination of a reasonable royalty, and defendant Scophony Corporation of America shall, upon receipt of notice of the filing of such court application, promptly give notice thereof to the Attorney General. The reasonable royalty rates determined by the Court in any such proceeding shall apply to the license applicant and to all other licensees under this judgment under the same claim or claims of the same patent or patents. For said sixty (60) day period, and pending the completion of any such court proceeding, the license applicant shall have full rights under the said patent claim or claims to which his application pertains without payment of royalty, but subject to the final judgment and order of the Court in such proceeding, and further subject to the following provision, defendant Scophony Corporation of America may apply to the Court to fix an interim royalty rate pending final determination of what constitutes a reasonable royalty. If the Court fixes such interim royalty rate, defendant Scophony Corporation of America shall then issue, and the court applicant shall accept, a license, or, as the case may be, a sublicense, providing for the periodic payment of royalties at such interim rate from the date of the fiilng of such court application by the applicant. If the court applicant fails to accept such license or fails to pay the interim royalty in accordance therewith, such action shall be ground for the dismissal of his application and for the rescission of any and all of the applicant's rights under this subsection. Where an interim license or sublicense has been issued pursuant to this subsection, or where the applicant has exercised any right under any patent hereunder, reasonable royalty rates as finally determined by the Court shall be retroactive for the applicant and for all other licensees under this judgment under the same claim or claims of the same patent or patents, to the date the applicant files his application with the Court.

D. Defendant Scophony Corporation of America is hereby ordered and directed, in so far as it has power to do so, to grant upon written request to any applicant licensed under the provisions of this Section VI, with respect to any products manufactured in the United States pursuant to such license, a non-exclusive grant of immunity from suit under foreign patents or patents issued on foreign applications corresponding to any of the Licensed Patents under which the applicant is licensed.

[Legal Action Enjoined]

VII

A. Defendant Scophony Corporation of America is hereby enjoined and restrained from instituting or threatening to institute, or maintaining or continuing any proceeding under Sections 67 and 70 or Title 35, U. S. C. for the recovery of damages accrued prior to the date of this judgment for the infringement of any of its now issued or reissued United States patents applicable to the art of television.

B. Defendant Scophony Corporation of America is hereby directed during the period ending five years after the date of the entry of this judgment to furnish or make available in writing, at a nominal charge, to any person licensed to use the Licensed patents, information concerning the operational techniques, processes, formulae, plans, specifications, and other know-how in its possession as of the date of this judgment relating to patents or applications for patents referred to in Section VI hereof.

[Inspection for Compliance Purposes]

VIII

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General, and on reasonable notice to the defendant be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (a) reasonable access, during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this judgment, and (b) subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, any defendant, upon the written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, shall submit such reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this judgment as may from time to time be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this judgment. No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

IX

Jurisdiction of this action is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, or the modification thereof, or the enforcement of compliance therewith and for punishment of violations thereof.

APPENDIX A

I

All United States patents issued on or before the date of the entry of the foregoing judgment which are owned or controlled by defendant, Scophony Corporation of America, and all patents issued or to be issued on applications for United States patents, including continuations and divisions thereof, filed by or on behalf of defendant Scophony Corporation of America pending on the date of the entry of the foregoing judgment, or on applications for United States patents filed thereafter by or on behalf of Scophony Corporation of America covering inventions or discoveries, the rights in and to which were owned or controlled by Scophony Corporation of America or to which it was entitled on or before December 18, 1945, including, without limitation, the following:

Patents

1,914,314	2,112,002	2,267,251
1,918,358	2,138,224	2,270,232
1,919,139	2,140,584	2,296,943
2,012,207	2,153,490	2,296,944
2,021,162	2,155,659	2,306,407 (Reissue 22,628)
2,025,186	2,155,660	2,313,286
2,029,401	2,155,661	2,320,380
2,030,235	2,157,468	2,330,171 (Reissue 22,734)
2,041,036	2,158,990	2,330,172
2,053,014	2,161,299	2,335,265
2,061,016	2,182,043	2,349,298
2,086,833	2,193,422	2,355,110
2,088,626	2,193,953	2,371,643
2,088,732	2,238,089	2,420,198
2,089,155	2,245,119	2,435,458
2,100,044	2,251,525	2,452,211
2,110,945	2,258,311	2,454,094
		2,553,595

Applications for Patents

509,144	560,776	599.574
523,716	576,819	563,864
541,155	580,908	709,735
544,036	580,325	710,345
551,274	590,823	775,175
556,881	591,498	12,036
557,066	597,755	12,256

II

All patents issued or to be issued on applications for United States patents, including continuations and divisions thereof, filed or to be filed by or on behalf of defendant, Scophony Corporation of America, after December 18, 1945, on the basis of patents issued on or before December 18, 1945 in the United Kingdom which are owned or controlled by defendant Scophony,

Limited, or on the basis of patent applications by or on behalf of defendant Scophony, Limited, including continuations and divisions thereof, pending in the United Kingdom on December 18, 1945, or on the basis of patents issued on such applications.

[¶ 62,357] Modigliani Glass Fibers, Inc., and The Light Conditioning Company of America, Inc. v. The Glasfloss Manufacturing Company, Inc., and The Glasfloss Corporation.

In the United States District Court, Eastern District of New York. No. C. 8731. December 9, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Suit for Patent Infringement—Motion to Amend Allegation of Conspiracy Allowed. —A motion by the defendant in a patent infringement suit for leave to amend an answer will be allowed when the proposed amendment is based on an allegation of conspiracy with the inventor to use the patents to restrain trade.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1660.200.

For plaintiff: Kniesner, Hoag & Carlson.

For defendant: Mann & Burrows.

[Nature of Motion]

INCH, J.: This is a patent suit. The complaint is in the usual form, charging infringement, etc. The answer puts in issue these allegations, and now the defendants move for leave to file an amended answer, specifically in connection with the Fourth Defense alleged in such proposed amended answer.

The plaintiffs have no objection, apparently, to the service of an amended answer, but oppose vigorously the inclusion therein of this Fourth Defense.

[Allegation of Conspiracy]

In substance, this Fourth Defense alleges that the inventor, before transferring his patents to plaintiffs, entered into a conspiracy to illegally restrain trade, and thereby sought to establish an illegal monopoly, using these patents in question as a means of carrying out such conspiracy, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs are coming into this Court with unclean hands, and if so, the patents cannot be enforced.

[Striking Out Leads to Delay]

I agree with counsel for plaintiffs that the said defense as pleaded is not as precise as might be desired. Possibly at the trial it will not amount to much for various reasons, one of them possibly, a failure of proof on other issues as well as on this issue so raised; and not to delete it seems to me to impose no unusual burden upon plaintiffs, while striking it may lead to unnecessary delay caused by intervening legal procedure.

[Unclean Hands Doctrine]

Of course, the equitable doctrine of "unclean hands" is applicable only where plaintiffs' unconscionable conduct is directly connected with the subject-matter of suit, and it has been indicated that such a defense need not be pleaded, but may be taken up without affirmative claim therefore. [Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. v. Sylvania Indust. Corp., U. S. C. A. 2, 154 F. 2d 814 (1946)) Cert. denied. Decisions such as Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co., 314 U. S. 488; B. B. Chemical Co. v. Ellis, 314 U. S. 495, show that when substantiated, such defense has its place in such litigation.

[Allegation Sufficient]

It seems to me, therefore, that sufficient has been set forth in the present allegations of this defense, and that they are not so vague as to require that they be stricken out of the proposed amended answer. When the case is tried, the trial Judge, then having the evidence before him, will rule whether or not such a defense substantially exists, and should prevail. In this regard, I also have in mind that this is not a jury case.

[Motion Granted]

The motion for leave to file the amended answer is therefore granted, and the motion to strike out the Fourth Defense is denied.

Submit order.

[¶ 62,358] The State of Kansas, on the Relation of John Anderson, Jr., County Attorney of Johnson County v. The Commercial Candy Company, Inc., of Topeka, and W. E. Schwartz.

In the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas. No. 37,431. January 22, 1949.

Appeal from Johnson District Court.

Kansas Unfair Practices Act

Sales Below Cost—No Offense Where No Intent to Monopolize.—Tobacco wholesalers selling to retailers below cost do not violate Section 2 of the Unfair Practices Act of the State of Kansas when there is no evidence of intent unfairly to divert trade from competitors, to injure competitors and prevent fair competition and injure public welfare. Defendant discharges the burden of proof placed upon him by Section 5 of the Act by proving that such sales were made in good faith and to meet the price of a competitor. This section does not require the defendant to ascertain whether his competitors are selling below cost.

See the Kansas Unfair Practices Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8288.

For appellants: Howard E. Payne.

For appellee: John W. Anderson, Jr., W. C. Jones.

[Pleadings]

PRICE, J.: This case involves an appeal by the defendants below from an order of the court enjoining them from violating the provisions of the Unfair Practices Act as set forth in G. S. 1947 Supp., 50-401 to 50-408, inclusive.

The petition filed by the county attorney, under the provisions of 50-404 of the act, alleges that defendants maintain and carry on a business as wholesalers of candy, and tobacco products in the state of Kansas, and as such wholesalers of candy and tobacco products sell and distribute cigarettes to retailers in the state of Kansas; that the defendants did, on the 31st day of October, 1947, sell, at wholesale, to two retail firms in Olathe, Johnson county, Kansas, twenty-five cartons of popular brand cigarettes at the price of $1.605 per carton; that said sales were made by defendants as wholesalers at less than cost to them and that said sales were contrary to the provisions of the Unfair Practices Act of the state of Kansas; that defendants will continue to offer for sale and will continue to sell said cigarettes at wholesale at less than cost to them and contrary to the laws of the state of Kansas if they are not enjoined and restrained by order of court from so doing and that said sales of cigarettes by defendants were made with intent unfairly to divert trade from competitors, to injure competitors and to impair and prevent fair competition and injure the public welfare. The prayer is for an injunction to restrain and enjoin the defendants from offering for sale and from selling cigarettes in Johnson county, Kansas, at less than cost to the wholesalers and contrary to the provisions of the act.

The defendants' answer admits certain formal allegations of the petition, admits the sales in question, but denies that said sales were made at less than cost to defendants, and alleges that they are entitled to the benefits under the provisions of subsection (e) of section 405 of the act in that said sales to said retailers herein admittedly made were made in good faith and to meet the price of The Theo. Poehler Mercantile Company of Lawrence, Kan. a competitor of said defendants, which company had, on many occasions and for a long time prior to said sales made by said defendants, made sales of the same brands of cigarettes in the same locality for $1.59 per carton; that they do not know and have no means of ascertaining whether the said The Theo. Poehler Mercantile Company, in the sale of cigarettes at $1.59 per carton, is doing so in violation of the Unfair Practices Act of the state of Kansas, but allege the fact to be that they have a right, under the terms of said act, to meet the price of said competitor in the same locality, towit: Johnson county, Kansas.

Further answering, defendants allege that the Unfair Practices Act is unconstitutional; that the same is in contravention of and offends the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution; that it is likewise in contravention of section 17 of article 2 of the constitution of the state of Kansas; that said act is discriminatory and arbitrary and is not uniform in its operation throughout the state; and further, that said act is and does constitute an attempt to fix prices at which commodities may be sold, is contrary to public policy, tends to create monopolies and to stifle competition and is detrimental to general public welfare.

Plaintiff's reply denies every material allegation contained in the answer except such facts therein contained as were agreed upon in the agreed statement of facts filed by the parties to the action.

The case was tried by the court on an agreed statement of facts, and in addition thereto the plaintiff offered one witness. The defendants offered no additional oral, written, or documentary evidence.

[Facts Agreed Upon]

The agreed statement of facts is as follows:

"It is hereby agreed between the respective parties, Plaintiff and Defendants, that the following do constitute and are facts upon which the respective parties are mutually agreed and may be so considered as such by the Court:

"1. That this action is properly brought by John Anderson, Jr., who is the County Attorney of Johnson County, Kansas, that the Defendant, Commercial Candy Company, is a corporation, doing business at Topeka, Kansas, that the Defendant, W. E. Schwartz, is general manager of said corporation and that the defendants are wholesale dealers in candy and tobacco products within the State of Kansas, and as such sell and distribute cigarettes and other merchandise to retailers within the State of Kansas.

"2. That this action is brought under the provisions of 50-401 to 408, inclusive of the 1945 Supplement to G. S. of Kansas, 1935, and that all of the provisions of said sections relating to wholesalers are applicable herein.

"3. It is agreed that the defendant, W. E. Schwartz, acting for and on behalf of the Defendant corporation, did make sale, at wholesale, and on the 31st day of October, 1947, of five cartons of Lucky Strike Cigarettes, 5 cartons of Old Gold cigarettes and five cartons of Phillip Morris cigarettes, to the Norris Drug Store, of Olathe, Kansas, and did likewise make sale, at wholesale, of five cartons of Lucky Strike and five cartons of Chesterfield cigarettes, on the same date to Carver Brothers Grocery, of Olathe, Kansas, and that both the Norris Drug Store and Carver Brothers Grocery are retailers, engaged in the sale of goods, wares and merchandise at retail.

"4. It is further agreed that said Defendants did make sale of said cigarettes to said retailers at a price of $1.605 per carton.

"5. It is further agreed between the parties hereto that the actual cost of said cigarettes, including the tax of $0.30 per carton thereon and other costs for cartage and mark-up is $1.65 per carton.

"6. It is likewise agreed that the actual cost to the Defendants, of each carton of cigarettes, was, at the time of said sales, exclusive of tax, cartage or mark-up $1.32 4/5 per carton.

"7. It is further agreed between the parties hereto that the Defendants will testify that The Theo Poehler Mercantile Company, of Lawrence, Kansas, was at the time of said sales, made by said Defendants, a competitor of said Defendants engaged in the same kind and character of business and that said competitor had, immediately prior and immediately after said sales made by said Defendants, made sales of the same brand of cigarettes, sold by said Defendants, and in the same locality, at a price of $1.59 per carton.

"8. It is agreed that the Defendants herein made no effort to determine whether said sales of cigarettes made by The Theo Poehler Mercantile Company, of Lawrence, Kansas, were made by it for less than cost to said mercantile company.

"9. It is agreed between the parties hereto that the Defendants are by law allowed eight (8%) percent discount from the face value of revenue stamps purchased from the State of Kansas, said stamps to be affixed by the wholesaler upon each package contained in each carton of cigarettes before sale, as provided in Section 79-3311, 1945 Supplement to G. S. of Kansas, 1935.

"It is further agreed between the parties hereto that in addition to the above agreed statement of facts each of the parties, Plaintiff and Defendants, reserve the right to introduce additional oral, written or documentary evidence."

The witness called by the plaintiff testified that for about fifteen years he had been engaged in the wholesale business in Johnson county, and, among other things, sold candy, tobacco and cigarettes; that during such period he had acquired what might be called "regular customers;" that among those customers were the two retail firms in Olathe to which the defendants had sold the cigarettes in question; that he had been selling cigarettes at wholesale for $1.66 per carton; that popular "name brand" cigarettes are sold by the manufacturers to wholesalers at a uniform price all over the United States; that unless the defendants are enjoined and restrained from selling cigarettes in the Olathe community at less than cost to the wholesaler, trade would be diverted from the witness; that such practice would tend to prevent competition in the community, would create a monopoly for the defendants in Johnson county, and that he had asked the county attorney to bring this action.

On cross-examination, the witness testified that he was familiar with that part of the Unfair Practices Act which permits a wholesaler to meet the price of a competitor; that he knew the defendants, at the time the sales were made, were meeting the price of The Theo. Poehler Mercantile Company, and that he had no independent means of ascertaining and did not know what the cost of doing business might be so far as the defendants and The Theo. Poehler Mercantile Company were concerned.

[Trial Court Holdings]

The court made written conclusions of fact which were generally in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants. Several of these findings, important for our purposes, are as follows:

"4. That the defendants did on the 31st day of October, 1947, sell, at wholesale, to the Norris Drug Store of Olathe, Kansas, a retailer, five cartons of cigarettes at the price of $1.605 per carton and that said defendants did sell to Carver Bros. Grocery, a retailer, at Olathe, Kansas, ten cartons of cigarettes at $1.605 per carton.

"5. That the sales as aforesaid and at the price as aforesaid made by said defendants as wholesalers is less than cost to said wholesalers.

"6. That cigarettes are sold by the manufacturer of cigarettes to all wholesalers at the same price everywhere in the United States, said price being $1.32 4/5 per carton.

. . . .

"10. That the cost to the wholesaler in this vicinity and in Olathe, Kansas, of popular brand cigarettes per carton, including cost to the wholesaler, state tax, cartage and two (2) per cent markup is $1.65 per carton.

"11. That the sale of cigarettes by the defendants at the price of $1.605 per carton is below cost to the wholesaler as defined by the Unfair Practices Act of the Statute of Kansas.

. . . .

"13. That the defendants did not make the sales as aforesaid in good faith and to meet the price of the Theo. Poehler Mercantile Company of Lawrence, Kansas, a competitor, as alleged in defendants, answer and that the defendants made no effort to determine whether the Theo. Poehler Mercantile Company made said sales for less than costs as alleged in defendants' answer."

Conclusions of law rendered by the court are as follows:

"1. That the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendants as prayed for in plaintiff's petition, and the defendants, and each of them, are hereby restrained and permanently enjoined from selling cigarettes in Olathe or in Johnson County, Kansas, at a price below cost to the wholesaler.

"2. That the Unfair Practices Act of the State of Kansas is not in contravention and does not obstruct the due process clause to the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America.

"3. That the Unfair Practices Act is not in contravention of Article Two, Section Seventeen of the Constitution of the State of Kansas.

"4. That the Unfair Practices Act is legal and constitutional in all respects and is a valid and reasonable exercise of the police powers of the state.

"5. That the defendants herein made sales of cigarettes in this community and in Johnson County, Kansas, below cost with the intent or effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition.

"6. That if the defendants are permitted to sell cigarettes in Johnson County, Kansas, at a price below cost to the defendants, as wholesalers, said defendants will divert trade from the wholesalers in Johnson County, Kansas, thereby giving the defendants a monopoly of the cigarette business in Johnson County, Kansas, all of which is against the public welfare and against public policy."

Defendants' motion for a new trial was overruled and this appeal followed.

Considerable space in the brief of each of the parties is devoted to the question of the constitutionality of the Unfair Practices Act but our view of the facts of this case renders it unnecessary to discuss such question.

Section 50-402 of the act reads:

> "It is hereby declared that any advertising, offer to sell, or sale of any merchandise, either by retailers or wholesalers, at less than cost as defined in this act, with the intent, of unfairly diverting trade from a competitor or otherwise injuring a competitor, impair and prevent fair competition, injure public welfare, are unfair competition and contrary to public policy and the policy of this act, where the result of such advertising, offer or sale is to tend to deceive any purchaser or prospective purchaser, or to substantially lessen competition, or to unreasonably restrain trade, or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

The last portion of 50-403 reads:

> ". . . Proof of any such advertising, offer to sell or sale by any retailer or wholesaler in contravention of the policy of this act shall be prima facie evidence of a violation of this act."

Section 50-405, relating to exemptions, reads:

> "The provisions of this act shall not apply to sales . . . at wholesale . . .; (e) where the price of merchandise is made in good faith to meet the price of comppetitor in the same locality; . . . Provided, however, That any . . . wholesaler claiming the benefits of any of the exemptions hereinabove provided shall have the burden of proof of facts entitling such . . . wholesaler to any of the benefits of said exemptions: . . :"

[Argument on Appeal]

Appellee argues that the agreed statement of facts makes out a prima facie case against the defendants. Assuming, but not deciding, that it does, what about the provisions of the statute relating to exemptions? Defendants argue that in making the sales they were merely meeting the price of a competitor in the same locality. It is admitted that the Poehler Company was a competitor of defendants, engaged in the same kind and character of business, and that immediately prior to said sales in question the Poehler Company had made sales of the same brands of cigarettes in the same locality at $1.59 per carton. The witness Green testified he knew that the defendants, in making the sales in question, were meeting the price of the Poehler company.

[Lack of Evidence of Interest]

We are unable to find any evidence in this record upon which the trial court could base its conclusion of fact No. 13 and its conclusion of law No. 5, in which it found that the defendants did not make the sales in good faith and to meet the price of the Poehler company, their competitor, and that the sales in question were made below cost with the intent or effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition. It may be that the sales by the defendants resulted in injury to other competitors and tended to destroy competition, but by the very terms of the act (50-402) such sales must be made with the intent to bring about those results enumerated by the statute in order to constitute a violation of the act. The act (50-405) further provides that a wholesaler may sell for less than cost where the price of merchandise is made in good faith to meet the price of a competitor in the same locality.

[Good Faith Proven]

The trial court may have reached its conclusions on account of the fact the record shows that the defendants made no effort to ascertain whether or not the Poehler Company was selling below cost, and that, therefore, the defendants were guilty of bad faith and thus made the sales in question with the intent to bring about the results prohibited by the statute. However, we are of the opinion that this would be an erroneous and unreasonable construction of the burden of proof portion of the exemption provision. As a practical proposition, how could the defendants have ascertained whether or not the price of $1.59 per carton was below cost to the Poehler company unless resort be made to the books and records of such competitor?

We think that the burden of proof portion of the exemption provision means that when one claims the benefit of any of the enumerated exemptions, he has the burden of proving the facts entitling him to the benefit of such exemption, which, in this case, would mean that the defendants had the burden of proving that they made the sales in question in good faith to meet the price of a competitor in the same locality. There is no evidence in this record of bad faith or of a conspiracy on the part of the defendants to injure competitors, stifle competition, or to bring about a monopoly. On the contrary, we think the evidence clearly shows that the sales were made in good faith by the defendants in order to meet the price of a competitor in the same locality. That, under the statute, they were entitled to do.

Accordingly, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and the cause is remanded with instructions to render judgment for the defendants.

[¶ 62,359] United States v. The Greater Kansas City Chapter, National Electrical Contractors Association, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern Division of the Western District of Missouri. No. 5287. January 18, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Agreement Between Electrical Contractors—No Effect on Interstate Commerce.—Electrical contractors who agree not to execute contracts for the installation of electrical equipment unless the materials are supplied by them or the profit on the material is paid to them do not impede the free flow of interstate commerce within the intendment of the Sherman Act. Whether the defendants furnished the equipment or whether the owners and builders furnished the electrical materials, the flow of commerce would continue just the same.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.581.

Agreement Between Electrical Contractors—Purpose of Alleged Unlawful Contract.—Where the intention to restrain interstate commerce is absent and the objectives are limited to intrastate activities, there is no offense under the Sherman Act. The fact that an agreement whereby contractors agree not to install equipment unless the material is supplied by them indirectly affects interstate commerce does not bring the contract within the prohibition of the Act.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1220.508.

Agreement Between Electrical Contractors—Insufficiency of Allegations—Motion to Dismiss Sustained.—In an indictment it is not sufficient merely to state a conclusion that the combination or agreement was in restraint of trade but such details must be given as to show in what manner interstate commerce or trade was restrained by the alleged contract. It must appear logically that the combination if carried out would restrain commerce. An arrangement whereby contractors agreed not to perform contracts for the installation of electrical equipment unless the material was supplied by them or the profit on the material was paid to them, does not, upon analysis, disclose such an effect. There is no averment which indicates any menace to the free flow of interstate commerce. Motion to dismiss sustained.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1630.210.

For plaintiff: John F. Sonnett, Assistant Attorney General; Edward R. Kenny, Special Assistant to the Attorney General; Donald O. McHugh, Special Attorney; William E. Speer, Special Attorney, Washington, D. C.; Sam M. Wear, United States Attorney, Kansas City, Missouri.

For defendants: William R. Collinson, Lancie L. Watts, Paul R. Barnett, Hugh B. Downey, Harry A. Morris, Kansas City, Missouri.

Memorandum Opinion on Motion to Dismiss Indictment

REEVES, E. L., District Judge: While many reasons for the dismissal of the indictment are enumerated in the motion to dismiss yet the several grounds are epitomized in the first averment, which is, "The indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute an offense against the United States of America."

The indictment charges that the defendants are electrical contractors in the Springfield area (Springfield, Missouri and its environs); that the business carried on by them is the "installation, alteration or repair of electrical systems" in the said area; that the business done by them is large, exceeding for instance, $500,000 during the year 1946; that the electrical equipment used by the defendants, or at least three-fourths of it, was and is produced at factories located outside the State of Missouri and shipped in interstate commerce into said Springfield area; that such equipment was purchased both by the defendants and builders and owners using the services of the defendants; and that the "conspiracy" which began in the year 1946 is as follows:

> "* * * the defendants * * * have been engaged in a combination and conspiracy in restrain of the aforesaid trade and commerce among the several states in electrical equipment and electrical contracting services in violation of Section 1 of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890 as amended (15 U. S. C. Section 1), commonly known as the Sherman Act."

The details of the conspiracy alleged are as follows:

> "* * * a continuing agreement and concert of action among the defendants * * * that the defendant electrical contractors agree that they will not enter into contracts with owners or builders to supply only the labor required in the installation, alteration or repair of electrical systems, unless said owners or builders will pay an additional sum representing a substantial part or all of the profit said contractors would have realized if the electrical materials had been supplied by them."

This was followed by an averment that this combination or agreement was effectuated or consummated by overt acts.

[Averments Must Be Particularized]

1. The act alleged to have been violated is the familiar one known as the Sherman Act of 1890, found in Section 1, Title 15 U. S. C. A. and is as follows:

> "Every contract, * * * or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States * * * is hereby declared to be illegal; * * *. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy declared by sections 1-7 of this title to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such punishments, in the discretion of the court.

It is noted from the foregoing pertinent excerpt that the offense or crime under the statute is a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states. In an indictment it is not sufficient merely to state as a conclusion that the combination or agreement was in restraint of trade but such details must be given as to show in what manner interstate commerce or trade was restrained by the alleged contract, combination or conspiracy. Frankfort Distilleries v. United States, 144 F. 2d, 824. It mus appear logically and reasonably that the combination or conspiracy, if carried out, would necessarily have the effect to limit and restrain commerce.

2. An analysis of the indictment in this case does not disclose such an effect. The defendants were engaged in "installing, altering or repairing electrical systems." No inferences could be drawn from the averments of the indictment that the defendants would profit or benefit by any restriction or restraint upon the free flow of electrical equipment into the area where they carried on their activities. On the contrary, the averments of the indictment showed that they did a large business in the year 1946, and there was no suggestion that by their exactions of owners and builders the free flow of commerce in electrical supplies suffered an impairment or diminution.

3. The specific combination and conspiracy charged in the indictment was that the defendants would make no contract with any owner or builder unless such owner or builder would agree to pay "an additional sum representing a substantial part or all of the profits said contractors would have realized if the electrical materials had been supplied by them." The meaning of this arrangement was that, if the defendants supplied all the labor for installations, alterations or repairs, then they should be paid an additional amount equal to a part or all of the profits the owner or builders would realize if such owners or builders purchased and supplied the equipment or material used in such installation, alteration or repairs. There was no averment which indicated a menace or a threat to the free flow of interstate commerce. The owner or builder had an option either to purchase the equipment necessary for the installation, etc., and then divide or pay all the profit over to the defendants or to permit the defendants to purchase and supply the equipment and material along with their labor. By such an arrangement there was no restraint upon interstate commerce and without a combination or agreement or a conspiracy to restrain commerce there can be no violation of the law.

4. Assuming that the defendants were indispensable to the installations, etc., of electrical systems in that area or community, and, assuming further, that their refusal to contract with the owners and builders unless they complied with their (defendants') demands, would impede and interefere with the free flow of interstate commerce, yet, under the express ruling of the Supreme Court in Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader et al. 310 U. S. 469, l. c. 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 490, 492, 493, 497, 498, 500 and 501, this would not be sufficient and they would not be guilty of violating the law.

[No Effect on Free Flow of Commerce]

As indicated in that lengthy opinion, the Sherman Anti-Trust Law was and is but an exposition of the common law and common law doctrines in restraint of trade. The national government, unlike the State of Missouri and practically all the other states in the Union, could not and did not undertake to adopt the common law as a part of the national code. It was necessary, therefore, in its manifold activities and particularly in the regulation of interstate commerce over which it had constitutional regulatory authority, to express by positive enactment the doctrines of the common law. The act, therefore, is to be interpreted in the light of the common law as it is construed. The object of both the common law and our statutory law was to prevent trusts and combinations of business and of capital organized and directed to the controlling of the market by suppression of competition in the marketing of goods and services. The reason for the law was the monopolistic tendency which had become a matter of public concern, and, "The end sought was the prevention of restraints to free competition in business and commercial transactions which tended to restrict production, raise prices or otherwise control the market to the detriment of purchasers or consumers of goods and services, all of which had come to be regarded as a special form of public injury." l. c. 493.

In the Apex Hosiery case, supra, the defendants had conducted a sit-down strike and had destroyed property and damaged merchandise intended for interstate commerce. They had refused to permit the shipment of the merchandise so that it might enter the channels of interstate commerce. The object of the defendants, however, was "to compel petitioner to accede to the union demands and an effect of it, in consequence of the strikers' tortious acts, was the prevention of the removal of petitioner's product for interstate shipment." l. c. 501. The court then announced a doctrine applicable here:

> "So far as appears the delay of these shipments was not intended to have and had no effect on prices of hosiery in the market, and so was in that respect no more a restraint forbidden by the Sherman Act than the restriction upon competition and the course of trade held lawful in Appalachian Coals v. United States, supra, because notwithstanding its effect upon the marketing of the coal it nevertheless was not intended to and did not effect market price."

In the Apex Hosiery case the Court of Appeals had reversed a judgment against the defendants in a civil proceeding and the Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeals.

In the Apex Hosiery case the court found that the effect of the demands and actions of the defendants "was to restrict substantially the interstate transportation of its manufactured product, so as to bring the acts of respondents by which the restriction was effected within the reach of the commerce power if Congress has seen fit to exercise it. Cessation of petitioner's manufacturing operations, which respondents compelled, indubitably meant the cessation of shipment interstate. The effect upon the commerce resulted naturally and inevitably from the cause." (Italics mine.) l. c. 484.

In the instant case there is not a single averment that the free flow of commerce was affected or would have been affected in any way whatsoever by the exactions made by the defendants upon owners and builders.

5. As said in United States v. Yellow Cab Co. 332 U. S. 218, l. c. 225:

"Section 1 of the Act outlaws unreasonable restraints on interstate commerce, regardless of the amount of the commerce affected."

And, again, l. c. 227:

"The test of illegality under the Act is the presence or absence of an unreasonable restraint on interstate commerce."

The acts here charged did not remotely affect interstate commerce. Whether the defendants furnished the equipment or whether the owners and builders furnished the electric materials, the flow of commerce would continue just the same. The contract of the defendants against which the indictment complains was purely and entirely intrastate. In that respect it fell squarely within the "dead chicken" case of Schechter Corp. v. United States, 295 U. S. 495, l. c. 547, where the court said, in differentiating between interstate and intrastate commerce:

"Where a combination or conspiracy is formed, with the intent to restrain interstate commerce or to monopolize any part of it, the violation of the statute is clear. Coronado Coal Co. v. United Mine Workers, 268 U. S. 295, 310. But where that intent is absent, and the objectives are limited to intrastate activities, the fact that there may be an indirect effect upon interstate commerce does not subject the parties to the federal statute, notwithstanding its broad provisions." (Italics mine.)

6. Counsel for the government rely, as do opposing counsel upon a veritable forest of citations and authorities but specific reliance is placed upon the case of United States v. General Motors Corporation, 121 F. 2d 376. The facts in that case do not compare with the facts alleged in the case under consideration. General Motors Corporation undertook, after it had parted with title to its products, to coerce its dealers into financing the sale of automobiles through the General Motors Acceptance Corporation and the General Motors Acceptance Corporation of Indiana, Inc. It denied to its 15,000 dealers who bought and became invested with title to the motor vehicles manufactured by it, their freedom to do business with a multitude of independent finance companies in the retail sales of motor vehicles. The exhaustive opinion in that case does not apply here.

[Averments Insufficient]

While it is conjectured by counsel for the government that the effect of the exactions made by the defendants upon owners and builders would limit the flow of electrical equipment and material to the ultimate consumer, yet the averments of the indictment do not justify that speculation.

In view of the above discussion it should be held that the indictment does not state, as claimed by the defendants, facts sufficient to constitute an offense against the United States of America, and, accordingly, the motion to dismiss should be and will be sustained.

[¶ 62,360] A. B. Momand v. Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. et al. Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., et al., v. A. B. Momand.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit. Nos. 4291, 4292. December 21, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Action for Treble Damages—General Allegations—Failure to Allege Specific Damages. —In a suit for treble damages by a motion picture operator against producers and distributors complaining that the defendants conspired to violate the antitrust laws by their illegal business practices, general allegations must be specifically substantiated. Nebulous assertions by the plaintiff that his business deteriorated, that his profits would have been larger had the defendants not indulged in certain practices, that the post conspiracy business arrangements he was forced to assume were undesirable, are too vague. Allegations and proof held insufficient to support a jury verdict.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.351.

Motion Picture Industry—Treble Damages Action—Proof Required.—A fair degree of certainty is essential to show the causative relation of the defendant's misconduct and the plaintiff's injury. Where a plaintiff is required to prove that damage ensued from two specific illegal practices, specific information is required, otherwise his testimony is simply unsupported opinion evidence.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.351.

Motion Picture Industry—Action for Treble Damages—Statute of Limitations.—A statute of limitations governing the time within which a private action may be brought for damages as a result of offences under the federal antitrust laws does not begin to run until the termination of any federal suit brought on the same set of facts. The Sherman and Clayton Acts, which create federal causes of action, have no internal statute of limitations. The applicable law therefore is the law of the state in which the suit is brought.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.435.

Motion Picture Industry—Action for Treble Damages—Res Judicata.—Where booking difficulties between a motion picture operator and a picture distributor were a major source of complaint in previous litigation, the doctrine of res judicata prevents the litigant from proving damage from these sources in subsequent litigation.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.636.

Motion Picture Industry—Parent Company and Subsidiary—Res Judicata.—Where a parent company is found, by a court of law, to have been involved in illegal practices in part through its wholly owned subsidiary, another action can not be brought against the subsidiary on the same ground since the issue has already been tried and can not be relitigated. In such a case the doctrine of collateral estoppel applies.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.636.

For A. B. Momand, George S. Ryan, Boston, Mass.

For Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., et al., Jacob J. Kaplan; Irving J. Helman and Nutter, McClennen & Fish with him on brief.

Opinion of the Court

[History]

GOODRICH, Circuit Judge: This is an anti-trust suit for treble damages by the assignee of ten corporations, which were at the times complained of engaged in the motion picture business in Oklahoma, against eight major motion picture producers and distributors. The plaintiff, though assignee, sues in his own right. The complaint alleges that the defendants conspired to violate the federal anti-trust laws by twenty of their business practices. After the jury had rendered a verdict for the plaintiff, the trial court directed a verdict for the defendants and entered judgment thereon. Both sides have appealed.

Prior to the commencement of any litigation, the plaintiff and his father operated motion picture theaters in twelve Oklahoma cities and towns. They later formed thirteen separate Oklahoma corporations to operate these theaters. Some of the grounds and buildings occupied by the theaters were owned by a fourteenth Oklahoma corporation called Momand Realty Corporation. A fifteenth corporation named Momand Theatres, Inc. was formed in Delaware in January, 1929, as a management company, and it acquired the stock of the thirteen operating companies referred to above. The stock of Momand Theatres, Inc. was in turn owned by the plaintiff and his father "largely, with perhaps some minor stockholders."

On April 13, 1931, and again on December 31, 1933, the plaintiff took assignments from each of these fifteen corporations of their causes of action under the anti-trust laws against a number of motion picture producers, distributors and exhibitors, among whom are the defendants in the present case.

While the plaintiff's argument covers a wide range of territory, his counsel frankly stated at the oral argument that he would be content if the verdict of the jury was reinstated. This verdict was reached after a lengthy trial in which the District Court had limited the plaintiff's proofs to two of the liability-creating business practices out of the twenty originally alleged.[1] The reason for this limitation was former litigation in Oklahoma. Another limitation was imposed by the trial judge also, and this related to the period of time for which the plaintiff was entitled to complain.

Our discussion, therefore, falls conveniently into three divisions. The first concerns the correctness of the action of the District Court in directing a verdict for the defendants because of failure of the plaintiff's proof on the two charges concerning which he was permitted (and encouraged) to offer proof. The second part of the discussion concerns itself with the question whether the plaintiff was correctly limited to proof of the two charges instead of twenty. This involves a question of res judicata arising out of the earlier Oklahoma litigation which will be described later. The third point which must be discussed is whether the District Court was correct in limiting the plaintiff as he did to the time during which plaintiff could claim recovery. If these three questions are resolved in accordance with the rulings of the District Court, there will be no occasion to consider any basis for appeal which the defendants may have to offer.

Was there Evidence to Support a Verdict for Plaintiff?

We turn first, therefore, to the question whether the plaintiff made out a case for recovery on the evidence he offered. Only two grounds of alleged conspiracy were left open to him. One of these had to do with recovery of loss sustained from the operation of the arbitration clauses[2] in the standard contract then in effect between distributors and exhibitors of pictures. The other had to do with certain credit practices[3] on the part of distributors followed by these defendants. All the rest of the plaintiff's twenty grounds of complaint were ruled out by the District Judge because he held that the plaintiff was precluded from recovery upon them by the action of the court in the Oklahoma litigation previously referred to. We assume for the purpose of discussion under this point that the plaintiff was properly limited to these two grounds of complaint.

Plaintiff's claim based on credit practices may be disposed of briefly. Those practices are involved in only two counts.[4] The evidence on both counts consists of testimony of the plaintiff to the effect that, had it not been for the arbitration and credit conspiracies, the receipts of these theaters would have been greater than they were. No part of the loss claimed was separately attributed to the credit conspiracy. Indeed, as will appear below, arbitration and credit practices were more often lumped with other causes which were not liability-creating. It is apparent, also, that the substance of plaintiff's claim in this part of the case is that threats of arbitration forced him to follow a course that ruined his business. The fol-

[1] These practices related to the compulsory arbitration provisions of the standard exhibition contract and the organization of credit committees and uniform enforcement of their rules. A third practice of the defendants, the fixing of a minimum admission fee of ten cents, was also open to proof. But the plaintiff has made no claim of injury based on the minimum admission fee. See footnote 7 infra.

[2] The clause provided for compulsory arbitration of disputes under contracts between distributors and exhibitors. Awards of the arbitration boards were to be conclusive. Upon failure of the exhibitor to submit to arbitration or abide by an award, the distributor party to that contract, and all others having like contracts with the exhibitor, were to demand security from him on every contract. If the exhibitor failed to post security within a fixed time, all distributors were to suspend service under their contracts, and after ten days' suspension could cancel the contract if by that time the exhibitor had not posted security or obeyed the award. See Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp. et al. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30, 37-41, (1930).

[3] Credit committees were set up by the film boards of trade in each locality. Their function was to make certain that purchasers of theaters assume and perform completely the outstanding contract obligations of their vendors. The sanction, as in the case of the arbitration clause, was a requirement that security be posted, and in addition expulsion from the film board of trade for refusal to submit credit information. See United States v. First National Pictures, Inc., et al., 282 U. S. 44, 49-53 (1930).

[4] Count No. 4, Clinton, and No. 8, Alva. Both are summarized in the appended analyses to the opinion of the District Court, R. 229-231, 242-244. The reported opinion in 72 F. Supp. 469 (1947) does not contain these addenda.

lowing discussion, therefore, is applicable to the credit practices where they are involved, although reference will be made only to arbitration practices.

The plaintiff introduced in evidence twenty-one arbitration claims, totalling $10,332.35, made against him by the defendants. He never paid any of these claims, but rearrangements were worked out in each case settling the differences between the parties. No direct damage resulted, therefore, from these arbitration claims, for the plaintiff paid nothing and incurred no expenses in connection with them. Plaintiff does not controvert this, but he argues that many more than twenty-one claims must have been filed, and that he could not have been expected to remember them all. While this argument may justify an inference that the scope of the arbitration conspiracy was greater than twenty-one claims would indicate, it does not prove that other claims caused more loss than the samples produced, which showed no direct loss at all.

No evidence appears in the record to show that these arbitration claims were presented to induce any of plaintiff's assignors to enter into disadvantageous obligations. From plaintiff's own account of conversations with representatives of defendants, nothing appears from which an intention to injure plaintiff's theaters may be inferred. The subject matter of the arbitration complaints consisted of disputes arising upon contracts already made and alleged to be broken and no prospective arrangements were involved. Nor did plaintiff offer evidence of a single prejudicial new obligation which any of his assignors undertook to escape an arbitration claim or threat. In the instances where there were settlements following arbitration disputes, there is no showing of injury caused by the rearrangement, but only a general charge that the pictures were undesirable. In reviewing specific disputes, the plaintiff was at a loss to remember whether any arrangements made were undesirable to him, and could only say broadly that some arrangements made were desirable and some undesirable. Indeed the settlement of the claims resulted in reduced rentals of films to the plaintiff. This is hardly proof of specific injury resulting from defendants' illegal practices. We turn, then, from the particularized to the more general aspects of this claim.

Suppose we assume that the plaintiff did, contrary to what has been said above, incur large losses in trying to avoid the impact of the arbitration practices complained of. Is recovery for them permitted under the rules of law governing allowance of damages?

The plaintiff claims that at least ten profitable theaters were reduced to operation at a loss and then were forced out of business entirely. The jury verdict would award him a sum, when trebled, approaching $1,000,000. We think he cannot recover any sum of that magnitude for two reasons. First, the substance of his present claim is that the arbitration machinery was used to force poor pictures and late bookings upon him. But the booking difficulties of the plaintiff's theaters were a major source of complaint in the Oklahoma litigation. It was there found that the defendants had not conspired with respect to the selection or timing of motion picture bookings. Damage from these sources is, therefore, not open to proof in this case if the res judicata rulings are correct, and for the discussion under this head, we assume that they are. Second, even if any claim were free of the estoppel rulings (and none appears to be) the plaintiff's course of conduct must be evaluated in the light of the threatened harm which he was seeking to avoid. So far as the record shows, that harm consisted specifically of approximately $10,000 in arbitration claims and generally, perhaps, of a number of additional claims not individually proved. The basis, then, of the plaintiff's claimed loss measured in the hundreds of thousands, must, under the estoppel rulings, be found in a claim against him of some $10,000. If plaintiff, without showing any specific intent of defendants to injure him or any specific damaging transaction, proceeded voluntarily to make business arrangements which caused damages running to one third of a million dollars, that conduct was too extravagant to be charged to defendants. The point is ably and fully discussed in the District Court's opinion, 72 F. Supp. 469, 476-477. We approve what is said there, and see no need to review the question further.

We come, then, to the important question of causation. The plaintiff shows that defendants have engaged in illegal practices. He shows also that his business deteriorated for several years and was eventually dissolved. Did defendants' practices cause the damage? What proof must plaintiff offer? What proof did he offer?

The degree of certainty required of a plaintiff in proving causation of damage is necessarily elastic. It varies with the nature of the case. Particularly in an anti-trust suit, covering as it must many imponderables, rigid standards of precise proof would make a plaintiff's task practically hopeless.

We are not without guidance in this matter from the opinions of the Supreme Court. In Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures et al., 327 U. S. 251 (1945), an exhibitor was permitted to recover treble damages on a showing of conspiracy to discriminate against him in the release of films, and proof of loss of earnings in comparison with his own pre-conspiracy earnings and the post-conspiracy earnings of a comparable competitor not subject to the discrimination. In Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Co., 273 U. S. 359 (1927), and Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., 282 U. S. 555 (1931), verdicts were sustained on a similar comparison of pre-conspiracy and post-conspiracy conditions of plaintiff's business.[5] But the significant point in this case is emphasized by the statement of the Supreme Court in the Bigelow case, 327 U. S. 251, 264: "* * * the jury could conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendant's wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiff's business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendant's wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs."

In the cases just cited, the illegal practices of defendants constituted the only active cause of plaintiff's injuries. Defendants did not show that other factors were substantially contributing causes. On such facts, plaintiffs in those actions, having shown harm to them from defendant's liability-creating conduct were not to be deprived of recovery by hair-splitting requirements that they prove damages exact in amount.

The case before us is different. There are a number of factors acknowledged by plaintiff to have contributed to his injury. But the usual rule in tort is that a plaintiff may recover for loss to which defendant's wrongful conduct substantially contributed, notwithstanding other factors contributed also. Restatement, Torts § 431 (1934). However, the defendant's contribution must be substantial and it must be shown by the evidence. All this is hornbook law and no one would dispute it.

The new problem in this case, however, grows out of the earlier litigation of matters here involved. In an original claim for injury allegedly caused by a number of practices in violation of the anti-trust laws, there would be no need for the plaintiff to particularize the injury caused by each illegal practice. All the practices would be responsible for all the injury, and the portion of loss due to each would be immaterial. In this case, however, the plaintiff has already litigated the issues involved in the twenty business practices charged as illegal. It was decided in the earlier lawsuit that in only two of these respects had defendants conspired as charged. If the res judicata rulings in this case are correct, the plaintiff is now in the position of having his shotgun replaced by a rifle. He can no longer spread his fire over the whole range of the defendants' business practices. He must concentrate on two. And if the res judicata rulings are to be given full effect, the injury alleged must be allocated to the illegal practices in some manner that can be reasonably measured. To put it another way, if the plaintiff in his first lawsuit seeks to collect a total loss due to all of the allegedly illegal practices of the defendants, and the court in that case finds only two practices illegal, a verdict for the plaintiff in a second lawsuit on the same grounds cannot stand without proof that the two illegal practices caused the loss. Otherwise the defendants would be obliged to pay losses caused by conduct which was determined not to be liability-creating in their particular case. What did the plaintiff show?

On all but two counts, the plaintiff offered no specific evidence at all as to the damages

[5] In the Story case, the court said on p. 562: "It is true that there was uncertainty as to the extent of the damage, but there was none as to the fact of damage; and there is a clear distinction between the measure of proof necessary to establish the fact that petitioner had sustained some damage and the measure of proof necessary to enable the jury to fix the amount. The rule which precludes the recovery of uncertain damages applies to such as are not the certain result of the wrong, not to those damages which are definitely attributable to the wrong and only uncertain in respect of their amount."

attributable to the arbitration conspiracy. As we have already noted, he showed no direct damage from the twenty-one arbitration claims submitted, which he did not pay, and no specific disadvantageous obligation undertaken to avoid arbitration. He said only, in effect, that his future business arrangements were made to avoid threats of arbitration, that those arrangements were undesirable, and that his business was ruined. This is obviously insufficient evidence to support a jury verdict and the trial court correctly so held.

On two counts (7 and 8), the plaintiff testified that a stated percentage or amount of loss was due to arbitration practices. If there were any specific information in the record to support this opinion testimony, we would agree that he had made out a supportable claim. But we can find no shred of specific proof which would permit a jury to infer that the plaintiff's opinion was reasonably based upon fact. On a reading of this part of the record, we reluctantly conclude that plaintiff's testimony was at best a guess in response to prodding questions directing his attention to the arbitration conspiracy. It is obvious, also, that plaintiff was attributing to the arbitration practices his losses from booking difficulties, which claims were foreclosed to him by the estoppel rulings.

To sum up: It is well appreciated that a plaintiff has a difficult task in an anti-trust suit and that adherence to strict requirements of proof as to exact quantity of damage may deprive him of the substance of his rights. The law has gone far to ease that burden by permitting proof of losses which border on the speculative, in order to implement the policy of the anti-trust laws. But a fair degree of certainty is still essential to show the causative relation of defendants' misconduct and plaintiff's injury. Especially must this be so where a number of causes exist, and because of earlier litigation, recovery cannot be had for losses due to most of them. Moreover, a general assertion of injury will not suffice when plaintiff's own testimony fails to specify whether any of the business arrangements mentioned by him were or were not disadvantageous. The District Court properly ruled, therefore, that there was not sufficient evidence to support a verdict for plaintiff on the issues open in the case. We pass then to the question whether the res judicata rulings unduly restricted the issues.

Res Judicata Effect of the Oklahoma District Court Judgments

The present state of facts raising questions of res judicata developed in the following manner. It will be remembered that the plaintiff and his father organized the various corporations who are the assignors of the plaintiff in this lawsuit. These corporations made their assignments to him on April 13, 1931 and again on December 31, 1933.

The first suit was commenced April 17, 1931, in the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma against the present defendants and others. That action was dismissed without prejudice on April 19, 1937.

The plaintiff then split the litigation into three parts. The present action was commenced June 7, 1937. Also in 1937, the plaintiff brought two actions in the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma—Nos. 6516 and 6517. In Oklahoma 6516, the defendants are the same as here except Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation (Metro) which is a defendant here but was not a defendant in 6516. In 6517, plaintiff named other defendants than those in the present action. Vitagraph, however, one of the defendants here, was and is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Warner Bros., a party defendant in 6517.

In all three actions—the present one and Oklahoma suits 6516 and 6517—the plaintiff first alleges what he has characterized in this litigation as the "generic conspiracy," a combination on the part of the defendants to monopolize and restrain interstate commerce in motion pictures by twenty of their business practices.[6] In the present action, plaintiff then sets out in ten counts the alleged effect of this conspiracy upon ten of the assignor corporations. In Oklahoma 6516 he complained of injury to five other assignor corporations and two of ten involved here. In 6517 he complained of injury to all fifteen of the assignor corporations.

The Oklahoma actions (6516 and 6517) were consolidated for trial and concluded before the present case came to trial on the merits. From the findings in the Oklahoma consolidated trial, this much is clear and pertinent to the res judicata rulings: the defendants were found to have conspired in violation of the anti-trust laws only by (1) using standard exhibition contracts and taking concerted action to enforce the compulsory arbitration provisions therein, and (2) adopting and enforcing credit committees' rules concerning the credit statement and rating of vendees of theaters who had not assumed the licensing contracts of their vendors.[7] Defendants were found not to have conspired in the other respects charged. In the suit numbered 6516 it was found that the plaintiff had suffered no injury from the defendants' unlawful conduct. In the suit numbered 6517, the plaintiff recovered judgments against two corporations not parties here and lost as against the others named.

[6] These practices are summarized in the District Court's opinion, 72 F. Supp. 469, 472 (1947).

In order to give res judicata effect to the Oklahoma judgments, two problems must be resolved. The first concerns the relationship of the parties. The second involves issues of the compulsory joinder of causes of action and suggests interesting excursions into the codifiers' hunting ground where elusive concepts like "cause of action" are tracked down.

The problem as to the parties concerns principally Metro. In all the cases the plaintiff is the same.[8] All the defendants in the present case except Metro were defendants in Oklahoma 6516. In 1936, however, one year before Oklahoma 6516 was instituted, Loew's Inc. acquired all the assets and assumed the liabilities of Metro. Lowe's Inc. was a defendant in Oklahoma 6516. It is clear, therefore, that Loew's and Metro are in privity.[9]

The plaintiff's argument against the application of the doctrine of res judicata to his claim against Metro in the present case leads us into the second problem. He contends that he has a separate claim against Metro for its conduct before the merger of Metro with Loew's. He argues further that the cause of action he asserted against Loew's in Oklahoma 6516 was for the tortious conduct of Loew's itself. Therefore, says the plaintiff, the cause of action against Metro has never been prosecuted and the merger of Metro with Loew's should not destroy that cause of action.

Fortunately we need not resolve the interesting questions of the separate identity of causes of action and their compulsory joinder which are raised by the plaintiff's argument.[10] The reason we are relieved from doing so is that, whether or not the causes of action, if separate, had to be joined, they were not in fact joined. Metro's part in the alleged conspiracy was set out in Oklahoma 6516, and the court there expressly found that Loew's was a party to the illegal practices " * * * through the agency of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation * * * ." The conspiracy issues were thus litigated with respect to Metro in Oklahoma 6516, and the plaintiff in the present case may not relitigate those issues.

The same analysis applies to Vitagraph, which is a party defendant here but was not named in Oklahoma 6517. All the named defendants in 6517 were different from those named in the present case. Warner Bros., however, was a party defendant in 6517, and Vitagraph was and is a wholly owned subsidiary of Warner Bros. The consolidated

[7] It was also found in the Oklahoma cases that the defendants had conspired to fix a minimum admission fee of ten cents. The trial judge in the present case ruled that the plaintiff also had the benefit of this finding, but the plaintiff has made no claim based on this practice of the defendants.

[8] As the assignee of the total claim of each assignor corporation, the plaintiff is the real party in interest in each action. Fed. R. Civ. P., 17 (a). He is not suing in a representative capacity. He is, therefore, not merely the same representative or formal party as, for example, a trustee of two separate estates. See Restatement, Judgments, §§ 80, 81, (1942).

[9] Hart Steel Co. v. Railroad Supply Co., 244 U. S. 294 (1917).

[10] The problem may be illustrated by the following hypothetical situation: In year 1 corporation A causes injury to P in violation of the anti-trust laws. In year 2 corporation A merges with corporation B. In year 3 corporation B injures P in violation of the anti-trust laws. Both injuries arise out of a continuing conspiracy to which A and B, when separate, were parties. In year 3, P sues corporation B for the second injury, and a judgment is rendered in that case. May P later sue corporation B for the first injury done by corporation A before the merger? If the causes of action are separate, nothing in the Federal Rules appears to compel their joinder. Only counterclaims arising out of the same subject matter must be asserted under Rule 13 (a). The broad concept of "cause of action" as including all the operative facts which might reasonably have been litigated in the first lawsuit would indicate that the plaintiff here was obliged to state all his claims in the Oklahoma litigation. But this we need not decide. See Clark, Handbook of Code Pleading § 19, p. 137 (2d ed. 1947); 1 Moore, Federal Practice, § 2.04, especially p. 160 et seq. (1938); Restatement, Judgments, § 62, comments c-j inclusive (1942).

findings in Oklahoma 6516 and 6517 expressly state that Warner Bros. was involved in the illegal practices in part through Vitagraph. The same rule, therefore, applies to the Warner-Vitagraph as applies to the Loew's-Metro relation and the rule of collateral estoppel, as that phrase is used in the Restatement of Judgments, applies.[11]

What has been said thus far establishes a proper relationship of the parties for the application of the doctrines of res judicata. A further problem, however, takes us back to the questions of separate identity and joinder of causes of action. The plaintiff contends that he is asserting a separate cause of action for the injury alleged to have been caused by the defendants to each operating company. He contends also that Momand Realty Corporation, which was in the position of lessor to a number of the operating companies, and Momand Theatres Inc., which was the management head of all the operating companies, had as many separate causes of action for the injuries done to them as there were operating companies.

The resolution of these questions will be material only to determine whether the plaintiff is barred by the earlier judgments from asserting any cause of action at all, or whether only the matters of fact found for or against him in the earlier litigation will be foreclosed to him in the present case. Assuming, therefore, without deciding, that as to the operating companies the plaintiff had separate causes of action, it is clear that collateral estoppel is properly applied in this case to prevent the plaintiff from relitigating questions of fact which were decided against him in the earlier lawsuits. It is clear, also, that as to Momand Realty Corporation and Momand Theatres Inc., collateral estoppel applies. Furthermore, as to these two corporations no claim of damage can be supported if, as we have already decided, there is no proof that damage to the operating companies was caused by the illegal practices of the defendants. The trial court's ruling that proof of the claims of the operating companies could not involve relitigation of fact issues decided in the earlier Oklahoma case was, therefore, correct. Whether or not the trial court was correct in ruling that suit on any claim of Momand Realty or Momand Theatres was barred by the earlier litigation, the claims of these companies fall for lack of proof of damage to the operating companies.

Plaintiff's final contention in this phase of the case is that the law as the federal court in Oklahoma applied it has been changed by recent United States Supreme Court decisions and that, therefore, the doctrines of res judicata should give way to a more favorable climate of judicial opinion than that existing at the time of the Oklahoma litigation. We do not think they should. The plaintiff had a full trial in Oklahoma of all the issues arising out of his dealings with the defendants. He could have appealed from the judgments of the Oklahoma District Court, but he did not do so. He took no part in creating the more favorable climate of opinion in the appellate courts, if such exists, although he had an opportunity to do so. We think that the policy that there be an end to litigation prevents him from now asserting that changed climate as a basis for relitigation of issues once decided.

Two further points merit brief mention. First, the trial court in the present case ruled that certain practices which the Oklahoma District Court had found defendants had followed and which that court declared illegal were to be treated conclusively as illegal practices here. In Oklahoma 6516, however, it was further found that no damage resulted to the plaintiff, despite the illegal practices, and final judgment was [11] Restatement, Judgments, Ch. 3, Introductory Note: "* * * If a valid and final judgment for money is rendered in favor of the plaintiff, the cause of action is merged in the judgment, and he cannot thereafter maintain an action on the original cause of action (see § 47). If a valid and final person judgment is rendered in favor of the defendant on the merits, the original cause of action is barred by the judgment (see § 48)."

* * * * *

"Where, however, the subsequent action is based upon a different cause of action from that upon which the prior action was based, the effect of the judgment is more limited. The judgment is conclusive between the parties in such a case only as to matters actually litigated and determined by the judgment. The judgment is not conclusive as to matters which might have been but were not litigated and determined in the prior action. (See § 68).

"A judgment, therefore, has not only a direct effect upon the cause of action upon which the action in which the judgment is rendered was based, by way of merger or bar, but also has a collateral effect upon other causes of action involving the same parties, by way of what in the Restatement of this Subject is called 'collateral estoppel.' See § 45, Comment C.)" entered for the defendants. That left the defendants with no grounds for appeal, unless, as has happened here, the plaintiff had appealed. Under the principle of Restatement, Judgments, § 69 (2), comment c, defendants should not have been collaterally estopped from relitigating the issues decided against them. But this point would be material only if this case were to go back for a new trial.

Second, assuming the correctness of the res judicata rulings, the plaintiff argues that he was prevented from proving a new conspiracy not previously charged, a conspiracy to destroy the plaintiff's business. This is of a piece with the too generalized character of the plaintiff's proof. Of course a new conspiracy would be open to proof in this case and the trial judge said so over and over again. But a conspiracy to destroy a business must take specific forms to achieve that end. Attention must be directed to the practices and conduct by which the defendants sought to accomplish their purpose. At no point does the plaintiff present, nor does the record reveal offers of evidence to show that anything beyond the twenty already familiar business practices is involved.

The res judicata rulings, so far as they are material to the disposition of the case, are correct. We go on to the issue of time limitation.

Time Limitation

A separate trial was held in this case in 1942 on the issue of time limitation. (43 F. Supp. 996.) The trial judge ruled "that no recovery could be had against any defendant for alleged wrongs before May 6, 1928, or subsequent to December 31, 1933." [12] He also ruled that action against Loew's was completely barred, and that action against Columbia was barred for wrongs alleged to have occurred before August 27, 1931. The correctness of these rulings is now before us.

Our first inquiry is what statute or statutes of limitations apply. The Sherman and Clayton Acts, which create the federal causes of action, have no internal statute of limitations. The applicable law, therefore, is the law of the state in which the suit is brought, Massachusetts.[13]

Massachusetts has a six-year tort statute of limitations [14] which would close the period prior to June 7, 1931, six years before the commencement of the present action. But Massachusetts also has a borrowing statute of limitations which provides: "No action shall be brought by any person upon a cause of action which was barred by the laws of any state or country while he resided therein." [15] This provision applies to the plaintiff who has been continuously a resident of Oklahoma.

The Oklahoma statute of limitations applying to "an action upon a liability created by statute other than a forfeiture or penalty" is three years.[16] Another section of the Oklahoma statute states that if a plaintiff who brings a timely lawsuit fails in that action otherwise than upon the merits and the period of limitations has run, he has one year more within which to renew the suit.[17]

The present plaintiff on April 17, 1931, instituted a suit against the defendants here and others in the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma which was dismissed without prejudice on April 19, 1937. Commencement of the Massachusetts action in June, 1937, gave the plaintiff the advantage of the Oklahoma one year extension as to those counts in the Massachusetts action which may be taken to have been set out in the original Oklahoma complaint. This applies to the first eight counts and the tenth count of the original complaint, but not to the ninth count which was first set out in an amendment to the complaint, filed August 27, 1934.[18] The matters in this count are, therefore, open only from August 27, 1931.

[12] The terminal date of December 31, 1933 is the date of the second set of assignments from the various assignor corporations to the plaintiff. The assignments did not purport to cover any period after that date, and the plaintiff does not seriously argue that they did. Any causes of action accruing to the assignor corporations after that date, therefore, never came into the plaintiff's hands.

[13] Cope v. Anderson, 331 U. S. 461, 463 (1947).

[14] Mass. G. L. (Ter. ed.) c. 260, sec. 2.

[15] Mass. G. L. (Ter. ed.) c. 260, sec. 9.

[16] 12 Okla. Stat. Ann. § 95, par. 2. The defendants contended in the trial court that the two year bar of paragraph 3 of the above section applied. The trial judge, however, applied the three year provision quoted. Since this ruling was favorable to the plaintiff, we do not stop to discuss the question whether the two or three year provision is applicable.

[17] 12 Okla. Stat. Ann. § 100.

[18] These counts are analyzed in the District Court's opinion, 43 F. Supp. 996, 1002 (par. 16), 1004 (par. 29), 1009 (pars. 16-19 incl.) (1942).

A further limitation is occasioned by the time lapse between the two sets of assignments from the theater companies to the plaintiff. The first set was made April 13, 1931, the second December 31, 1933. The causes of action arising after April 13, 1931, were not transferred to the plaintiff until December 31, 1933, and were first pleaded in the final amended complaint of August 27, 1934. Since, even with the one year saving clause of the Oklahoma statute of limitations, the period not limited to the plaintiff is three years prior to the time the causes were first pleaded, the cut-off date for matters first pleaded on August 27, 1934, is August 27, 1931. Therefore, the period from April 13, 1931, to August 27, 1931, was correctly held closed to the plaintiff as to the causes of action passing to him under the second set of assignments.

As to Loew's which was dropped as a defendant in the pleading of August 27, 1934, the action is barred. The Oklahoma extension does not apply and no other provision preserves the cause of action against Loew's.

The effect of the tolling provision of the Clayton Act remains to be considered. Section 5 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A., § 16, provides: "Whenever any suit or proceeding in equity or criminal prosecution is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain or punish violations of any of the anti-trust laws the running of the statute of limitations in respect of each and every right of private action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said suit or proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof." Two relevant government anti-trust suits [19] were pending against all the defendants in this action, except Loew's and Columbia, from June 20, 1928, to July 21, 1931, a period of three years, one month and one day. Adding that period to the six year Massachusetts period we have nine years, one month and one day, which, as to the matters in the present suit which were also involved in the government prosecutions, preserves plaintiff's causes of action back to May 6, 1928. This is measuring from June 7, 1937, the day this action was begun. The government prosecutions concerned credit practices, uniform contracts and the arbitration provisions thereof which were the same issues open to plaintiff after the res judicata rulings discussed in the second section of this opinion. As to these matters, plaintiff was permitted to go back to May 6, 1928.

The tolling provision does not apply, however, to defendant Loew's nor to Columbia, which were not defendants in the government prosecutions. As to Columbia, therefore, plaintiff may not go back of August 27, 1931, three years prior to the date of the first pleading in which the December 31, 1933, assignments were included. And as to Loew's, action is barred completely, as noted above, by the operation of the Massachusetts borrowing statute of limitations and the applicable Oklahoma statutes.

One more minor limitation is occasioned by the fact that we are dealing with two sets of assignments. The time during which the government anti-trust suits were pending when added to the Massachusetts six year period of limitation, takes us back to May 6, 1928. The trial court gave the plaintiff the benefit of this earlier starting date as to those causes of action which were not barred by the operation of the shorter Oklahoma period of limitation, as applied by the Massachusetts borrowing statute. The bar of the three year Oklahoma statute, as we said above, falls at August 27, 1931, as to those causes of action first set out in the final amended pleading of August 27, 1934. Since the causes of action passing to the plaintiff under the second set of assignments of December 31, 1933, could not have been set out until the filing of the 1934 pleading, the bar of the Oklahoma statute cuts off those which accrued before August 27, 1931. But here the tolling provision of the Clayton Act suspends the running of limitation until July 21, 1931, the date when the government suits terminated. Therefore, those causes of action arising after April 13, 1931 (the date of the first set of assignments) and before July 21, 1931, are preserved by the Clayton Act. But those arising after July 21, 1931, and before August 27, 1931, are not preserved, and the Oklahoma statute bars them. This is what the trial judge held, and if there was any error in it, it was in the plaintiff's favor, and not a matter of which he can complain.

[19] United States v. First National Pictures, 282 U. S. 44 (1931) and United States v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 282 U. S. 30 (1931).

To summarize in the words of the trial judge " * * * Loew's does not have to respond to any cause of action here alleged; Columbia may have to respond for causes of action which accrued between August 27, 1931, and December 31, 1933; and the other defendants may have to respond for as long a period as Columbia and also * * * for such causes of action as arose out of credit policies and uniform contracts * * * between May 6, 1928, and July 21, 1931 * * *."

As to this phase of the case, the plaintiff raises a number of objections, only three of which merit discussion here: (1) that the amended pleading of August 27, 1934, should relate back to April 13, 1931, as to all matters pleaded, thus opening the period from April 13 to August 27, 1931, which the trial judge had ruled closed as to matters first pleaded on August 27, 1934; (2) that a statute of limitations should not be taken to run against claims for injuries caused by a continuing conspiracy until the commisson of the last overt act causing damage; and (3) that the claim against Loew's as successor to Metro for Metro's alleged wrongful conduct should not be barred along with the claim against Loew's for its own conduct.

The answer to the first objection is set out in the trial judge's finding 19. Assuming that damages were occurring to the plaintiff's assignors day by day after the assignment of April 13, 1931, new causes of action were accruing. They came into the plaintiff's hands by the assignment of December 31, 1933. But these causes of action were first pleaded August 27, 1934, and could not relate back to a pleading made in 1931 when the plaintiff did not possess them. Having been first pleaded on August 27, 1934, the three year bar of the Oklahoma statute of limitations falls at August 27, 1931, and the trial judge correctly so ruled.

The plaintiff's second objection as to when the statute of limitations begins to run in a conspiracy case is based on a misreading of criminal cases [20] in which it was said that the continuance of a conspiracy depended upon the commission of overt acts, and that the statute of limitations did not begin to run against a criminal prosecution until the last overt act performed in compliance with the original agreement had been accomplished. It is another and greatly different thing to say, as the plaintiff impliedly does, that a private right of action for damages arising out of a conspiracy does not accrue until the conspiracy is ended, irrespective of the time when the injury is inflicted. On this theory a single act of damage in an antitrust case would be subject to no period of limitation so long as the conspiracy continued, although no further injury was done to the plaintiff. Nor could the plaintiff, on this reasoning, sue in the meantime. All the conspirators would need to do to escape suit is to keep the conspiracy in operation. We have found no authority to support this view. We think the trial court properly ruled that a cause of action for each invasion of the plaintiff's interest arose at the time of that invasion and that the applicable statute of limitations ran from that time.

The third objection is that Loew's was erroneously excluded from responding to the plaintiff's cause of action against Metro, whose assets and liabilities Loew's had acquired in 1936. It may be that the plaintiff is correct in his contention that Loew's should have been required to respond for the part of plaintiff's claim asserted against Metro. The amendment to the plaintiff's complaint which first set out the claim against Loew's for the alleged torts of Metro was filed after the findings in the separate trial on the limitations issues but before the entry of the order in that trial. The order barring suit against Loew's technically barred the claim set out in the amendment referred to. But, in any event, Metro continued as a defendant in this case. Proof of any claim against Metro was not restricted on this ground, and presumably a recovery against Metro would have had to be paid for by Loew's. The plaintiff, therefore, has not been prejudiced by the trial court's disposition of this question, for he has failed to prove that Metro caused him any loss, and has not reached the problem of executing a judgment against a corporation now merged with another corporation.

The judgment of the District Court will be affirmed.

---

[20] See United States v. Kissell, 218 U. S. 601 (1910); United States v. Johnson, 165 F. 2d 42 (C. C. A. 3, 1947); Eldredge v. United States, 62 F. 2d 449 (C. C. A. 10, 1932).

[¶ 62,361] Empire State Camera Exchange, Inc., v. Reynolds.

New York Supreme Court, New York County. Special Term, Part III. 121 N. Y. L. J. 334, January 27, 1949.

New York State Fair Trade Act

Motion for Injunction Denied—Defendant Entitled to Hearing.—In an action alleging violation of the New York Fair Trade Law, where the defense was that all cut price sales were of used, deteriorated or display articles, the plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction was denied on condition that the defendant accept short notice of trial since the issue raised by the defendant entitled him to a hearing before an injunction was issued.

See the New York State Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.40.

LEVY, J.: Plaintiff moves for temporary injunction in this action based upon claimed violation of the New York State Fair Trade Law. Defendant vehemently denies violation and claims all cut price sales were of used, deteriorated or display articles. This claim seems inconsistent with the legend "Famous for Prices" contained in all the advertisements comprising exhibit 1. If defendant is not violating the act an injunction would seem to be harmless. On the other hand, continued violation as charged, would likely work irreparable and incalculable damage to plaintiff. However, the issue as raised by defendant entitled him to a hearing prior to issuance of any injunction which would afford to plaintiff, in fact, the full relief sought in the action, provided plaintiff may have an early trial of the issue. The motion is therefore denied on condition defendant accept short notice of trial and plaintiff serve and file a note of issue for the February, 1949, term. Upon payment of appropriate fees the clerk is thereupon directed to accept a note of issue and to place the cause upon the Ready Numbered Day Calendar of Special Term, Part III, for trials, for February 9, 1949. Order signed.

[¶ 62,362] Palmer v. Angert.

New York Supreme Court, Kings County. Special Term, Part I. 121 N. Y. L. J. 356, January 28, 1949.

New York Fair Trade Act

Issuance of Cash Receipts with Merchandise Not an Offense—Contempt Order Denied.—The plaintiff complains that the defendant, by issuing cash receipts redeemable for merchandise valued at $1.00 with every $10.00 purchase, violates a judgment which enjoined him from selling merchandise below the minimum price. It was held that this practice does not violate the New York Fair Trade Act and the application for a contempt order was dismissed.

See the Resale Price Maintenance Commentary, Vol. 2, ¶ 7314, and the New York State Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.45.

NORTON, J.: Application to punish defendant for contempt for allegedly violating the provisions of a judgment of this court dated August 2, 1941.

Pursuant to said judgment the defendant was permanently enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly selling or offering for sale merchandise produced by manufacturers, wholesalers and distributors at prices lower than the minimum retail price as fixed in the fair trade contracts. Plaintiff claims that the defendant is willfully and knowingly violating the decree by engaging in a practice whereby upon the sale of merchandise at its store it issues to its customers cash register receipts which are redeemable for merchandise valued at $1 upon the presentation of receipts evidencing a total purchase by the customer of $10.00 worth of miscellaneous merchandise.

The defendant justifies the practice by its reliance on the determination in the case of Nechamkin v. Picker (67 N. Y. Supp., 2d, 60). In that case the court refused to hold that a practice similar except as to the instrumentality used, to that disclosed herein, constituted a violation of the Fair Trade Act. In reaching such determination the court in the Nechamkin case, supra, approved the conclusions reached in the case of Weco Products Co. v. Mid-City Cut Rate Drugstores (55 California App., 2d, 684, 131 Pacific Reporter, Second Series, 856). The facts in the Weco case, supra, were similar to those in the case at bar, except that trading stamps were used instead of cash register receipts; and in construing the California Fair Trade Act, which is identical with the Fair Trade Act of this state, the court held that such practice did not violate the statute in question.

The State of Pennsylvania has a Fair Trade statute similar to the California statute, and also similar to the New York statute; and in the case of Bristol Meyers v. Litt Bros., Inc. (336 Pa., 81, 6 Atl. (2), 843) the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in a case in which trading stamps were issued to the amount of purchases of miscellaneous merchandise which were later redeemable, held that such a practice did not violate the Pennsylvania statute. I cannot find any difference between a practice wherein trading stamps were used rather than cash register receipts, as in the case at bar.

I am in accord with the conclusions reached in all of the above cases, and it is my opinion that there was no violation of the Fair Trade statute of this state by reason of the indulgence by the defendants in the practices complained of herein.

Furthermore, the defendants herein had a right to rely upon the Special Term decision in the case of Nechamkin v. Picker, supra, there having been no review by an appeals court of this case or any contrary holding by the Appellate Division or Court of Appeals on the question involved herein. Therefore, I cannot find that the defendants were guilty of a willful or deliberate contempt herein. The motion will be in all respects denied. Settle order on notice.

[¶ 62,363] Albert Hill et al., v. Jerry D. Kusy.

In the Nebraska Supreme Court. No. 32506. January 21, 1949.

Nebraska Unfair Sales Act

Cigarette Wholesalers—Prices below Minimum—Attacks on Validity of Act.—Cigarette wholesalers alleged that their competitor sold cigarettes at less than cost with the intent, effect, and result as set out in Section 59-1203 of the Unfair Sales Act of Nebraska. The defendant admitted the violations but attacked the validity of the Act. In ruling against the defendant's contentions the court held that intent was a requirement of the act, that constitutional inhibitions are not infringed by the act, that although some of its terms may be difficult to apply, the act is not for this reason unconstitutional. The trial court decree was upheld as it was competent to restrain the defendant from committing "further" like violations of the act.

See the Nebraska Unfair Sales Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8508.

For appellant: Paul E. Haberlan.

For appellees: Spear & Lamme, Michael T. McLaughlin, Bernard S. Gradwohl, George R. Springborg, Walter R. Johnson, Attorney General, and Bert L. Overcash.

[Pleadings]

SIMMONS, C. J.: Plaintiffs, alleging violations of the Unfair Sales Act by defendant, brought this action and prayed for a declaratory judgment that the act (sections 59-1201, R. S. 1943, 59-1202, R. S. Supp., 1947, and 59-1203 to 59-1206, R. S. 1943) is constitutional, and for a determination of the rights, status, and legal relations of the parties in the matters set forth in their petition. They also prayed that defendant be enjoined from further advertising, offers to sell or sales in violation of the act, for damages and for equitable relief.

Defendant demurred for the reason that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against him. The trial court overruled the demurrer and gave the defendant time to further plead. Defendant declined to do so. The trial court decreed that the act was not in conflict with any of the provisions of the Constitution of this state or of the United States and enjoined the defendant from "further advertising, offers to sell or sales in violation" of the act, and taxed costs to defendant. Defendant appeals. We affirm the judgment of the trial court.

Section 59-1201, R. S. 1943, provides that the act shall be cited as the Unfair Sales Act. Section 59-1202, R. S. Supp., 1947, defines various terms and phrases used in the act. Section 59-1203, R. S. 1943, provides: "It is hereby declared that any advertising, offer to sell or sale of any merchandise, either by retailers or wholesalers, at less than cost as defined in this act, with the intent, or effect, of inducing the purchase of other merchandise, or of unfairly diverting trade from a competitor, or otherwise injuring a competitor, impair and prevent fair competition, injure public welfare, and are unfair competition and contrary to public policy and the policy of this act, where the result of such advertising, offer or sale is to tend to deceive any purchaser or prospective purchaser, or substantially to lessen competition, or unreasonably to restrain trade, or to tend to create a monoply in any line of commerce." Section 59-1204, R. S. 1943, relates to the non-liability of the owner of a newspaper for the publication of advertisements in contravention of the provisions of the act. Section 59-1205, R. S. 1943, provides: "Any person damaged, or who is threatened with loss or injury by reason of a violation of this act shall be entitled to sue in any court of competent jurisdiction against any damage or threatened loss or injury by reason of a violation of this act." Section 59-1206, R. S. 1943, relates to sales to which the act does not apply.

Plaintiffs alleged that they and the defendant were competitors in the business of selling cigarettes at wholesale in certain cities of the state, and alleged in detail that defendant had advertised, offered to sell, and had sold cigarettes at less than cost and with the intent, effect, and result set out in section 59-1203, R. S. 1943, and by allegations removed their cause from the excepting provisions of the act. Plaintiffs further alleged that damages had resulted from defendant's acts; that defendant threatens to continue said acts; that a controversy exists between the parties as to whether or not defendant's acts constituted a violation of the act, and as to whether or not the act is constitutional and enforceable.

[Attacks on Constitutionality]

In substance defendant admitted by his demurrer that he had violated the act and plaintiffs were entitled to the relief prayed if the act is valid and enforceable.

By assignments of error, defendant presents these questions: "(a) Whether Sections 59-1201 to 59-1206, C. (sic) S. Neb. 1943, as amended by L. B. 474, Session of 1947, known as the 'Unfair Sales Act,' define any sort of an offense or wrongful act, even if the act itself is constitutional"; "(b) Whether the act is constitutional under the personal liberty and due process clauses of the State and Federal Constitutions"; and "(c) Whether the decree, in its present general form, can be sustained."

Defendant's contention is that the act neither states nor defines any unlawful act, is merely a statement of public policy, and contains no definite standards by which infractions can be measured and no provision to execute its alleged purpose. The attack is upon the act as a whole.

The provisions of section 59-1203, R. S. 1943, fall into two groups.

The first group contains three elements: (1) The acts of "advertising, offer to sell or sale of any merchandise, * * * at less than cost as defined in" the act; (2) the doing of one or more of those acts "with the intent, or effect, of inducing the purchase of other merchandise, or of unfairly diverting trade from a competitor, or otherwise injuring a competitor"; and (3) the doing of one or more of those acts with the intent or effect "where the result * * * is to tend to deceive any purchaser or prospective purchaser, or substantially to lessen competition, or unreasonably to restrain trade, or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

The second group contains the legislative declaration of the results following from the first, to wit, "impair and prevent fair competition, injure public welfare, and are unfair competition and contrary to public policy and the policy of" the act. The "unfair competition" is the result of the unlawful acts which the Legislature condemns and constitutes the ultimate unlawful act.

Section 59-1203, R. S. 1943, must be construed in connection with section 59-1205, R. S. 1943, which provides a remedy for enforcement.

Defendant, however, contends that the statute does not make intent an element of the unlawful act. This contention is based upon the phrase "with the intent or effect" and defendant argues that the use of "or" avoids "intent" and requires only the "effect" or "result."

[Effect or Result Interpreted]

We have held that intent denotes the purpose to use a particular means to effect a certain result. Williams v. State, 113 Neb. 606, 204 N. W. 64. In Lynch v. Tilden Produce Co., 282 F. 54 (affirmed in 265 U. S. 315, 44 S. Ct. 488, 68 L. Ed. 1034), the court was dealing with a statute which provided: "'Or any butter in the manufacture or manipulation of which any process or material is used with intent or effect of causing the absorption of abnormal quantities of water, milk, or cream.'" The court in construing the words "with intent or effect" held:

> 'whatever is effected is the consequence of a specific design. It always requires, therefore, a rational agent to effect anything. So that the words 'intent' and 'effect,' as used in the statute, mean practically the same thing."

The same construction applies here. It follows that intent is a requirement of the act. Decisions where intent is not an element of the statute are accordingly beside the issue and need not be discussed.

[Constitutionality Upheld]

This conclusion brings the statute fairly within our holding in Nelsen v. Tilley, 137 Neb. 327, 289 N. W. 388, 126 A. L. R. 729, wherein we held that where a regulatory statute prohibits price discriminations made with the intent substantially to lessen competition or to create a monopoly or to injure or destroy the business of a competitor, constitutional inhibitions are not infringed. In fact, the Legislature in the act here involved placed an additional element in the act by specifically requiring that a certain result or results must follow.

Defendant further argues that the use of the word "tend" in two of the "result" provisions of the act renders the statute void, and relies on State ex rel. English v. Ruback, 135 Neb. 335, 281 N. W. 607. It is sufficient to point out that the same word is used in subdivision (i) of section 60-912, C. S. Supp., 1937, held constitutional in Nelsen v. Tilley, supra.

[Mere Difficulty in Application]

It further is urged that there is a lack of clarity, which renders the act void, in the meaning of terms used in the act, such as "replacement cost," "proportionate part of the cost of doing business," and "unfairly diverting trade from a competitor." The terms may present difficulties in application when the sufficiency of evidence in fact questions is presented. Mere difficulty of application in the processes of litigation is not enough to enable a court to say that a statute is unconstitutional. McElhone v. Geror, 207 Minn. 580, 292 N. W. 414.

[Legitimate Use of State Police Power]

It next is argued that the means adopted are inadequate and bear no relation to the object sought, the argument being that the act applies to a small fraction of the business community and is discriminatory because of the limitations of the mark-up provisions as to costs, as between merchants selling classes of merchandise involving quick sales and small margins of profit and sales involving greater margins of profit. In the exercise of and within the limits of its police power, the Legislature may forbid that which it deems to be an existing evil and it may limit its prohibitions to the matters which in its judgment menace the public welfare. Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, 226 U. S. 157, 33 S. Ct. 66, 57 L. Ed. 164; Placek v. Edstrom, 148 Neb. 79, 26 N. W. 2d 489.

It follows that the act is not subject to the constitutional attack here made and that the trial court did not err in overruling the demurrer.

[Related Acts Restrained]

This brings us to the contention that the injunctive language used in the decree cannot be sustained because it purports to enjoin any future violations of the act of whatever character rather than a repetition of the specific acts alleged in the petition. The decree enjoined the defendant from "further" advertising, offers to sell, or sales in violation of the act. When one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a regulatory law he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts. Labor Board v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U. S. 426, 61 S. Ct. 693, 85 L. Ed. 930. We construe the language objected to in the decree to mean further like violations of the act. So construed it is not subject to criticism. New Haven R. R. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 361, 26 S. Ct. 272, 50 L. Ed. 515.

The judgment is affirmed.

AFFIRMED.

[¶ 62,364] Fogel v. Bolet.

New York Supreme Court, New York County. Special Term, Part II. 121 N. Y. L. J. 411, February 2, 1949.

New York Fair Trade Act

Photographic Suppliers Retail Business—Suit not a Conspiracy—Hardship in Application not a Defense.—A motion by a photographic supply retailer for an injunction against his competitor to enjoin him from participating in unfair business practices was granted. While not denying the violations charged, the defendant raised the defense that the plaintiff's suit was a conspiracy to put him out of business. It was held that if enforcing the statute had this result, then his business was illegal. The sporadic enforcement provided by the act may work a grevious hardship, but until this is alleviated by the legislature, the act must be enforced and obeyed.

See the New York Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.

STEURER, J.: Motion for a temporary injunction in an action for a permanent injunction pursuant to the Feld-Crawford Law (chap. 976, Laws 1935). The defendant operates a photographic supply store; the plaintiff is his nearest (in point of location) competitor. Defendant does not deny violating fair trade agreements, in fact he rather insists that the repeated ignoring of these contracts is an integral part of his business. The statute received an intensive interpretation from shortly after its enactment until about 1942, when economic conditions were such that violations were unheard of. Its popularity as an economic control is now reviving. It was noted at that time that no matter how often the invalidity of certain defenses was adjudicated the same defenses continued to be urged (Calvert Distillers Corp'n v. Fox, 1941, 105 N. Y. L. J., 211). It would therefore serve no purpose to repeat these holdings. Defendant does advance one theory which is novel. It claims that this action is the result of a conspiracy of his competitors to put him out of business and hence constitutes an illegal price fixing. As to the first part, if it is legal for the plaintiff to enforce the statute and if enforcing the statute will put defendant out of business then his business and not the conspiracy is what is illegal. Furthermore the agreement among his competitors is not price fixing. The prices are fixed by the contracts, the agreement is to enforce these. The statute makes that legal. The real defense is the same in all these cases—that the inability to enforce universal adherence to fixed prices under conditions of economic stress makes the sporadic enforcement provided by the statute grossly unfair. And the answer to that argument is that the Legislature within constitutional limits is the sole authority in such matters. If this act is an unfortunate essay at business regulation, the error is susceptible of correction only by the source from which it emanates. It must meanwhile be obeyed and, if necessary enforced.

Defendant also claims that plaintiff is in no position to enforce the statute because he is himself a violator. Defendant's proof as to that points leaves something to be desired. It refers to a single transaction under circumstances which indicate a breach of duty by a salesman rather than a violation by the plaintiff. Of course, a practice by plaintiff's employees of the same tactics would put a different complexion on the interpretation. In view of this possibility the order herein may contain a provision for trial at an early date.

Settle order.

[¶ 62,365] North American Philips Company, Inc., v. Milton L. Brownshield.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 45-633. January 31, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Act

Private Patent Action—Insufficient Allegation under Antitrust Laws—No Extra-territorial Jurisdiction Obtained.—A counterclaim in a private action does not state a claim under the antitrust laws when it alleges that the Sherman and Clayton Acts have been violated and fails to allege that the conspiracy restrains trade or is damaging to the plaintiff. Since the counterclaim is defective under the antitrust laws, the provision they make for service beyond the jurisdiction of a state can not operate.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1660.315.

For plaintiff: Thomas R. Naughton, Attorney; Arthur G. Connolly, Delavan P. Smith, of Counsel.

For defendant: Harry Price.

[Nature of Action]

KAUFMAN, D. J.: The complaint alleges that during the war plaintiff designed, developed, manufactured and sold to the United States of America a electronic device, known as a loop assembly, under a contract between plaintiff and the United States of America; that during the period of the contract, plaintiff employed defendant as a mechanical design engineer; that defendant, during his employment by plaintiff, and by the use of information and material supplied by plaintiff, designed said loop assembly jointly with other employees of plaintiff; that plaintiff sold many of the loop assemblies to the government and, in accordance with the terms of its contract with the government, furnished the government and an independent contractor for the government with complete information on said loop assembly; that defendant's employment was terminated after the completion of the development of said loop assembly and that thereafter defendant wrongfully caused a patent covering said loop assembly to be issued to him as the sole inventor thereof; that defendant has threatened to sue plaintiff on the ground that, prior to the issuance of said patent, plaintiff made use of, and disclosed to others, information concerning the loop assembly, and on the further ground that plaintiff infringed said patent after the issuance thereof.

The complaint further alleges that defendant was not the original inventor of any material part of the device; that defendant misappropriated the subject matter thereof from plaintiff during his employment with plaintiff; that the alleged invention constituted nothing but the application of well known technical skill and judgment and was used by others in this country before defendant made his alleged invention; and that by reason thereof the patent is invalid and unenforceable.

Plaintiff sues for a declaratory judgment (1) that defendant has no right to the subject matter of the loop assembly; (2) that in obtaining the patent, defendant violated the relationship of trust and confidence existing between him and plaintiff, and (3) that the patent is invalid.

Plaintiff also seeks a decree compelling the assignment of the patent to it; that the patent be held to be unenforceable as against it; that defendant be restrained from charging that plaintiff has violated any right of defendant, and for an accounting.

Defendant counterclaims for a judgment declaring (1) the patent to be valid; (2) that the plaintiff infringed the patent; and (3) that plaintiff is guilty of unjust enrichment in using, selling and disposing of property of defendant, and in receiving large profits which in justice and in equity belong to defendant. Defendant asks for damages in the sum of $50,000.

Defendant filed a demand for a trial by a jury as to all the issues involved.

Five motions are now presented for consideration.

BY PLAINTIFF

1. To strike defendant's demand for a jury trial;
2. For summary judgment as to part of defendant's counterclaim;
3. To terminate the deposition of one Homer G. Boyle.

BY DEFENDANT

4. To bring in Harvey-Wells Electronics, Inc. as party defendant;

5. To compel Homer G. Boyle to answer certain questions propounded to him in the taking of his deposition.

The complaint is framed along equitable lines. Plaintiff is seeking injunctive relief, both prohibitory and mandatory in character, as well as an accounting together with declaratory relief as incidental thereto. This, as Judge Clark said in Beaunit Mills, Inc. v. Eday Fabrics Sales Corporation, 124 F. (2d) 563, 565, "appears to stamp [the suit] as presenting equitable issues only".

On the questions thus raised, plaintiff would not be entitled to a trial by jury and has not sought one.

The counterclaim interposed by defendant seeks a declaration that the patent is valid and infringed by plaintiff, and damages by reason of plaintiff's unjust enrichment in using, selling and disposing of defendant's property. The issues raised by the answer to the complaint may be completely determinative of all of the questions involved. If, however, issues raised by the counterclaim, of a legal nature, survive the issues raised by the complaint and answer, such issues may be the subject of a jury trial. Beaunit Mills, Inc. v. Eday Fabrics Sales Corporation, supra, at p. 566; see Bellavance v. Plastic-Craft Novelty Co., 30 F. Supp. 37; 35 U. S. C. § 70.

Plaintiff's motion to strike the cause from the jury calendar is granted, without prejudice to an application by defendant at the appropriate time for a trial by jury of any legal issues arising under the counterclaim, which are not tried by the court as incidental to any equitable issues which may be raised by the counterclaim, and which are not finally determined upon the issues raised by the answer to the complaint.

Defendant's motion to bring in Harvey-Wells Electronics, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as Harvey-Wells) as an additional and third party defendant is made under Rules 13 (h) and 14 (a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The counterclaim does not seek to hold Harvey-Wells liable for all or part of the claim asserted against defendant by plaintiff. Under these circumstances, Rule 14 (a) is inapplicable. King v. Edward B. Marks Music Corporation, 56 F. Supp. 446, 448; 1 Moore's Federal Practice § 13.09, p. 730.

Allegation under Antitrust Laws

As to the proposed defendant Harvey-Wells, the counterclaim alleges that jurisdiction arises by virtue of diversity of citizenship and that it is a suit under the Sherman and Clayton Acts [28 U. S. C. §§ 41(1), 41(23)], and that Harvey-Wells is a Massachusetts corporation doing business at 161 West 16th Street, New York, New York. An affidavit by the vice-president of Harvey-Wells, denying this allegation, states that Harvey-Wells is a Massachusetts corporation, whose only office and factory is at Southbridge, Massachusetts; that it never qualified to do business in New York, and that it has never conducted any business in New York, and that it has never maintained any office or factory in New York; that although the New York telephone directory lists a telephone under its name at 161 West 16th Street, that address is the residence of an independent distributor of products manufactured by Harvey-Wells; that authorization was given to this distributor to list the name of Harvey-Wells in the phone book inasmuch as the corporation maintains no offices in New York; that no part of the rent or other expenses in connection with the apartment is paid by Harvey-Wells, and that the corporation has no employees within this state.

Defendant has made no attempt to deny the allegations contained in that affidavit, although a copy thereof was served on the attorneys for the plaintiff nearly a month prior to the hearing of the motion.

In the circumstances, I accept these allegations as true, and since it is evident therefrom that service of process on Harvey Wells within this jurisdiction cannot be effected, jurisdiction over the corporation, in so far as it is predicated on diversity of citizenship, cannot be obtained.

Defendant contends also, that since jurisdiction as to the counterclaim arises under 28 U. S. C. § 41(23), it would be proper to add Harvey-Wells as a party defendant inasmuch as 15 U. S. C. § 22 permits service to be made on the corporation "in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found."

[Allegations Insufficient]

This, however, presupposes that the counterclaim states a claim under the Anti-Trust Laws. The only allegation in the entire counterclaim with reference to the Anti-Trust Laws is paragraph 47, which reads as follows:

> "Said plaintiff, in conjunction with Harvey-Wells Electronics, Inc. and others has conspired to and has sought to exclude defendant from commercializing and merchandising the subject matter of Patent No. 2,381,334 and has succeeded in setting up a monopoly in the subject matter thereof, wherefor defendant and his associates have been barred and prevented from entering such field and commercializing and merchandising the subject matter thereof, wherefore plaintiff and Harvey-Wells Electronics, Inc. have been guilty of violation of the Sherman and Clayton Acts."

It is plain that no claim under the Anti-Trust Laws is stated in the counterclaim. Mere allegation by the pleader that the Sherman and Clayton Acts have been violated is not sufficient to constitute a sufficient statement of claim. It does not appear from the pleadings that the alleged conspiracy was in restraint of trade or commerce, nor is there any allegation that the defendant has been damaged by the alleged conspiracy.

It is clear that jurisdiction over Harvey-Wells cannot be obtained and, therefore, the motion to add it as an additional defendant is denied (Rule 13 (h), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure).

Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment as to part of defendant's counterclaim is denied.

The motion to terminate the examination of Homer G. Boyle and the cross-motion to compel answers to questions propounded to him during the course of the deposition have been disposed of at a hearing in Chambers on January 28, 1949.

Settle order on notice.

[¶ 62,366] Bernhard v. Savall Drug Store, Inc.

New York Supreme Court, Nassau County. 82 N. Y. Supp. (2d) 122. July 6, 1948.

New York Fair Trade Act

Gifts To Customers—Attracting Customers—Retail Druggists.—Offering a free box of face powder with every purchase of $2 or more is illegal. However an advertisement offering a gift to every person entering the store regardless of the amount of his purchase is unobjectionable.

See the Resale Price Maintenance Commentary, Vol. 2, ¶ 7314, and the New York Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.45.

For plaintiff: Joseph J. Hammer, New York, N. Y.

For defendant: William Gitelman, Long Island, N. Y.

Hooley, J.: Motion for an injunction restraining the defendant from directly or indirectly by any means, device, combination, sale, trading stamp, coupon, rebate or other allowance, concession or giving of a thing of value or otherwise whatsoever advertising, offering for sale or selling certain commodities at less than those stipulated in contracts entered into by the manufacturers, wholesalers or distributors, pursuant to chapter 976 of the Laws of 1935. Cross-motion to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Rule 106 of the Rules of Civil Practice on the ground that it appears on the fact thereof that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. There is no dispute about the facts. The defendant denies that it sold any of the articles in question below the contract price, but concedes that it advertised that it would give away free with every purchase of $2 or more a box of face powder. The court is of the opinion that a transaction in this form is illegal. However, in order to meet the objections of the other druggists in the vicinity, the defendant has started to advertise that a gift would be given to all persons entering the store regardless of the amount of their purchase. Defendant claims that this is merely advertising for the purpose of bringing people to the store and that the gift is in no way dependent on the sale of articles covered by fair trade contracts. Neither party has submitted any cases precisely in point. The authorities furnished, involving the giving of coupons with purchases, are not analogous. In the opinion of the court, the transaction, involving a gift to all persons entering the store, is not illegal. The motion for the injunction will be granted except that the order will provide that nothing contained therein shall be deemed to restrain the defendant from making a gift of merchandise to any person entering its store provided that such gift is in no way dependent on whether or not the recipient of such gift makes a purchase at the store. The motion to dismiss the complaint is denied. Undertaking is fixed at $250. There should be an early trial herein and the case is placed as the number 3 case on the next Special Term Calendar of this court on the filing of the proper note of issue and the paying of necessary fees.

[¶ 62,367] U. S. v. The Metropolitan Leather & Findings Association, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Cr. No. 128-277. January 14, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Leather and Shoe Findings—Motion to dismiss—Multiple Punishment.—Conspiracy to restrain trade and conspiracy to monopolize are two separate and distinct offenses. The fact of intent in each of these crimes is not the same. When a defendant is convicted and punished on both counts, he is being punished for the different acts. Motion to dismiss on grounds of double jeopardy denied.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.341, 1630.501.

Leather and Shoe Findings—Motion to Dismiss—Venue.—Venue is established when the indictment alleges that the conspiracy has been formed in part and carried out in part within the jurisdiction of the court.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1630.375.

Leather and Shoe Findings—Continuing Conspiracy—Statute of Limitations.—The conspiracy being a continuing one, the allegation as to time which dates the commencement of the acts in question at 1930 is not barred by the Statute of Limitations. If any of the defendants withdrew from the conspiracy long enough before the commencement of the prosecution for the Statute of Limitations to be a bar, such fact may be proven at the trial.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1630.445.

Leather and Shoe Findings—Motion to Dismiss—Adequate Description of Individual Defendants.—Two individual defendants move to dismiss the indictment on the ground that its allegations as to them are insufficient. Each defendant is named in the body of indictment only once as being associated with other of the named corporate defendants by virtue of their managerial functions in the specified companies. It was held that while the information as to these moving defendants is meagre, it is not so meagre as to justify quashing the indictment as to them. Their relationship to the other defendants is sufficiently disclosed.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1630.271.

Leather and Shoe Findings—Motion to Dismiss—Vague Allegations.—Motion to dismiss for vague and indefinite allegations in the indictment is denied. The terms "leather and shoe findings" are not so indefinite as to justify quashing the indictment.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1630.351.

Request for Particulars—Federal Criminal Prosecution.—Specific overt acts were ordered to be set out in a bill of particulars since withholding them until trial would prejudice the defendant in the preparation of his defence. It can not be assumed that no refutation exists. Such information as to the date of the earliest documentary evidence to be used against the defendant was ordered to be included.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1630.355.

For plaintiff: J. Francis Hayden, Irving B. Glickfeld, John D. Swartz, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

For defendants: Breed, Abbott & Morgan, Attorneys for Defendants, Griffin Manufacturing Co. Inc. and William F. Smith; (William L. Hanaway, Of Counsel); Kaye, Scholer, Fierman & Hays, Attorneys for Defendants, The United States Leather Company and Robert L. Lerch; (James S. Hays and Jack L. Ratzkin, Of Counsel); Simon E. Sobeloff, Attorney for Defendants, Cat's Paw Rubber Company, Inc. and Morris Eisen; Hirleman, Vaughan & Ecker, Attorneys for Defendants, The ITS Company and Jacob Goldstein; (David Ecker, Of Counsel); Morris D. Reiss, Attorney for Defendants, Isaac Lippman and Max Perlstein; Robert W. Meserve, Dudley L. Miller, Attorneys for Defendant, Henry F. Keating; James E. Ingram, Attorney for Defendants, O'Sullivan Rubber Corp. and Warren S. Winterson; Cahill, Gordon, Zachry & Reindel, Attorneys for Defendants, the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Inc. and Harry L. Post; (Mathias F. Correa and George Nebolsine, Of Counsel); Corcoran & Kostelanetz, Attorneys for Defendants, The Linen Thread Co. Inc. and Samuel Barbour; (Rexford E. Tompkins, Of Counsel).

MEDINA, D. J.: On November 15, 1948 Isaac Lippman and Max Perlstein, two of the defendants in this criminal antitrust action moved to dismiss the indictment as not stating facts sufficient to constitute an offense against the United States. They asserted that the allegations of venue in paragraph 16 of the indictment were insufficient and that the indictment failed to allege the commission of any acts in furtherance of the conspiracy. I denied this motion on November 23, 1948, without opinion.

On November 30, 1948 certain other of the defendants moved to dismiss the indictment, and, along with defendants Lippman and Perlstein, requested bills of particulars. Fed. R. Crim. P., 7 (f), 12(b). After argument, the case was adjourned for a further hearing on December 15 and 16. At that time, certain other defendants moved to dismiss and requested bills of particulars.

I. Motions To Dismiss

A. Multiple Punishment

The defendants were indicted in two counts for conspiracies in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1, 2. The charging paragraph (13) of count one alleges a violation of Section 1 and the charging paragraph (18) of count two a violation of Section 2, each substantially in the words of the statute. Both charging paragraphs are followed by identical paragraphs (14 and 19) which state the substantial terms of the conspiracies. Defendants The United States Leather Company and Robert L. Lerch have moved to dismiss counts one and two as violative of the Fifth Amendment in that they "allege conspiracies which are not reciprocally distinguishable from and independent of each other," citing such cases as Blockburger v. United States, 284 U. S. 299 (1932), and Albrecht v. United States, 273 U. S. 1 (1927). Defendants contend that, if convicted on each count, they will be punished twice for the same acts, since every ingredient of a violation of Section 1 is, by the terms of the indictment, present in a violation of Section 2.

The problem of multiple punishment or double jeopardy in connection with a course of conduct that violates more than one statute is complex, and the criteria for determining just how much criminal liability may constitutionally be pressed from the defendant's course of conduct are not wholly satisfactory. See Notes, Double Jeopardy and the Multiple-Count Indictment, 57 Yale L. J. 132 (1947); Identity of Offenses: A Study in Judicial Method, 45 Harvard L. Rev. 535 (1932). The complexity increases when the offenses charged are conspiracies, especially when their "possibilities for miscarriage of justice to particular individuals" increase as the number involved "is broadened to include more and more, in varying degrees of attachment to the confederation." Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750, 776 (1946).

Antitrust cases, however, lay down a sufficiently clear rule as to indictments charging violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act based on the same evidence. American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 147 F. 2d 93, 116-117 (6th Cir. 1944), cert. granted on other grounds, 324 U. S. 836 (1945), rehearing denied, 324 U. S. 891 (1945), aff'd on other grounds, 328 U. S. 781 (1946); Montrose Lumber Co. v. United States, 124 F. 2d 573, 575-576 (10th Cir. 1941); United States v. Shapiro, 103 F. 2d 775 (2d Cir. 1939); United States v. Buchalter, 88 F. 2d 625, 628 (2d Cir. 1937, cert. denied sub nom. Shapiro v. United States, 301 U. S. 708 (1937); United States v. MacAndrews & Forbes Co., 149 Fed. 836 (C. C. S. D. N. Y. 1907), writ of error dismissed, 212 U. S. 585 (1908; United States v. A. B. Dick Co., 7 F. R. D 437, 439-41 (N. D. Ohio 1947); cf. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 224 n. 50, at 226 (1940). I am not persuaded that American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781, 787-8, 815-6 (1946), is to the contrary. See United States v. A. B. Dick Co., 7 F. R. D. 437, 439-41 (N. D. Ohio 1947).

True it is that where the same act or transaction constitutes a violation of two distinct statutory provisions, the test to be applied to determine whether there are two offenses or only one, is whether each provision requires proof of a fact which the other does not. Blockburger v. United States, 284 U. S. 299 (1932); Albrecht v. United States, 273 U. S. 1 (1927); Morgan v. Devine, 237 U. S. 632 (1915). But a monopoly may well be the consummation of a restraint of trade or a series of restraints of trade; and a conspiracy to restrain trade a mere preliminary or step in a conspiracy to monopolize. Moreover, and in any event, intent forms a radical ingredient of each crime and the fact of intent to restrain trade under Section 1 is not the same as the fact of intent to monopolize under Section 2.

The motion is denied.

B. Venue—Statute of Limitations

Defendants The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company and Harry L. Post have moved to dismiss on the ground that "The indictment does not contain a sufficient allegation that the combination and conspiracy alleged was formed in part and carried out in part within the Southern District of New York within the applicable period of limitations."

Count one of the indictment is similar, in the respects challenged, to count two. The pertinent paragraphs of count one are:

"1. Whenever the term 'Metropolitan area' is used herein, it shall mean the State of New Jersey, except the City of Camden, and the Counties of New York, Kings, Queens, Bronx, Richmond, Nassau, Suffolk and Westchester in the State of New York.

"11. More than 6,000 shoe repairmen are located within the Metropolitan area, and their total annual volume of trade amounts to approximately $50,000,000. Nearly all said shoe repair shops purchase leather and shoe findings from approximately 200 finders within the Metropolitan area. The total annual volume of trade done by finders within the Metropolitan area is approximately $20,000,000.

"13. Beginning in or about the year 1930, the exact date being to the Grand Jurors unknown, and continuing to the time of the presentment of this indictment, the defendants and other persons to the Grand Jurors unknown, have been engaged in a continuing combination and conspiracy in restraint of the aforesaid trade and commerce among the several states in leather and shoe findings, in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, as amended, (15 U. S. C. Sec. 1), commonly known as the Sherman Act.

"14. The aforesaid combination and conspiracy has consisted of a continuing agreement and concert of action among the defendants, the substantial terms of which have been and are that:

"(a) The prices, terms and conditions of sale at which leather and shoe findings be sold by finders be established, fixed and maintained; * * *

"16. The combination and conspiracy hereinbefore described has been formed in part and carried out in part within the Southern District of New York during all or part of the period covered by this indictment and within the period of the applicable statute of limitations, in the following manner: the defendants and others, to the Grand Jurors unknown, have during said periods of time attended meetings of the Association in New York City, at which the substantial terms of the combination and conspiracy hereinabove alleged have been discussed and agreed upon."

Frankfort Distilleries v. United States, 144 F. 2d 824 (10th Cir. 1944), approved counts of an indictment similar to those above quoted over a ruling of the lower court, United States v. Safeway Stores (Maryland, 51 F. Supp. 448, 455-9 (D. Kan. 1943), and objections from the dissenting judges, 144 F. 2d at 835-6, 840-2, similar to those the defendants now urge. United States v. New York Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 137 F. 2d 459, 463-4 (5th Cir. 1943), approved similar language in an indictment, again over similar objections. 137 F. 2d at 467-70. See also American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 147 F. 2d 93, 120 (6th Cir. 1944). Paragraphs 13 and 16 of the present indictment must, of course, be read together. United States v. Armour & Co., 137 F. 2d 269, 270 (10th Cir. 1943).

The conspiracy being a continuing one, the allegations of time are unobjectionable. United States v. Borden Co., 308 U. S. 188, 202 (1939); United States v. Kissel, 218 U. S. 601, 607-10 (1910); Patterson v. United States, 222 Fed. 599, 630-631 (6th Cir. 1915; United States v. MacAndrews & Forbes Co., 149 Fed. 823, 830 (C. C. S. D. N. Y. 1906). The absence of allegation of overt acts is unobjectionable. Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373 (1913). Venue is properly laid in this district if any part of the conspiracy was formed or if any acts in furtherance of it were carried out here. United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U. S. 392, 402-4 (1927); Hyde v. United States, 225 U. S. 347 (1912). Paragraph 16 alleges the conspiracy was formed here; paragraph 13, by alleging the conspiracy was a continuing one, charges that it was "in effect renewed during each day of its continuance," United States v. Borden Co., 308 U. S. 188, 202 (1939), until the time of the indictment. Paragraph 14 indicates the connection of this continually renewed conspiracy with the Metropolitan area in subparagraphs (b), (c), (d), and (f) not quoted above.

If any of the defendants withdrew from the conspiracy long enough ago for the statute of limitations to bar prosecution now, they may show that upon the trial. United States v. Kissel, 218 U. S. 601, 610 (1910); Boyle v. United States, 259 Fed. 803, 807 (7th Cir. 1919).

The motion is denied.

C. Robert L. Lerch and Harry L. Post

Defendants Robert L. Lerch and Harry L. Post have moved to dismiss the indictment on the further ground that its allegations as to them are insufficient. Each is named in the indictment only once, in paragraph 10(a), the former as associated with the corporate defendant U. S. Leather with the "Title or Position" of "Sales Manager" at New York, New York, and the latter as associated with the corporate defendant Goodyear with the "Title or Position" of "General Manager Shoe Products Div." at Akron, Ohio. They rely upon United States v. New York Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 137 F. 2d 459, 464-5 (5th Cir. 1943). That was a prosecution of food and food products dealers for a conspiracy to restrain and monopolize trade in food and food products. The only connection between the group of dealers and the defendants Business Organization, Inc., and the chairman of its board, Carl Byoir, was that Business Organization, Inc. was public relations counsel for the group. The indictment was dismissed as to Business Organization, Inc. and Carl Byoir. But the Court went on to say, 137 F. 2d at 465: "As to the individual defendants, members of the A & P group who are accused, but as to whom it is not alleged when they came into the conspiracy or what particular part they had in it, while the information is meager, it is not so meager as to require quashing of the indictment as to them."

Similarly here, while the information as to these moving individual defendants in the present indictment is meager, it is not so meager as to require quashing the indictment as to them. Their relationship to U. S. Leather and Goodyear is here sufficiently disclosed.

The motions are denied.

D. Vagueness and Indefiniteness—In General

Defendants The United States Leather Company, Robert L. Lerch, Henry F. Keating, The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., and

Harry L. Post have moved to dismiss the indictment for not stating offenses against the United States, and as vague and indefinite contrary to the Fifth and Sixth Amendments and Rule 7 (c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Frankfort Distilleries v. United States, 144 F. 2d 824, 830-2 (10th Cir. 1944), and United States v. New York Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 137 F. 2d 458, 462-3 (5th Cir. 1943), are all the authorities I need cite in holding the indictment is not vague and indefinite. The term "leather and shoe findings" is not any more indefinite than the term "food and food products" in the A & P case, which apparently no one objected to. Further discussion seems unnecessary.

The motions are denied.

II. Requests for Particulars

The defendants who moved to dismiss, as well as certain other defendants, have submitted about ten separate requests for bills of particulars.

The precedents furnish little help in disposing of requests for bills of particulars in criminal cases. On the one hand, many cases affirm the right of the defendant to particulars to enable him to prepare his defense; on the other, just as many refuse defendants particulars which would compel the government to disclose its evidence. How one can light upon particulars which help a defendant prepare his case but do not compel disclosure of evidence, or, contrariwise, do not compel disclosure of evidence but help a defendant prepare his case, the authorities do not say. The answer is of course that each has somewhat of the nature of the other, and passing on requests for particulars requires drawing a line in a continuum. But if, as has been said, the drawing of the line "is in art and not a science," United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 41 F. Supp. 347, 348 (S. D. N. Y. 1941), the authorities cannot be expected to be too helpful.

The complexity and uncertainty in disposing of requests for particulars probably derive from our not as yet having articulated the philosophy underlying disclosure and discovery procedures in criminal cases, despite the progress made in civil cases under the Rules of Civil Procedure. For the time being, passing on requests for particulars in federal criminal cases remains difficult, and solutions when reached are hardly ever wholly satisfactory.

If the court possessed some divining rod by which it might determine the area of probable actual surprise, the problem would be greatly simplified. The difficulty, however, particularly in antitrust cases, is that the government is generally overfearful that it may be curtailed in its proof while counsel for the defendants, perhaps from bitter experience in other cases, are overfearful that they will be caught unawares at the trial by evidence of specific instances of alleged wrongdoing, when it is too late to conduct an investigation sufficiently thorough to develop all that might otherwise be produced in refutation or extenuation of the charge. In cases where practically an entire industry is involved and the defendants are located in all parts of the country, it would seem almost inevitable that some prejudice would result if the generality of the terms of the indictment were not to some extent made more specific. Perhaps this may all come down to a question of the amount of money to be expended in preparation for trial by the various defendants. But it is hard to see the reasonableness of requiring the interviewing of hundreds and perhaps thousands of miscellaneous employees, when perhaps a dozen or so, in the case of a single corporate defendant, would suffice, if the charge were particularized.

The lengthy oral argument of these motions developed another circumstance which may serve somewhat to clarify the problem. Evidently it was formerly the practice in conspiracy cases such as this to set forth a certain number of overt acts in the indictment. In many instances the courts very naturally required particulars of these specific charges, sufficient to make it possible for defendants to prepare to meet them at the trial. This led to the abandonment of the practise, as it was clearly the law, as stated in the foregoing part of this opinion, that it was not necessary in conspiracy cases of this character to allege any overt acts whatever. But the charge here is of a combination and conspiracy consisting "of a continuing agreement and concert of action among the defendants." Under the allegation of "concert of action" the government will doubtless offer proof of the very sort of specific price fixing, or refusals to sell to particular firms or individuals, or boycotts and so on which were formerly set forth as overt acts. I cannot perceive the fairness of withholding such charges from defendants until the trial on the ground that "there would be sufficient time after the government introduces a witness" to investigate the matter and adduce the necessary explanation or refutation. Certainly it will not do to assume that there is no explanation or refutation, as defendants in antitrust cases are presumed to be innocent of the crimes charged, just as are defendants in other cases.

Where a conspiracy may or may not be inferred from numerous details and circumstances of one kind or another, which may be found to constitute a significant pattern of actual or prospective conduct in violation of the Sherman Act, I can readily see how the direction of a bill of particulars may serve merely as a source of embarrassment to the government, while accomplishing little else to the advantage of defendants. For this reason most of the particulars here requested by the various defendants will be denied, except insofar as the government has consented to give them. Thus the geographical extent of the conspiracy here charged will be limited to the "Metropolitan area," as defined in the indictment. The government will also, in the bill to be served, inform each corporate and individual defendant of the earliest date of any documentary proofs connecting or tending to connect each such corporate and individual defendant with the alleged conspiracy. The list of those who are claimed to have attended meetings of the Metropolitan Leather & Findings Association, Inc., to the extent known to the government, will be furnished.

On the other hand, where the government will at the trial rely upon proof of specific acts of price fixing, refusals by producers to sell to finders and wholesalers not approved by the defendant Association, refusals by producers and wholesalers to sell to shoe repairmen, refusals by wholesalers to sell to finders, refusals by finders to sell to any person not approved by the Association, refusals to accept persons as members of the Association, and boycotts of producers and wholesalers supplying finders not approved by the Association, I shall direct that at least 30 days before the trial there be furnished to the defendants claimed to have participated in such alleged acts, a statement identifying each separate occasion relied on, with sufficient detail fairly to apprise defendants of the transactions to be proved. It should be possible to do this in most cases without giving the names of any prospective witnesses or disclosing the government's evidence. The purpose of this direction is solely to afford defendants a reasonable opportunity to meet the charges of doing these specific acts.

If counsel for the government and counsel for the respective defendants will confer together in an endeavor to implement these instructions in a reasonable way, I feel sure that the ends of justice will be met and the trial greatly expedited.

Settle order on notice.

[¶ 62,368] Daniel L. Gardella, v. Albert B. Chandler, individually and as Commissioner of Baseball, Ford C. Frick, individually and as President of the National League of Baseball Clubs, an unincorporated voluntary association, William Harridge, individually and as President of the American League of Professional Baseball Clubs, a voluntary unincorporated association, George M. Trautman, individually and as President of The National Association of Baseball Leagues, a voluntary unincorporated association, and The National Exhibition Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 21133. February 9, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Antitrust Act

Treble Damages — Professional Baseball — Interstate Commerce. — In an action for treble damages as a result of alleged violations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts instituted by a professional baseball player against the club which employed him, an order allowing a motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of jurisdiction was reversed and the case remanded for trial. In deciding that the complaint averred enough to present an issue upon trial, the court held that the transmission of narratives and motion pictures of games throughout the country, an interstate activity in itself, was not a mere incident of the defendant's business but a part of it. The game itself took on an interstate aspect.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.539.

Reversing and remanding the decision of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, reported at ¶ 62,281.

For appellant: Frederic A. Johnson, Frederic A. Johnson, Edward H. Beck, of Counsel.

For appellee William H. Harridge: Baker, Hostetler & Patterson.

For appellee George M. Trautman: Hedges, Hoover & Tingley.

For appellee National Exhibition Company: Edgar P. Feeley.

Judge Chase's Opinion

[Facts]

CHASE, Circuit Judge: The appellant brought this suit to recover treble damages under Secs. 1, 2 and 3 of the Sherman Act (26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1, 2 and 3) and under, as stated in the complaint, Secs. 13 and 14 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. §§ 13 and 14). Apparently he relies upon Sec. 4 of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15) and we shall so treat his complaint.

He is a professional baseball player who, while under contract to play exclusively with the ball club popularly called the New York Giants which is owned and operated by one of the appellees, the National Exhibition Company, a New York corporation, violated the terms of the hereafter mentioned reserve clause of that contract by playing professional baseball in Mexico. He was consequently barred for a period of years from playing with baseball clubs in what is known as "organized baseball" in accordance with the provisions of his contract with the National Exhibition Company and thus deprived pro tanto of his means of livelihood. This suit followed and the first issue presented by this appeal is whether the district court had jurisdiction of the cause of action under the Sherman and Clayton Acts. The complaint was dismissed solely on the ground that the court had no such jurisdiction and no other is claimed now. 79 F. Supp. 260.

The appellant undertook to allege three causes of action against the appellees who are Albert B. Chandler, individually and as the Commissioner of Baseball; Ford C. Frick, individually and as President of the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, an unincorporated association; William Harridge, individually and as president of The American League of Professional Baseball Clubs, an unincorporated association; George M. Trautman, individually and as president of The National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, an unincorporated association; and National Exhibition Company, before mentioned.

He alleged generally in support of each cause of action that "organized baseball" comprised two so-called major leagues known respectively as the National and the American and the so-called minor leagues made up of clubs composing leagues of eight grades based upon the respective abilities of the players in the several clubs in each of such leagues. There are eight clubs in each of the major leagues and each club plays during a season games at its home grounds and games at the home grounds of each of the others until each club has played approximately one hundred and fifty games. The winning club in each major league plays a series of games with the winning club in the other at the close of the season for what is called the world championship, and during the season selected players from the clubs in each league perform as a team in playing a similarly selected team in what is called an "all stars" game. The clubs in the National League are located in the following places where each owns or leases a baseball park where games are played. Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Chicago, Ill., and St. Louis, Mo. The clubs of the American League own or lease parks where games are played in the following places. Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Washington, D. C.; Cleveland, Ohio; Detroit, Mich.; Chicago, Ill.; and St. Louis, Mo. The individual clubs are owned by corporations organized under the laws of the respective states in which their parks are located. The minor leagues are composed of clubs in a similar way and these clubs play games in various cities in this country and Canada.

These leagues and the clubs comprising them have entered into agreements, designed to control the manner in which "organized baseball" shall be conducted, which require players to be bound to their respective clubs by what is known as the standard contract. The so-called major league agreement, among other things, gives to appellee Chandler supervisory and disciplinary power over the major leagues, their clubs and their players. The so-called major-minor league agreement gives him similar powers over the minor leagues, their clubs and their players. The standard player contract includes what is known as a reserve clause which requires a player who is under contract to play with any club to refrain, at the expiration of the period of his employment, from contracting to play for, or playing for, any other club other than the one to which he has been under contract or its assignee. Thus, and in other particulars which need not be presently described, the agreements in "organized baseball" have created a closely knit organization which was intended to, and does, dominate and control to a large extent the playing of professional baseball in this country, Canada, Cuba, Puerto Rico and Mexico.

In playing their games the teams of the various clubs perform in the ball parks already referred to and each game is ended in the park where it is begun. But in order to get to the park where the game is played some or all of the players, managers, coaches, and employees have to travel across state or foreign boundaries; and the equipment necessary for the traveling club, consisting of uniforms, bats, gloves, mitts, masks, chest protectors, shin guards, baseballs and the like is similarly transported.

The club owners charge admission fees for all games played and divide them with the other contesting clubs as agreed. They, or most of them, also sell for valuable consideration the right to broadcast play-by-play descriptions of the games over the radio and thus across state lines, and some of them sell the right to broadcast the games by television. Some of those to whom these broadcast rights are sold get, and use, the opportunity so provided to advertise goods, articles and commodities which are sold and distributed nationally and internationally.

Since my brothers agree that the judgment should be reversed I will now state what are but my own reasons for believing that it should be affirmed; (1) because a controlling decision of the Supreme Court requires it and (2) because, even if that decision is distinguishable, the allegations in the complaint fail to state a cause of action over which the district court had jurisdiction.

[Federal Baseball Case Followed]

The issues here presented are, as the district judge recognized, decidedly not of first impression. This record is with the possible exception of the allegations as to the sale of broadcasting rights for radio and television, not different in any essential from that before the Supreme Court in Federal Base Ball Club v. National League, 259 U. S. 200 in which it was held that major league ball clubs were not engaged in interstate trade or commerce within the scope of the anti-trust laws. Even the possible exception just mentioned exists only if the sale of these radio and television broadcast rights differs in some material way from the sale of the exclusive right to send "play-by-play" descriptions of the games interstate over telegraph wires, for that feature was present in the previous case before the Supreme Court. In each instance by what is called the sale of rights the appellees made it possible for others to transmit information interstate. The playing of baseball games then created the subject matter concerning which information was sent by symbols carried by telegraph wires and translated into words just as such play now creates the subject matter concerning which information is sent through the air by impulses which are transformed either into words or pictures. So far as I can perceive, the difference in the method of transmission is without significance.

These appellees do not themselves broadcast anything nor do they do anything more by way of production of what is broadcast than was shown to have been done in the former case to "produce" what was described. Since the sellers of the rights to broadcast through the air do only what the sellers of the rights to send descriptions over telegraph wires did in the former case I can find no sound basis on the facts for distinguishing that case from this. It seems to me to have decided the precise question here presented and that it controls our decision.

It has never been expressly overruled, and I do not think it has been overruled by necessary implication by United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n, 322 U. S. 533, which reflected a trend in decision not apparent in Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, on which the court relied somewhat in deciding Federal Base Ball Club v. National League, supra. That decisions like Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U. S. 111 and Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U. S. 219 show a wide reach of Congressional power under the Commerce Clause when Congress chooses to exert it cannot be gainsaid. And United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n, supra, reiterates that Congress intended to put within the coverage of the Anti-Trust Acts everything which was interstate or foreign trade or commerce. But in none of these decisions mentioned nor in any others of the Supreme Court of which I am aware, save only Federal Base Ball Club v. National League, supra, has there been a definite holding that "organized baseball" is, or is not, trade or commerce within the meaning of those words in the Sherman and Clayton Acts. Moreover, the rule there stated has since been applied by analogy in another field. Hart v. B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange, 2 Cir., 12 F. 2d 341, cert. denied, 273 U. S. 704; Neugen v. Chautauqua Co., 10 Cir., 70 F. 2d 605. Furthermore, the case was recently cited and distinguished in North American Co. v. S. E. C., 327 U. S. 686, 694. See Sears v. Hassett, 1 Cir., 111 F. 2d 961, 965; cf. Perkins v. Endicott Johnson Corp., 2 Cir., 128 F. 2d 208, 218.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that our duty as a subordinate court is to follow the Federal Base Ball Club case. I find no necessary implication among the cases to which I have previously alluded or in any others that it has been overruled. All of them relate to activities quite unlike organized baseball and, though general language can be found in the opinions to indicate changes in methods of approach to decision, there is no actual decision so incompatible with that in Federal Base Ball Club v. National League, supra, as to displace the latter by mere weight of its authority. The interpretation of the anti-trust laws has hitherto been accomplished in a case by case manner which has given due effect to the particular facts and circumstances shown. I cannot find any authoritative definition of the words "trade or commerce" or "affecting trade or commerce" as used in the cases which is so comprehensive that this method can be dispensed with. The intricate nature of the various questions involved makes it apparently impossible to devise a formula which will automatically, so to speak, put any and all situations either within or without the coverage of the acts.

In dealing with such a unique aggregate as organized baseball and with a decision in respect to it which seems to be directly in point on the facts, we should not be astute in seeking to anticipate that the court which has the power to do so will change that decision. To do so would not only be an unwarranted attempt to usurp the authority of that court but would make its task in general much more difficult since it would lead to a constant alteration in the lower courts of its decisions on specific fact situations in the light of what would appear to be differing rules stated in the course of deciding later cases on different facts. We relied on Federal Base Ball Club v. National League, supra, in our recent decision in Conley v. San Carlo Opera Co., 163 F. 2d 310, and until, and unless, we are advised by competent authority that it is no longer the law we should continue to abide by it.

[Beyond Scope of Antitrust Laws]

On the second point, it seems to me that cases which involve more than the regulation of trade and commerce per se, and rest upon the explicit control by Congress in other statutes of the production of goods for commerce or the control of labor relations, furnish but very slippery ground on which to base decision here. What those statutes have in common with the anti-trust acts which is now material, as I see it, is only that all were within the power of Congress to enact under the Commerce Clause. When it is said that Congress has exerted all the power it possessed in the anti-trust acts, Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers v. United States, 286 U. S. 427, 435, it is meant only that within the field there dealt with Congress meant to act fully, leaving other phases of its power under the Commerce Clause outside their scope.

The field covered was "restraint of trade" which had a well known meaning at common law and the words "or commerce between the several states" were added to put the restraints prohibited within constitutional limitations on Congressional power. The Supreme Court has never, so far as I know, applied the Sherman Act in any case unless it was of the opinion that there was some form of restraint upon commercial competition in the marketing of goods and services in interstate commerce which was within the category of restraints which were illegal at common law, though expressions may be found in opinions which seem to make adherence to this concept somewhat elastic. In any event, as recently as Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U. S. 469, 500, 501, Mr. Justice Stone said, in speaking for the majority of the court, "In the cases considered by this Court since the Standard Oil case in 1911 some form of restraint of commercial competition has been the sine qua non to the condemnation of contracts, combinations or conspiracies under the Sherman Act, and in general restraints upon competition have been condemned only when their purpose or effect was to raise or fix the market price.[1] It is in this sense that it is said that the restraints actual or intended, prohibited by the Sherman Act, are only those which are so substantial as to affect market prices. Restraints on competition or on the course of trade in the merchandising of articles moving in interstate commerce is not enough, unless the restraint is shown to have or is intended to have an effect upon prices in the market or otherwise to deprive purchasers or consumers of the advantages which they derive from free competition. Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, 238; United States v. United States Steel Co., 251 U. S. 417; Cement Manufacturers Assn. v. United States, 268 U. S. 588; United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U. S. 693; Appalachian Coals v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 375 et seq."

In the Mandeville case, supra, the Court was dealing with a situation which did have a substantial effect upon the prices of goods in the market and did deprive purchasers or consumers of advantages which would have been theirs under free competition. While the test of indirectness of effect was somewhat muted, and perhaps discarded, the substance or the so-called "rule of reason" was not. Whatever the activity and how it may be conducted, it is not within the prohibition of the anti-trust laws unless in some substantial way the prices of goods in interstate commerce are controlled to the detriment of the purchaser or consumer.

The complaint in this case shoots wide of that mark. The wrong alleged as the end result of the monopoly, or conspiracy to create a monopoly, in restraint of trade or commerce is the deprivation of the appellant of the opportunity to play baseball as a means of earning his livelihood. His services, or ability to work, are not subjects of trade or commerce within the anti-trust acts. Indeed, in Sec. 6 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 17) it is stated that, "The labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce." Although this, to be sure, was inserted for a purpose not here germane it shows nevertheless that Congress did not intend in the anti-trust acts to cover restraints upon employment. Moreover, Congress has expressly dealt with that subject in other statutes like the National Labor Relations Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act.

[Insufficient Allegations]

Nor are there any allegations as to any monopoly to control, or any conspiracy to create one to control, the prices at which the rights to send descriptions of the games, visually or otherwise, are sold; and as much is true as to the advertising by the purchasers of those rights. Nor as to what effect, if any, such by-products of the games have upon the prices at which goods are sold in commerce or upon the purchasers and consumers of those goods. Nor that what is done in respect to broadcasting or telecasting the games has any causal connection with the damage the appellant alleges. See, K. & K. Co. v. Special Site Sign Co., 9 Cir., 85 F. 2d 742, cert. denied, 299 U. S. 613.

I would affirm the judgment but as my brothers hold otherwise it is, for the reasons stated in their separate opinions, reversed and the cause is remanded for trial.

Judge Hand's Opinion

[Television and Radio in Baseball]

L. HAND, Circuit Judge: The complaint alleges that the defendants make contracts with broadcasting and television companies by which these companies send across state lines play-by-play narratives, or moving pictures, of the games; and, although in Federal Baseball Club v. National League,[1] the record contained evidence that it was the custom to broadcast accounts of the games by telegraph, that was an incident of so little importance that the Court of Appeals merely mentioned it without comment and the Supreme Court did not even allude to it. Besides, the difference between the telegraphing of that time and present-day radio or television, even though it were no more than a difference of degree—which it is not—would be so great as for practical purposes to make a difference in kind. I shall not labor the argument that the transmission of these narratives and moving pictures is itself interstate commerce; the only debatable question is whether the defendants' connection with these activities makes them a part of their business, and enough a part of it to color the whole. As I understand it, they enter into contracts with broadcasting and television companies, by which for large payments they allow the companies to install suitable apparatus in the "ball-parks," by means of which the companies transmit the narratives and pictures to the outside public. It is not necessary to say whether one, who sells goods indifferently to all comers, is pro tanto engaged in interstate commerce, because a part of his customers come from another state and carry their purchases home. In such cases the seller's indifference to the destination of the goods may isolate him from their eventual destination; at least he cannot be said to have joined with the buyers in the interstate part of their purposes. True, the sale is a condition sine qua non of the buyers' ability to carry the goods out of the state; but, if that be enough, there is no apparent reason to end the regression of causes with the sale. Whether every department store is engaged in interstate commerce is a question I shall not undertake to answer; and this I may do, because the defendant's relation to broadcasting and television is quite different. The contracts with the companies are mutual arrangements in which each contributes its share to a common venture; the defendants furnish the spectacle and give the companies leave to enter and set up their apparatus on the grounds, by means of which they transform for transmission the air and light waves, which come from the playing-grounds and the players, or from the narrator who reports the game; and the transformed waves they send abroad either in a form for direct reception or otherwise. This interposition is of course necessary, when the auditory is at a distance; but for our purposes the result seems no different from direct transmission; and the situation appears to me the same as that which would exist at a "ball-park" where a state line ran between the diamond and the grandstand. Nor can the arrangements between the defendants and the companies be set down as merely incidents of the business, as were the interstate features in Federal Baseball Club v. National League, supra.[2] On the contrary, they are part of the business itself, for that consists in giving public entertainments; the players are the actors, the radio listeners and the television spectators are the audiences; together they form as indivisible a unit as do actors and spectators in a theatre. I am therefore in accord with my brother Frank that the defendants are pro tanto engaged in interstate commerce.

[1] See e. g. Ethyl Gasoline Corp v. United States, 309 U. S. 436; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., ante p. 150, especially Note 59 and cases cited.

[Scope of Anti-Trust Acts]

On the other hand, I cannot go along with his opinion, if I understand it, that these features of the business, no matter how insignificant they may prove, necessarily subject it as a whole to the Anti-Trust Acts. The plaintiff is asking damages for excluding him from his calling; and to succeed he must show that the defendants' conduct, by which he was injured, was itself subject to the law that he invokes. I do not mean that he must show that he was injured by the broadcasting and television; but he must show that those activities together with any other interstate activities mark the business as a whole. Certainly that was implied in Federal Baseball v. National League, supra,[3] itself; nobody questioned that many interstate activities were in fact involved in professional baseball; the Court merely thought them not important enough to fix the business—at large—with an interstate character. I can find nothing in the books since then, which leads me to think otherwise. Mabee v. White Plains Publishing Co.[4] did indeed hold that, quoad those newspapers which crossed a state line, the publisher was engaged in the "production of goods for commerce"; and it may

[1] 259 U. S. 200.
[2] 259 U. S. 200.
[3] 259 U. S. 200.
[4] 327 U. S. 178.

be that employees concerned in the production of even so small a part of a total output are within the Fair Labor Standards Act. However that may be, I cannot believe that that decision was intended to overrule the repeated decisions that the Anti-Trust Acts do not cover all persons who engage to any degree whatever in interstate commerce. If so, we are wasting our time over the Baseball case for it was overruled sub silentio. When the case goes back for trial—assuming that it does so upon our opinions—it will be necessary, as I view it, to determine whether all the interstate activities of the defendants—those, which were thought insufficient before, in conjunction with broadcasting and television—together form a large enough part of the business to impress upon it an interstate character. I do not know how to put it in more definite terms.

As I understand my brother Chase, he thinks that, even though the defendants' business be in general subject to the Anti-Trust Acts, the "reserve clause" is not in violation of them. For this he relies principally upon Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader,[5] a case in which the Court found it unnecessary to decide whether labor unions were within the Acts. The Court thought that, although the strike in question might well have had an effect upon the price of stockings which passed into interstate commerce, the purpose of the strikers was not that, and the result, if any, was only an incident. Be that as it may, whatever other conduct the Acts may forbid, they certainly forbid all restraints of trade which were unlawful at common-law, and one of the oldest and best established of these is a contract which unreasonably forbids anyone to practice his calling. I do not think that at this stage of the action we should pass upon the "reserve clause"; and therefore I do not join in my brother Frank's present disposition of it, although I do not mean that I dissent from him. All that I wish now to decide is that the complaint avers enough to present an issue upon a trial. I think that the judgment should be reversed and the cause should be remanded for trial.

Judge Frank's Opinion

[Monopoly Conditions]

FRANK, Circuit Judge: 1. No one can treat as frivolous the argument that the Supreme Court's recent decisions have completely destroyed the vitality of Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U. S. 200 (decided twenty-seven years ago) and have left that case but an impotent zombi. Nevertheless, it seems best that this court should not so hold.[1] However, in Ring v. Spina,

---

[5] 310 U. S. 464.

[1] I reach that conclusion somewhat hesitantly. For, while the Supreme Court has never explicitly overruled the Federal Baseball Club case, it has overruled the precedents upon which that decision was based; and the concept of Commerce has changed enough in the last two decades so that, if that case were before the Supreme Court de novo, it seems very likely that the Court would decide the other way. This court cannot, of course, tell the Supreme Court that it was once wrong. But "one should not wait for formal retraction * * * in the face of changes plainly foreshadowed"; this court's duty is "to divine, as best it can, what would be the event of the appeal in the case before it." (L. Hand, C. J., dissenting in Spector Motor Service Co. v. Walsh, 139 F. (2d) 809, 823). In Perkins v. Endicott Johnson Corp., 128 F. (2d) 208, 217-218 (C. C. A. 2), we said: "Legal doctrines, as first enunciated, often prove to be inadequate under the impact of ensuing experience in their practical application. And when a lower court perceives a pronounced new doctrinal trend in Supreme Court decisions, it is its duty, cautiously to be sure, to follow not to resist it." In Picard v. United Aircraft Corp., 128 F. (2d) 632, 636 (C. C. A. 2), we said (per L. Hand, J.): "In this we recognize 'a pronounced new docrtinal trend' which it is our 'duty cautiously to be sure, to follow not to resist.' "

In Barnette v. West Virginia State Board of Education, 47 F. Supp. 251, 252-253 (S. D. W. Va.) Judge Parker, sitting in a three-judge court, said: "Ordinarily we would feel constrained to follow an unreversed decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, whether we agreed with it or not. * * * The developments with respect to the Gobitis case, however, are such that we do not feel that it is incumbent upon us to accept it as binding authority. Of the seven justices now members of the Supreme Court who participated in that decision, four have given public expression to the view that it is unsound, the present Chief Justice in his dissenting opinion rendered therein and three other justices in a special dissenting opinion in Jones v. City of Opelika, 316 U. S. 484. The majority of the court in Jones v. City of Opelika, moreover, thought it worth while to distinguish the decision in the Gobitis case, instead of relying upon it as supporting authority. Under such circumstances and believing, as we do, that the flag salute here required is violative of religious liberty when required of persons holding the religious views of plaintiffs, we feel that we would [be] recreant to our duty as judges, if through a blind following of a decision which the Supreme Court itself has thus impaired as an authority, we should deny protection to rights which we regard as among the most sacred of those protected by constitutional guaranties."

148 F. (2d) 647, 651, referring to that case and another similar case,[2] this court said that, because of "the steadily expanding content of the phrase 'interstate commerce' in recent years, * * * there is no longer occasion for applying those cases beyond their exact facts." For reasons stated later, I think that, on its facts, we can properly distinguish the suit now before us from the Federal Baseball case.

I think it should be so distinguished, if possible, because (assuming, as we must, at this stage of the litigation, the truth of the statements in the complaint) we have here a monopoly which, in its effect on ballplayers like the plaintiff, possesses characteristics shockingly repugnant to moral principles that, at least since the War Between the States, have been basic in America, as shown by the Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution, condemning "involuntary servitude," and by subsequent Congressional enactments on that subject.[3] For the "reserve clause," as has been observed, results in something resembling peonage of the baseball player. By accepting the "reserve clause"—and all players in organized baseball must "accept" it—a player binds himself not to sign a contract with, or play for, any club other than the club which originally employs him or its assignee. Although many courts have refused to enforce the "reserve" clause,[4] yet severe and practically efficacious extra-legal penalties are imposed for violation. The most extreme of these penalties is the blacklisting of the player, so that no club in organized baseball will hire him. In effect, this clause prevents a player from ever playing with any team other than his original employer, unless that employer consents. Since the right to play with organized baseball is indispensable to the career of a professional baseball player, violations of the clause by such players are infrequent. The violator may perhaps become a judge (with a less exciting and often less remunerative occupation) or a bartender or a street-sweeper, but his chances of ever again playing baseball are exceedingly slim.

As one court, perhaps a bit exaggeratedly, has put it,[5] "While the services of these baseball players are ostensibly secured by voluntary contracts, a study of the system as * * * practiced under the plan of the national agreement, reveals the involuntary character of the servitude which is imposed upon players by the strength of the combination controlling the labor of practically all of the players in the country. * * * There is no difference in principle between the system of servitude built up by the operation of this national agreement, which * * * provides for the purchase, sale, barter and exchange of the services of baseball players —skilled laborers—without their consent, and the system of peonage brought into the United States from Mexico and thereafter existing for a time within the territory of New Mexico. * * * The system created by 'organized baseball' in recent years presents the question of the establishment of a scheme by which the personal freedom, the right to contract for their labor wherever they will, of 10,000 skilled laborers, is placed under the dominion of a benevolent despotism through the operation of the monopoly established by the national agreement." I may add that, if the players be regarded as quasi-peons, it is of no moment that they are well paid; only the totalitarian-minded will believe that high pay excuses virtual slavery.

In what I have said about the nature of the contracts made with the players, I am not to be understood as holding that they violate the Thirteenth Amendment or the statutes enacted pursuant thereto. I mean simply to suggest that those contracts are so opposed to the public policy of the United States[5a] that, if possible, they should be deemed within the prohibitions of the Sherman Act.

[Federal Baseball Case Distinguished]

2. On a motion to dismiss, the complaint must be liberally construed in plaintiff's favor. So construing this complaint, I think that the facts in the instant case significantly

[2] Hart v. B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange, 12 F. (2d) 341 (C. C. A. 2).

[3] 8 U. S. C. A. § 56 and 18 U. S. C. § 1581; see United States v. Reynolds, 235 U. S. 133; Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U. S. 219; Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207; Taylor v. George, 315 U. S. 25; Pollock v. Williams, 322 U. S. 4.

[4] Allegheny Baseball Club v. Bennett, 14 Fed. 257 (C. C. W. D. Pa.); Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ewing, 42 Fed. 198 (C. C. S. D. N. Y.); Brooklyn Baseball Club v. McGuire, 116 Fed. 782 (C. C. E. D. Pa.); Weegham v. Killefer, 215 Fed. 289 (C. C. A. 6); American League Baseball Club v. Chase, 86 Misc. 441; Cincinnati Exhibition Co. v. Johnson, 190 Ill. App. 630; Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ward, 9 N. Y. Supp. 779.

[5] American League Baseball Club v. Chase, 86 Misc. 441, 465, 466.

[5a] Cf. Hurd v. Hodge, 334 U. S. 24, 34.

differ from those in the Federal Baseball case, because here the defendants have lucratively contracted for the interstate communication, by radio and television, of the playings of the games.[5b] In that earlier case, the Court held that the traveling across state lines was but an incidental means of enabling games to be played locally—i. e., within particular states—and therefore insufficient to constitute interstate commerce.[5c] Here, although the playing of the games is essential to both defendants' intra-state and interstate activities, the interstate communication by radio and television is in no way a means, incidental or otherwise, of performing the intra-state activities (the local playings of the games).

True, in the Federal Baseball Club case, there was present in the record the fact that the defendants had sold the exclusive right to send "play-by-play" descriptions of the games over interstate telegraph wires. But the brief of the plaintiff filed in the Supreme Court in that case did not contend that that interstate communication was interstate commerce; it merely called attention to the telegraph service as one of several factors tending to show the popularity and national character of "organized baseball." Moreover, the Supreme Court in its opinion in that case did not note the fact concerning the telegraph service; and it has often been held that a decision is not to be regarded as a precedent concerning a question clearly not considered by the Court, because "to make it so, there must have been an application of the judicial mind to the precise question. * * * "[5d]

Accordingly, as the Court in the Federal Baseball case, in deciding that interstate features were absent, discussed nothing but the traveling of the teams and their paraphernalia between states, as a means to the local playing of the games, I think that decision, as above indicated, should be deemed to hold no more than that such traveling does not give rise to interstate commerce for Sherman Act purposes. That such was the ruling appears from the way in which the Supreme Court there dealt with the facts: "A summary statement of the nature of the business involved will be enough to present the point. The clubs composing the leagues are in different cities and for the most part in different states. The end of the elaborate organizations and sub-organizations that are described in the pleadings and evidence is that these clubs shall play against one another in public exhibitions for money, one or the other club crossing a state line in order to make the meeting possible. When as the result of these contests one club has won the pennant of its league and another club has won the pennant of the other league, there is a final competition for the world's championship between these two. Of course the scheme requires constantly repeated travelling on the part of the clubs, which is provided for, controlled and disciplined by the organizations, and this it is said means commerce among the states. But we are of opinion that the Court of Appeals was right. The business is giving exhibitions of baseball, which are purely state affairs. It is true that, in order to attain for these exhibitions the great popularity that they have achieved, competitions must be arranged between clubs from different cities and states. But the fact that in order to give the exhibitions the leagues must induce free persons to cross state lines and must arrange and pay for their doing so is not enough to change the character of the business. According to the distinction insisted upon in Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 655, the transport is a mere incident, not the essential thing."

I think the foregoing will serve alone to distinguish the incidental-means rationale of the Federal Baseball case: There the traveling was but a means to the end of playing games which themselves took place intra-state; here the games themselves, because of the radio and television, are, so to speak, played interstate as well as intra-state.

[5b] That the defendants' radio contracts are lucrative, see, Pittsburgh Athletic Co. v. KQV Broadcasting Co., 24 F. Supp. 490; Mutual Broadcasting System, Inc. v. Muzak Corp., 177 Misc. 489.

[5c] In passing. I note that that ruling is difficult to reconcile with the Mann Act cases; Caminetti v. U. S., 242 U. S. 470; Martensen v. U. S., 322 U. S. 369, 375; Cleveland v. U. S., 329 U. S. 14, 19-20.

[5d] St. Louis R. v. Terre Haute R. Co., 145 U. S. 393, 403-404; Webster v. Fall, 266 U. S. 507, 511; KVOS, Inc. v. Associated Press, 299 U. S. 269, 279; Teft, Weller & Co. v. Munsuri, 222 U. S. 114, 119-120; United States v. Mitchell, 271 U. S. 9, 14; United States v. More, 3 Cranch 159, 172; The Edward, 1 Wheat. 261, 275-276; Mutual Benefit Health & Accident Association v. Bowman, 99 F. (2d) 856, 858 (C. C. A. 8); United States v. Dunbar, 154 F. (2d) 889, 891 (C. C. A. 9).

There is, however, another important distinction on which I think we might rely, were another distinction necessary: In that earlier case, persons in other states received, via the telegraph, mere accounts of the games as told by others, while here we have the very substantially different fact of instant and direct interstate transmission, via television, of the games as they are being played, so that audiences in other states have the experience of being virtually present at these games. That degree of difference, known to anyone who has ever sat at the receiving end of a television set, is so great as to constitute a difference in kind. To be sure, no one can draw a sharp line between differences of "degree" and "kind." However, to the question whether the difference between a difference of kind and difference of degree is itself a difference of degree, the sage answer has been given that it is a difference of degree, but a "violent" one.[6] "Courts of justice," said an English judge some sixty years ago, "ought not to be puzzled by such old scholastic questions as to where a horse's tail begins and where it ceases. You are obliged to say, 'This is a horse's tail,' at some time."[7]

In the Federal Baseball case, the Court assigned as a further ground of its decision that the playing of the games, although for profit, involved services, and that services were not "trade or commerce" as those words were used in the Sherman Act. But I think that such a restricted interpretation of those words has been undeniably repudiated in later Supreme Court decisions concerning medical services[7a] and motion pictures.[7b] I believe, therefore, that we will not trespass on the Supreme Court's domain if we hold that the rationale of the Federal Baseball case is now confined to the insufficiency of traveling, when employed as a means of accomplishing local activities, to establish the existence of interstate commerce.[7c]

I conclude, then, that here there is substantial interstate commerce of a sort not considered by the Court in the Federal Baseball case. These questions remain: (a) May Congress constitutionally regulate the interstate portion of such a business as that done by defendants? (b) If so, has Congress in the Sherman Act sufficiently exercised its constitutional power to include that portion of that business? I shall consider those questions in turn.

[Constitutional Power]

3. Supreme Court decisions relative to the Fair Labor Standards Act leave little doubt that the Constitutional power of Congress, under the commerce clause, extends to such a situation. In Roland Co. v. Walling, 326 U. S. 657, an action to enjoin an alleged violation of that Act, the defendant was engaged in commercial and industrial wiring, electrical contracting, and dealing in electrical motors and generators. One of its customers was admittedly engaged in interstate telephony, others in the repair of ships intended for movement in interstate commerce, or in the production of goods for commerce. This the Court said (in an opinion by Justice Burton) brought the defendant within the Act, which "does not require the employee to be directly 'engaged in commerce'" or even "employed in the production of an article which itself becomes the subject of commerce. * * * It is enough that the employee be employed, for example, in an occupation which is necessary to the production of a part of any other 'article or subject of commerce of any character' which are produced for trade, commerce or transportation among the several

---

[6] Williams, Language and The Law, 61 Law. Q. Rev. (1945) 179, 184.

[7] Chitty, J., in Lavery v. Pursell (1888) 39 Ch. D. at 517.

Holmes, J., often discussed this matter of line-drawing. Holmes, The Common Law (1881) 68, 110, 127; Holmes, Law in Science—Science in Law, 12 Harv. L. Rev. (1899) 443, reprinted in Holmes, Collected Legal Papers (1920) 210, 232-233; Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349, 355; Irwin v. Gavit, 268 U. S. 161, 168; Superior Oil Co. v. State of Mississippi, 280 U. S. 390; Empire Trust Co. v. Cahan, 274 U. S. 473, 478; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 631, 732; Schlesinger v. State of Wisconsin, 279 U. S. 230, 241; Louisville Gas & Elec. Co. v. Coleman, 277 U. S. 32, 41; Quaker City Cab Co. v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 277 U. S. 389, 403; Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373, 376; Bullen v. State of Wisconsin, 240 U. S. 625, 630, 631.

[7a] American Medical Association v. U. S., 317 U. S. 519; cf. the reference to that case in United States v. Underwriters Association, 322 U. S. 533, 546 and note 25.

[7b] Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, Inc., 263 U. S. 291; Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30; United States v. First Natl. Pictures, 282 U. S. 44; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; Bigelow v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, 327 U. S. 251.

[7c] Cf. North American Co. v. S. E. C., 327 U. S. 686, 694.

states." Roland Co. v. Walling was followed in Martino v. Michigan Window Cleaning Co., 327 U. S. 173, where the employer was an independent contractor engaged in washing windows, painting and similar maintenance work entirely within the State of Michigan on premises used in the production of goods for commerce. This the Court said constituted "the production of goods for commerce," under the Fair Labor Standards Act. Several circuit courts, including this court, have in like manner widely interpreted Congress' constitutional power under the commerce clause. See N. L. R. B. v. Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co., 133 F. (2d) 295 (C. C. A. 6); Culver v. Bell & Loffland, 146 F. (2d) 39 (C. C. A. 9); Walling v. Connecticut Co., 154 F. (2d) 552 (C. C. A. 2); Consumers Power Co. v. N. L. R. B., 113 F. (2d) 38 (C. C. A. 6); N. L. R. B. v. Gulf Public Service Co., 116 F. (2d) 852 (C. C. A. 5).

Nor is Congressional exercise of the commerce power barred with respect to a particular business enterprise because of its activities in or affecting interstate commerce constitute but a small percentage of its total activities. Thus in Mabee v. White Plains Pub. Co., 327 U. S. 178, the Court held within the Fair Labor Standards Act a publisher of a daily newspaper only ½ of 1% of whose circulation (about 45 daily copies of the paper out of a total of 10,000) was regularly out-of-state. So here: The complaint, liberally construed, imports that the radio and television contracts yield defendants a substantial, not a trifling, sum. On that basis, I think the defendants and the ball-players are engaged in interstate commerce, regardless of whether or not that sum is but a small percentage of defendants' total earnings.

It seems to me, therefore, that Congress had the Constitutional power to include defendants' interstate business in the Sherman Act. I turn now to the question whether Congress there exercised that power.

[Full Use of Constitutional Powers]

4. The Supreme Court has said that (with an exception as to labor unions not relevant here) Congress in the Sherman Act intended to use all the constitutional power conferred on it by the commerce clause. The Court (per Sutherland, J.) so stated for the first time in Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U. S. 427, 435. The Court (per Stone, J.) repeated that statement in Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U. S. 460, 496, adding (at p. 498) that the Sherman Act is aimed at restraints "comparable to restraints deemed illegal at common law, although accomplished by means other than contract and which, for constitutional reasons, are confined to transactions in or which affect interstate commerce." 310 U. S. 469, 498. This idea was repeated in United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, 324 U. S. 294, 297: "And with reference to commercial trade restraints such as these, Congress in passing the Sherman Act, left no area of its Constitutional power unoccupied; it 'exercised all the power it possessed.'"

The most striking statement, however, is in the Southeastern case, 322 U. S. 533, where the argument was pressed that although the Constitutional commerce power empowered it to do so, Congress in the Sherman Act did not intend to cover insurance. The Court found that "all the acceptable evidence points the other way. That Congress wanted to go to the utmost extent of its Constitutional power in restraining trust and monopoly agreements such as the indictment here charges admits of little, if any, doubt. The purpose was to use that power to make of ours, so far as Congress could under our dual system, a competitive business economy."

The comprehensive sweep of the Sherman Act is also shown by the Supreme Court's reliance, in several Sherman Act cases, upon cases construing the National Labor Relations Act and other statutes. For instance, in the Associated Press case, 326 U. S. 1, 14, the Court disposed, in one sentence, of the argument that that enterprise was not subject to the Sherman Act: "We need not again pass upon the contention that trade in news carried on among the states is not interstate commerce, Associated Press v. Labor Board, 301 U. S. 103." Justice Frankfurter, concurring, agreed, saying (p. 27): "Since the Associated Press is an enterprise engaged in interstate commerce, Associated Press v. Labor Board, supra, these plainly are agreements in restraint of that commerce."

In the more recent case of Mandeville Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U. S. 219, 236, the Court discussed the scope of the Sherman Act and of the Constitutional commerce power as if they were identical, citing United States v. Darby, 312 U. S.

100 (a Fair Labor Standards Act case), Consolidated Edison Co. v. Labor Board, 305 U. S. 197 (a National Labor Relations Act case), and United States v. Walsh, 331 U. S. 432 (a Food and Drug Act case). Moreover, the discussion in the Mandeville opinion of the effect of the Shreveport Rate Cases, 234 U. S. 342, goes to show that, as the Court has come to construe the commerce clause more widely in connection with the coverage of other statutes, such as the Interstate Commerce Act, it has equivalently interpreted the Sherman Act's coverage.[8] And certainly the Mandeville opinion demonstrates that the Sherman Act covers activities wholly within a state but which affect commerce.

5. In the light of our previous discussion, and having particularly in mind Mabee v. White Plains Pub. Co., 327 U. S. 178, I think we must, for purposes of deciding the applicability of the Sherman Act, consider this case as if the only audiences for whom the games are played consist of those persons who, in other states, see, hear, or hear about, the games via television and radio. The question here is, then, I think, the same as that which we would face if a similar alleged monopoly related to the production of stage-plays in radio and television studios. I believe the producers of such plays would clearly come within the Fair Labor Standards Act.[8a] If so, they would be within the Sherman Act. And I would so hold concerning the defendants, if their conduct is as plaintiff describes it.

As the playing of the games is essential both to defendants' interstate and intrastate activities, the players' contracts relate to both. But that, as a consequence, necessary relief with respect to the interstate activities will thus unavoidably affect those which are intrastate does not preclude the granting of such relief.[9] Nor, I venture to repeat, do I think such relief is dependent upon a showing that the illegally monopolized interstate activities, if more than trifling, represent a substantial proportion of defendants' total activities.[9a] See Mabee v. White Plains Pub. Co., 327 U. S. 178; cf. Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U. S. 469, 485; United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, 225. In United States v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 224 note 59, the Court said that "the amount of interstate * * * trade is not material," citing with approval Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38; Steers v. United States, 192 F. 1, 5 (C. C. A. 6); Patterson v. United States, 222 F. 599, 618-619 (C. C. A. 6). I consider adequate the allegations concerning damages.[10]

---

[8] The Mandeville opinion explains that, in United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, the Court had decided that manufacturing was not commerce; the Sherman Act thereby became a "dead letter," and was not finally reborn until 1911 "with the decisions in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, and United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106"; it was the doctrine of the Shreveport Rate Cases, 234 U. S. 342 (i.e., that activities within a state may be federally regulated if they affect interstate commerce) as extended by later decisions, which made it no longer "necessary to search for some sharp point or line where interstate commerce ends and intrastate commerce begins. * * *" As late as the 1930's (the Court continued in the Mandeville opinion) the old ideas persisted in specific applications, but a growing number of decisions had rejected the idea that manufacturing was purely local simply because that phase of a combination restraining trade was carried on within a single state. It "is the effect upon that commerce, not the moment when its cause arises, which the doctrine [of the Shreveport cases] was fashioned to reach."

[8a] Cf., as to the National Labor Relations Act, Marcus Loew Booking Agency, Inc., 3 N. L. R. B. 380; Los Angeles Broadcasting Co., 4 N. L. R. B. 443; KMOX Broadcasting Station, 10 N. L. R. B. 479; Louis G. Baltimore, 57 N. L. R. B. 1611; Miami Valley Broadcasting Corp., 70 N. L. R. B. 1015.

In Fisher's Blend Station v. Tax Commission, 297 U. S. 650, 655, the Court said: "By its very nature broadcasting transcends state lines and is national in its scope and importance—characteristics which bring it within the purpose and protection, and subject it to the control, of the commerce clause."

[9] Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 399; Shreveport Rate Cases, 234 U. S. 342; United States v. New York Central R. Co., 272 U. S. 457; Currin v. Wallace, 306 U. S. 1; Mandeville Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U. S. 219, 236; United States v. Wrightwood Dairy Co., 315 U. S. 110, 119; Santa Cruz Fruit Packing Co. v. Labor Board, 303 U. S. 453, 466; United States v. Darby, 300 U. S. 100, 118-123; Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U. S. 111, 122-124.

[9a] If proportions were important, the following would be pertinent: Presumably with little increased expense to the defendants, earnings from the radio and television contracts are something added to what defendants theretofore earned net, so that these added earnings are "velvet" which therefore may (in the Sherman Act context) be regarded as contributing entirely, or almost entirely, to defendants' net profits. Accordingly, in determining proportions, the radio and television net profits should be compared with defendants' other net, not their gross, profits.

[10] Package Closure Corp. v. Sealright, 141 F. (2d) 972 (C. C. A. 2); Bigelow v. RKO Pictures, 327 U. S. 251.

6. Defendants suggest that "organized baseball," which supplies millions of Americans with desirable diversion, cannot exist without the "reserve clause." Whether that is true, no court can predict. In any event, the answer is that the public's pleasure does not authorize the courts to condone illegality, and that no court should strive ingeniously to legalize a private (even if benevolent) dictatorship.

I think we should reverse and remand.

[¶ 62,369] Charles J. Riedley, trading and doing business as Riedley Motor Company v. Hudson Motor Car Company and Koster Swope Motors, Incorporated.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky. Civil Action No. 1482. February 7, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Action for Treble Damages—Termination of Dealership Agreement—Private Injury.—By terminating an agency contract with a dealer, an automobile manufacturer does not violate the antitrust laws. A car dealer's action for treble damages for injury received by the defendant's termination of their dealership agreement was dismissed since the allegation of private wrong, without any injury to the public, was insufficient to bring the matter within the Sherman Act, whose main purpose is to protect the public and only incidentally to give a private right of action.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.125.

For plaintiff: Fred J. Karem, Karem & Karem.

For defendant Koster-Swope Motors Inc.: Stuart E. Lampe.

For defendant Hudson Motor Car Company: Chas. I. Dawson.

Memorandum

Shelbourne, R. M., District Judge: The plaintiff, Chas. J. Riedley, a resident of Kentucky, is engaged in business under the trade name of Riedley Motor Company.

He filed his complaint in this action May 5, 1948. The first count alleges that the defendants, Hudson Motor Car Company a Michigan corporation, and Koster-Swope Motors Inc., a Kentucky corporation, conspired to restrain and monopolize Interstate Commerce by agreeing to refuse renewal of a dealership contract in motor cars and accessories, which the plaintiff had with the defendant Hudson Motor Car Company.

The second count of the complaint alleged that the defendants, Hudson Motor Car Company and Koster-Swope Motors failed and refused to renew a dealership contract with him and by such failure and refusal breached an alleged implied contract of renewal.

As damages on account of the claims set forth in count 1, plaintiff claimed damage in the sum of $153,850., alleged to have been suffered in the following respect:

Loss on real estate, buildings and equipment	$25,000.00
Loss of revenue from real estate taken over for improvement of buildings	3,600.00
Cost of Hudson sign and damage to building	250.00
Loss of prospective profits reasonably anticipated	75,000.00
Loss of good will and value as going concern	50,000.00
Total	$153,850.00

Under the provisions of Section 15, Title 15 U. S. C. A. plaintiff sought treble this amount, with interest and attorneys fees.

As his jurisdictional ground, he alleged that his action was brought under Section 15, Title 15 U. S. C. A., by reason of wrongful acts done by the defendants in violation of Section 1 of that title and section.

Under the second count of the complaint, he claims additional damages in the sum of $100,000.00 and seeks recovery of that amount, alleging that for many years prior to July 31, 1947, he was a dealer in new Hudson automobiles and accessories and that in the year 1946, defendants required plaintiff, in order to continue as a Hudson dealer, to enlarge his show rooms, parts department, service department and to obtain new equipment and otherwise to improve and increase his facilities sufficient to qualify him a "Hudson Master Dealership".

He states that he was "led to understand" by the defendants that if such improvements were made, his contract as a Hudson dealer would be renewed, but that defendants failed and refused to so renew said contract, which, by its terms, expired on the 31st day of July, 1947, resulting in the damage complained of.

Service of process was had upon the Hudson Motor Car Company by the deputy marshal in the Eastern District of Michigan. Kostor-Swope Motors was served by the marshal within this District.

Defendants have filed their separate answers, in which there is included motions to dismiss count 1 because—

> 1. The restraint of trade attempted to be alleged does not constitute such restraint as is prohibited or condemned by the Sherman Act.
>
> 2. Each had the full right to select the dealers whom it wished to represent it.
>
> 3. The clause in the contract of dealership provided for its termination on July 1, 1947, and contained no provisions giving either party a right of renewal.
>
> 4. The facts alleged in count 1 (conceded to be true for the purpose of consideration of the motion) show only a private wrong to plaintiff and no restriction of any public right in trade or commerce and therefore no violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

With respect to Count 2, the defendants contend that this Court has no jurisdiction, because there is lacking diversity of citizenship between the plaintiff and both defendants, in that plaintiff and defendant Koster-Swope Motors are each residents of the State of Kentucky.

It is apparent that the cause of action upon which plaintiff relies in count 1 sounds in tort and that contained in count 2, for the alleged breach of an implied contract to renew a contract, is ex contractu.

[Allegation of Private Injury Insufficient]

It will be observed that the plaintiff makes no allegation that the termination of his dealership contract will affect the public in the ability to purchase Hudson automobiles and accessories. No claim is made that the elimination of plaintiff as a dealer will result in lessening the supply of Hudson automobiles, parts and accessories through their dealerships or to the market generally.

The contention is that the threat to cancel, and the consummation of the threatened termination, affect only the plaintiff.

Plaintiff's counsel, in his brief, makes the contention that the restraint of interstate commerce resulted solely and only in the cancellation of plaintiff's contract.

Such allegations do not constitute a valid claim under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

In the case of United States v. Colgate & Company, 250 U. S. 300, the Court said—

> "In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the act does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal."

In the case of A. B. Aboual et al. v. J. D. and A. B. Spreckles Company, 26 Fed. Supp. 831 (D. C. Cal.), the Court said—

> "The main purpose of the Anti-Trust Act was to provide protection for the public from monopolies and restraint of trade; and the individual right of action was incidental and subordinate. A complaint to state a cause of action must show that only damages sustained by the individual plaintiff, but even more importantly a violation of public rights prohibited by the Act. Therefore, it is not sufficient that the declaration shows a good cause of action at common law, for the action is wholly statutory." (Italics supplied).

The main purpose, therefore, of the Anti-Trust Act is to protect the public from monopolies and restraint of trade and the right accruing to an individual, by reason of such monopoly affecting the public, is incidental. Glen Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., 72 F. (2d) 885 (CCA 4); Weinberg v. Sinclair Refining Company, 48 Fed. Supp. 203 (D. C. N. Y.) 48 Fed. Supp. 203; Maltz v. Sax, 134 F. (2d) 4.

In Arthur v. Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation, 26 Fed. Supp. 824 (D. C. Md), the plaintiff charged the defendant with conspiracy to refuse continuing to sell the plaintiff cheese. The petition was dismissed for the reason that the Sherman and Clayton Acts were held to be for the public benefit and not primarily to redress personal wrongs.

Of that situation that Court said—

"Taken as a whole the declaration discloses only what seems to be a private controversy rather than one affecting the public as such. It is well established that the principal purpose of enacting the Anti-Trust Laws, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1 et seq., was to protect the public; and the right of an individual to sue for personal damages sustained is incidental and subordinate. * * * private suits are maintainable only when the defendant's conduct prejudicially affects the public generally as distinct from purely personal or private damage."

The case of Shotkin v. General Electric Company (CCA 10), decided December 2, 1948, 17 Law Week p. 2257, — F. (2d) —, is relied upon by defendants and is in point. The complaint, as amended in that case, was held to be fatally infirm and was dismissed, because there was no allegation that the defendants combined and conspired to refrain from competing with each other in the manufacture, sale and distribution of electric lamps, fixtures, and apparatuses and electrical goods, and did not allege the defendants conspired to raise prices, divide trade territory or furnish to the public inferior quality merchandise.

The Court said—

"While it was alleged that the refusal to furnish merchandise to plaintiff for sale in connection with the conduct of his business was in furtherance of the conspiracy and that the public was injured, it was not charged generally or specifically that as the result of that refusal the prices of such merchandise were enhanced or that the volume thereof in the competitive markets were diminished. In other words, the complaint failed to allege facts from which it could be determined as a matter of law that a combination or conspiracy was entered into which brought about an increase in prices to the consuming public, a diminution in the volume of merchandise in the competitive markets, a deterioration in the quality of the merchandise available in the channels of commerce, or any other like evil consequence in the free flow of interstate commerce."

[Right To Terminate Agency]

With respect to the right of the defendants to select the dealers by whom they wished to be represented in their sales efforts, there can be little doubt that the defendants had the right to terminate the contract of agency. Similar contracts have been upheld by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky and the right of the manufacturer to terminate its contract of dealership has been upheld in contracts very similar to that here involved. See Ford Motor Company v. Alexander Motor Company, 223 Ky. 16; Business Mens Assurance Company v. Eads, 290 Ky. 553.

In the case of Bushwick-Decatur Motors v. Ford Motor Company, 116 F. (2d) 675, the Court said—

"* * * generally speaking, the situation arises from the strong bargaining position which economic factors give the great automobile manufacturing companies; the dealers are not misled or imposed upon, but accept as nonetheless advantageous an agreement in form bilateral, in fact, one-sided. To attempt to redress this balance by judicial action without legislative authority appears to us a doubtful policy."

It therefore appears, from the allegations and from statements of counsel for plaintiff in the argument, that the alleged wrong complained of in this action is a private wrong to plaintiff, and therefore not one within the prohibition of the actions authorized by Section — Title 15 U. S. C. A.

It is therefore concluded and held that the allegations of Count 1 of plaintiff's complaint are not sufficient to show or establish a claim or cause of action upon which the relief sought, or any relief, could be granted.

[Action ex Contractu]

This leaves for consideration Count 2 of the complaint—that is the action ex contractu—arising out of the alleged breach of the implied contract to renew the contract of dealership.

The plaintiff's residence and citizenship in Kentucky and the citizenship of the defendant Koster-Swope Motors, Inc., being in Kentucky, eliminate one of the essentials necessarily present to confer jurisdiction under Title 28, Section 41 (1) in the Revised Judicial Code, Title 28, section 1332.

Counsel for plaintiff recognizes this absence of diversity and contends that under the doctrine of Hurn v. Ousler, 289 U. S. 232, the Court has jurisdiction, his contention being that while a Federal Court may not assume jurisdiction of a separate and distinct non-Federal cause of action because it is joined in the same complaint with the Federal cause of action, yet, where two distinct grounds in support of a single cause of action are alleged, only one of which presents a Federal question, and the Federal question is not plainly wanting in substance, the Federal Court even though the Federal ground be not established, may nevertheless retain and dispose of the case on the non-Federal ground.

The Court of Appeals of the Sixth Circuit considered the case of Hurn v. Ousler, as late as December 1, 1948, in the case of The French Renovating Company v. The Ray Renovating Company and Albert B. Beitman, involving an analogous jurisdictional question, arising out of claims on patent infringement.

Chief Judge Hicks, writing for the Court said—

> "The District Court has jurisdiction over suits for patent and copyright infringement, as provided in Title 28 USC, Ch. 2, Sec. 41, par. (7), but as an original proposition it has no jurisdiction over suits for breach of contract or breach of trust where there is, as here, a lack of diversity of citizenship and of an allegation that the value of the relief sought is in excess of $3000.00, exclusive of interest and costs. Title 28 USC Ch. 2, Sec. 41, Par. (1). Such units are non-Federal in their nature and the District Court does not acquire jurisdiction over them merely because they are joined in the complaint with other causes of action which are within its jurisdiction. Hurn v. Ousler, 289 U. S. 238, 248.
>
> "Before the District Court in such a case may accept jurisdiction of such non-federal causes of action, it must appear that both federal and non-federal causes rest upon substantially identical facts. Hurn v. Ousler, supra, (p. 246). * * * Plaintiff's non-federal claims are entirely independent of its federal claims and it does not appear with any appreciable degree of certainty that the facts necessary to support them would also support the federal claims." (Italics added.)

See also Armstrong Paint & Varnish Work v. New Enamel Corporation, 305 U. S. 315; General Furniture Company v. Karper, 238 U. S. 254.

The fallacy in the contention of counsel for plaintiff is that the two distinct causes of action sued on in this action are not stated in support of a single cause of action, but in Count 1, he seeks to recover treble the sum of $153,850.00 for damages carefully itemized in the complaint and in Count 2, the sum of $100,000.00 damages to his business, and monies expended and none of his items of damage in Count 2 are included in the itemization of damages in Count 1.

[Complaint Dismissed]

It is therefore the opinion of the Court that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, and that the defendant's motion to dismiss Count 1 of the complaint should be sustained, because the the facts stated, fairly considered, are not sufficient to constitute a cause of action or authorize any of the relief sought in the petition and that the Court lacks jurisdiction, because of the absence of diversity of citizenship between plaintiff and the defendant Koster-Swope Motors, Inc., as to Count 2, and that accordingly plaintiff's complaint should be dismissed.

An order providing for such dismissal will be tendered by counsel for defendant, on notice.

[¶ 62,370] Sun Cosmetic Shoppe, Inc., v. Elizabeth Arden Sales Corporation; Mirror Cosmetic Shoppe, Inc., v. Elizabeth Arden Sales Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Nos. 47-258, 47-259. February 9, 1949.

Robinson-Patman Act

Treble Damages Action—Intrastate Sales by Company Engaged in Interstate Activity. —In an action for treble damages taken by cosmetic retailers against a cosmetic manufacturer for alleged price discrimination when the latter furnished the services of demonstrators to the plaintiffs' competitors but not to the plaintiffs, the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground of lack of jurisdiction was allowed. All the transactions between the plaintiffs and the defendant were in intrastate commerce only. The cosmetics sold to the plaintiffs were manufactured, sold, and delivered in the same state. The plaintiffs' contention that the transactions were part of the overall picture of interstate commerce engaged in by the defendant was not sustained. A manufacturer may have both interstate and intrastate sales; it may violate the law with respect to one and not with respect to the other.

See the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2215.202, 2216.10.

For plaintiffs: Morris Siegel.

For defendant: Townley, Updike & Carter (J. Howard Carter and John S. Bainbridge, of Counsel).

[Nature of Motion]

COXE, D. J.: These are motions by the defendant, prior to answer, for summary judgment dismissing both of the above actions on the ground that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter. The motions are based upon the amended complaints and supporting affidavits, and are opposed by affidavits of the presidents of the plaintiffs. The papers in the two cases are identical, except for the names of the plaintiffs. The motions were argued together, and will be disposed of in one opinion.

[Nature of Suit]

Plaintiffs seek to recover treble damages under the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. A., §§ 13, 15) because of alleged price discrimination by defendant in sales of its cosmetics to plaintiffs and to their competitors. The only specific discrimination alleged is that defendant furnished to some, but not to all, of plaintiffs' competitors, and not to plaintiffs, "services and facilities of special personnel known and described in the cosmetic and toilet goods preparations industry and trade as "demonstrators' * * * used for the purpose of fostering and pushing the sale of the products distributed by this defendant".

[Facts]

Plaintiffs have conducted for a number of years retail cosmetic establishments in the City of New York. They allege that many of their customers reside in the States of New York, New Jersey and other States of the United States; that defendant sold its cosmetics to competitors of plaintiffs, also located in the States of New York, New Jersey and other States of the United States; that defendant was engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of cosmetic and toilet goods preparations; and that its sales were "in the course of commerce".

It appears from the affidavit of defendant's vice-president, without contradiction, that, until January 1, 1948, all the cosmetics were manufactured, packed in containers and made ready for sale by Elizabeth Arden Inc., at its plant in Long Island City, N. Y. (Long Island City is a part of the City of New York), which sold them only to defendant; that on January 1, 1948 defendant leased the plant and thereafter manufactured, packed and made ready for sale all the cosmetics at the same plant; that defendant is a Delaware corporation, with its offices and principal place of business in the City of New York; that all the sales and deliveries to plaintiffs were made by defendant in the City of New York upon receipt, also in the City of New York, of orders from them, and were filled from its stocks in Long Island City, and that defendant never made any sales to wholesalers. Defendant admits that some of the raw materials used in the manufacture of the cosmetics were acquired from sources outside the State of New York. Defendant does not deny that it furnished "demonstrators" to plaintiffs' competitors and did not furnish them to plaintiffs.

[Discrimination]

It is clear that, if these transactions with plaintiffs were in interstate commerce, defendant has discriminated against plaintiffs within the meaning of Sections 13(d) and (e) of the Act. These Sections provide that

> "(d) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the * * * sale or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities."

> "(e) It shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale * * * by contracting to furnish or furnishing * * * any services or facilities connected with the * * * sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms."

The amended complaints do not indicate which of these two Sections plaintiffs claim defendant has violated. In Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp. v. Gus Blass Co., 8 Cir., 150 F. (2d) 988, it was held, under a similar state of facts, that both Sections might be considered as having been violated. It was also held that the Robinson-Patman Act itself applies only to those engaged in interstate commerce.

[Intrastate Sales]

In Lewis v. Shell Oil Co., D. C., N. D., Ill., 50 F. Supp. 547, 549, it was held that "In an action brought under the Robinson-Patman Act it is necessary to allege and prove that the transactions complained of are actually in interstate commerce", and not merely that they only affect interstate commerce. Clearly, all the transactions between plaintiffs and defendant were in intrastate commerce only. The fact that some of the ingredients used in the manufacture of the cosmetics came from out of the State is of no significance. The cosmetics sold to plaintiffs were manufactured here, were sold here, and were delivered here. Plaintiffs' contention that the transactions were part of the overall picture of interstate commerce engaged in by the defendant cannot be sustained. A manufacturer may have both interstate and intrastate sales; it may violate the law with respect to one and not with respect to the other.

The motions of the defendant for summary judgment in both cases are granted.

[¶ 62,371] Opinion of the Attorney General of Minnesota.

No. 510-B-9, addressed to John F. Bonner, City Attorney, Minneapolis, by J. A. A. Burnquist, Attorney General. February 15, 1949.

Minnesota Unfair Trade Practices Act

Drawing Lucky Ticket—No Intent to Injure—No Violation Disclosed.—When a proprietor displays in his place of business a container holding tickets for the purpose of awarding $1.00 to anyone entering his premises who draws a lucky ticket therefrom, he does not violate Section 325.04 of the Minnesota Unfair Trade Practices Act, if such practice is carried on without any intent of injuring competitors or destroying competition.

See the Minnesota Unfair Practices Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8428.30.

[Question]

You submit the question as to whether the trade practice herein outlined would be a violation of the laws prohibiting gambling, lottery, or gift enterprises.

[Facts]

The proposed plan is described as follows:

"The proprietor of a place of business maintains in conspicuous display a jar or some other container in which are kept tickets.

"All persons entering the place of business are permitted, without any charge or consideration whatsoever and without being required to make any purchase, to draw a ticket from the jar or container. If the ticket ends in a '00', the holder of the ticket receives One Dollar."

[Opinion]

In accordance with the decision in the case of State v. Stern, 201 Minn. 139, 145, every scheme, to be construed as a lottery, must include three essential elements, namely: chance, reward, and consideration for the chance. As the plan in question does not require that a consideration be paid for the chance, and the proposed scheme does not appear to be a "gift enterprise" as defined in and prohibited by NSA 623.25 or "gambling" within the meaning of our anti-gambling statutes, I am of the opinion that, if the plan here considered is carried on as herein outlined and is not conducted with an intent of injuring competitors or destroying competition, as prohibited by MSA 325.04, the operation of such plan would not constitute a violation of any state law.

[¶ 62,372] Opinion of the Attorney General of Minnesota.

No. 417-E, addressed to James W. Clark, Commissioner, Department of Business Research and Development, by J. A. A. Burnquist, Attorney General, Charles E. Houston, Assistant Attorney General. February 4, 1949.

Minnesota Unfair Trade Practices Act

Selling at Less than Cost—When Permissible.—Selling below cost is permissible by virtue of Section 325.06 (4) of the Minnesota Unfair Trade Practices Act if done in good faith to meet the legal prices of a competitor selling the same commodity in the same locality.

See the Minnesota Unfair Practices Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8428.40.

In your letter of February 1, you state these

Facts:

"Creamery 'A' wholesales 'Brand A' milk to retailer 'X' at an invoice price which makes it possible for this retailer to retail milk for fifteen cents or more per quart and meet all provisions of Section 325.04.

"Creamery 'B' wholesales 'Brand B' milk to retailer 'Y'. This milk is the same in all respects to the milk wholesaled by Creamery 'A' with the exception of the brand name. Retailer 'Y' can meet all provisions of Section 325.04 if he retails 'Brand B' milk for sixteen cents per quart or more."

You ask the

Question:

"Does Section 325.06 (4) permit retailer 'Y', who is located in retailer 'X's' trade area, to meet the legal competition of retailer 'X' by retailing 'Brand B' milk at fifteen cents per quart?"

Opinion:

Your question calls for the application of M. S. A., Sec. 325.04.

This statute forbids a retailer or a wholesaler to sell goods in this state at less than the cost thereof to the vendor for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors or destroying competition. "Cost" is defined in Sec. 325.01, Subd. 5. Cost includes the cost of doing business. The cost of doing business is defined in Subd. 7.

Sec. 325.06 makes the provisions of Sec. 325.04 inapplicable to a sale in an endeavor made in good faith to meet the legal prices of a competitor selling the same commodity or goods in the same locality or trade area.

The facts here considered show that A sold milk to X in conformity with the provisions of Sec. 325.04. So the price involved in A's sale was legal. If B in an endeavor and good faith, to meet this legal price made by A, who is his competitor, sells the same quality of milk that A sells in the same community or trade area, it is my opinion that he does not violate Sec. 325.04.

[¶ 62,373] Empire State Camera Exchange Inc., v. Reynolds.

New York Supreme Court, New York County. Special Term, Part IV. 121 N. Y. L. J. 651, February 21, 1949.

New York State Fair Trade Act

Price Cutting Enjoined—Damaged Articles—Device to Avoid Law.—If an article becomes actually damaged it may be sold at less than list prices provided the customer knows that it is damaged and is being sold below list price and the discount is proportionate to the damage. Unless the article in fact has become damaged, the mere fact that it is out of its original package and in a show case and has been handled by prospective customers cannot be made the excuse for price cutting. A retailer is entitled to an order enjoining his competitor from selling cameras below prices established by fair trade agreements when the evidence establishes that the articles were not in fact damaged and the sale of such "demonstrator" articles is simply a ruse to cover indiscriminate price cutting.

See the New York State Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8640.40.

[Facts]

WALTER, C. G., J.: Plaintiff sells at retail in a store in the Empire State Building at No. 5 West Thirty-third street photographic equipment and supplies and similar articles which, or the labels of which, bear the trade mark, brand or name of the manufacturer thereof, and which are in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class manufactured by others. The manufacturers of these articles have established so-called fair trade agreements which fix the prices at which such articles are to be retailed.

Defendant sells at retail in a store at No. 251 East Thirty-fourth street photographic equipment and supplies and similar articles, some of which are manufactured by the manufacturers who manufacture the articles sold by plaintiff.

Plaintiff claims that in the past few months defendant has been and is now, willfully and knowingly, advertising, offering for sale and selling such articles at less than the prices stipulated in the so-called fair trade agreements as established by the manufacturers, and it brings this action to enjoin defendant from continuing such price-cutting.

Such agreements are specifically authorized, and the statute specifically enacts that such price-cutting is unfair competition and actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby (General Business Law, sections 369-a to 369-e).

[Right of Action]

I think it obvious that plaintiff, a dealer bound by fair trade agreements and subjected to competition by defendant, is a person damaged so as to give it a right to maintain the suit, and the evidence abundantly establishes that defendant has been and is, willfully and knowingly, advertising, offering for sale and selling some of such articles at less than the prices so stipulated in the contracts.

[Defense]

The one question in the case, therefore, is whether defendant's sales fall within the provision in subdivision 2 (b) of section 369-a of the General Business Law that such commodities may be resold without reference to such agreement when the goods "are damaged or deteriorated in quality and notice is given to the public thereof."

Defendant's claim in that regard is that at least some of the articles (principally cameras) which he sold at a discount were so sold because they were "store demonstrators" and were so designated on the sales slip given to the buyer at the time of the sale, and, in some instances, had been, in fact, rented out.

[Requisites for Legal Price Cutting]

I entertain no doubt that even under such fair trade agreements a retailer bound thereby may and should advise his customer of any actual damage or deterioration in any particular article which is the subject of the sale, and that he may sell below the list price any particular article which is, in fact, damaged or deteriorated, provided he makes known to the customer the fact of the damage or deterioration and the fact that he is selling below the list price because of such damage or deterioration, and provided that the discount below the list price is fairly proportioned to the nature and extent of the damage or deterioration.

[Indiscriminate Discounts]

The trouble with defendant's case is that the evidence convinces me that that is not what defendant did. He offered discounts freely on any camera, and then, when he became suspicious that he was "being shopped" by some fair trade detective, he adopted the "store demonstrator" idea as a device to cover himself.

[Actual Damage Required]

The notion that any and every camera becomes a "store demonstrator" and salable at less than list price merely because it has been taken out of its original package and placed in a show case or show window and handled by prospective customers who did not buy it, is wholly untenable and nothing more than a ruse to defeat the law. Exhibiting the camera in the show case or show window, and even the handling of it by prospective customers, may or may not damage or deteriorate it. If and when a particular article becomes actually damaged or deteriorated, it may, I repeat, be sold at less than list price, provided the fact of the damage or deterioration and the fact that it is being sold below list price because of such damage or deterioration are made known to the customer, and provided the discount below list price is fairly proportioned to the nature and extent of the damage or deterioration. But unless the article in fact has become damaged or deteriorated, the mere fact that it is out of its original package and in a show case or show window and has been handled by prospective customers cannot be made the excuse for price-cutting.

[Fiction of the Store Demonstrator]

I find that in this case the fiction of "store demonstrators" has been resorted to as just such an excuse, and I accordingly conclude that plaintiff is entitled to judgment enjoining defendant as prayed for in the complaint, with costs, and I direct the entry of judgment accordingly.

The foregoing constitutes the decision required by the Civil Practice Act, and judgment is to be entered thereon.

[¶ 62,374] Western Association of Lumbermen & Loggers, a corporation and George E. Owen, v. Julius A. Krug, as Secretary of the Department of the Interior of the United States; C. Girard Davidson, Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior of the United States; Walter H. Horning, Regional Administrator of the Bureau of Land Management, Region I of the Department of the Interior of the United States; Travis M. Tyrrell, Chief Forester, Oregon and California Revested Lands Administration, General Land Office of the Department of the Interior of the United States, and Fischer Lumber Company, a corporation.

In the United States District Court for the District of Oregon. Civil No. 4007. August 16, 1948. Filed August 18, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Logging Industry—Monopolistic Terms of Contract—Action Dismissed.—An action brought under the Declaratory Judgment Act seeking to enjoin a government administrator and his assistants from entering into a contract on grounds of its monopolistic terms and repugnancy to the antitrust laws is dismissed because the Declaratory Judgment Act does not apply to executory contracts.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.689.

For plaintiff: Frank B. Reid, Ray G. Brown.

For defendant Fischer Lumber Company: Charles P. Duffy, Carl E. Davidson. For defendants Krug, Davidson, Horning, Tyrrell: Floyd D. Hamilton, Assistant U. S. attorney.

Opinion

By BIGGS, Circuit Judge:* The individual plaintiff, George E. Owen, the owner of forest lands located within the Mohawk River Sustained-Yield Forest Unit, part of the revested Oregon and California River and reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands situated in the State of Oregon,[1] and the owner of a saw mill at Eugene, Oregon, and the corporate plaintiff, Western Association of Lumbermen and Loggers, a voluntary, non-profit corporation, seek by the civil action at bar to obtain a declaratory judgment that a proposed contract which may be entered into by the United States and the defendant, Fischer Lumber Company, is illegal and in derogation of the individual plaintiff's rights. By their amended complaint the plaintiffs seek to enjoin the defendants, Julius A. Krug, as Secretary of the Department of the Interior of the United States and officers of the Department of the Interior and of the Bureau of Land Management of that Department, and Fischer Lumber Company from entering into a cooperative marketing agreement for the management of the Mohawk River Sustained-Yield Forest Unit whereby for a long period of time, perhaps for one hundred years, Fischer Lumber Company will acquire the exclusive right, allegedly without competitive bidding, to purchase and harvest all timber and forest products from the Unit.

The plaintiffs allege that the proposed contract by its terms is monopolistic, contrary to the anti-trust laws of the United States, is against public policy and is not in accord with but is contrary to the intent of Congress as exemplified by the Acts of Congress referred in in the footnote,[2] save only the Act of August 28, 1937, 50 Stat. 874, referred to inmmediately hereinafter, and that if the contract be executed the individual plaintiff will be deprived of his livelihood and the employees at his saw mill will be deprived of their means of support. The plaintiffs assert also that the Act of August 28, 1937, pursuant to which it is alleged the Secretary of the Department of the Interior will enter into the proposed contract, is unconstitutional for various reasons which need not be detailed in this opinion. The corporate plaintiff states that one of its primary purposes is to oppose monopolies in the sale of public timber.

An answer was filed by Fischer Lumber Company. This alleges as a first defense that the amended complaint fails to state a claim against the Lumber Company on which relief can be granted. The defendants Krug, Davidson, Horning and Tyrrell filed a motion to dismiss the amended complaint as to them for various reasons; only the last of which (5) need be mentioned. The fifth ground for dismissal is that the action "is prematurely brought since the plaintiffs have not exhausted their administrative remedies and no justiciable controversy has been presented for determination."[3]

The plaintiffs then filed a motion for an interlocutory or preliminary injunction to restrain the defendants from entering into the proposed marketing agreement until the final determination of the issues raised in the instant proceeding. If the questions presented by the amended complaint be substantial, the disposition of the motion would require the convening of a three-judge court pursuant to Section 3 of the Act of August 24, 1937, 50 Stat. 752, U. S. C. Title 28, Section 380a, since the constitutionality of stat-

* The present writer, a Circuit Judge of the Third Judicial Circuit, was designated to the Ninth Circuit by order of Mr. Chief Justice Vinson and subsequently designated to the District Court of the United States for the District of Oregon by Senior United States Circuit Judge Garrecht. See U. S. C. Title 28, §§ 17, 18, 19, 21, 22 and 23.

[1] See the Act of August 28, 1937, 50 Stat. 874 and, by way of general information, Oregon & Cal. R. R. Co. v. United States, 243 U. S. 549.

[2] See the Act of July 25, 1866, c. 242, 14 Stat. 239; the Act of March 3, 1869, c. 150, 15 Stat. 340; the Act of April 10, 1869, c. 27, 16 Stat. 47; the Act of February 26, 1919, c. 47, 40 Stat. 1179; the Act of July 13, 1926, c. 897, 44 Stat. 915; and the Act of August 28, 1937, c. 876, 50 Stat. 874.

See also the Regulations of the Department of the Interior pertaining to the sale of timber from the lands here involved. 43 CFR 115.25 et seq., and in particular §§ 115.26 to 115.34.

See also CFR. Cum. Supp., § 115.36 et seq., and in particular §§ 115.94 to 115.113, regulations dealing with the exchange of revested and reconveyed lands, and 43 CFR, 1945 Supp., 115.2 et seq., and in particular § 115.10, the section last cited relating to cooperative sustained-yield agreements.

[3] Secretary Krug and Assistant Secretary Davidson further moved the court for an order dismissing the action as to them on the ground that they are residents of the District of Columbia and the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States in actions in personam is limited to the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant. In the view that we take of the case it is unnecessary to discuss or dispose of this motion.

utes of the United States is attempted to be put in issue. No order pursuant to the provisions of the section last cited has been entered by the Senior United States Circuit Judge of the Ninth Circuit (or by any presiding circuit judge thereof) designating two other Judges to hear the application for an interlocutory or preliminary injunction with the Judge to whom it was presented.[4] It is fundamental that the statutory procedure for the intervention of a three-judge court under Section 380a of Title 28 should not be invoked unless a substantial constitutional question is involved. Jameson & Co. v. Morgenthau, 307 U. S. 171, 172. Cf. the analogy presented where the challenge to the constitutionality of a State statute under Section 266 of the Judicial Code, U. S. C. Title 28, § 380 is deemed to be unsubstantial. See Ex parte Bransford, 310 U. S. 354; California Water Service Company v. Redding, 304 U. S. 252; and Ex parte Poresky, 290 U. S. 30. In the case at bar the substantial constitutional question or questions raised by the individual plaintiff cannot be reached by the court for the suit must be dismissed for the reasons set out hereinafter. It follows, therefore, that the convening of a statutory three-judge court to pass on the plaintiffs' application for an interlocutory injunction in the case at bar would be contrary to the principle of law enunciated by the Supreme Court in the Jameson decision. The instant case therefore may be disposed of by a single judge sitting in the District Court of the United States for the District of Oregon.

The plaintiffs[5] have not stated a cause of action under the Declaratory Judgments Act, Section 274d of the Judicial Code, U. S. C. Title 28, § 400. They seek to have a projected contract, one not yet entered into, declared illegal. The Declaratory Judgments Act will not reach so far. The Act, of course, may be employed to determine the rights and liabilities of the parties to an existing contract and to procure a judicial interpretation of the provisions thereof as applicable to the parties. See Dickinson v. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp., 9 Cir., 147 F. 2d 396; Chicago Pneumatic Tool Company v. Ziegler, 3 Cir., 151 F. 2d 784; Sanders v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 6 Cir., 144 F. 2d 485. But there must be a case or controversy and a justiciable issue must be presented. Assuming a most liberal interpretation of the circumstances at bar and bearing in mind the remedial character and the congressional purpose of the Declaratory Judgments Act no justiciable controversy can be deemed to be present here. Tennessee Coal Iron & R. Co. v. Muscoda Local No. 123, 5 Cir., 137 F. 2d 176, affirmed 321 U. S. 590.

Under the circumstances of the instant case, as the plaintiffs must admit, there can be no certainty that the proposed marketing agreement will ever be entered into by the United States or by Fischer Lumber Company. Final administrative action has not yet been taken and no contract or agreement has as yet been submitted to Fischer Lumber Company or, so far as appears, even finally drafted. Indeed, it is clear from the record that some of the provisions of a contemplated contract were still under consideration by the Department of the Interior on January 20, 1948, when the suit at bar was filed, for as late as January 21, 1948 an official hearing was held[6] at Eugene, Oregon, respecting a proposed marketing agreement for the Mohawk River Unit. Official administrative action respecting the substance of the contract had not been taken at the time of the commencement of the instant suit, or even at the time of the hearing before this court on May 7, 1948. We are unaware of any final action taken by the Department of the Interior to cause a contract to be executed. The term of the contract when finally submitted for execution may not be for a hundred years as the plaintiffs fear, but may be for a much shorter period. Perhaps, if the term is only three or five years, the objections voiced by the plaintiffs may disappear. The contract in its final form may contain provisions which the plaintiffs may deem to be entirely unobjectionable. The whole subject matter is one which remains conjectural until some final and conclusive action is taken by the Department of the Interior.

Congress has seen fit to confide the management and conservation of the forest lands of the United States to the Department of the Interior. The disposition of forest products from the Mohawk River Unit lies peculiarly within the purview of the Department of the Interior which, as a matter of law, is charged with its administration and conservation. The plaintiffs propose that [4] The Honorable Claude McColloch, one of the Judges of the District Court of the United States for the District of Oregon.

[5] I will assume arguendo that the corporation plaintiff has locus standi.

[6] See 12 F. R. 8701.

this court should enjoin an administrative process not yet brought to fruition. Only when circumstances demonstrate that irreparable harm and injury will occur to an individual by reason of the application of an unconstitutional law or by the illegal application of a statute otherwise valid will a district court of the United States, sitting in equity, restrain an executing agency of the United States acting within the scope of apparent authority. This principle was enunciated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Natural Gas Co. v. Slattery, 302 U. S. 300, 311 and is applicable here. The possibility of irreparable harm and injury occurring to the plaintiffs in the case at bar is presently remote. If and when a marketing agreement relating to this or other forest lands of the United States within the State of Oregon, which the plaintiffs conceive to be illegal and of such a character that it will endanger their interest, is actually executed by the United States and a lumber company, it will then be an appropriate time for the plaintiffs to move to enjoin its consummation and to test its legality.

The remaining questions raised by the parties do not require discussion.

The action must be dismissed. An order to such effect will be entered.

[¶ 62,375] United States v. The New York Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Inc., et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. No. 9221. October Term, 1948, January Session, 1949. February 24, 1949.

Appeal from the judgment of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Illinois.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Foods Products Business—Sufficiency of Evidence—Finding of Guilt Undisturbed.— The motion of a food chain store and its subsidiaries for acquittal, made at the conclusion of all the evidence, is held to have been rightly denied by the trial court on the ground that there was substantial evidence to support a finding of guilt. The appeal court holds that the evidence shows that the defendants abused the power flowing from a system completely integrated both vertically and horizontally; that they obtained an exclusively advantageous position by controlling the terms and conditions upon which the defendants and their competitors might do business: by threatening and pressuring the supplier with boycotts, blacklists and competition; by compelling payment of seller's brokerage fees that went into the coffers as a reduction in price; by employing such marketing techniques as "direct buying" and "net buying" and otherwise eliminating competitors. The individual appeal of the defendants' public relations counsel on the grounds of lack of evidence is dismissed. Although his knowledge of the conspiracy can not be proved directly, the court holds that it can fairly be inferred from his participation.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1220.192, 1660.592.

Affirming 67 Fed. Supp. 626, reported at 1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,491.

For plaintiff-appellee: Holmes Baldridge, Richard B. O'Donnell, Horace T. Flurry, Earl A. Jinkinson.

For defendants-appellants: William M. Acton, William J. Donovan, George S. Leisure, James V. Hayes, Ralstone R. Irvine, Otto C. Doering, Jr., Breck P. McAllister, Henry H. Bond, Roy W. McDonald, Michael J. O'Neill.

Before Major, Chief Judge, and Kerner and Minton, Circuit Judges.

[Grounds of Appeal]

Minton, Circuit Judge: This case comes to us on appeal from the Eastern District of Illinois. The defendant The New York Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Inc., herein called A&P, several of its subsidiary and affiliated companies, and certain officers of the A&P chain were found guilty by the District Court of a conspiracy to restrain and to monopolize trade, in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The defendants Carl Byoir, the public relations counsel of A&P, and Business Organization, Inc., a corporation through which Byoir conducted such public relations, were also found guilty. The last two defendants have filed separate briefs, while all the other defendants have filed a joint brief. The appeals, however, are separate appeals. We will consider first the appeal of all the defendants except Byoir and Business Organization, Inc.

The first question raised by these defendants is whether the alleged standard of proof employed by the District Court was erroneous. The District Court filed a memorandum opinion in the case, which is published in 67 Fed. Supp. 626-680. In that memorandum the District Court, after describing the general position of the Government, stated that the Government insisted that under the evidence it had proved beyond all reasonable doubt that the defendants were guilty as charged, "while defendants insist that proper analysis of the evidence can lead only to a conviction that they never at any time intended to violate the law"; that their studied policy was to obey the law, to meet competition fairly, and to sell their merchandise cheaply at a low profit. After stating the contentions of the parties, the District Court said: "It is obvious, therefore, that determination of which is the correct view, or a reconciliation of one with the other, involves the issue of whether the evidence points inevitably, beyond all reasonable doubt, to guilt, or whether it discloses such facts as are consistent only with innocence." This is the statement complained of by the defendants and which they assert shows that the District Court employed an erroneous standard of proof.

[Sufficiency of Evidence]

This contention of the defendants seems quite unsubstantial to us. As we understand Judge Lindley, he was not laying down any standard of proof. He was simply stating that the issue was whether the defendants were guilty or innocent as the parties had respectively contended. We do not think Judge Lindley was attempting to instruct himself as to the burden of proof in a criminal case and did so erroneously. Especially when we remember what we know judicially, that Judge Lindley is one of the ablest of trial judges, with more than twenty-five years of experience. He was not talking about standard of proof; he was talking about the contention or issue between the parties of guilt on the one hand, and the contention of innocence on the other. Undoubtedly, the attorneys for the defendants in the trial court were contending, as they did here, for the complete innocence of the defendants. When the statement complained of is considered in its context, we think it is not subject to the attack leveled at it by the defendants. Furthermore, even if we were to concede that Judge Lindley was discussing standards of proof, an examination of his entire memorandum clearly indicates that he applied the correct standard, namely, that the defendants could not be convicted unless their guilt was established by the evidence beyond all reasonable doubt.

The most important question presented in this case arises upon the motion of the defendants for acquittal, made at the conclusion of all the evidence. This raises the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of guilt made by the court, which tried the case without a jury. It needs the citation of no authority to support the proposition that if there is any substantial evidence to support the court's finding, it must be sustained. In this consideration, we look only to the evidence which is favorable to the court's finding and such reasonable inferences as may be drawn from the mere facts proved. Furthermore, we consider the case here as a whole and not piecemeal. If viewing the evidence as a whole there emerges an overall pattern of guilt as charged, the finding must be sustained.

This is a charge of a conspiracy to restrain trade and to monopolize. Some of the things done by the defendants, when examined and considered separately may be perfectly legal, but when used to promote or further a conspiracy to do an unlawful thing, that which when considered alone is lawful, when used to further the conspiracy becomes unlawful. American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 328 U. S. 781, 809, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575; Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, 14, 65 S. Ct. 1416, 89 L. Ed. 2013.

The issue is whether there is substantial evidence to show a conspiracy by the defendants to restrain and monopolize trade in commerce in food and food products by controlling the terms and conditions upon which the defendants and their competitors might do business and by oppressing competitors through the abuse of the defendants' mass buying and selling power. The Government insists that this case is not an attack upon A&P because of its size or integration and the power that may rightly go with such size and integration, but it is an attack upon the abuse of that power.

[Review of Evidence]

There is substantial evidence in this voluminous record to show the following. The A&P system is comprised of fourteen corporations, twelve of which were named defendants and three of which defendants were ultimately acquitted. The system is completely integrated, both horizontally and vertically. A&P is engaged in the food industry as buyer, manufacturer, processor, broker, and retailer. It operates 5,800 retail stores in forty states and the District of Columbia, and thirty-seven warehouses serve these stores.

The top holding company is the defendant A&P, a New York corporation. The George H. Hartford Trust, of which John A. and George L. Hartford are trustees, owns approximately ninety-nine per cent of A&P. This top holding company owns and controls the whole hierarchy, with very tight control in the hands of the Hartfords. The wholesale warehouses and retail operation of the A&P system are divided up into divisions, units, and stores. The division presidents control the policy of the system, but the Hartfords control the appointment of the division presidents. The Hartfords sit with them in the quarterly division policy making meetings and are a dominating influence at these meetings. On the whole, it is a well disciplined organization, from top to bottom. Ultimate control of buying, with unimportant exceptions, is centralized in headquarters of A&P. In this way, A&P controls the buying policy for the entire system and hence the purchase price of its merchandise. This centralized control also gives A&P control of such things as advertising allowances and label and bag allowances, which are related to the buying.

The buying policy of A&P was to so use its power as to get a lower price on its merchandise than that obtained by its competitors. This policy, as implemented by "direct buying," was referred to by the top officers of A&P as a two-price level, the lower for A&P and the higher for its competitors. It used its large buying power to coerce suppliers to sell to it at a lower price than to its competitors on the threat that it would place such suppliers on its private blacklist if they did not conform, or that A&P would go into the manufacturing business in competition with the recalcitrant suppliers.

The following are some of the techniques used by A&P to get a lower price than its competitors. As early as about 1925, A&P sent its buyers into the field to buy merchandise for it under strict control of headquarters. These buyers were on A&P's payroll and were operating out of its establishments, in offices mostly under their individual names. Their primary object was to get the merchandise for A&P as cheaply as they could, and for this the supplier was compelled, if he obtained the business, to pay A&P a seller's brokerage of from one to five per cent. These so-called brokerage fees went into the coffers of A&P as a further reduction in price. Except on brokerage received from meat packers, which was outlawed in 1934,[1] this system continued until 1936, when it was made illegal by the Robinson-Patman Act. In 1935, gross revenues from this source amounted to $2,500,000.

After 1936, the buyers, instead of getting credit for alleged brokerage, induced their suppliers to reduce their price further to A&P by the amount of the brokerage fee. Thus the allowance became a markdown of the price on the invoice. This was called net buying. When this was outlawed by a decision of the Third Circuit upholding a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission directed at this practice,[2] A&P adopted a policy of direct buying. It thereafter would buy from no one who sold through a broker. Not only would it not buy from suppliers who offered to sell to it through brokers; it would not buy from a supplier who sold to anyone else through brokers. This clearly affected the business of brokers, who resisted as best they could, and as one of the defendant officers said, "these brokers are dieing (sic) hard." This policy also affected the trade that was unable to buy directly. Suppliers were in effect told that if they did not sell direct to all customers, A&P would withdraw its patronage. This policy of direct buying was broadcast to all the trade in a national press release by A&P, and A&P continued to get its usual lower price, which was supposed to be justified by cost savings in such direct buying and because A&P bought in large quantities. This system continued until the trial.

[1] Trunz Pork Stores v. Wallace, 70 F. 2d 688.

[2] Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Federal Trade Com'n, 106 F. 2d 667.

A substantial amount of the discounts A&P received rarely bore a relationship to cost savings. A&P got the largest discount on the basis of "large quantities" purchased, but as pointed out by A&P's attorney, the use of the expression "large quantities" was "definitely misleading." The large discounts A&P got were not for taking large quantities at one time but were based on a large volume purchased over a period of time and delivered in many small shipments. The defendants' attorneys pointed out to them that, "A large volume ordered out in many small shipments rarely involves any savings in and of itself * * *." Whatever the system used or by whatever name designated, A&P always wound up with a buying price advantage. This price advantage given A&P by the suppliers was, it is fairly inferable, not "twice blessed" like the quality of mercy that "droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven." It did not bless "him that gives and him that takes." Only A&P was blessed, and the supplier had to make his profit out of his other customers at higher prices, which were passed on to the competition A&P met in the retail field.

One cannot escape the conclusion on the very substantial evidence here, as one follows the devious manipulations of A&P to get price advantages, that it succeeded in obtaining preferential discounts not by force of its large purchasing power and the buying advantage which goes therewith, but through its abuse of that power by the threats to boycott suppliers and place them on its individual blacklist, and by threats to go into the manufacturing and processing business itself, since it already possessed a considerable establishment and experience that would enable it to get quickly and successfully into such business if a recalcitrant supplier, processor, or manufacturer did not yield. The A&P organization was urged to keep secret whatever preferences it received. These predatory discounts and other preferences amounted to 22.15% of A&P's total profits in 1939; 22.47% in 1940; and 24.59% in 1941.

The influence of this ruthless force in the food buying field was also used to compel suppliers to discontinue practices in their business which might be detrimental to A&P. For instance, some A&P suppliers were making store door deliveries to A&P competitors. Since A&P had to deliver to its own store doors from the warehouses it maintained, it was unable to get the full benefit of its warehousing policy if the suppliers continued the store door deliveries. A&P forced some manufacturers to "widen the spread" between store door deliveries and warehouse deliveries and thus perpetuated its purchasing advantage. Also, it forced other suppliers to discontinue merchandising by aid of premiums given the customers. A&P did not want to be bothered with the premium details, and it did not want its competitors to have the advantage thereof, so it forced many suppliers to give up the premium aid to merchandising.

To do their buying of fruits, vegetables, and produce, A&P set up a wholly-owned subsidiary, the Atlantic Commission Company, herein referred to as ACCO. It acted as buyer for A&P and selling and buying broker for the rest of the trade, and for this latter service, ACCO received the usual broker's fees, which went into the pocket of A&P, since the latter was the sole owner of ACCO. ACCO was the largest single operator in its field. For a time it took brokerage from the seller for the merchandise it sold to A&P. These funds went, of course, to A&P. That system was abandoned. But the technique used by A&P in the purchase of merchandise other than fresh fruits, vegetables, and produce, in order to receive preferential treatment as to price, was used by ACCO in its field and with like success. And due to the fact that ACCO was dealing in perishable products, it used other techniques as well.

One of them was termed cash buying. Cash was paid at point of shipment. Such buying was always on a lower basis than term buying because cash buyers put up the money at once and took the merchandise with full assumption of the risks thereafter, while term buyers paid on delivery and the risks up to that point were borne by the shipper. This term buying was at a higher rate. What A&P did through ACCO was to get the cash buying rate without assuming the risks between point of shipment and destination. Outside of paying cash for the merchandise, none of the other reasons for a lower price on cash sales was present, as the shipper had to guarantee the arrival at destination of the merchandise as U. S. #1 Grade. Purchases on this basis were not made by ACCO for buyers other than A&P.

Another advantage was obtained by A&P through ACCO's purchases of A&P's requirements on the "sales arrival" basis. Under this arrangement, ACCO did not obligate itself to purchase or to pay a stated price until the goods arrived at their destination. On arrival ACCO would wire the price offer to the shipper, on a take it or leave it basis. "Sales arrival" purchases were made when falling markets were anticipated and compelled the shipper to assume the risk of price change from date of shipment to date of arrival. If the market slumped in the meantime, A&P was protected and the shipper took the loss or had to look for another buyer. When the perishability of the product and costs of diversion to another market, when such diversion was necessary, are considered, the superiority of ACCO's and A&P's bargaining position against the shipper becomes apparent. ACCO's aggressiveness and insistence upon its prerogative to fix prices unilaterally are evidenced by a statement of the defendant Baum, an executive officer and director of ACCO:

> "* * * it will be necessary for your shippers to accept the price we place on this merchandise at the time of arrival and discontinue this bartering over 5¢ differential and if the shippers find that this procedure is not in accordance with their ideas or they are not given a fair deal on the average over a period of time then of course it is their privilege to discontinue these arrival sales or price arrivals."

ACCO occupied the dual position of buyer for A&P and seller for the purchaser. This dual relationship was known to both parties. This may have been legal between ACCO and its client, but it was all to the advantage of A&P. Where ACCO acted as buyer for A&P, it might at the same time be acting as seller to the trade. In this kind of a transaction, ACCO had the opportunity to choose for A&P the choicest produce, and as buyer obtain the produce for A&P at the lowest price in the market. The balance, which might be and often was an inferior grade, it sold to the trade; and in selling this produce, it always got the highest price it could get in the market. Because of the preferential discounts which A&P enjoyed in this field, it got a lower price than others and a higher quality of merchandise. When ACCO purchased in the open market for A&P, even though it paid the market price, it always came out with an advantage, not only in the quality of merchandise but in price. Suppose an item was selling in the market at 100. ACCO could buy it for A&P and have its choice of the quality at 95. The balance of the trade could buy at 100 and pay ACCO a 5% brokerage. Thus, the price to A&P was 95 and to A&P's competitors 105.

ACCO was able to sell carloads of produce to jobbers at the carload price, acting then as the jobber's buying broker, with an agreement that it might buy back less than carload lot shipments for A&P at the same price the jobber had paid for the carload. Thus, A&P got l.c.l. shipments at carload price, and the jobber passed on the loss to A&P's competitors in higher prices. ACCO had another arrangement whereby it disposed of carloads to jobbers, earning a brokerage thereby, and simultaneously repurchased l.c.l. lots as buying agent for A&P. The sellers of the l.c.l. shipments were jobbers, including those who had originally procured the produce from ACCO. It was ACCO's established practice to give its l.c.l. business to jobbers who gave their carload business to A&P, price and quality being equal. This repurchase inducement was a very effective weapon in the hands of ACCO. It could be used to expand its carload business with jobbers almost at will, since the jobbers had to purchase from ACCO in order to hold its l.c.l. patronage. As indicative of the coercive power of ACCO in the trade, it was able in some instances to compel a jobber who had already bought a shipment through a broker and incurred or paid brokerage thereon, to buy it also through ACCO and pay it brokerage too. This brokerage, of course, went to A&P. This was the price sometimes exacted by ACCO for its goodwill, and the price was added to A&P's competitors' costs, and the brokerage went to A&P.

ACCO also sought to control some cooperatives by controlling their managers, and there is evidence that ACCO obtained and benefited from such control to some extent.

ACCO also took merchandise on consignment. It always had the advantage of choice as to whether it would take the shipment for A&P. If it took it for A&P, the preferential price was obtained because it was A&P, and in its dual capacity of representing both buyer and seller, its conflicting obligations at least put ACCO in a position to favor A&P. If the consignment went to the trade, ACCO got a brokerage and then representing only the seller, it is a safe inference that it got all it possibly could for the merchandise. The result was a top price for the merchandise, and brokerage which went to A&P.

From this evidence, we see that ACCO collected brokerage from the trade, which increased the price to A&P's competitors, and the brokerage went into A&P's coffers to increase its competitive advantage. Secondly, ACCO got the best quality for A&P and passed on the inferior to A&P's competitors and, of course, ACCO got preferential treatment as to prices under one scheme or another. ACCO's profits constituted 5.08% of A&P's total profit in 1939; 5.62% in 1940; and 7.16% in 1941.

Closely related to the policy and the purpose to establish a two-price level by the abuse of its power and position, A&P by the same methods forced its suppliers to give it advertising and space allowances that bore no relation to the cost of the service rendered in the matter of advertising or display of merchandise in A&P's stores. Indeed, the evidence showed that in many instances, if not uniformly, token performance was all that was rendered the suppliers who ostensibly were seeking point of sale advertising. For instance, newspaper space advertising allowances were contracted for, not alone at the cost of the advertising but at the cost plus one hundred per cent to A&P. In its contracts with suppliers, A&P would contract for a percentage allowance and agree in the vaguest terms that it would display the suppliers' products on the shelves in just such fashion as it would ordinarily be expected to display the goods in the usual course of merchandising. For this pretended and overpaid service, certain percentage allowances on the commodity price were allowed A&P. It was its policy, and a usually successful one, to get a larger allowance of this kind than its competitors. If it did not get the allowance it sought, the threats to take away the business of A&P were used and brought the supplier into line with one notable exception—the soap manufacturers. Procter & Gamble, Lever Bros., and Colgate Palmolive Peet Co. gave no more advantage to A&P than to other customers by way of advertising and display allowances. A&P expressed its displeasure at the policy of the soap manufacturers, but their position in the trade was invulnerable to A&P's policy. A&P's general policy of obtaining an advantage is highlighted by this failure in the soap industry. The profits from these allowances were substantial and amounted in 1939 to 5.93% of A&P's total profit; in 1940 to 6.23%; and in 1941 to 5.46%.

Another but smaller item was the bag and label allowances. A&P furnished bags and labels to processors and manufacturers, for which it received an allowance. For instance, in the canning industry, the standard allowance for labels was $1.50 per thousand, but A&P insisted upon and received $2 per thousand. It was claimed that A&P's labels were more attractive and expensive. However that may be, the fact remains that A&P was not in the label business any more than it was in the advertising business, but it managed in both to realize a substantial difference between the cost to it and what it realized out of the transaction from other suppliers. Everything was grist to the mill that was grinding down prices to A&P to enable it to maintain the two-price level to its advantage. The bag and label allowances amounted in 1939 to .83% of the total profit of A&P; in 1940 to .75%; and in 1941 to .38%.

As we have indicated, A&P owned and controlled, through the vertical integration of its system, certain corporations that were engaged in the manufacturing and processing of merchandise for sale by A&P in its stores. For instance, the defendant The Quaker Maid Company, Inc., made many items sold in A&P retail stores. The defendant White House Milk Company, Inc., manufactured canned milk. The defendant Nakat Packing Corporation canned fish. These companies were satellites of the A&P system. Their products were sold only to A&P stores and were invoiced at a markup above the cost of production.

These corporations were tools in the hands of A&P, used and useful in maintaining the two-price level to enable it to maintain its position of dominance in the retail food business. Whatever the spread between cost to these defendants in processsing and manufacturing and what they invoiced the goods to A&P for, was credited on the books to A&P. This, of course, was a bookkeeping transaction between A&P and its satellites and was a paper profit which eventually went to reduce the cost of the products to the retail stores when allocated to their credit on a fair method of allocation based upon use employed by the retail stores. In fact, all the paper profits of these manufacturing and processing satellites, together with the real profits of ACCO, the preferential discounts and buying allowances, the advertising allowances, the bag and label allowances, and certain other profits and gains throughout the system, were all kept track of by a system of what the defendants designate statistical accounting, for their own guidance to enable them to determine what the satellites, departments within the system as well as the retail stores, were doing. These accumulated profits and allowances at headquarters amounted in 1939 to 93.69% of A&P's total profits; in 1940 to 90.63%; and in 1941 to 89.02%. The difference between these accumulated profits and allowances and the total profits left the profits shown by the retail stores to be 6.31% in 1939; 9.37% in 1940; and 10.98% in 1941.

No question is raised about the fairness of the method of allocation of the accumulated profits and allowances. When made, they have the effect of reducing to the retail stores the cost of merchandise sold. It is the predatory method through which this accumulation of profits and allowances is obtained and not the method of allocation or statistical handling of them that is challenged by the Government. With this large fund accumulated at the buying and supplying level and allocated to the advantage of low cost of merchandise to the retail or selling level, A&P's enormous power or advantage over competitors emerges more clearly when we consider the evidence on the retail level. Here the price advantage A&P has enjoyed through the coercive use of its power enables it to undersell its competitors and to pick and choose the locations in which the price advantage shall be used. For instance, if a division, unit, or store is selected for attention, whether on the basis of its experience historically in that community or some other basis sufficient to the policy makers of A&P, these policy makers have only to give their attention to gross profit percentages. If Area X is having a tough experience competitionwise, or the area looks prospective in which to increase the volume of business, the gross profit percentage in this area is lowered. This lowers the price at which goods may be sold and the volume increases at the expense of somebody. Sometimes the gross profit rate is fixed so low that the store runs below the cost of operation, even with all the advantage derived by the store in reduction of the cost of its merchandise occasioned by the headquarters' allocation of its predatory profits and accumulations. When the gross profit rate is reduced in Area X, it is an almost irresistible conclusion that A&P had the power to compensate for any possible decline in net profits by raising the gross profit rate and retail prices in Area Y, where it was in a competitive position to do so. The record is replete with instances of deliberate reductions of gross profit rates in selected areas. Thus Area Y, at the desire of the policy makers of A&P, can be brought to aid in the struggle in the Area X, which in numerous instances, as the record shows, sustained heavy net losses for periods extending over a substantial number of consecutive years. There must inevitably be a compensation somewhere in the system for a loss somewhere else, as the overall policy of the company is to earn $7 per share per annum on its stock.

On this record it seems apparent that the goal of the conspiracy to establish a two-price level at the buying level, which enables A&P to meet its competitors with an enormous advantage at the retail level, has been realized.

When Congress enacted the Sherman Act it did not undertake to regulate business in commerce, which so often leads to price or rate fixing. Just a few years before the Sherman Act was enacted, Congress passed the Interstate Commerce Act whereby it did fix rates through an instrumentality of its own creation and within limits which Congress prescribed. The Sherman Act sought to avoid, not only for reasons of policy but for considerations of power, any regulation of business not in the category with railroads, which were supposed to be affected with the public interest, and to establish a punitive or corrective system for other business in commerce. Congress evidently believed that if competition were preserved in this field, free enterprise would regulate itself. The purpose of Congress was to see to it that competition was not destroyed. To this end, in the most comprehensive and sensitive terms, Congress provided among other things that a conspiracy to restrain trade in commerce and to monopolize it in part should be a criminal offense. That is the offense of which these defendants stand convicted.

No court has yet said that the accumulation and use of great power is unlawful per se. Bigness is no crime, although "size is itself an earmark of monopoly power. For size carries with it an opportunity for abuse." United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U. S. 131, 174, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 882. That there was an accumulation of great power by A&P cannot be denied. How it used that power is the question. When A&P did not get the preferential discount or allowance it demanded, it did not simply exercise its right to refuse to contract with the supplier. It went further and served notice on the supplier that if that supplier did not meet the price dictated by A&P, not only would the supplier lose the business at the moment under negotiation, but it would be put upon the unsatisfactory list or private blacklist of A&P and could expect no more business from the latter. This was a boycott and in and of itself is a violation of the Sherman Act. Schine Theatres v. United States, 334 U. S. 110, 116, 68 S. Ct. 947, 92 L. Ed. 871; United States v. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100, 108-109, 68 S. Ct. 941, 92 L. Ed. 864; Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, 312 U. S. 457, 61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949; Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291, 311, 44 S. Ct. 96, 68 L. Ed. 308.

While it is not necessary to constitute a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act that a showing be made that competitors were excluded by the use of monopoly power, American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., supra, at p. 809, there is evidence in this record of how some local grocers were quickly eliminated under the lethal competition put upon them by A&P when armed with its monopoly power. As the evidence showed in this case, A&P received quantity discounts that bore no relation to any cost savings to the supplier. While A&P tried to rig up various contracts with its suppliers that would give the suppliers a semblance of compliance with the Robinson-Patman Act, by colorably relating the discriminatory preferences allowed to cost savings, the primary consideration with A&P seemed to be to get the discounts, lawfully, if possible, but to get them at all events. The conclusion is inescapable on this record that A&P was encouraging its suppliers to violate the Robinson-Patman Act. The unlawful discounts were to be received by A&P as its due, regardless. Whether or not A&P in inducing and knowingly receiving these price discriminations was in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, as its suppliers certainly were, the advantage which A&P thereby obtained from its competitors is an unlawful restraint in itself. United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, pp. 159-160. The purpose of these unlawful preferences and advantages was to carry out the avowed policy of A&P to maintain this two-price level which could not help but restrain trade and tend toward monopoly. Furthermore, to obtain these preferences, pressure was put on suppliers not by the use but by the abuse of A&P's tremendous buying power. The means as well as the end were unlawful. United States v. Griffith, supra, pp. 104-107; Schine Theatres v. United States, supra, pp. 117-118. With the concessions on the buying level acquired by the predatory application of its massed purchasing power, A&P was enabled to pressure its competitors on the selling level even to the extent of selling below cost and making up the loss in areas where competitive conditions were more favorable. The inevitable consequence of this whole business pattern is to create a chain reaction of ever-increasing selling volume and ever-increasing requirements and hence purchasing power for A&P, and for its competitors hardships not produced by competitive forces, and, conceivably, ultimate extinction. Under all the cases, this is a result which Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act were designed to circumvent.

[Role of Individual Employee in Conspiracy]

The individual defendants are so high in the heirarchy of the A&P system that the policy of A&P, that is, the conspiracy here charged, was fully and well known to all of them, and they cooperated with each other and with the satellite corporations in carrying out the policy. The satellite corporations were officered and controlled by interlocking directorates composed largely of these individual defendants. What these individuals knew and did, their corporations knew and did. Satellites like The Quaker Maid Company, Inc., Nakat Packing Corporation, and White House Milk Company, Inc., were mere puppets of the individual defendants. The individual defendants were the corporations, and the corporations were in a very real sense the individuals. One cannot disassociate the corporations from the individual defendants, who largely made up the interlocking directorates. These corporate satellites were a part and parcel of the economic power wielded by the other defendants to further the cause of the conspiracy. Their activities considered in vacuo, if possible, may not be unlawful in themselves, but when used to further the conspiracy become illegal. American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., supra, p. 809; Bigelow v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, 162 F. 2d 520, 523. See White Bear Theatre Corp. v. State Theatre Corp., 129 F. 2d 600.

We turn now to the defendants' contention concerning certain evidence offered by the defendants and excluded by the District Court. The defendants offered evidence that it was the custom in the trade for retailers to seek and suppliers to offer the same type of concessions obtained by the defendants, without attempting to show that the circumstances and methods by which these concessions were obtained were the same. The court did not err in excluding this proffered evidence. That others engaged in the same practices as the defendants certainly would not exonerate the defendants or tend to disprove their guilt. Certainly trade customs and practices not shown to have been practiced in the same manner as the defendants were shown to have practiced them would not be competent to show that the defendants' practices were not illegal. United States v. General Motors Corporation, 121 F. 2d 376, 406; Hills Bros. v. Federal Trade Commission, 9 F. 2d 481, 484-485.

The District Court also excluded evidence of the defendants' attempts to comply with the Robinson-Patman Act and with the cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission.[3] There are several reasons why this evidence was properly rejected. In the first place, the defendants were not charged here with the violation of either the Robinson-Patman Act or the cease and desist order. The charges against the defendants were not met by showing good faith attempts to comply with other laws. Secondly, the evidence was only cumulative, as the record is replete with admitted evidence of like kind which the defendants were permitted to introduce on the issue of whether the defendants had forced preferential concessions, and whether in the dealings of ACCO the defendants were treated like others. Furthermore, the evidence offered and rejected attempted to show compliance with the Robinson-Patman Act and the cease and desist order by statements of some of the defendants as to how they had intended and endeavored to obey the same. As such, they were merely self-serving declarations, and for this reason no error was committed in excluding them. American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 147 F. 2d 93, 120, affirmed 328 U. S. 781, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575.

At best, these were offers to prove collateral matters, and the trial court, as to these, had a broad discretion. U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 230-231, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129. There is no showing here of an abuse of discretion by the District Court. We could hardly imagine such a showing being made when we consider the wide range the evidence was permitted to take in this trial, which consumed several months. The objection to the exclusion of collateral issues "is a purely practical one, a concession to the shortness of life."[4]

We turn, finally, to the contention of the defendants Byoir and Business Organization, Inc., that there is no substantial evidence that they were parties to and furthered the illegal objectives of A&P's overall conspiracy to restrain and monopolize trade in commerce. These two defendants are dealt with together, for there is no question that Business Organizations, Inc., which was organized to promote the public relations of A&P, was Byoir's alter ego, Byoir in the habiliments of the corporate action, and chargeable with Byoir's words and deeds.

[3] Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Federal Trade Com'n, supra, note 2.

[4] Justice Holmes in Reeve v. Dennett, 145 Mass. 23, 28, 11 N. E. 938, 944.

The evidence shows that Byoir was thoroughly familiar with the policies of A&P. Byoir is no babe in the woods, likely not to understand what goes on around him. Not only did he understand, but under the contract of his corporate puppet with A&P it was his duty to counsel, guide, and direct the policy making officers of his client. This obligation he faithfully performed even to the extent of initiating policy and personally participating in its adoption and implementation. The most glaring instance of this disclosed in the record is Byoir's role in the organization and direction during its brief life of Super-Coop, a cooperative of growers and shippers of fresh fruits and vegetables.

It will serve no good purpose to describe the origin and operation of Super-Coop. Suffice it to say that it was formed to secure a larger and more effective control of the shippers by ACCO, A&P's operator in the fruit and vegetable field. From this control ACCO was to benefit in the form of a lower expense rate resulting from the larger volume handled, a greater availability in quantity and selection of supplies for A&P, and an organization readily useful as a propaganda agency to fight A&P's enemies; while the shippers were to receive as their quid pro quo a share of ACCO's profits. The founding fathers of the plan were ACCO's Baum, Byoir, and John Hartford, although when Hartford expressed doubt as to its legality, it was camouflaged to make it appear as though the shippers were the moving force in the organization. There can be no doubt that ACCO actively promoted and launched Super-Coop, and that Byoir's skillful hand was always present and directing. It was Byoir who expressed willingness to assist financially in setting it up; who attempted to secure the Department of Agriculture's approval thereof; who sought to disguise ACCO's sponsorship; and who authored a statement of its policy. Stripped of all non-essentials, Super-Coop is revealed as an attempt by ACCO to induce the movement of all fruits and vegetables through it. It was abandoned by ACCO precisely because of the fear that it was too apparent an attempt to monopolize the fresh fruit and vegetable industry. There can be no doubt on this record that the defendant Byoir had full knowledge of the monopolistic purpose of Super-Coop and of A&P's overall conspiracy which it was intended to further, and such knowledge notwithstanding, took a large personal part in its formation and development.

The defendant Byoir argues that even if the conspiracy did exist, which he does not admit, that he did not become a member of it by rendering services to the conspirators, citing Di Bonaventura v. United States, 15 F. 2d 494; United States v. Dellaro, 99 F. 2d 781; United States v. Dubrin, 93 F. 2d 499; and United States v. Falcone, 311 U. S. 205, 61 S. Ct. 204, 85 L. Ed. 128. These authorities indicate the rule to be as the defendant Byoir contends, but the rule is against the defendant Byoir if he knew of the conspiracy. Of course, there is no direct evidence that Byoir knew of the conspiracy. There was no formal agreement. The conspiracy is spelled out by what the defendants said and did. But it is a fairly conclusive inference from the evidence in this record that Byoir, who testified he was familiar with A&P's policies, could not have been ignorant of the thread of this conspiracy, which runs through the whole fabric of A&P's dealings, especially when consideration is given to Byoir's damaging participation in the direction of and his cooperation with ACCO in setting up Super-Coop. We think the evidence and the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom are sufficient to show that Byoir and Business Organization, Inc., with knowledge of the conspiracy, cooperated to further it.

On the whole record, we think that there is substantial evidence to support the finding as to the guilt of all the defendants. The other errors complained of have all been considered and found unsubstantial, and the judgment is affirmed.

[¶ 62,376] Opinion of the Attorney General of New York.

Addressed to Robert E. Dineen, Superintendent of Insurance, by Nathaniel L. Goldstein, Attorney General. February 24, 1949.

New York Antitrust Act

Insurance Business—Acquisition Cost Conferences—Fixing Price of Commission to Broker.—Private combinations of insurance companies effected by Acquisition Cost Conferences, which are convened to fix the price of brokerage commissions, contravene the Donnelly Act since price restrictions thereby agreed upon operate largely and directly upon the ultimate price of insurance protection and limit the price of services of agents by denying them bargaining power. Private combinations so intimately concerned with the price structure are illegal per se and basically contrary to the statutory prohibitions against combinations in restraint of trade. The rules of the Conferences placing a quota upon general, regional and district agents, while not so plainly subject to the rule of illegality per se, are subject to the prohibitions of the Donnelly Act to the extent that they impose unreasonable restraint upon the free exercise of essential activities in the business.

See the New York Antitrust Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 8615.12.

[Syllabi]

General Business Law, Article 22 (The Donnelly Act), Section 340; Insurance Law, Article VIII, Sections 180, 182, proposed Section 182-a (S. 1977, A. 2215); 15 U. S. C. A. 1011-1014 (Public Law 15, The McCarran Act)—Acquisition Cost Conferences in casualty and fidelity and surety fields of insurance—Purpose of Donnelly Act amendment to complete state regulation of concerted activities in insurance so as to render Federal law inapplicable—Private commission-fixing agreements among insurers illegal restraint of trade if not regulated under Insurance Law, Article VIII—Article VIII presently contains no authorization for combinations to fix commissions of agents and brokers — Present private regulation by agreement illegal—If desirable or necessary to standardize commissions through agreements, express legislative authorization necessary with accompanying statutory safeguards.

The extension of the Donnelly Act to insurance in 1948 was designed to furnish complete State regulation of restrictive combinations in that business for the purpose of excluding application of the Sherman and other Federal enactments under the terms of the McCarran Act passed by Congress after the decision in the South-Eastern Underwriters case (322 U. S. 533). For that purpose complete and effective regulation is necessary.

The Acquisition Cost Conferences now existing are private agreements among insurance companies fixing rate of agents' and brokers' commissions and restricting the number of certain classes of producers. Such agreements are now violations of the Donnelly Act unless regulated under Article VIII of the Insurance Law. Article VIII neither authorizes nor regulates such agreements. The Superintendent has no control over amounts of commissions to be paid although he may control premium charges to the public as filed by insurers or through rating organizations. The service and advisory organizations sanctioned by Article VIII do not contemplate commission-fixing combinations. Any combination to fix the price of producers' services is, therefore, illegal under the Donnelly Act.

If stabilization of commissions through company agreement is desirable or necessary, express legislative authorization is essential. To constitute proper regulation, excluding federal intervention, such authorization must provide restrictions and supervision safeguarding interests of public and all concerned. Right of agents and brokers to deal collectively and be heard seems to be necessary requirement as provided in pending legislation. Unless some such measure is enacted, company agreements limiting commissions are unlawful.

[Background]

You have asked my opinion upon the present-day status of the Acquisition Cost Conferences which have functioned for many years in the fidelity and surety and casualty fields of the insurance business. Your request presents a more particular phase of the general subject dealt with in my opinion to you of February 10, 1947 (1947 Atty.

Gen. 200), and, in the light of subsequent changes made and proposed in the State statutes governing insurance, requires an answer to a problem there touched upon, viz., concerted action by insurers to fix agents' commissions (see p. 209).

The revelation in 1944 of congressional power in the field of insurance when conducted interstate (U. S. v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U. S. 533) left the States no longer the exclusive arbiters of whether and to what extent there should be regulation. In the absence of State action the business was no longer free from any statutory prohibition aimed at restrictive and monopolistic combinations. Application of the Sherman Anti-trust Act was specifically upheld in the South-Eastern decision. There followed shortly the McCarran Act (15 U. S. C. A. 1011-1014) by which Congress acted to preserve continued State power to regulate and tax the insurance business free from any barrier which might otherwise be imposed by the silence of Congress or by acts not specifically relating to insurance. This did not mean, however, that in the absence of State action the business was again unhampered in its ability to enter into combinations and engage upon concerted activities. The Sherman, Clayton, and Federal Trade Commission Acts, after a moratorium period ending June 30, 1948, were expressly made applicable to the extent the business "is not regulated by state law".

It was against this background, more fully considered in my prior opinion, that you asked whether the State restraint of trade statute (the Donnelly Act, General Business Law, Art. 22) applied to the business of insurance, and the conclusion reached was that as it had developed and was then framed, that statute did not apply. That opinion stressed the necessity of complete and effective regulation if the State was to avoid application of Federal laws and the intervention of the Federal government to enforce them. It strongly urged enactment of measures expressly aimed at private combinations in the insurance business of a restrictive and monopolistic character. Subsequently, pursuant to the recommendation of the Joint Legislative Commmittee on Insurance Rates and Regulation (Leg. Doc. [1948] No. 46, p. 34), the Donnelly Act was amended so as to apply specifically to all those engaged in the business of insurance "to the extent not regulated by the provisions of article eight of the insurance law" (L. 1948, c. 502). Just as the McCarran Act excepted matters "regulated" by state law from the prohibitory provisions of Federal acts otherwise applicable, so the general prohibition of the state law designed to round out the State's system of supervision contained an exception of matters regulated by Article VIII of the Insurance Law. The Joint Legislative Committee explained the exclusion on the ground that the matters so excepted "are adequately regulated by the Superintendent of Insurance" (Report, p. 35). At the same time, acting upon the "invitation" of the McCarran Act for the immediate purpose of continuing the policy of the State with respect to rate-making and regulation (Report, p. 53), amendments of Article VIII were proposed and adopted (L. 1948, c. 618).

The Joint Legislative Committee was clearly conscious of the invitation to the States contained in the McCarran Act "to deal affirmatively and effectively with those actions which might otherwise be the subject of Federal regulation" (Report, p. 15). Indeed the continued regulation of the insurance business by the States, allowed by Congress as being in the public interest, was clearly conditioned upon State action, as the Committee observed, and the promise of Federal intervention in default thereof was plainly made.

The congressional debates preceding passage of the McCarran Act in its final form, to which there will be occasion to refer more fully hereinafter, emphasized the urgency of complete regulation by the States. As stated by the then Senator Barkley, the McCarran Act was not adopted so as to enable the States by the empty form of regulation merely to immunize the insurance companies on "an island of safety from congressional action" (91 Congressional Record, Part 2, p. 1488). The action of the Joint Legislative Committee in recommending amendment of the Donnelly Act followed failure of the industry to agree upon a bill under which affirmative supervision by the Superintendent of such concerted activities as it wished to engage upon would have been provided (Report, p. 34). The purpose of the Committee, and of the Legislature pursuant to its recommendation, seems clearly to have been to take full advantage of the congressional invitation to provide

State regulation of those activities into which the Federal government would otherwise step. It follows that the term "regulated" as used in the exception in the Donnelly Act (General Business Law, § 340) could have been intended in no other sense than the same word was used by Congress in offering the States opportunity to retain their supervisory powers. It likewise follows that unless combinations of the industry are regulated under Insurance Law, Article VIII, in a manner sufficient to exclude application of the Federal acts, they will be subject to the parallel provisions of the Donnelly Act. Since the latter clearly "regulates" adequately to the extent that Article VIII does not cover the subject, the purpose to exclude any occasion for intervention of Federal regulation seems to have been fully carried out. In consequence, the essential inquiry presents first, the question whether the Acquisition Cost Conferences would constitute unlawful combinations under the Donnelly Act to the extent not otherwise regulated, and second, if so, whether they are "regulated" by Article VIII of the Insurance Law in such a way as to exclude application of the Donnelly Act, and by the same token to render the Sherman Act inoperative.

[Nature and Effect of Acquisition Cost Conferences]

The Acquisition Cost Conferences are private combinations of insurers which fix maximum amounts of commissions to be paid by their member companies. They are not rating bureaus but claim, at most, to be service or advisory organizations. It is universally conceded, for reasons to be subsequently stated, that the Superintendent of Insurance has no power either to fix or to supervise commission rates. It must be concluded, therefore, that without clear sanction of law such combinations would be held to be unlawful. The restrictions they impose operate largely and directly upon the ultimate price of insurance protection to the public. Acquisition expenses are one of the largest single elements in ultimate premium costs. To the claim that such agreements tend to repress increases in expense, arising from unbridled competition with consequent saving to the public, it must be answered that private combinations so intimately concerned with the price structure are held to be illegal per se (U. S. v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 221-223). "Price fixing, reasonable or unreasonable" is banned (U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, 720). The rule is applied to agreements fixing elements of the ultimate price, such as agents' and brokers' commissions (Sugar Institute, Inc. v. U. S., 297 U. S. 553). Even if otherwise unobjectionable because not directly governing ultimate costs and having a reasonable tendency in reduction thereof, it cannot be ignored that such agreements directly and completely limit the end price that can be obtained for the services of a large segment of the industry. The illegality of such combinations can be predicated on their effect with respect to agents and brokers alone (see U. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U. S. 290, 323). Moreover, to deny the insurance companies the right to combine privately to limit commissions does not open the way to increases in premium rates to the public. The Superintendent of Insurance has control over filed premium rates which must be adhered to but he cannot fix or supervise commissions paid. If there is no prohibition or regulation of commission arrangements among insurers, it would mean that it lay within the power of the companies by private agreement to deny effectively any real bargaining power to the agents and brokers without public sanction or supervision as a substitute for competition.

Apart from the possible application of Article VIII of the Insurance Law, the provisions of the Donnelly Act as made specifically referable to all phases of the insurance business must, in my opinion, be held broad enough to prohibit concerted arrangements by which insurers fix the maximum commissions to be paid for agents' services and thus directly restrain competition in the price of those services which are likewise a large element in the ultimate cost of insurance. The rules of the Conferences placing a quota upon general, regional and district agents, while not so plainly subject to the rule of illegality per se, are subject to the prohibitions of the Donnelly Act to the extent that they impose unreasonable restraint upon the free exercise of essential activities in the business.

There are presently licensed in the State 17,434 fire and casualty agents and 21,715 brokers qualified to sell fire and casualty insurance according to the records of the Insurance Department. Their compensation and, consequently, their livelihood comes from the commissions paid for the production and servicing of business for the insuring companies. In these lines it is the agent or broker with whom the public directly deals and upon whom it primarily relies. The business has always taken the position that commissions were a matter for private contract between the companies and their agents and brokers (Report of Joint Legislative Committee, p. 27). Apart from the question whether the State should assume supervision over contracts between the individual companies and their agents, it must be perfectly apparent that there can be no freedom of contract or no opportunity for development of a fair market price if the companies combine privately to fix the price they will pay. Such private arrangements are basically contrary to statutory prohibitions against combinations in restraint of trade.

While the industry has generally opposed the actual fixing of commission rates by the State, there has been a substantial degree of "self-regulation" of commissions in the business under concerted arrangements. This grew up, and was sought to be justified, through a feeling that unlimited competition could have destructive consequences. In the case of Acquisition Cost Conferences, which have operated openly, such private regulation had encouragement from former Superintendents wholly apart from statutory sanction or regulatory power. Other lines of insurance engaged in more virulent control and employed sanctions involving refusals to deal with non-conformists, denials of reinsurance facilities and other business facilities, and the like. Such rules were considered more fully in my 1947 opinion in connection with the New York Fire Insurance Exchange and were taken up in the Joint Legislative Committee's Report. Their invalidity under restraint of trade statutes is generally agreed upon. The South-Eastern Underwriters Assn. case upheld an indictment under the Sherman Act against a group of stock fire companies operating under such rules. That they involve boycotting methods and elements of coercion, if not, indeed, intimidation, seems clear. More furtive arrangements involving secret agreements and sanctions would even more clearly violate the purpose and policy of the restraint of trade statutes. The fruits of illegal combinations cannot be lawfully gained by concealing the agreement. If the State has not prohibited or does not regulate concerted action concerning commissions, it would mean that so far as state law was concerned insurance companies would have the private power to control the compensation of thousands of agents, who play an important part in bringing insurance protection to the public, without giving them any opportunity for bargaining, collectively or otherwise.

[State Regulation v. Federal Regulation]

The McCarran Act specifically makes the Sherman Act applicable to acts of boycott, coercion and intimidation, whether or not the State regulates. If State prohibitions are not effective to prevent such activities, the Federal government is likely to step in under this power. If the State has not regulated restrictive combinations generally, the further application of Federal laws is not withheld. The amendment of the Donnelly Act following my prior opinion and the Joint Legislative Committee's recommendation clearly furnished a State prohibition broad enough to include private combinations of insurers respecting commissions. These developments would make it impossible for the Insurance Department any longer to condone such arrangements as a matter of policy outside of any statutory power. Justification for private company agreements limiting commissions was once sought in the destructive effect of excess commissions and their tendency to increase rates. The Superintendent today has effective power to control maximum premium charges to the public. Not only does this protect the public but it lessens the dangers of uncontrolled commissions. The application of restraint of trade statute prohibitions to insurance means that commission limitations may not be privately agreed upon without authority of law. If means to stabilize commission rates are to be found, it is necesasry that they exist under public sanction and supervision. Fixed rates must be fairly and reasonably arrived at under measures for the protection of the public and the agents and brokers directly concerned as well as the companies. It must, therefore, be determined whether private concerted arrangements like the Acquisition Cost Conferences are presently so regulated as to bring them within both the exception of the Donnelly Act, and the McCarran Act provision withholding application of the Sherman Act.

[Insurance Department Not Authorized To Fix Commissions]

It has been ably and earnestly argued that Article VIII of the Insurance Law, in its present form, at least sanctions private voluntary commission agreements or subjects them to sufficient State supervision. In order that these contentions may be fairly appraised and a substantial basis laid for treatment of the problem, it is necessary to consider both the development of the Acquisition Cost Conferences themselves and of Article VIII of the Insurance Law. Combined efforts of insurers to control commissions seem to have begun early in the present century but were not entirely effective or successful at first. In his monograph entitled "History of Acquisition Costs in New York", former Superintendent of Insurance Francis R. Stoddard has reviewed the course of events leading up to the formation of the Conferences. As early at 1913 the Superintendent of Insurance felt it necessary to call to the attention of authorized companies the necessity of reducing administrative and acquisition expenses (Stoddard, p. 8). Prior to this, however, and as a result of the Merritt Committee report (Leg. Doc. [1911] No. 30), the first rating provisions were adopted in this State. The report of the present Joint Legislative Committee (Leg. Doc. [1948] No. 46) has reviewed the history of the provisions presently embodied in Article VIII of the Insurance Law (pp. 37-48). As pointed out, New York had never adopted an anti-compact law and the existence of rating organizations had not been theretofore forbidden. The Merritt Committee report did not recommend State regulation of rates beyond some supervision of the rate-making bodies and securing proper publicity. This was the aim of Insurance Law Section 141, as added by Laws of 1911, chapter 460. It applied only to fire insurance rates, but casualty and other forms were brought in in 1912 and 1913. The chief prohibition of the early provisions was against discrimination in rates between similar risks.

It is important for present purposes to note that by Laws of 1913, chapters 21 and 23, two new sections, numbered 139 and 140, were added to the Insurance Law. These were the forerunners of the present service and advisory provisions of Article VIII pertinent to the claim that concerted action to fix commissions is "regulated" thereunder. Section 139 in particular applied to every organization "for the purpose of inspecting risks, adjusting losses, testing appliances, formulating rules or establishing standards for the information or benefit of underwriters in the transaction within this state of the business of insurance". This is substantially the same language used to define a service or advisory organization in Section 180 of Article VIII today. Such organizations were required to file their articles of agreement, by-laws, and other information required by the Superintendent, and be subject to examination by him.

In 1922 Superintendent Stoddard found the acquisition cost problem a serious one and felt compelled to call a meeting to impel company action to avert difficulty. As a result, representatives of casualty companies ultimately agreed upon the Casualty Acquisition Cost Conference. Thereafter, the Superintendent endeavored to bring all companies into the Conference (Stoddard, pp. 17 and 18). It is significant that Mr. Stoddard did not undertake to compel such action under the statute or suggest that it was either required or authorized thereunder. He frankly admits that he was without power to compel membership under the law.

Following the report of the Lockwood Committee appointed in 1919 (Leg. Doc. [1922] No. 60), amendments of Section 141 of the Insurance Law were adopted, and Sections 141-a and 141-b were added (L. 1922, c. 660). These were revised and renumbered in the Insurance Law of 1939 under Article VIII thereof. They accomplished substantially the rating system in effect today. Primarily they require rating organizations to admit to membership or provide their services to any company without discrimination, and for the first time gave the Superintendent power to review rates and order revision if they were found excessive or inadequate. As the present Joint Legislative Committee notes, no attempt was made for the regulation or control of commissions (Report, p. 45). Superintendent Stoddard's preliminary report of March 29, 1923 (p. 21), observed, however, that one effect of these changes was to cause the casualty companies to agree on rules on acquisition and field supervision costs.

It was at this juncture that the Court of Appeals was first called upon to consider the legal status and powers of statutory rating organizations. In Matter of Importers and Exporters Insurance Co. v. Rhoades, 239 N. Y. 420, there was presented the question whether the New York fire insurance rating organization could refuse its rating services to a subscriber which refused to comply with its rules relating to commissions, brokerages, and number of agencies. The court below held these matters to be so intimately allied with the making of rates as to be a part thereof. The Court of Appeals reversed. It recognized that commissions were an essential element in rate fixing and that such matters might have been controlled in the past by voluntary associations, but the distinction between a statutory rating organization and one existing solely by private agreement was said to be obvious. In the latter capacity its membership and obligations could be determined upon at will, but as an agency to fix rates under State authority and supervision, the rating association could not exact compliance with its private rules. It could not extend the scope of its rules beyond the granted power to fix premium rates and assume to regulate commissions with the authority of a State agency. The court refused "to smuggle such a grant into the law under the guise of liberal interpretation", holding that power to regulate commissions should be made explicit in terms.

It follows necessarily from this case that the Superintendent's power to disapprove and compel revision of filed premium rates does not permit him to assume any authority to fix or limit commission rates which may be paid to agents. This was even more pointedly emphasized in the next case to come before the Court (Matter of Northwestern National Life Ins. Co. v. Pink, 288 N. Y. 359). Here the Superintendent of Insurance had refused, under Insurance Law Section 42, to renew a foreign insurer's license to do business in this State. The basis of the refusal inhered in the Department's long-continued concern with the danger of commission wars and efforts to secure voluntary agreements among the companies on commission rates. It was found by the Superintendent that the Company had paid "excess commissions" to brokers. The Court analyzed his action as denying the right to do business to a foreign insurer unless it would agree to brokerage commissions formulated by voluntary agreement of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange. "A prohibition of that size" was held to be beyond his authority under Section 42. The Superintendent disavowed any claim that he had been delegated power by the Legislature to regulate commissions although predicting the ultimate necessity for giving his Department direct control. The Court clearly comprehended that the result of his action was, nevertheless, to fix commissions of foreign insurers with the compulsion of law at rates privately agreed upon. It refused to find in Insurance Law Section 42 the equivalent of power over commissions which the Legislature refused to grant expressly.

Since the law has not been altered in any respect material to the grounds of the decisions in these two cases, they are the basis of the unquestioned understanding that the Insurance Department is without power to fix or control commissions. As the Joint Legislative Committee observes (Report, p. 27), there is no statutory control of acquisition costs except as to life insurance where it has been expressly dealt with by statute (Insurance Law, §§ 213 and 213-a) In the face of this lack of authority, not only conceded but insisted upon by company representatives, it is still contended that regulation exists in Article VIII. One approach is through the provisions including in the term "rate" all the elements and factors forming the basis for determination thereof (§ 180, subd. 2), and requiring that in rate-making consideration be given to all factors reasonably attributable to the risk and to past and prospective expenses (§ 183, subd. 1-d; see also subd. 3). Since the Superintendent may take the reasonableness of these factors into account in passing on the ultimate rate and disapprove the latter on the basis thereof, it is said to follow that he does exercise a measure of indirect control. It is not, however, under any view the power to fix or control commissions which the court has denied both to the Superintendent himself and to a rating organization in its capacity as such. Paranthetically, it may be observed that the insurance companies involved in American Eagle Fire Ins. Co., et al. v. Jordan, (67 Fed. Sup. 76, reversed 169 Fed. (2d) 281), asserted that the District of Columbia Insurance Commission must consider actual payments to agents in determining the reasonableness of expenditures for rate purposes.

While the New York Superintendent's right to consider the reasonableness of commission allowances in the rate structures seems fairly established, his power of revision may be exercised only with respect to ultimate rates. He may not intervene to regulate the commissions actually paid. Companies are free to pay more or less than the rating formula basis, subject only to the incidental economic compulsion of the fixed gross premium. This clearly does not constitute direct commission regulation and in no event can these statutory provisions be said to control or to countenance combinations among companies as to commission payments. That the agreement may be to observe the expense schedule of the filed rates does not relieve it of its purely voluntary and unsupervised character. No provision of the rating section would prevent or control an agreement for less or more. Nothing here expresses public approval of concerted action lessening competition within the limits of the premium rates supervised by the State. The express provision for making ultimate rates in concert under the sanction and control of the State denies that implication of more extensive authority to combine may be read into it. It has been decided that such agreements cannot be made as part of a rating organization's authorized function, and conversely as to such agreements an organization would not be functioning under the rating provisions.

The more seriously urged contention stems from the service and advisory organization provisions of Article VIII. Reference is first made to the declaration of purpose added to Section 180 "to authorize and regulate cooperative action among insurers in rate-making and in other matters within the scope of this article". With the accompanying direction for liberal interpretation, this is made the basis upon which to find sanction for the broadest possible range of concerted activities and regulation thereof under the definition of service and advisory organization in subdivision 6 of Section 180, and the requirements and restrictions thereon in Section 182. While it is still a basic premise that there is no public control over actual commission rates agreed upon and put into effect by private combinations of insurers, it is insisted that such agreements are authorized by Article VIII and thus lifted out of the Donnelly Act.

[Purpose of the McCarran Act]

A word is here called for with further reference to the purpose and extent of the McCarran Act which brings about the urgency of the present problem. A reading of the congressional debates preceding passage of that Act reveals strongly articulated objection to any action by Congress which would enable the States to permit concerted action otherwise subject to the Sherman Act. There was effort to limit the congressional authorization to the enactment of laws against restrictive and monopolistic combinations at the State level. However, the existing State systems of rate regulation through rating bureaus under State supervision were referred to, and ultimately the Act as presently in force was agreed to without placing specific restriction on the form of regulation which the States must adopt to prevent Federal intervention. Approval was secured, however, only upon the understanding best expressed by Senator Barkley, and previously referred to herein. The intention was not to permit the States to ward off the application of Federal laws to the insurance companies without themselves assuming the responsibility of effective regulation, and Congress was not to be estopped from further asserting its power where it felt the States had failed. It seems clear that no State can discharge the burden of regulation by merely condoning expressly any combinations that insurers might wish to make. On the other hand they were not to be required to regulate by prohibiting all combinations, and it is probable that as part of a complete system of affirmative regulation a State might authorize specific activities in concert, free of active State supervision, without thereby rendering them subject to the Sherman or other Federal Acts. Under the McCarran Act the question will always be present as to whether such action constitutes an authoritative approval in the public behalf or a mere abdication of regulatory power preserved to the State which, in effect, permits violations of Federal law. Whether the authorization by the State was carefully limited and plainly expressed would seem important upon such an inquiry.

[Insurance Law Article VIII Interpreted]

The affirmative authorization for commission fixing combinations under Insurance Law, Article VIII, is said to be found in what is actually only the definition of a "service or advisory organization" in Section 180, subdivision 6, reading as follows:

> "6. Every person, partnership, association or corporation whether located within or without this state, who or which inspects risks, adjusts losses, tests appliances, formulates rules, establishes standards, or assists in the making of rates for the information or benefit of insurers or rating organizations in the transacting of insurance business on property or risks located in this state, or furnishes information or advice to insureds or prospective insureds, shall be known as a service or an advisory organization."

This is derived practically verbatim from the earlier definitions in former Sections 139 and 140 of the Insurance Law of organizations for assisting underwriters or assisting in establishing insurance rates. The right to agree upon commissions is predicated by its proponents upon the activities contemplated in formulating "rules" or in establishing "standards".

In fairness, it must be pointed out that filings of the Acquisition Cost Conference rules with the Superintendent have in the past been "accepted" under former Section 140 of the Insurance Law (Stoddard, p. 32). Former Section 140 was the section dealing with organizations which assisted in making rates, and it was apparently upon the theory that the commission agreements affected a rate factor that the filings were accepted in order to give the Conferences whatever semblance of legality he could in connection with the Superintendent's efforts to bring about some control of acquisition costs. Whether such filings could have been compelled, it was not thought necessary to determine (p. 37).

The original service organization provisions now contained in Article VIII were not affirmative grants of authority to combine. Until the Donnelly Act, the State had no anti-compact provision and concerted action was not generally forbidden. Indeed, the provisions for service organization in terms do not necessarily relate to associations of insurers at all, but to any agencies or concerns rendering service to insurers or to rating bureaus. The provisions now relied on were initially only definitions for the purpose of identifying agencies or associations, nowhere forbidden by statute, in order to subject them to certain requirements as to filing their articles or certificates and bylaws and as to examination by the Superintendent.

But now combinations unlawfully restraining trade in the insurance business have been generally prohibited in the Donnelly Act, and it is sought to find in the provisions governing service organizations generally affirmative authorization for insurers to combine for the specific purpose of fixing the rate of commission to be paid to their agents. I do not believe such activities can be found to be "within the scope" of Article VIII.

Clearly, the service organization regulation of Article VIII does not convey an unlimited authority to combine for every purpose which might be desired. The original purpose was not to authorize combinations but generally to require filings by organizations otherwise not restricted as to their activities. When the Donnelly Act amendment prohibiting restrictive combinations became effective, the exception therefrom of those in the insurance industry to the extent of regulation by Article VIII did not become a shield for every combined activity of insurers which might previously have been carried on under the name of a service organization because not otherwise prohibited. Were it so, the amendment of the Donnelly Act thought essential by the Joint Legislative Committee would scarcely have been necessary.

The direction of the inquiry under Article VIII has been reversed by the general prohibition on restrictive combinations, and the question now is, what activities does Article VIII expressly or by plain inference sanction in concert. The activities specified with identifiable particularity for service or advisory organizations are the inspection of risks, adjustment of losses, testing of appliances or assistance in the making of rates for the information or benefit of insurers or rating organizations. In company with these are the general functions of formulating rules and establishing standards. As a source of authority construction principles plainly would limit such undefined rules and standards to those relating to the particular functions set forth in conjunction with them. An otherwise limitless right to make rules would not be inferred.

Just as the scope of the rules of a rating organization may not be extended beyond its authorized function of fixing rates to be charged for insurance, so must the rules of a service and organization be kept within the authorized service and functions thereof. Nothing brings agreements to limit commissions within the scope of such rules expressly or by inference. Information as to commission experience and factors might be collected and furnished for its obvious assistance in making rates, but authority for restrictive agreements with respect to commissions to be paid is not to be found.

It is only when the Superintendent finds that the furnishing of such "information and assistance" involves any unfair or unreasonable practice that he has power to order discontinuance after a hearing (§ 182, subd. 2). Since I must conclude that such information and assistance cannot extend to agreements limiting commissions, this provision does not furnish any more affirmative regulation thereof.

It would indeed be strange if the 1948 legislation recommended by the Joint Legislative Committee had intended to permit private combinations to fix commissions free from the Donnelly Act and had left it to such wholly intangible inferences as would have to be drawn to sustain them. The threat of Federal action and the purpose to prevent it by complete State regulation were clearly understood. The subject of acquisition costs and their regulation have been among the most seriously debated questions in the industry for many years. The courts have indicated the necessity for specific expression of regulations pertaining thereto. The Joint Legislative Committee gave express consideration to the subject (Report, p. 20) and rejected a bill "legalizing" the Acquisition Cost Conferences because not convinced that it was necessary to do so at the 1948 session and because of lack of agreement in the industry as to how it might best be done. Agents and brokers objected particularly because they were not given any right to be heard with respect to commission standards to be established (p. 27). The Committee clearly contemplated the necessity for "permissive state regulation" to authorize agreements fixing commissions and posed the prospect of ultimate policing of such agreements or, as a last resort, State fixation of commissions if authorized agreements were not both fair and reasonable and adhered to. The comments accompanying the Committee's proposed amendments of Article VIII, which were enacted into law, gave no hint of any present purpose to bring into that statute in any form authorization for commission agreements. The conclusion I have drawn from the history of the problem and the face of the existing statutes seems wholly confirmed by the Committee's indication of its purpose in the report.

[Status of Acquisition Cost Conferences]

You are advised that the Acquisition Cost Conferences, about which you inquire, are not presently regulated by Article VIII of the Insurance Law and are, consequently, unlawful combinations pursuant to the Donnelly Act. It follows that the existing State regulation rendering the Federal Acts inapplicable consists of complete prohibition of commission fixing combinations. The Superintendent exercises public control of premium rates charged to the public and the companies are deprived of private power to regulate commissions. If, as a matter of policy or necessity, some manner of stabilizing rates at fixed maximum levels is desirable, it would have to rest upon clear warrant of law under public supervision, preferably, of course, through the Superintendent of Insurance who is charged with ultimate responsibility in the matter of insurance rates and general supervision over the business.

There is presently pending in the Legislature a proposed enactment to permit the conference type of commission agreements among insurers (S. 1977, A. 2215). It would authorize such agreements expressly and remove all doubt of public sanction. At the same time it imposes statutory restrictions on them and provides for public supervision. Agreements producing unfair discrimination or excessive or inadequate rates are not authorized and agreements or acts of boycott, intimidation or coercion are prohibited.

The requirement of consultation with agents and brokers before entering into agreements and making rules and regulations thereunder is expressly prescribed. It is probable that such a provision is essential lest any permissive State legislation be found to be merely an attempted immunization of private agreements rather than a real regulation protecting the interests of all affected parties, as well as of the public, of the kind which will exclude Federal intervention. If company agreements are to be permitted by law, it follows that opportunity for the producers, whose compensation is directly concerned, to bargain collectively must likewise be provided by law. The right to be heard is even more important here than if rates were to be directly fixed by a disinterested public administrator in which case it would be certain to be provided.

The pending bill withholds authorization for any agreement involving commission rates in excess of the total production cost applicable to the premium rates in effect for the insurers involved. Agreements and rules must be filed and the Superintendent may hold hearings with respect to failure to observe the requirements of the statute or violation of its prohibitions. He may issue cease and desist orders with respect thereto.

It is not within my province to pass upon the economic wisdom or administrative policy of public authorization for and regulation of commission fixing agreements. It is not for me to undertake to recommend either that unrestrained competition within existing rate structures be the rule or that commissions be allowed to be standardized by reasonable agreements publicly supervised and restricted. If, however, some form of commission stabilization is desirable or essential, it clearly cannot be accomplished by existing unsanctioned private agreements. Express statutory authorization is a prerequisite to the lawful existence of such agreements. If such regulation is to be substituted for free competition, it must be publicly sanctioned and safeguarded with respect to the fairness and reasonableness of what may be done thereunder as to all concerned. Unless some such measure as the pending bill is enacted company agreements limiting commissions are prohibited by law.

[¶ 62,377] United States v. Paramount Pictures Inc. et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Equity No. 87-273. March 3, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Film Industry—Consent Judgment—Separation of Production and Distribution from Theatre Operation.—A consent judgment entered against a motion picture production and distribution company, in an antitrust suit charging eight prominent companies in the film industry with violations of the Sherman Act, requires the defendant to divest itself of all interest in a given number of theatres and enjoins the company from granting licenses with controlling stipulations attached thereto, from agreeing to maintain a system of clearances, from performing any existing franchise, formula deal, or pooling arrangement, as well as requiring it to divorce its domestic exhibition business from its production and distribution business. Such separation is achieved by the formation of two independent companies and the transfer of the defendant's theatre assets to one and the transfer of production and distribution assets to the others. The two new companies are required to issue to the defendant in exchange for the assets so received, a number of shares of their common capital stock equal to one-half the aggregate amount of common capital stock of Paramount Pictures Inc. then outstanding. The latter company is ordered to be dissolved and to distribute the stock of the first company pro rata among its stockholders and transfer the shares of the second company into the name of a Trustee appointed by the court to be held subject to the supervision of the Court. The judgment directs that the newly formed companies have no common directors, and that they be free of any previous managerial connection with the other, or the defendant. The decree requires each company to refrain from attempting to influence the operating policy of the other.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1220.273, 1530, 1590.

Judgment rendered and entered in lieu of and in substitution for the decree dated December 31, 1946, reported at 1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,526.

For plaintiff: Tom C. Clark, Attorney General; Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant Attorney General; Robert L. Wright, Sigmund Timberg, Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

For the defendants Paramount Pictures Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation: Simpson Thacker and Bartlett; Albert C. Bickford, a member of the firm.

Consent Judgment as to the Paramount Defendants

The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its Amended and Supplemental Complaint in this action on November 14, 1940; the defendants, Paramount Pictures Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Paramount defendants"), having filed their Answers to such Complaint, denying the substantive allegations thereof; the Court after trial having entered a decree herein, dated December 31, 1946, as modified by order entered February 11, 1947; the plaintiff and the Paramount defendants, among others, having appealed from such decree; the Supreme Court of the United States having in part affirmed and in part reversed such decree, and having remanded this cause to this Court for further proceedings in conformity with its opinion dated May 3, 1948; and this Court having, on June 25, 1948, by order made the mandate and decree of the Supreme Court the order and judgment of this Court; and

The Paramount defendants, having represented to the plaintiff and to this Court that they propose, for the purpose of avoiding discrimination against other exhibitors and distributors, promoting substantial independent theatre competition for the Paramount theatres and promoting competition in the distribution and exhibition of films generally, (1) to divorce their domestic exhibition business from their production and distribution business, (2) to divest Paramount Pictures Inc. and the divorced exhibition business of all interest in a minimum of 774 theatres, and (3) to subject themselves and said divorced distribution and exhibition businesses to injunctive provisions, all as hereinafter set forth; and that accordingly they propose to adopt prior to April 19, 1949, a plan of reorganization which will have as its purpose and effect the complete divorcement of the ownership and control of all of the theatre assets of Paramount Pictures Inc. located in the United States from all other assets of the Paramount defendants; that pursuant to such plan two new corporations will be formed, one of which (hereinafter called the New Theatre Company) will own directly or indirectly all of the said theatre assets; and the other of which (hereinafter called the New Picture Company) will own directly or indirectly all of the said other assets; and that thereafter Paramount Pictures Inc. will be dissolved; and that for the purpose of establishing separate ownership and control of the said two new corporations the stock of the New Theatre Company will be delivered to a Trustee who will hold such stock subject to the terms and conditions of this judgment, and certificates of interest representing such trusteed stock will be issued by the Trustee, and such certificates of interest together with the stock in the New Picture Company will be distributed pro rata by Paramount Pictures Inc. among its stockholders; and Paramount Pictures Inc. having set forth certain understandings with and made certain representations to the Attorney General in a letter filed herewith; and

The Paramount defendants having consented to the entry of this judgment after the taking of evidence upon the remand of this cause by the Supreme Court to this Court but without rendition of any decision by this Court upon any of the issues and matters which were to be determined upon said remand, without any findings of fact upon such issues and matters made after said remand, and without admission by the Paramount defendants in respect to any such issue or matter, and the Court having considered the matter,

NOW, THEREFORE, UPON CONSENT OF THE PARTIES HERETO, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

I.

The Complaint is dismissed as to all claims made against the Paramount defendants based upon their acts as producers of motion pictures, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

II.

[Acts Enjoined]

A. The Paramount defendants, their officers, agents, servants and employees are each hereby enjoined:

1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means.

2. From agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances; the term "clearances" as used herein meaning the period of time stipulated in license contracts which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

3. From granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this judgment, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof.

5. From further performing any existing franchise to which it is a party and from making any franchises in the future, except for the purpose of enabling an independent exhibitor to operate a theatre in competition with a theatre affiliated with a defendant. The term "franchise" as used herein means a licensing agreement or series of licensing agreements, entered into as a part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of agreement.

6. From making or further performing any formula deal or master agreement to which it is a party. The term "formula deal" as used herein means a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. The term "master agreement" means a licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal," covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres usually comprising a circuit.

7. From performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. To the extent that any of the features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject twenty percent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect the feature.

8. From licensing any feature for exhibition upon any run in any theatre in any other manner than that each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre, solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliated theatres, circuit theatres or others.

B. If a final judgment be entered in this cause against Loew's Incorporated, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or any of them, which shall prescribe for any of such defendants provisions for licensing the exhibition of feature motion pictures different from those required by this judgment, the Paramount defendants or the New Picture Company or either or the successor or successors of either, may file herein a written notice of election to be relieved from further compliance with such provisions of this judgment and to comply with such provisions of such judgment against said defendants or any of them, and thereupon an order or supplemental judgment shall be entered on the application of such party or parties so electing, which shall subject such party or parties to such provisions of such other judgment and entitle it or them to the benefits of any terms thereof and relieve it or them from further compliance with such provisions of this judgment.

III.

A. The defendant Paramount Pictures Inc. (hereinafter in this Section III referred to as "Paramount"), its officers, agents, servants and employees are each hereby enjoined:

1. From performing or enforcing agreements referred to in paragraphs A-5 and A-6 of the foregoing section II hereof to which it may be a party.

2. From making or continuing to perform pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors normally in competition are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to prearranged percentages.

3. From making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in a competitive area where a pool operates without first offering them for inclusion in the pool.

4. From making or continuing leases of theatres under which it leases any of its theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the same competitive area in return for a share of the profits.

5. From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or in shares of stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant.

(a) The said existing relationships in connection with the theatres in Michigan (excluding Detroit) named in paragraph 9 hereof shall be terminated by November 8, 1949 in accordance with the provisions relating to such theatres set forth in such paragraph 9.

(b) The said existing relationship in connection with the Great Lakes, Hippodrome, Niagara, Seneca, Kenmore, Buffalo, Teck, Bellevue, Kensington, North Park, Lackawanna, and Elmwood Theatres in Greater Buffalo, N. Y., shall be terminated by March 31, 1949, and the said existing relationship in connection with the Roosevelt Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., shall be terminated by December 31, 1949. Paramount or the New Theatre Company may elect to acquire the interest of the co-owner or co-owners in the five theatres first mentioned in this subparagraph (b).

(c) The said existing relationships in connection with the Parkhill Theatre, Yonkers, N. Y., shall be terminated by November 8, 1949 in accordance with the provisions relating to such theatre set forth in paragraph 9 hereof.

6. From acquiring a beneficial interest in any theatre other than those named in paragraph 9 hereof, provided that:

(a) Until the joint ownerships set forth in paragraph 9 have been completely terminated, as provided for in said paragraph, beneficial interests in theatres may be acquired

(i) As a substantially equivalent replacement for wholly owned theatres * held or acquired in conformity with this judgment which may be lost through physical destruction or conversion to non-theatrical purposes;

(ii) In renewing leases covering any wholly owned theatre held or acquired in conformity with this judgment or in acquiring an additional interest in any such theatre under lease;

(iii) As a substantially equivalent replacement for any wholly owned theatre held or acquired in conformity with this judgment which has been lost through inability to obtain a renewal of the lease thereof upon reasonable terms, if Paramount or the New Theatre Company shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition;

(iv) In one theatre in Miami, Florida, Chattanooga, Tennessee, Salt Lake City, Utah, and Tampa, Florida, respectively (which theatres Paramount represents it plans to construct upon sites now controlled by it and are to be substantially equivalent replacements for theatres heretofore lost by fire or failure to obtain renewal of leases), if Paramount or the New Theatre Company shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition.

(b) After termination of the joint ownerships set forth in paragraph 9 hereof, Paramount or the New Theatre Company may acquire a beneficial interest in any theatre only in the situations covered by paragraphs (i) and (ii) of the preceding sub-section (a) unless the New Theatre Company shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find, that the acquisition will not unduly restrain competition.

7. From operating, booking or buying features for any of its theatres through any agent who is known by it to be also acting in such manner for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliate.

8. From making or enforcing any agreement which restricts the right of any other exhibitor to acquire a motion picture theatre.

9. From acquiring or continuing to own in conjunction with any actual or potential independent exhibitor any beneficial interest in motion picture theatres. The theatres in which such ownership now exists are the following:

* As used herein the phrase "wholly owned theatre" means a theatre in which Paramount or the New Theatre Company, or Paramount or the New Theatre Company together with persons who are solely investors, own a beneficial interest of 95% or more.

State	City	Name of Theatre
ALABAMA	Anniston	Calhoun
		Cameo
		Noble
		Ritz
	Auburn	Tiger
	Bessemer	Grand
		State
	Birmingham	Alabama
		Lyric
		Ritz
		Grand
		Temple
		Drive-In
	Chickasaw	Chickasaw
	Ensley (suburb of Birmingham)	Ensley
		Franklin
	Jasper	Jasper
		New
	Mobile	Crown
		Drive-In Empire
		Lyric
		Loop
		Saenger
	Montgomery	Charles
		Clover
		Empire
		Grand
		Paramount
		Strand
	Selma	Walton
		Wilby
	Troy	Enzor
	Tuscaloosa	Bama
		Diamond
		Druid
		Ritz
ARIZONA	Phoenix	Studio
		Drive-In
		Indian Head Drive-In
ARKANSAS	Camden	Rialto
		Ritz
		Strand
	Clarksville	Joy
		Strand
	Conway	Conway
		Grand
	Dardanelle	Joy
	Fayetteville	Ozark
		Palace
		Royal
		U-Ark
	Fort Smith	Hoyts
		Joie
		New Plaza
		Temple
		Uptown
	Helena	Paramount
		Pastime
	Hope	New
		Rialto
		Saenger
	Hot Springs	Central
		Malco
		Paramount
		Victory

State	City	Name of Theatre
ARKANSAS—Continued	Jonesboro	Liberty
		Palace
		Strand
	Little Rock	Arkansas
		Capitol
		Drive-In Heights
		Lee
		New Prospect
		Pulaski
		Roxy
		Royal
	McGehee	Ritz
	Morrilton	Rialto
	Newport	Capitol
		Strand
	Pine Bluff	Malco
		Saenger
		Strand
	Russellville	Ritz
	Smackover	Joy
	Stuttgart	Majestic
		Strand
	Van Buren	Bob Burns
		Rio
CALIFORNIA	Hollywood	Paramount
FLORIDA	Pensacola	Drive-In
		Isis
		Rex
		Saenger
GEORGIA	Athens	Georgia
		Morton
		Palace
		Ritz
		Strand
	Augusta	Imperial
		Miller
		Modjeska
		Rialto
	Barnesville	Ritz
	Brunswick	Bijou
		Ritz
		Roxy
	Buford	Allen
		Colonial
	Columbus	Bradley
		Georgia
		Rialto
		Royal
		Springer
		Village
		Rexview Drive-In
	Elberton	Elbert
	Gainesville	Ritz
		Roxy
		Royal
		State
	Lexington	Lex
	Macon	Capitol
		East Macon
		Rialto
		Grand
		Ritz
	Moultrie	Colquitt
		Moultrie
	St. Simons Island	Casino

State	City	Name of Theatre
GEORGIA—Continued	Savannah	Avon
		Beach
		Bijou
		Lucas
		State
		Victory
	Waycross	Carver
		Lyric
		Ritz
IDAHO	Boise	Ada
		Boise
		Granada
		Pinney
ILLINOIS	Chicago	Iris
		McVickers
		North Center
		United Artists
	Galesburg	Colonial
	LaSalle	LaSalle
		Majestic
	Moline	Illini
		Le Claire
	Oak Park	Lake
		Lamar
	Peru	Peru
		Star
	Quincy	Orpheum
		Washington
	Rockford	Auburn
		Coronado
		Midway
		Palace
		Times
	Rock Island	Fort Armstrong
		Rocket
		Spencer
INDIANA	Gary	Grand
		State
IOWA	Algona	Call
		Iowa
	Boone	Boone
		Princess
		Rialto
	Burlington	Capitol
		Palace
		Zephyr
	Cedar Falls	Regent
	Cedar Rapids	Paramount
		State
	Centerville	Majestic
		Ritz
	Chariton	Ritz
		State
	Charles City	Charles
		Gem
	Clarion	Clarion
	Clear Lake	Lake
		Park
	Clinton	Capitol
		Rialto
		Strand
	Cresco	Cresco
	Davenport	Capitol
		Esquire
		Garden
	Des Moines	Des Moines
		Garden
		Hiland
		Ingersoll
IOWA—Continued	Des Moines—Continued	Paramount
		Roosevelt
		Uptown
		Strand
		Eastown
		Iowa
		Drive-In
	Eagle Grove	Princess
	Estherville	Grand
	Forest City	Forest
	Fort Dodge	Iowa
		Rialto
		Strand
	Grinnell	Iowa
		Strand
	Iowa City	Englert
		Strand
		Varsity
	Mason City	Cecil
		Palace
		Strand
	New Hampton	Firemens
	Newton	Capitol
		Rialto
	Oelwein	Grand
		Ritz
	Oskaloosa	Mahaska
		Princess
		Rivoli
	Ottumwa	Capitol
		Ottumwa
		Rialto
		Strand
		Zephyr
	Sioux City	Capitol
		Drive-In
		Hipp
		Hollywood
		Iowa
		State
		Victory
	Waterloo	Paramount
		Strand
KENTUCKY	Fulton	Fulton
		Orpheum
		Strand
	Henderson	Kentucky
		Kraver
	Owensboro	Bleich
		Malco
		Seville
		Strand
LOUISIANA	Alexandria	Paramount
		Rex
		Saenger
	Baton Rouge	Drive-In Fort
		Louisiana
		Paramount
		Varsity
	Monroe	Capitol
		Delta
		Paramount
	New Orleans	Globe
		Saenger
		Tudor
	Shreveport	Centenary
		Drive-In
		Majestic
		Rex

State	City	Name of Theatre
LOUISIANA—Continued	Shreveport—Continued	Saenger
		Strand
		Venus
		West End
MAINE	Auburn	Auburn
	Augusta	Colonial
		Capitol
	Bangor	Bijou
		Opera House
		Park
	Brunswick	Cumberland
		Pastime
	Gardiner	Opera House
	Hollowell	Rialto
	Lewiston	Empire
		Priscilla
		Strand
	Livermore Falls	Dreamland
	Norway	Rex
	Orono	Strand
	Ramford	Strand
	South Paris	Strand
	Wilton	Wilton
MASSACHUSETTS	Chicopee	Rivoli
	Fitchburg	Fitchburg
	Greenfield	Garden
	Haverhill	Colonial
		Paramount
	Holyoke	Bijou
		Strand
		Victory
	North Adams	Paramount
		Richmond
	Northampton	Calvin
		Plaza
	Palmer	Strand
	Pittsfield	Capitol
		Colonial
		Palace
		Strand
	Springfield	Paramount
		Broadway
	Ware	Casino
	Westfield	Strand
MICHIGAN	Adrian	Croswell
		Family
	Allegan	Regent
	Alpena	Lyric
		Malz
	Ann Arbor	Orpheum
		Michigan
		State
		Whitney
		Wuerth
	Battle Creek	Bijou
		Michigan
		Post
		Regent
		Strand
	Bay City	Bay
		Center
		Regent
		Westown
	Benton Harbor	Lake
		Liberty
	Big Rapids	Big Rapids

State	City	Name of Theatre
MICHIGAN—Continued	Cadillac	Center
		Lyric
	Detroit	Alger
		Royal
		United Artist
	East Lansing	State
	Flint	Capitol
		Della
		Garden
		Palace
		Regent
		Roxy
		State
		Strand
	Grand Haven	Grand
		Robinhood
	Grand Rapids	Center
		Eastown
		Royal
		Four Star
		Kent
		Majestic
		Our Wealthy
	Greenville	Gibson
		Silver
	Hillsdale	Dawn
		Hill
	Holland	Center
		Colonial
		Holland
	Ionia	Center
		Ionia
	Jackson	Capitol
		Majestic
		Michigan
		Regent
		Rex
	Kalamazoo	Capitol
		Fuller
		State
		Michigan
		Orpheum
		Uptown
	Lansing	Capitol
		Gladmer
		Lansing
		Michigan
		Nortown
		Southown
	Ludington	Center
		Lyric
	Manistee	Lyric
		Ramsdell
		Vogue
	Monroe	Family
		Monroe
	Muskegon	Michigan
		Regent
		State
	Niles	Ready
		Riviera
	Owosso	Capitol
		Center
		Strand
	Pontiac	Eagle
		Oakland
		Orpheum
		Rialto

State	City	Name of Theatre
MICHIGAN—Continued	Pontiac—Continued	State
		Strand
	Port Huron	Desmond
		Family
		Majestic
	Saginaw	Center
		Franklin
		Mecca
		Michigan
		Strand
		Temple
		Wolverine
	St. Joseph	Caldwell
	South Haven	Michigan
		Model
	Sturgis	Roxy
		Strand
	Three Rivers	Rialto
		Riviera
	Traverse City	Michigan
		Trabay
	Willow Run	Center
	Ypsilanti	Martha Washington
		Wuerth
MINNESOTA	Fairmont	Nicholas
		Strand
MISSISSIPPI	Biloxi	Buck
		Saenger
	Clarksdale	Delta
		Paramount
	Columbus	Dixie
		Princess
		Varsity
	Greenville	Delta
		Paramount
	Greenwood	Le Flore
		Paramount
	Gulfport	Gulf
		Paramount
	Hattiesburg	Buck
		Lomo
		Rose
		Saenger
	Jackson	Century
		Drive-In
		Majestic
		Paramount
		Pix
	Meridian	Alberta
		Strand
		Temple
	Natchez	Baker Grand
		Ritz
	Tupelo	Lyric
		Tupelo
	Vicksburg	Alamo
		Saenger
		Strand
	West Point	Ritz
		Star
	Winona	Winona
NEBRASKA	Fairbury	Bonham
		Majestic
	Falls City	Oil City
		Rivoli
	Grand Island	Capitol
		Empress
		Grand
NEBRASKA—Continued	Hastings	Rivoli
		Strand
	Omaha	Omaha
		Orpheum
		Paramount
		Drive-In
NEW HAMPSHIRE	Berlin	Albert
		Princess
		Strand
	Concord	Capitol
		Star
	Portsmouth	Colonial
		Olympia
NEW JERSEY	Newark	Adams
		Paramount
	Paterson	U. S.
NEW MEXICO	Albuquerque	Chief
		Kimo
		Lobo
		Mission
		Rio
		Sunshine
		Yucca
		Drive-In Mesa
NEW YORK	Fulton	Avon
		State
	New York City	Rivoli
	Owego	Tioga
	Rochester	Capitol
		Paramount
		Regent
	Waverly	Amuzu
		Capitol
	Yonkers	Parkhill
NORTH CAROLINA	Asheboro	Carolina
	Asheville	Imperial
		Isis
		Palace
		Paramount
		Plaza
		State
		Commitment to build new theatre
	Burlington	Alamance
		Carolina
		Paramount
	Canton	Colonial
		Strand
	Chapel Hill	Carolina
		Village
	Concord	Cabarrus
		Paramount
	Durham	Carolina
		Center
		Rialto
	Fayetteville	Broadway
		Carolina
		Colony
	Gastonia	Lyric
		Temple
	Goldsboro	Carolina
		Paramount
		Wayne
	Greensboro	Carolina
		Imperial National

State	City	Name of Theatre
NORTH CAROLINA —Continued	Greenville	Colony
		Pitt
		State
	Hendersonville	Carolina
		State
	Hickory	Center
		Park
	High Point	Broadhurst
		Center
		Paramount
		Rialto
	Lenoir	Center
		State
	Lexington	Carolina
		Granada
	Lumberton	Carolina
		Pastime
	Monroe	Center
		State
	Mt. Airy	Center
	Raleigh	Ambassador
		Capitol
		Palace
		State
		Varsity
	Rockingham	Little
		Richmond
	Rocky Mount	Carolina
		Center
	Salisbury	Capitol
		State
		Victory
	Wilmington	Bailey
		Bijou
		Carolina
		Royal
		Ritz
	Wilson	Carolina
		Ritz
		Wilson
	Winston-Salem	Carolina
		State
		Colonial
		Forsyth
NORTH DAKOTA	Jamestown	Star
PENNSYLVANIA	Aliquippa	Rialto
		State
		Strand
		Temple
	Ambridge	State
	Bloomsburg	Capitol
		Columbia
	Butler	Capitol
		Penn
	Carlisle	Comerford
		Strand
	Danville	Capitol
	Dickson City	Rex
	Dunmore	Orient
	Duryea	Pastime
	Forest City	Freedman
	Forty Fort	Forty Fort
		Institute
	Hawley	Ritz
	Hazleton	Capitol
		Feeley
		Grand
	Honesdale	Lyric
	Jersey Shore	Victoria
PENNSYLVANIA —Continued	Kingston	Kingston
	Lebanon	Capitol
		Colonial
		Jackson
	Luzerne	Luzerne
	Mauch Chunk	Capitol
	Miners Mills	Crystal
	Northumberland	Savoy
	Old Forge	Holland
	Olyphant	Olyphant
		Granada
	Parsons	Parsons
	Pittston	American
		Roman
	Plymouth	Shawnee
	Pottsville	Capitol
		Hippodrome
		Hollywood
	Sayre	Sayre
	Scranton	Bell
		Capitol
		Comerford
		Family
		Globe
		Rialto
		Riviera
		Roosevelt
		State
		Strand
		Temple
		Westside
		Pinebrook
	Shenandoah	Strand
	Sunbury	Rialto
		Strand
	Towanda	Keystone
	Wilkes-Barre	Capitol
		Comerford
		Hart
		Orpheum
		Penn
		Sterling
		Strand
		Temple
		Irving
	Williamsport	Capitol
		Keystone
SOUTH CAROLINA	Anderson	Drive-In
	Columbia	Drive-In
	Darlington	Liberty
		Darlington
	Florence	Carolina
		Colonial
	Greenville	Drive-In
	Greenwood	Carolina
		Ritz
		State
SOUTH DAKOTA	Madison	Lyric
		State
TENNESSEE	Elizabethton	Bonnie Kate
		Ritz
	Jackson	Paramount
		State
		Met
		Drive-In
	Kingsport	State
	Memphis	Malco
		Strand

State	City	Name of Theatre
TEXAS	Abilene	Majestic
		Palace
		Paramount
		Queen
	Amarillo	Capitol
		Paramount
		Rialto
		State
		Esquire
	Anahuac	Rig
	Arlington	Aggie
		Texan
	Arp	Rex
	Austin	Paramount
		Queen
		State
		Austin
		Capitol
		Texas
		Varsity
	Baytown	Arcadia
		Bay
	Beaumont	Gem
		Jefferson
		Lamar
		Liberty
		Star
		Tivoli
		Peoples
		Circle Drive-In
	Breckenridge	National
		Palace
	Brownsville	Capitol
		Queen
	Brownwood	Bowie
		Lyric
		Gem
	Channelview	Sanja
	Conroe	Crighton
		Liberty
	Corsicana	Grand
		Ideal
		Palace
		Rio
	Dallas	Capitol
		Dalsec
		Fair
		Forest
		Majestic
		Melba
		Palace
		Rialto
		Tower
		White
		Circle
		Inwood
		Knox
		Lakewood
		Lawn
		Esquire
		Varsity
		Village
		Wilshire
		Telenews
		Drive-In-Buckner Bvd.
		Drive-In-Northwest H'way.
TEXAS—Continued	Denison	Rialto
		Rio
		State
	Denton	Dreamland
		Palace
		Texas
	Donna	Plaza
	Eagle Lake	Cole
	Eastland	Majestic
		Lyric
	El Paso	Ellanay
		Palace
		Pershing
		Plaza
		Texas Grand Wigwam
	Fort Worth	Bowie
		Gateway
		Hollywood
		Majestic
		Palace
		Parkway
		River Oaks Worth
		Tower
		Varsity
		Bowie Drive-In
		Belknap Drive-In
		7th St. Theatre
	Galveston	Key
		Martini
		Queen
		State
		Tremont
		Broadway
	Gladewater	Cozy
		Gregg
		Palace
	Goose Creek	Palace
		Texan
	Greenville	Colonial
		Rialto
		Texan
	Groves	Lyric
	Hallettsville	Cole
	Harlingen	Arcadia
		Grande
		Rialto
		Strand
	Henderson	Palace
		Strand
	Houston	Alabama
		Almeda
		Bluebonnet
		Eastwood
		Kirby
		Majestic
		Metropolitan
		North Main
		River Oak
		Tower
		Village
		Wayside
		Yale
		Santa Rosa
		Broadway
		Garden Oaks
		Fulton

State	City	Name of Theatre
TEXAS—Continued	Houston—Continued	Shepard Drive-In
		So. Main Drive-In
		Winkler Drive-In
	Jacksonville	Jackson
		Palace
		Rialto
	Kilgore	Crim
		Strand
		Texan
	La Porte	Port
	Longview	Arlyne
		Rembert
		Rita
	Lufkin	Lynn
		Pines
		Texan
	McAllen	Azteca
		Palace
		Queen
		El Rey
	Marshall	Lynn
		Paramount
	Mercedes	Rex
		Rio
		State
	Nacogdoches	Rita
		Stonefort
		Texan
	Nederland	Rio
	Needville	Cole
	Orange	Bengal
		Gem
		Royal
		Strand
	Overton	Gem
		Strand
	Paris	Grand
		Main
		North Star
		Plaza
		Rex
	Pelly	Alamo
	Pharr	Drive-In
	Port Arthur	Majestic
		Pearce
		Peoples
		Port
		Sabine
		Strand
		Surf Drive-In
	Port Neches	Lynn
		Neches
	Richmond	Lamar
	Rosenberg	Cole
		State
	Rusk	Cherokee
	San Antonio	Aztec
		Empire
		Majestic
		Texas
		Broadway
		Laurel

State	City	Name of Theatre
TEXAS—Continued	San Antonio—Continued	State
		Sunset
		Woodlawn
	San Marcos	Hayes
		Palace
		Texas
	Silsbee	Palace
		Pines
	Temple	Arcadia
		Bell
		Gem
		Rio
		Texas
	Texarkana	Drive-In
		Paramount
		Strand
		Texan
	Tyler	Arcadia
		Liberty
		Majestic
		Tyler
	Vernon	Pictorium
		Vernon
	Waco	Orpheum
		25th Street
		Texas
		Waco
		Circle Drive-In
	Wallis	Cole
	Weslaco	Gem
		Ritz
	Wichita Falls	Majestic
		State
		Strand
		Wichita
	Yoakum	Grand
		Ritz
UTAH	Ogden	Colonial
		Orpheum
		Paramount
VERMONT	Brattleboro	Paramount
	Burlington	Flynn
		Majestic
	Montpelier	Capitol
VIRGINIA	Cape Charles	Radium
	Charlottesville	Jefferson
		Lafayette
		Paramount
		University
	Danville	Capitol
		Dan
		Rialto
	Exmore	Cameo
	Hampton	Langley
		Rex
	Hilton Village	Village
	Lynchburg	Isis
		Paramount
		Trenton
	Newport News	James
		Paramount
	Phoebus	Lee
WEST VIRGINIA	Bluefield	Granada
		State
	Wheeling	Rex
WISCONSIN	LaCrosse	Fifth Avenue
		Hollywood

The existing joint ownership in the above enumerated theatres shall be terminated as to all such theatres within three years from the date of entry of this judgment, and as to at least one-third of such theatres within one year from such date, and as to at least two-thirds of such theatres within two years from such date, in accordance with the following provisions:

(a) Paramount or the New Theatre Company shall terminate the existing joint ownership in each of said theatres by a sale or other outright transfer of the entire interest of Paramount or the New Theatre Company therein either (i) to a co-owner or co-owners, or (ii) to a person who is not a defendant herein and not owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein, except as otherwise provided in sub-paragraph (b) below.

(b) In the event that Paramount's interest in any joint ownership shall not be terminated as provided in sub-paragraph (a), Paramount or the New Theatre Company may acquire the interest of such co-owner or co-owners, after first negotiating for such acquisition with such co-owner or co-owners, in not to exceed the following theatres from the above list in each of the following communities:

State	City	Theatres
ALABAMA	Anniston	Any two of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.*
	Auburn	Tiger Theatre.
	Bessemer	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Ensley
	Jasper
	Selma
	Birmingham	Any four of the theatres above listed, only two of which may be first run theatres.
	Chickasaw	Chickasaw Theatre.
	Mobile	Any four of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
	Montgomery	Any three of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
	Troy	Enzor Theatre.
	Tuscaloosa	Any three of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
ARIZONA	Phoenix	Either one of the two drive-in theatres above listed.
ARKANSAS	Camden	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Jonesboro
	Fayetteville	Any two of the theatres above listed (only one of which may be a first run theatre) in each of these cities.
	Fort Smith
	Hot Springs
	Little Rock	Any two of the theatres above listed.
FLORIDA	Pensacola	Any three of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
GEORGIA	Athens	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Augusta
	Brunswick
	Columbus
	Gainesville
	Macon
	Waycross
	Savannah	Any two of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
IDAHO	Boise	Any two of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.

* The term "first run theatre," as used in this judgment (except where otherwise specifically stated), shall be understood to mean not necessarily the best theatre of the joint ownership or of Paramount in the particular city, but a theatre which in size, location and physical appointments is suitable for operation upon a regular policy of first run exhibition of the better pictures released by the eight distributor defendants.

State	City	Theatres
ILLINOIS	LaSalle Moline Oak Park Peru Quincy	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Rock Island Rockford	Any two of the theatres above listed (only one of which may be a first run theatre) in each of these cities.
INDIANA	Gary	Any one of the theatres above listed.
IOWA	Cedar Rapids	Any one of those theatres above listed.
	Davenport	Any two of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
	Des Moines	Any six of the theatres above listed, only two of which may be first run theatres.
	Sioux City Waterloo	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
KENTUCKY	Fulton	Any one of the theatres above listed.
	Owensboro	Any two of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
LOUISIANA	Alexandria Monroe	Any two of the theatres above listed (only one of which may be a first run theatre) in each of these cities.
	Baton Rouge New Orleans	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Shreveport	Any four of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
MAINE	Bangor Lewiston	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
MASSACHUSETTS	Haverhill Holyoke North Adams Northampton Pittsfield Springfield	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
MICHIGAN	Ann Arbor Battle Creek Flint Grand Rapids Kalamazoo Lansing Pontiac Saginaw	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Detroit	The Royal Theatre, provided however, that promptly after the acquisition by Paramount or the New Theatre Company of the interest of the co-owner therein, Paramount or the New Theatre Company shall lease the said theatre to a party not a defendant herein or owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein and which lease shall contain no rental provisions based upon a share of the profits of such theatre or any other theatre, and provided further that Paramount or the New Theatre Company shall sell such theatre property as soon as practicable and in any event before the expiration of such lease.
MINNESOTA	Fairmont	Any one of the theatres above listed.

State	City	Theatres
MISSISSIPPI	Biloxi	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Clarksdale
	Greenville
	Greenwood
	Gulfport
	Natchez
	Hattiesburg	Any two of the theatres above listed (only one of which may be a first run theatre) in each of these cities.
	Meridian
	Vicksburg
	Jackson	Any three of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
	Winona	Winona Theatre.
NEBRASKA	Fairbury	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Falls City
	Hastings
	Grand Island	Any two of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
	Omaha	Any two of the theatres above listed.
NEW HAMPSHIRE	Concord	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Portsmouth
NEW JERSEY	Newark	Any one of the theatres above listed.
NEW MEXICO	Albuquerque	Any one of the theatres above listed.
NEW YORK	Fulton	Any one of the theatres above listed.
	New York City	Rivoli Theatre.
	Rochester	Any two of the theatres above listed, only only one of which may be a first run theatre.
NO. CAROLINA	Asheboro	Carolina Theatre.
	Asheville	Any four of the theatres above listed (and which list shall be deemed to include the theatre in this city, when built, as to which there is a commitment to build), provided that such four theatres shall not include, and Paramount or the New Theatre Company shall concurrently dispose of the interest of Paramount in, one first run theatre in this city.
	Burlington	Any two of the theatres above listed (only one of which may be a first run theatre) in each of these cities.
	Durham
	Fayetteville
	Goldsboro
	Greensboro
	Greenville
	High Point
	Salisbury
	Wilmington
	Wilson
	Winston-Salem
	Canton	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Chapel Hill
	Concord
	Gastonia
	Hendersonville
	Hickory
	Lumberton
	Monroe
	Rockingham
	Rocky Mount
	Raleigh	Any three of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.

State	City	Theatres
PENNSYLVANIA	Aliquippa	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Bloomsburg
	Butler
	Carlisle
	Hazelton
	Lebanon
	Pittston
	Pottsville
	Shenandoah
	Sunbury
	Wilkes-Barre
	Williamsport
	Scranton	Any two of the theatres above listed.
SO. CAROLINA	Anderson	The drive in theatre in each of these cities.
	Columbia
	Greenville
	Greenwood	Any two of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
SO. DAKOTA	Madison	Any one of the theatres above listed.
TENNESSEE	Elizabethton	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Jackson
	Memphis
	Kingsport	State Theatre.
TEXAS	Abilene	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Beaumont
	Breckenridge
	Brownwood
	Brownsville
	Corsicana
	Denison
	Denton
	Galveston
	Harlingen
	McAllen
	Orange
	Paris
	Port Arthur
	Temple
	Tyler
	Vernon
	Wichita Falls
	Austin	Any three of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
	Amarillo	Any two of the theatres above listed (only one of which may be a first run theatre) in each of these cities.
	El Paso
	Texarkana
	Waco
	Dallas	Any seven of the theatres above listed, only two of which may be first run theatres.
	Fort Worth	Any four of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
	Houston	Any seven of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
	San Antonio	Any four of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
UTAH	Ogden	Any two of the theatres above listed, only one of which may be a first run theatre.
VIRGINIA	Charlottesville	Any one of the theatres above listed in each of these cities.
	Lynchburg
	Newport News
WISCONSIN	La Crosse	Any one of the theatres above listed.

(c) With respect to any jointly owned theatre as to which Paramount's interest shall not be sold or otherwise transferred in accordance with the provisions of sub-paragraph (a) or as to which the interest of the co-owner or co-owners shall not be acquired by Paramount or the New Theatre Company under the provisions of sub-paragraph (b) of this paragraph 9, Paramount or the New Theatre Company may negotiate with a third person who is not a defendant herein and not owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein, for a sale of the entire joint interest in such theatre to such third person and may negotiate for the acquisition thereof and thereafter acquire the interest or its co-owner or co-owners for the sole purpose of effectuating such a sale, provided that such sale shall be consummated not later than six months following such acquisition[1] and shall create substantial motion picture theatre operating competition in any community in which Paramount or the New Theatre Company shall retain any theatre.

10. From voting its stock in any of the corporations through which said joint ownerships are held for the purpose of preventing corporate action which will effectuate dissolution of such joint ownerships upon reasonable terms in accordance with paragraph 9 hereof.

B. Paramount owns a beneficial interest in the following theatres, and the only other beneficial interests in such theatres are those of persons who are solely investors: Houlton and Temple Theatres, Houlton, Me.; Empire, Park and Strand Theatres, Rockland, Me.; Chateau, Empress, Lawler and Time Theatres, Rochester, Minn.; Avon, Broadway, State and Winona Theatres, Winona, Minn.; and Grand, Paramount and Strand Theatres, Rutland, Vt.

1. As to not to exceed the following theatres from the above list, Paramount or the New Theatre Company may elect to acquire the interest of the co-owner or co-owners therein, or to sell or otherwise transfer the interest of Paramount therein in accordance with the provisions of sub-paragraph (a) or (c) of paragraph 9 of sub-section A of this Section III, or to continue the same in the existing joint ownership applicable thereto:

Any one of the theatres above listed in Houlton, Me.

Any two of the theatres above listed in Rockland, Me., only one of which may be a first run theatre.

Any two of the theatres above listed in Rochester, Minn., only one of which may be a first run theatre.

Any two of the theatres above listed in Winona, Minn., only one of which may be a first run theatre.

Any two of the theatres above listed in Rutland, Vt., only one of which may be a first run theatre.

2. The remainder of the theatres above listed in the first paragraph of this sub-section B shall be disposed of by Paramount or the New Theatre Company, or by the existing joint ownership if continued as above provided for in this sub-section B, to a person not a defendant herein and not owned or controlled or affiliated with a defendant herein, in accordance with the provisions of sub-paragraph (a) or (c) of said paragraph 9.

3. The provisions set forth in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this sub-section B shall be effectuated within two years from the date hereof and in such a manner as to create substantial motion picture theatre operating competition in any community in which Paramount or the New Theatre Company, or the joint ownership if continued as above provided, shall retain any theatres.

C. 1. For the purpose of creating substantial motion picture theatre operating competition in the communities hereinafter listed, Paramount or the New Theatre Company shall dispose of all of the interests of Paramount in at least one half of the following motion picture theatres within one year from the date hereof, and in all of the following motion picture theatres within two years from the date hereof, and each such disposition shall be to a party not a defendant herein or owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein:

One theatre in each of the following cities in Florida: Bartow and Bradenton.

Two theatres in Clearwater, Fla.*

One first run theatre in Daytona Beach, Fla.

One theatre in Deland, Fla.

Two theatres in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., one of which shall be a first run theatre.

[[1] By order of September 5, 1950, the words "six months following such acquisition" were changed to read "October 5, 1950" CCH.]

The Ritz Theatre in Fort Myers, Fla.

One first run theatre in Gainesville, Fla.

One theatre in Hollywood, Fla., which theatre shall not be the theatre located in the Hollywood Hotel.

Three theatres in Jacksonville, Fla., one of which shall be a first run theatre.

Two theatres in Lakeland, Fla., one of which shall be a first run theatre.

One theatre in Lake Worth, Fla.

One first run theatre in Ocala, Fla.

Two theatres in Orlando, Fla., one of which shall be a first run theatre.

One theatre in Plant City, Fla.

One theatre in St. Augustine, Fla.

Four theatres in St. Petersburg, Fla., of which one shall be a first run theatre.

One theatre in Sanford, Fla.

One theatre in Sarasota, Fla.

One first run theatre in West Palm Beach, Fla.

One theatre in Winter Park, Fla.

One first run theatre in Atlanta, Ga.

One theatre in Preston, Idaho.

One first run theatre in Bloomington, Ill.

One first run theatre in Elgin, Ill.

One first run theatre in Kankakee, Ill.

One theatre in Pekin, Ill.

One first run theatre in Peoria, Ill.

One first run theatre in South Bend, Ind.

One theatre in Danville, Ky.

One theatre in Bath, Maine.

The Regent Theatre and the Annex Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

One theatre in Austin, Minn.

One first run theatre in Mankato, Minn.

One first run theatre in Minneapolis, Minn.

One first run theatre in St. Cloud, Minn.

One first run theatre in St. Paul, Minn.

One theatre in Peekskill, N. Y.

One first run theatre in Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

One first run theatre in Charlotte, N. C.

One first run theatre in Fargo, N. D.

One first run theatre in Minot, N. D.

One theatre in Bellevue, Ohio.

One first run theatre in each of the following cities: Fremont, Ohio, Hamilton, Ohio, and Middletown, Ohio.

One first run theatre in each of the following cities: Columbia, S. C. and Spartanburg, S. C.

One theatre in Sumter, S. C.

One first run theatre in Aberdeen, S. D.

One first run theatre in Huron, S. D.

One first run theatre in Watertown, S. D.

One first run theatre in Chattanooga, Tenn.

Two first run theatres in Knoxville, Tenn.

One theatre in Logan, Utah.

One theatre in Provo, Utah.

One theatre in Barre, Vt.

One theatre in Eau Claire, Wis.

As to not to exceed twelve of the foregoing theatres, in the event that Paramount or the New Theatre Company is unable to sell on reasonable terms, Paramount or the New Theatre Company, upon application to the Court in any such case and with the approval of the Court first obtained, may lease or sublease the same to a party not a defendant herein or owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein; on condition, however, that no such lease or sublease shall contain any rental provisions based upon a share of the profits of the theatre covered by the lease or any other theatre; and further on condition that Paramount or the New Theatre Company shall thereafter sell its interest in any such theatre so leased or subleased as soon thereafter as it can do so upon reasonable terms and in any event prior to the expiration of such lease or sublease.

2. If the existing decree entered in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, in the case of Florence B. Bigelow, et al. against RKO Radio Pictures Inc., et al., shall be modified or vacated, and if, after such modification or vacating, the competitive situation in outlying Chicago (outlying Chicago for the purposes hereof including the entire city of Chicago except the downtown portion of Chicago and also including Berwyn, Blue Island, Chicago Heights, Evanston, La Grange and Oak Park) shall be less favorable for the independent exhibitors in outlying Chicago (an independent exhibitor for the purposes hereof meaning an exhibitor who is not a defendant herein or owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein), and if such less favorable competitive situation shall be shown by the Attorney General to the satisfaction of the Court in which this consent judgment is entered, then such Court may order such relief against, or with respect to, the theatres of Paramount or the New Theatre Company located in outlying Chicago as it may deem just or proper in order to create proper competitive conditions in outlying Chicago or in any particular section thereof.

3. As to the cities hereinafter mentioned in this paragraph 3, Paramount or the New Theatre Company (in lieu of disposing of the interest of Paramount in any motion picture theatres in such cities) shall commence within six months from the date hereof, and shall thereafter, until in any case the Attorney General otherwise consents in writing or, if such consent cannot be obtained, the Court otherwise orders, operate (a) only one first run theatre *, as distinguished from a theatre or theatres operating other than first run, in each of the following cities: Tucson, Ariz.; Aurora, Ill.; Alton, Ill.; Danville, Ill.; Decatur, Ill.; Galesburg, Ill.; Kewanee, Ill.; Joliet, Ill.; Waukegan, Ill.; Grand Forks, N. D.; Anderson, S. C.; Greenville, S. C., and Mitchell, S. D., and (b) only two first run theatres in San Francisco, Cal., in Duluth, Minn., and in Sioux Falls, S. D.

D. If Paramount so elects, the "theatre assets of Paramount located in the United States" and to be transferred to the New Theatre Company as provided in this judgment may be construed as not to include the Paramount Theatre property in New York, N. Y. Such property, if not so included, shall be regarded as being included in the other assets of the Paramount defendants to be transferred to the New Picture Company as provided in this judgment, provided, however, that (a) the theatre portion of such property may not be operated by the New Picture Company and may not be leased by Paramount or the New Picture Company to a defendant herein or a person owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein but may be leased by Paramount or the New Picture Company to the New Theatre Company (or a subsidiary of the New Theatre Company) under a lease which contains no rental provisions based upon a share of the profits of the theatre so leased or any other theatre, and (b) such property shall be sold by the New Picture Company within five years from the date hereof to a party not a defendant herein or owned or controlled by or affiliated with a defendant herein.

IV

[Formation of Independent Companies]

A. Within a period not to exceed one year after the entry of this judgment the New Theatre Company and the New Picture Company shall be operated wholly independently of one another and shall have no common directors, officers, agents or employees. Each of them shall thereafter be enjoined from attempting to control or influence the business or operating policies of the other by any means whatsoever. The foregoing provisions shall not be construed to prohibit the directors, officers, agents or employees of Paramount Pictures Inc. who become affiliated with either one of said new companies and who receive stock in such companies, either in exchange for stock presently held by them in Paramount Pictures Inc. or as the result of the exercise of option privileges now owned by them or who receive certificates of interest in the New Theatre Company issued by the Trustee as herein provided, from so acquiring stock or certificates of interest in the company with which they do not become affiliated and holding such stock or certificates of interest for a sufficient period of time to permit them to sell such stock or certificates of interest to persons not affiliated with the seller's company without undue hardship to the seller, provided that in any event such sales shall be made within a period not to exceed one year from the effective date of the reorganization of Paramount Pictures Inc.

B. The by-laws of the New Theatre Company shall provide that a majority of its Board of Directors shall consist of individuals who have not had any prior connection with the defendant, Paramount Pictures Inc., or the New Picture Company, as directors, officers, agents or employees. The names of the candidates for election or designation to the original Board of Directors of the New Theatre Company shall be submitted to and approved by the Attorney General and the Court.

C. The by-laws of the New Picture Company shall provide that all replacements of members of the Board of Directors on and after the date of reorganization of Paramount Pictures Inc. shall be filled by individuals who have not had any prior connection with the defendant Paramount Pictures Inc. or the New Theatre Company as directors, officers, agents or employees, until such time as a majority of the Board of Directors of the New Picture Company shall consist of such individuals and such Board shall thereafter continue to have such a majority.

* The term "first run theatre," as used in this paragraph 3, shall be understood to mean a theatre with a policy of playing features in the particular city on a first run basis, other than second choice or western features or features released by distributors other than the defendants herein.

V

[Transfer of Assets]

A. The defendant, Paramount Pictures, Inc., shall present to its stockholders, prior to April 19, 1949, a plan of reorganization to effect a divorcement of its theatre assets located in the United States from its other assets. Such plan shall provide that one of the new companies, viz., the New Theatre Company, shall receive the said theatre assets, and the other, viz. the New Picture Company, shall receive the said other assets, and the two new companies shall each issue to Paramount Pictures Inc. in exchange for the assets so received a number of shares of their common capital stock equal to one-half the aggregate amount of common capital stock of Paramount Pictures Inc. then outstanding. Paramount Pictures Inc. shall be dissolved and (a) shall distribute the stock of the New Picture Company pro rata among its own stockholders, and (b) shall on behalf of its stockholders transfer the shares of the New Theatre Company to, and register the same in the name of Bank of New York and Fifth Avenue Bank, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of New York, as Trustee, hereinafter called the Trustee, to hold in accordance with the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth.

B. Upon the organization of the New Picture Company, Paramount Pictures Inc. shall cause the New Picture Company to file with the Court its consent to be bound by, and receive the benefits of, the terms of sections II, IV, VI (in so far as section VI is applicable to the New Picture Company), VIII and IX of this judgment, and thereafter the New Picture Company shall be in all respects bound by, and receive the benefits of, the terms of such sections of this judgment.

C. Upon the organization of the New Theatre Company, Paramount Pictures Inc. shall cause the New Theatre Company to file with the Court its consent to be bound by, and receive the benefits of, the terms of sections III, IV, VI, VIII and IX of this judgment, and thereafter the New Theatre Company shall be in all respects bound by, and receive the benefits of, the terms of such sections of this judgment.

VI

[Supervision of Trustee]

A. The Trustee shall declare its submission to the jurisdiction of this Court for all purposes of this cause, and shall enter its appearance herein by counsel, and is made a party hereto; and said Trustee is hereby appointed to receive and hold, as the custodian of this Court, subject to the provisions of this judgment and to the further orders and judgment of the Court herein, the shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company which shall be transferred to it as above provided for the purpose of assuring effective separation of the ownership and control of the New Picture Company from the ownership and control of the New Theatre Company.

B. The Trustee shall execute and issue certificates of interest representing the shares transferred to it hereunder and shall deliver them to the defendant, Paramount Pictures Inc., which shall distribute such certificates of interest, together with the shares of stock of the New Picture Company, pro rata among its own stockholders. All such certificates shall be registered by the Trustee in the names of the recipients.

C. The certificates of interest issued hereunder may be in such denominations as the Trustee shall elect. The certificates of interest shall be executed on behalf of the Trustee by such officer or officers of the Trustee as it may authorize, and such certificates of interest may be countersigned by a trust company in the City of New York as registrar.

D. The Trustee shall, so long as any of the shares of the capital stock of the New Theatre Company shall be held by the Trustee, collect and receive any and all cash dividends declared by the New Theatre Company appertaining to the shares so held, which shall be payable to the Trustee as the registered stockholder entitled to such dividends by the terms of the declaration thereof. Such dividends shall be held by the Trustee as trustee for the respective registered holders of certificates of interest to be paid to or upon their order as hereinafter provided.

The Trustee shall as soon as practicable after receipt of each cash dividend pay to each registered holder of a certificate of interest an amount which is equal to 50% of the amount of such dividend applicable to the shares of stock represented by such certificate of interest, in order to permit the holder thereof to apply such amount toward payment of income taxes on the income deemed to have been constructively received by him by virtue of the payment of such dividend to the Trustee; provided, however, that unless at least 51% of the shares of stock of the New Theatre Company have been released by the Trustee and registered in names other than that of the Trustee within two years from the date of creation of the Trust, the Trustee shall retain 100% of the dividends thereafter paid to it by the New Theatre Company and shall thereafter pay over no part of such dividends to certificate holders as provided above.

E. At any time upon the surrender to the Trustee at its office in the City of New York of any outstanding certificates of interest by the registered holder thereof, or his transferee, and the filing with the Trustee of a duly executed affidavit, substantially in the forms annexed as "FORMS A THROUGH B", the Trustee shall as soon as practicable unless it has reason to believe that the facts are not as represented in the affidavit, deliver to such applicant stock certificates for the number of shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company represented by the surrendered certificates of interest. The term "applicant" as hereinafter used shall refer to a registered holder of a certificate of interest, or his transferee, who may surrender such certificate of interest to the Trustee in accordance with this or any of the succeeding paragraphs.

If at any time the number of shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company held by the Trustee have been reduced by the conversion of certificates of interest in accordance with the preceding paragraph to 33⅓% or less of the total number of shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company outstanding, the Court may, upon application of the New Theatre Company, declare the trust terminated and all shares released therefrom if the Court shall first find that upon such termination there will be no working control of or controlling influence over the New Theatre Company by a person or persons affiliated with the New Picture Company, and no working control of or controlling influence over the New Picture Company by a person or persons affiliated with the New Theatre Company.

In the event of an order of the Court terminating the Trust in accordance with the preceding paragraph, it shall be the duty of the New Theatre Company promptly to notify the holders of certificates of interest; and thereafter, upon the surrender to the Trustee at its office in the City of New York of any outstanding certificate of interest by an applicant whose shares have been released by such direction or order, the Trustee shall as soon as practicable deliver to the applicant stock certificates for the number of shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company represented by the surrendered certificate of interest.

When certificates of interest are surrendered to the Trustee for transfer and the circumstances are not such as to entitle the applicant to the issuance of a certificate for shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company, the Trustee shall issue a new certificate of interest in the name specified by the applicant.

F. Upon the delivery by the Trustee of a certificate for shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company against the surrender of an outstanding certificate of interest or upon the transfer of a certificate of interest into the name of a new registered holder, the Trustee shall pay in cash, to or upon the order of the person in whose name the surrendered certificate (or the certificate delivered for transfer) is registered, the amount of all cash dividends received by the Trustee appertaining to the number of shares represented by such certificate during the period in which such person was the registered holder of such certificate, less the amount theretofore released and paid by it in respect of the shares represented by such certificate, but without interest thereon, as well as the amount of any dividends in respect of such shares which have been declared by the New Theatre Company payable on a date subsequent to the surrender (or delivery for transfer) of the certificate of interest to holders of record on a date prior to such surrender (or delivery for transfer).

G. The Trustee shall at any time after the end of four years from the date of the creation of the Trust, if the Attorney General so requests, and in any event not later than five years from such date, mail to each of the registered holders of remaining certificates of interest, addressed to him at the last known post office address appearing on the books of the Trustee, a notice stating that the shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company remaining in the name of the Trustee as of a date not less than ninety days after the mailing of such notice, will be sold and the net proceeds distributed among such holders in proportion to the number of shares represented by their certificates; and as promptly as practicable after the date specified in such notice, the Trustee shall sell, in such manner as the Court shall direct, the remaining shares in the Trust to persons who are not owners of stock in the New Picture Company and upon distribution of the net proceeds (together with any dividends in the hands of the Trustee to which the holders of the remaining certificates of interest may be entitled) the Trust shall terminate.

H. If it shall appear to the Court or the Attorney General at the time that the Trust is proposed to be terminated, as provided in subsections E or G of this section VI, that a working control of or controlling influence over the affairs of either of the two new companies is being exerted by or on behalf of a person or persons affiliated with the other such company, and the Court finds that such a working control or controlling influence exists, the Court may take such action as may be necessary and appropriate in respect of such persons to ensure the termination of such working control or controlling influence, including, but not limited to, if such persons are stockholders of either company, the suspension of their right to vote or to receive dividends upon their stock, and, if such persons are officers, agents, directors or employees of either company, their removal from such positions.

I. Any shares which may be issued by the New Theatre Company during the existence of the Trust provided for herein, shall likewise be transferred to the Trustee and be subject to the terms of this judgment unless the person to whom such shares are proposed to be issued files an affidavit in substantially the forms annexed marked "FORM A THROUGH B" with the New Theatre Company.

J. To aid the Court in the enforcement of this judgment, appropriate provisions shall be made in the charters or the by-laws of the New Picture Company and the New Theatre Company requiring that so long as the Trust provided for herein is in existence any person to whom a dividend is paid (other than the Trustee) shall have first disclosed the identity of the beneficial owner of the shares in respect of which the dividend is payable, and that, in the event that one of such companies shall not have paid a dividend within thirty days of a dividend payment by the other, any person (other than the Trustee) to whom the dividend is paid shall also have first disclosed the extent of any beneficial ownership such person and the beneficial owner may then have in the other company. Before the Trust is terminated both of said companies will procure from all of the stockholders then of record and the transfer agents whatever additional data as to beneficial ownership may be necessary to determine accurately as of the date of proposed termination the names of all beneficial owners of stock and the amounts respectively held by them.

K. The two new companies shall make arrangements with their transfer agents for the submission to each of them, at any desired intervals, of all such information as will enable such companies to determine the name of every person who is a holder of shares (or certificates of interest) in both companies, and the number of shares (including shares represented by certificates of interest) in each company standing in his name, and such information will be made available to the Attorney General.

L. All certificates of interest surrendered pursuant to conversions or exchanges effected under this section VI shall forthwith be cancelled by the Trustee and shall not be reissued.

Within 60 days after the conversion of certificates of interest as herein provided shall have commenced, and at monthly intervals thereafter, the Trustee shall file with the New Theatre Company a report showing the aggregate amounts of certificates of interest transferred and converted since the last previous report of the Trustee and the names of all persons to whom share of stock of the New Theatre Company shall have been issued pursuant to every such conversion and to whom certificates of interest shall have been transferred; and from time to time upon the request of the Attorney General the Trustee shall furnish him with any information which he may require relating to the carrying out of this judgment.

M. The Trustee shall exercise full voting rights on the shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company registered in its name, having due regard for the interests of the holders of the certificates of interest, in accordance with the terms, conditions and purposes of this judgment.

N. The Trustee shall keep at an office maintained by it in the City of New York books for the transfer of the certificates of interest issued hereunder. The Trustee shall furnish to the New Theatre Company as and when requested lists containing the names and addresses of the holders of certificates of interest and the respective amounts held by them.

The Trustee may to enable it to effect the purposes of this judgment (so far as consistent with the provisions hereof), decide all matters of detail in respect of the form of certificates of interest and the arrangements necessary for their issuance and transfer.

The Trustee shall be accountable for its action hereunder only in proceedings in this cause, and any order of the Court entered upon notice to the Trustee and to the New Theatre Company shall be full protection to the Trustee for any action which it may take pursuant thereto, and any action so taken by the Trustee shall be binding upon all holders of certificates of interest. The Trustee shall not be liable to anyone for deferring to take any action until instructed by the Court.

O. In case any certificate of interest issued hereunder shall become mutilated or be destroyed, the Trustee, in its discretion, may issue a new certificate of interest of the same denomination in lieu of such mutilated or destroyed certificate. In case of loss or destruction, the applicant for a substituted certificate of interest shall furnish to the Trustee evidence of such loss or destruction to the satisfaction of the Trustee in its discretion and such reasonable indemnity as the Trustee shall require.

P. The Trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation, the amount thereof to be approved by the Court, for all services by it hereunder, which compensation, together with counsel fees and other expenses incurred hereunder and approved by the Court, and all stamp and other taxes imposed by law upon the transfer of the shares of the New Theatre Company from the Trustee to the holders of certificates of interest, shall be paid by the New Theatre Company.

Q. The Trustee shall be subject to removal by the Court in its discretion and, in the event of such removal, or in the event of the resignation of such Trustee, the Court may appoint a successor Trustee. The term "Trustee" as herein used shall be deemed to refer to any such successor Trustee.

VII

[Transitory Period]

A. Nothing contained in this judgment shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of the Paramount defendants, during the period required for the completion of the reorganization of the Paramount defendants, which shall in any event occur within one year of the entry of this judgment, to license or in any way to provide for the exhibition of any or all of the motion pictures which it may distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which Paramount Pictures Inc. has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this judgment a proprietary interest of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries.

B. From and after the effective date of the reorganization of the Paramount defendants, the provision of the preceding paragraph shall terminate and be of no effect; and from and after such date all licenses of motion pictures distributed by the New Picture Company or Paramount Pictures Inc. for exhibition in any theatre, regardless of its owner or operator, shall be in all respects subject to the terms of this judgment.

VIII

[Enforcement]

A. For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this judgment, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interviews counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant may be present. For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment any defendant upon the written request of the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General, shall submit such reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this judgment.

B. Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

IX

[1946 Decree Superseded]

A. This judgment is rendered and entered in lieu of and in substitution for the decree of this Court dated December 31, 1946. This judgment shall be of no further force and effect and this cause shall be restored to the docket without prejudice to either party if the proposed reorganization of the Paramount defendants shall not have been approved by the stockholders of Paramount Pictures Inc. prior to April 19, 1949.

B. For the purpose of any application under this judgment, the plaintiff and the defendant, Paramount Pictures Inc., hereby waive the necessity of convening a court of three judges pursuant to the expediting certificate filed herein on June 13, 1945; and agree that any application may be determined by any judge sitting in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

Any application by either party under this judgment shall be upon reasonable notice to the other.

C. Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this consent judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, modification or carrying out the same (including applications for alternative relief to accomplish termination of any joint ownership in a manner consistent with the purposes of this judgment in situations where none of the methods of terminating any such joint ownership provided in paragraph 9 of section III of this judgment has effected such termination, due to the unreasonableness of Paramount or a co-owner), for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

Forms

"FORM A-1"

(Individual Form)

STATE OF .... } COUNTY OF .... } ss:

.... being duly sworn deposes and says:

That deponent is surrendering a certificate or certificates of interest registered in the name of .... numbered ...., issued by ...., as Trustee, under a judgment entered on the ..... day of ...., 1949 by a statutory three judge District Court in the suit of United States of America v. Paramount Pictures Inc. and others; that he is the beneficial owner of .... shares of capital stock of .... (herein referred to as the New Theatre Company) represented by said certificate or certificates; and that he makes this affidavit for the purpose of procuring the issuance in the name of deponent of a certificate or certificates for such shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company held by said Trustee in exchange for said certificate or certificates of interest. That deponent does not own any beneficial interest in any shares of the capital stock of .... (herein referred to as the New Picture Company) a corporation of the State of ...., whether registered in deponent's name on the books of the New Picture Company or registered in the name or names of others. That deponent in making this application is not acting either directly or indirectly for or on behalf of any stockholder of the New Picture Company, or in concert, agreement or understanding with any other individual, firm or corporation for the control of the New Theatre Company in the interest of any individual, firm or corporation affiliated with the New Picture Company, but in his own behalf in good faith.

Sworn to before me this .... day of ...., 19....

"FORM A-2"

(Form for Joint Tenants and Tenants in Common)

STATE OF ....} ss:
COUNTY OF ....}

......................being duly sworn deposes and says:

That deponent is one of .... joint tenants (or tenants in common), all of such tenants being herein referred to as the "Applicants"; that he is, pursuant to authority duly conferred on him, surrendering on behalf of Applicants a certificate or certificates of interest registered in the name of ...., numbered ...., issued by ...., as Trustee, under a judgment entered on the ....day of ...., 1949 by a statutory three judge District Court in the suit of United States of America v. Paramount Pictures Inc. and others; that the Applicants are the beneficial owners of .... shares of capital stock of .... (herein referred to as the New Theatre Company) represented by said certificate or certificates; and that deponent makes this affidavit for the purpose of procuring the issuance in the name of the Applicants of a certificate or certificates for such shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company held by said Trustee in exchange for said certificate or certificates of interest. That none of the Applicants owns any beneficial interest in any shares of the capital stock of ....(herein referred to as the New Picture Company) a corporation of the State of ...., whether registered in his own name on the books of said New Picture Company or registered in the name or names of others. That Applicants in making this application are not acting either directly or indirectly for or on behalf of any stockholder of the New Picture Company, or in concert, agreement or understanding with any other individual, firm or corporation for the control of the New Theatre Company in the interest of any individual, firm or corporation affiliated with the New Picture Company, but in their own behalf in good faith.

Sworn to before me this ....day of ...., 19....

"FORM A-3"

(Partnership Form)

STATE OF ....} ss:
COUNTY OF ....}

......................being duly sworn deposes and says:

That deponent is a member of the partnership of ...., the members of which are .... (hereinafter called the "Applicants"); that he is, pursuant to authority duly conferred on him, surrendering on behalf of Applicants a certificate or certificates of interest registered in the name of ...., numbered ...., issued by ...., as Trustee, under a judgment entered on the .... day of ...., 1949 by a statutory three judge District Court in the suit of United States of America v. Paramount Pictures Inc. and others; that Applicants are the beneficial owners of .... shares of capital stock of .... (herein referred to as the New Theatre Company) represented by said certificate or certificates; and that deponent makes this affidavit for the purpose of procuring the issuance in the name of the Applicants of a certificate or certificates for such shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company held by said Trustee in exchange for said certificate or certificates of interest. That none of the Applicants owns any beneficial interest in any shares of the capital stock of .... (herein referred to as the New Picture Company) a corporation of the State of ...., whether registered in his own name on the books of said New Picture Company or registered in the name or names of others. That Applicants in making this application are not acting either directly or indirectly for or on behalf of any stockholder of the New Picture Company, or in concert, agreement or understanding with any other individual, firm or corporation for the control of the New Theatre Company in the interest of any individual, firm or corporation affiliated with the New Picture Company, but in their own behalf in good faith.

Sworn to before me this ....day of ...., 19....

"FORM A-4"
(Corporate Form)

STATE OF .... } ss:
COUNTY OF .... }

........................being duly sworn deposes and says:

That deponent is .... of the ...., a corporation (or a joint stock company), hereinafter called the "Applicant"; that he is, pursuant to authority duly conferred on him, surrendering on behalf of Applicant a certificate or certificates of interest registered in the name of ...., numbered ...., issued by .... as Trustee, under a judgment entered on the ...... day of ...., 1949 by a statutory three judge District Court in the suit of United States of America v. Paramount Pictures Inc. and others; that Applicant is the beneficial owner of .... shares of capital stock of .... (hereinfater referred to as the New Theatre Company) represented by said certificate or certificates; and that deponent makes this affidavit for the purpose of procuring the issuance in the name of the Applicant of a certificate or certificates for such shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company held by said Trustee in exchange for said certificate or certificates of interest. That Applicant does not own any beneficial interest in any shares of the capital stock of .... (herein referred to as the New Picture Company) a corporation of the State of ...., whether registered in the Applicant's own name on the books of the New Picture Company or registered in the name or names of others. That the Applicant in making this application is not acting either directly or indirectly for or on behalf of any stockholder of the New Picture Company, or in concert, agreement or understanding with any other individual, firm or corporation for the control of the New Theatre Company in the interest of any individual, firm or corporation affiliated with the New Picture Company, but in its own behalf in good faith.

Sworn to before me this .... day of ...., 19...

"FORM A-5"
(Trustee Form)

STATE OF .... } ss:
COUNTY OF .... }

........................being duly sworn deposes and says:

That deponent is trustee under the .. trust, that on behalf of such trust estate he is surrendering a certificate or certificates of interest registered in the name of ...., numbered ...., issued by ...., as Trustee, under a judgment entered on the .... day of ...., 1949 by a statutory three judge District Court in the suit of United States of America v. Paramount Pictures Inc. and others; that such trust estate is the beneficial owner of .... shares of capital stock of .... (herein referred to as the New Theatre Company) represented by said certificate or certificates; and that deponent makes this affidavit for the purpose of procuring the issuance in the name of the trust estate of a certificate or certificates for such shares of capital stock of the New Theatre Company held by said Trustee in exchange for said certificate or certificates of interest. That such trust estate does not own any beneficial interest in any shares of the capital stock of .... (herein referred to as the New Picture Company) a corporation of the State of ...., whether registered in the name of such trust estate on the books of said New Picture Company or registered in the name or names of others. That deponent in making this application is not acting either directly or indirectly for or on behalf of any stockholder of the New Picture Company, or in concert, agreement or understanding with any other individual, firm or corporation for the control of the New Theatre Company in the interest of any individual, firm or corporation affiliated with the New Picture Company, but in behalf of such trust estate in good faith.

Sworn to before me this .... day of ...., 19...

[¶ 62,378] Philip Klein, trading as Phil's Distributors, v. National Pressure Cooker Company.

In the Supreme Court of the State of Delaware. No. 9. February Session, 1948 Term, February 21, 1949.

Delaware Fair Trade Act

Constitutionality of Fair Trade Act Upheld.—In an action brought by a manufacturer of pressure cookers against a retailer for violations of fair trade agreements executed pursuant to the Delaware Fair Trade Act the respondent raised the defense of the Act's unconstitutionality. It was argued that the inclusion in the title of the expression "through the use of voluntary contracts . . ." restricts the subject matter of the Act and that the provision in Section 6 binding persons having no privity of contract is invalid as not being within the scope of the title. In rejecting the argument, the Court held that the words relied upon by the appellant were simply descriptive of the method in which the intent of the Act was to be carried out and upon reading the title of the Act the whole purpose thereof became apparent.

See the Delaware Fair Trade Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8124; and Resale Price Maintenance Commentary, Vol. 2, ¶ 7134.

For the appellant: F. William Carr (of Killoran and Van Brunt of Wilmington).

For the appellee: David F. Anderson (of Sutherland, Berl and Potter, of Wilmington).

RICHARDS, C. J., TERRY, CAREY, PEARSON and LAYTON, J. J., sitting.

[Pleadings]

This is an appeal from a decree entered in the Court of Chancery in and for New Castle County.

The complainant below, National Pressure Cooker Co., a Wisconsin corporation, filed its bill against the respondent, Philip Klein, trading as Phil's Distributors, seeking an injunction to restrain and enjoin the respondent from engaging in unfair competition with the complainant in violation of the provisions of Chapter 201, Volume 43, Laws of Delaware, designated as the "Fair Trade Act."

The pertinent allegations of the bill are that the complainant for some years past has been a producer and distributor of certain commodities known as pressure cookers, together with certain appliances used in connection therewith which are distributed, marketed and sold at retail to the consumer under the following brand or trade names: "Presto Cooker," "National Pressure Cooker," "Presto Divider," "Aluna Cleaning Pads," and "Presto Timer"; that the complainant has spent large sums of money to advertise and promote the sales of its products under the brands or trade names as indicated, and has a valuable property interest in the good will attached to such names and its products; that in order to protect its corporate name, brands or trade names and good will, and pursuant to the provisions of the "Fair Trade Act," complainant entered into fair trade contracts, commencing on February 14, 1945, with a large number of retail dealers who sell its products in this State; that such fair trade agreements between the complainant and its local dealers are still in force and effect; that pursuant to the aforementioned fair trade agreements, the complainant promulgated a schedule of the applicable minimum resale prices for the products manufactured, produced and distributed by it for retail sale in this State, designated as a "Fair Trade Price List," which schedule was attached to each contract and which price list also is now in effect in this State; that the respondent is an individual engaged in the retail sale of commodities, articles and home appliances in the City of Wilmington and has never entered into a contract with the complainant under the provisions of the "Fair Trade Act"; that the respondent has been informed and notified of the fair trade agreements, including the fair trade price list which is now in force and effect in this State, between the complainant and a number of retail dealers who sell the complainant's products; that the respondent has sold and offered for sale, and will continue to sell and offer for sale, the complainant's products as indicated under the brand or trade names aforesaid at prices below the applicable minimum resale price contained in the fair trade price list, as established by the complainant in violation of the provisions of the "Fair Trade Act"; that the respondent has repeatedly ignored the complainant's request that he refrain from selling or offering for sale the complainant's products under the brand or trade names above designated at prices below the applicable minimum resale prices in force and effect in this State; that the good will of the complainant and the good will attached to complainant's products, which are marketed or sold under the brand or trade names above set forth, will be irreparably damaged and injured in this State and elsewhere unless the respondent is restrained and enjoined from engaging in unfair competition in the respects as set forth, and that, even though the respondent is not a party to a fair trade contract with complainant under the provisions of the statute, the respondent nevertheless is guilty of unfair competition.

The bill concludes with a prayer that the respondent, his agents, servants, employees, associates or other persons in any manner connected with the respondent, be perpetually enjoined and restrained from engaging in unfair competition with the complainant in violation of the "Fair Trade Act of this State," and from willfully and knowingly advertising, selling, or offering for sale any commodity manufactured, produced or distributed by complainant under the brand or trade names of "Presto Cooker," "National Pressure Cooker," "Presto Divider," "Aluna Cleaning Pads," "Presto Timer," or any of them at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the Delaware "Fair Trade Act" between complainant and any other person in this State.

The respondent demurred, averring "that the provisions of the Delaware Fair Trade Act (Act of April 22, 1944, Chapter 201, Volume 43, Laws of Delaware), upon which the complainant's cause of action is based, are unconstitutional and hence void by reason of the failure of the title to said Fair Trade Act to comply with the requirements of Article 2, Section 16 of the Constitution of the State of Delaware."

The Chancellor entered a decree wherein he overruled the respondent's demurrer. From this decree the respondent has appealed.

[Appeal Court Opinion]

TERRY, J., delivering the opinion of the Court: The sole question to be determined is whether or not the title of "The Fair Trade Act (Chapter 201, Volume 43, Laws of Delaware)" is sufficient to give a fair and reasonable notice to the legislators and to the general public or the subject matter of the legislation proposed.

The title and pertinent provisions of the Act are as follows:

> "AN ACT to protect trademark owners, producers, distributors and the general public against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of competitive commodities bearing a distinguishing trademark, brand or name, through the use of voluntary contracts establishing minimum retail prices and providing for refusal to sell unless such minimum retail prices are observed."

Under Section 1 certain terms are defined, such as commodity, producer, wholesaler, retailer and person.

Section 2 provides that no contract relating to the sale or resale of a commodity which bears a trademark, brand or name of the producer or distributor shall be deemed in violation of any law of Delaware by reason of the provisions under which the seller requires the buyer not to sell at less than the minimum prices established by the seller.

Section 3 provides that "for the purpose of preventing evasion of the resale price restrictions imposed in respect to any commodity by any contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of this Act," certain specified practices, such as combination sales, shall be deemed a violation of such resale price restrictions.

Section 4 provides that the minimum resale price may be fixed by only the owner or distributor specifically authorized by the owner of the trademark, brand or name.

Section 5 exempts certain resales which otherwise would be covered by a contract entered into under the Act.

Section 6 provides: "Willfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of this Act, whether the person so advertising, offering for resale or selling is or is not a party to such a contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby."

Section 7 provides that the Act shall not apply to the contracts between purchasers.

Section 8 contains the usual severability clause.

Section 9 repeals inconsistent Acts.

Section 10 designates the Act to be known as "Fair Trade Act."

[Argument of appellant]

The appellant contends that the Act is unconstitutional, as applied to him, by reason of the failure of the title of the Act to comply with the requirements of Article 2, Section 16 of our Constitution.

> "Article 2. Section 16: No bill or joint resolution, except bills appropriating money for public purposes, shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in the title."

Two distinct subjects are included in the constitutional provisions; first, that no bill shall embrace more than one subject; the second, with which we are concerned, that the subject shall be expressed in the title. The question to be decided is whether or not the subject of the Act is expressed in the title, or, as applicable to the present case, does the title of the "Fair Trade Act" adequately express the subject of the Act notwithstanding that by Section 6 it purports to affect persons who are not parties to "voluntary contracts establishing minimum resale prices" as well as parties to such contracts?

The appellant argues that the first part of the title states that the purpose of the Act is to protect trademark owners, producers, distributors and the public; that under the next portion these persons are to be protected against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of competitive commodities bearing a distinguishing trademark, brand or name; that it then concludes by stating how this protection is to be enforced; that is, "through the use of voluntary contracts establishing minimum resale prices and providing for refusal to sell unless such minimum resale prices are observed."

It is argued that the inclusion in the title of the expression "through the use of voluntary contracts establishing minimum resale prices and providing for refusal to sell unless such minimum resale prices are observed" restricts the subject of the Act and implies that its provisions will be applicable only to retailers who voluntarily entered into such contracts, and not to retailers who refrained from so doing. Thus, it is urged, therefore, that that portion of Section 6 which reads "whether the persons so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract" is invalid, because there is nothing in the title of the Act, nor the subject thereof as expressed in the title, which would put the members of the Legislature or the public on notice that such a novel provision was contemplated or intended to be embraced within the body of the Act. It is also said that the portion as indicated cannot be regarded as germane to the subject of the Act as expressed in the title when consideration is given to the restriction placed on the subject of the Act by embracing within the title the clause reading "through use of voluntary contracts establishing minimum resale prices and providing for refusal to sell unless such minimum resale prices are observed."

With the foregoing observations in mind, the appellant says that the title is misleading, and that Section 6 of the Act, by reason thereof, is invalid as not being within the scope of the title under Article 2, Section 16 of the Constitution.

[Presumption of Constitutionality]

The question is one of substantial interest. Legislative Acts should not be disturbed except in clear cases, and then only upon weighty considerations. Each case dealing with the subject must of necessity be determined upon its own merits. Nevertheless, it should be said to those seeking to annul legislative Acts on such grounds as here presented that it has consistently been the policy of this Court to construe the provisions of Article 2, Section 16 of the Constitution most liberally, and whenever possible, to sustain rather than to destroy the legislation. Especially is this so in the light of the general rule that each legislative enactment is cloaked with the presumption of constitutionality and should not be invalidated unless the circumstances be shown beyond doubt to do violence to the provisions of the Article and Section aforesaid.

[Object of the Constitutional Provision]

In many instances our Courts have quoted with approval the observations of Judge Cooley, Const. Lim. (8th Ed.), Vol. 1, p. 296, that the purpose of the provision is, "First, to prevent hodgepodge or log-rolling legislation; second, to prevent surprise or fraud upon the legislature by measns of provisions in bills of which the titles give no intimation * * *; third, to fairly apprise the people through publication of legislative proceedings as is usually made of the subjects of legislation that are being considered, in order that they may have opportunity of being heard thereon by petition or otherwise, if they shall so desire." We have repeatedly said, in substance, that the principal object of the constitutional provision is that the title of the Act when published shall be sufficiently comprehensive to give to the people, as well as to the members of the Legislature, fair and reasonable notice of the subject matter of the legislation proposed, thus preventing deception by the inclusion of provisions of which the title gives no intimation whatsoever. This statement, ever, does not include within it the thought however, does not include within it the thought that a title of an Act is intended to furnish a synopsis or index to the sections thereof. All that is required is that the language be of sufficient import to give reasonable intimation of the subject matter dealt with. In determining whether or not the subject of the Act is expressed in the title, the whole language of the Act should be considered as well as its manifest purpose and scope. Monaghan v. Lewis, 5 Penn. 218, 59 A. 948; Foraker v. White, 7 Boyce 25, 102 A. 186; Wilmington Trust v. Highfield, 4 W. W. Harr. (34 Del.) 394, 153 A. 864; State v. Emerson, 1 Terry 328, 10 A. (2d) 515; Clendaniel v. Conrad, 3 Boyce 549, 83 A. 1036; State v. Grier, 4 Boyce 322, 88 A. 579; State v. Ferschke, 2 Boyce 477, 81 A. 401; In re Cypress Farms Ditch, 7 W. W. Harr. (37 Del.) 71, 180 A. 536.

[Purpose of Act Apparent]

Upon a reading of the title of the present Act the whole purpose thereof becomes apparent; that is, the protection of owners of trademarks and brand names, together with the public, from cut-throat and unfair competition respecting the retail sale of such commodities. The objection of the appellant that the words "through the use of voluntary contracts" are deceptive and misleading because no intimation whatsoever could be gathered therefrom that the Act would apply to anyone offering for sale or selling any commodities who is not a party to such contract (Sec. 6) cannot be sustained. It seems to us that such an objection is answered by the explanation that the words "through the use of voluntary contracts" merely describe the method by which the desired protection against price-cutting is to be obtained, for without a voluntary contract no price restriction is binding upon anyone.

[Wording of Title Adequate]

We think the provisions of the Act are sufficiently expressed in the title, and that that portion of the title relied on by the appellant, "through the use of voluntary contracts", as being more restricted than the language employed under Section 6, is reasonably capable of the construction that it is merely descriptive of the method by which retail prices are to be established and the general intent of the Act carried out. Goldsmith v. Mead Johnson & Co., 176 Md. 682.

In the light of our past decisions we cannot agree with the conclusion reached in the case of Bristol-Meyers v. Webb's Cut Rate Drug Co., 137 Fla. 508, 188 So. 91, wherein that Court in dealing with a similar statute reached a different conclusion, nor do we think, as the appellant contends, that our conclusion as here expressed can be said to be inconsistent with that reached by this Court in the case of State v. Emerson, 1 Terry (40 Del.) 233.

For the reasons indicated, the decree as entered below is sustained and an order will be entered accordingly.

[¶ 62,379] Turner Glass Corporation v. Hartford-Empire Company et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. No. 9633. October Term, 1948, January Sessions, 1949. March 7, 1949.

Appeal from the judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana.

Sherman Act

Action for Treble Damages—License-Lease of Plant Machinery—Inherent and Collateral Illegality.—A glass manufacturing company, relying on a previous decision against the defendants finding that they had conspired to set up a monopoly by obtaining and licensing patents in glass making machinery, claimed treble damages of his licensor alleging that his business had been damaged as a result of the same restrictive licensing policy.

This action was dismissed when it was found that this license-lease for plant machinery was enforceable without reference to other, illegal agreements entered into by the defendants and that there was nothing inherently illegal in the agreement sued upon.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1270.235.

For plaintiff-appellant: John G. Rauch, John M. Kitchen, Perry E. O'Neal, Patrick J. Smith, Robert D. Morgan.

For defendant-appellees: Hubert Hickam, Alan W. Boyd, Harvey A. Grabill, Charles C. Baker, Stephen H. Philbin, Joseph H. Daniels, William G. Davis, Irving M. Fauvre, Leslie Henry, Paul Y. Davis, Henry A. Middleton, James W. Ross, Albert R. Connelly.

Before MAJOR, C. J., KERNER, J., and WHAM, District Judge.

KERNER, J. By this appeal plaintiff challenges the propriety of a judgment dismissing its complaint after a trial upon the merits.

Plaintiff, basing its claim upon a decree entered by the District Court of the Northern District of Ohio (46 F. Supp. 541, affirmed, 323 U. S. 386, and 324 U. S. 570), hereinafter referred to as the Toledo case, sued defendants to recover five million dollars together with treble damages alleged to have been sustained by defendants' violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1 and 2) and § 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 14). In the Toledo case, the court adjudged the defendants, except The Stevenson Corporation, guilty of a conspiracy, combination and monopoly in obtaining and licensing patents in glass making machinery, and in limiting and restricting the use of the machinery.

Plaintiff's complaint alleged a conspiracy substantially in the language of the Toledo complaint, and averred that the restrictive licensing policy of the defendants under their patents, and the royalties and license fees paid by plaintiff to Hartford during the period of the conspiracy, placed plaintiff at a competitive disadvantage which directly caused injury and damage to plaintiff's business and property.

After defendants had filed answers, the cause was referred to a master to take testimony and report the same with his findings of fact, and state his conclusions of law thereon. The master took the testimony of the witnesses, reported more than 13,000 pages of testimony and stipulations, admitted in evidence 1,221 exhibits, and filed his report in which he made 42 findings of fact, among which was one that license fees and royalties had been paid by plaintiff from 1923 to August 4, 1930 under certain license and lease agreements, but concluded that the law was with defendants and recommended that the cause be dismissed. Exceptions to the report were filed and overruled and the report of the master was approved by the court.

The court found inter alia that plaintiff, an Indiana corporation, has, since 1893, been engaged in the manufacture of glass containers, and that prior to 1920 its entire business has been the manufacture of whiskey and beer bottles; that this business was destroyed by the advent of national prohibition, and that plaintiff was obliged to seek other fields of ware or go out of business. It began the production of various kinds of blown glassware, and during 1920, for the purpose of obtaining better operating results, it equipped its plant with automatic feeders manufactured by the Howard Automatic Machine Company. The use of these feeders did not bring satisfactory results.

In 1923 Hartford became the owner of the Howard patents. During the same year, plaintiff, finding its operating results for prior years so unsatisfactory that its officers and stockholders considered closing the plant, sought and obtained the advice of one Hartley. Thereafter, Hartford and plaintiff entered into license and lease agreements for the use by plaintiff of Hartford's patented machinery and for the servicing thereof. Thereafter it received the benefits which resulted from Hartford servicing the machines used by plaintiff, and plaintiff was in a position to obtain Hartford's most improved equipment. One of the first services rendered by Hartley, who later became president of plaintiff, was to obtain an agreement from Hartford to extend credit to plaintiff for new equipment needed to increase its plant efficiency and production. Acting under Hartley's advice, plaintiff adopted a policy of expansion, sought a wider range of products and an increased production through the acquisition or control of other glassware manufacturers. Favorable results followed. In 1924 it made a net profit of $109,356, and thereafter until the end of the third quarter of 1929 plaintiff had net earnings averaging more than $150,000 per year.

In 1929 the entire glass industry was adversely affected by the severe business depression which began during the summer. Prices declined, and competition became more difficult to meet. Plaintiff decided that it would need improved Hartford equipment in order to speed up and increase its production and reduce overhead costs. It acquired additional feeders and annealing lehrs, in the expectation of obtaining increased volume by concentrating on sales of low-priced ware, and at the end of the first three quarters of 1929 it had earned about $229,000 more than in any prior full year of operation, but for the balance of that year plaintiff suffered steadily mounting losses totalling about $100,000. Losses continued throughout 1930, and by August 1930 it was obvious that plaintiff could not continue unless some method of refinancing could be found. These losses, the court found, could not be attributed to any cause for which defendants had any responsibility or over which they had any control. After a series of negotiations, a meeting of plaintiff's creditors and bondholders was held. Those present agreed that the appointment of a receiver was unavoidable, and a complaint was filed against plaintiff in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, to which plaintiff filed an answer, and a receiver was appointed. The receiver, having no capital, suspended plant operations and began to arrange a sale. Authority to sell at public auction was procured on December 27, 1930, and on April 3, 1931 the receivership assets were sold subject to confirmation by the court. The court confirmed the sale on April 4, 1931, and thereafter, in May, 1932, the receiver's administration of plaintiff was approved, the receivership proceedings were closed and the receiver discharged.

The court also found that the evidence did not establish that Hartford, Owens, Hazel-Atlas, Corning or Glass Container ever engaged in any conspiracy or violated the United States anti-trust laws except as adjudicated in the Toledo case, or that any of the defendants caused plaintiff's failure or caused any injury to plaintiff's business or property, and that in the Toledo case, Judge Kloeb had held that "the Hartford royalties have been passed on to the ultimate consumer as a part of the price of glassware."

In this court, pursuant to plaintiff's request and suggestion that only certain questions of law be considered on this appeal, all of the oral testimony and all of defendants' exhibits were omitted from the record, and it now includes only 38 of the 1,221 exhibits. In this state of the record, we must accept the findings as correct. Carter Oil Co. v. Norman, 131 F. 2d 451, 456. They cannot be questioned on appeal, United States v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 133 F. 2d 990, 995, and Howard v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co., 146 F. 2d 316, but, of course, if the findings are based on documentary evidence alone, we are permitted to determine any question of fact. Carter Oil Co. v. McQuigg, 112 F. 2d 275. Fortunately, there is no question here involving conflicting testimony. The facts are not in dispute.

It must be conceded that plaintiff cannot maintain an action under the provisions of § 7 of the Sherman Act unless it has suffered an injury in its business or property by reason of the violation by the defendants of some of the prohibitions contained in that Act, Jack v. Armour & Co., 291 Fed. 741, 745; Northwestern Oil Co. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 138 F. 2d 967. It must show that it was injured, Alden-Rochelle v. American Soc. of Composers, etc., 80 F. Supp. 888, 897, and the mere fact that the defendants have been adjudged guilty in the Toledo case is of no avail to plaintiff unless it establishes that it sustained pecuniary damage. Keogh v. Chicago & N.W. Ry. Co., 271 Fed. 444, 447, and Twin Ports Oil Co. v. Pure Oil Co., 119 F. 2d 747. The plaintiff must show personal, pecuniary damages, Maltz v. Sax, 134 F. 2d 2, 5, which must be proved by facts from which their existence is logically and legally inferable, Keogh v. Chicago & N.W. Ry. Co., 260 U. S. 156, 165. Without actual damages to plaintiff, there can be no recovery. Maltz v. Sax, supra; and Beegle v. Thomson, 138 F. 2d 875, 881.

Plaintiff says it has suffered an injury. It has offered no evidence to prove that it has sustained any pecuniary damage by reason of anything the defendants may have done. We have already observed that Judge Baltzell found that the evidence failed to establish that any of the defendants caused plaintiff's failure or caused any damage to plaintiff's business or property. He found as a fact that before plaintiff became a Hartford licensee, its operating results had been unsatisfactory, and that it was not until plaintiff received Hartford service on its Howard machines that satisfactory results ensued. However, in its briefs plaintiff contends that the payment of the license fees and the entry of the judgment in the Toledo case was evidence of pecuniary damage, and upon oral argument its counsel stated that if the license agreements are legal, plaintiff "is out." We take this to mean that, in the event we hold that the agreements are not inherently illegal, the judgment must be affirmed. Accordingly we address ourselves only to that contention.

To be sure, for the purposes of this case, the conspiracy to violate the anti-trust laws found at Toledo is established, and, of course, an agreement essentially a part of a scheme to fix the price or curtail the quantity of an unpatented ware would be in violation of the anti-trust laws, Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight and Sons, 212 U. S. 227; American Equipment Co. v. Tuthill, 69 F. 2d 406, 409; and United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U. S. 287. But a patentee may grant a license upon any condition if its performance is reasonably within the reward which the patentee is entitled to secure. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, 489.

Our study of the Toledo case has not convinced us that the inherent illegality of the agreements in our case was considered or decided in that case. We find no language in either opinion of the Supreme Court relating to inherent invalidity of the agreements. It is true, however, that Judge Kloeb said:

> " * * * a license and lease system may be perfectly legal and just if properly used. However, in the instant case, there has been a deliberate abuse and misuse of that system."

(46 F. Supp. 621.) In using the quoted language we think the illegality found was that of the licensing system as a whole, in view of the manner in which the court found that it had been used. It in no manner was dependent on illegality of the agreements here involved.

We believe we find the solution of our problem in what was said in Gasoline Products Co. v. Champlin Refining Co., 46 F. 2d 511, and cases cited therein.

The plaintiff in the Gasoline Products case sued defendant to recover royalties under a license agreement. Defendant, as in our case, contended that the agreement was illegal because plaintiff was engaged with others in a conspiracy to violate the anti-trust laws by means of a patent pool for the purpose of establishing a monopoly, fixing prices, controlling the market and extorting huge profits from defendant and others engaged in the manufacture of cracked gasoline, and that the license agreement was issued in furtherance of the illegal combination. The court in rejecting the defense, at page 514 said:

> "As the contract is admittedly valid on its face, involving the doing of no wrongful act, by its terms an ordinary and legitimate business transaction, between parties authorized to contract, it is apparent that the defendant, who voluntarily entered into it, must go somewhere back of and outside of the contract to show its illegal nature. This it does or attempts to do by pointing out that the combination was formed for the purpose of stifling competition and fixing prices in its cracking business; and that the contract sued on partakes of the illegal purpose of the plaintiff, is an essential part of its wrongful scheme, and is a method of carrying it out and reaping the profits made possible by the monopoly.
>
> "The defendant was not a party to the cross-license agreements and I can see no force in the argument that the mere purchase of a sublicense from the alleged illegal combination makes the purchaser a party to it.
>
> "The contract in suit is complete in itself, involves the doing of nothing illegal, and is enforceable without reference to any other agreement. I fail to see how there can be any illegality 'inherent' in one contract when it is necessary to go wholly outside of it and into another contract to find illegality."

We find additional support for the proposition that the courts recognize the distinction between inherent and collateral illegality arising out of anti-trust law violations. Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co., 330 U. S. 743, was an action to recover on notes given for the purchase price of cans. The defendant pleaded that the consideration for the notes was illegal and the notes void because plaintiff had violated the Robinson-Patman Act. In holding that recovery on the notes could not be defeated by the defense asserted, the court, at page 755, said:

> "This Court has held that where a suit is based upon an agreement to which both defendant and plaintiff are parties, and which has as its object and effect accomplishment of illegal ends which would be consummated by the judgment sought, the Court will entertain the defense that the contract in suit is illegal under the express provision of that statute [Sherman Anti-Trust Act]. * * * But when the contract sued upon is not intrinsically illegal, the Court has refused to allow property to be obtained under a contract of sale without enforcing the duty to pay for it because of violations of the Sherman Act not inhering in the particular contract in suit * * * ."

In our case, Hartford was the owner of the patents. Their validity was not challenged in the Toledo case, nor is their validity attacked here, hence Hartford had the right to lease the machinery covered by the patents. Having that right, and plaintiff desiring to use the machinery, it voluntarily entered into agreements which conferred upon it the right to use the leased machinery in the United States, for the manufacturing of glassware defined as "Permitted Ware." Limiting the use of leased machinery is within the prerogative of a patentee. Compare General Talking Pictures v. Western Electric Co., 305 U. S. 124. The agreements were complete in themselves, and by the agreements plaintiff secured Hartford's property and received all the benefits of the use of the machines for which it paid the agreed license fees and royalties. The agreement did not fix prices so as to come within the rule enunciated in United States v. Line Material Co., supra, or limit the quantity of ware that plaintiff could produce, or the markets in which plaintiff's glassware could be sold. See American Equipment Co. v. Tuthill, supra. They did not involve the doing of anything illegal, and each of the agreements was enforceable without reference to any cross-license agreement or agreements into which the defendants might have entered among themselves.

Under these circumstances we are impelled to the conclusion that the licensing agreements were not inherently illegal. Accordingly the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

[¶ 62,380] U. S. v. The Timken Roller Bearing Company.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District, Eastern Division of Ohio. Civil Action No. 24214. March 3, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Anti-Friction Bearing Industry—Monopolistic Agreements with Foreign Parties—Violations of Antitrust Statute.—A domestic manufacturer of anti-friction bearings is held to violate the Sherman Act by contracting with a foreign company to fix prices, allocate territories and eliminate competition. The purchase of a large interest in a foreign company engaged in the same business was held not a legitimate business venture but a means to perpetuate a carefully organized scheme to set up a non-competitive market on a world scale. Defenses raised, namely that the restraints were not unreasonable and were ancillary to other legitimate business contracts were rejected by the court in the face of the documentary evidence against them.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.361.

For the plaintiff: Don C. Miller, Robert A. Nitschke, Cleveland, Ohio.

For the defendant: Luther Day, Cleveland, Ohio, and John G. Ketterer, Canton, Ohio.

[Pleadings and Review of Evidence]

FREED, J.: [Digest] The instant action was brought by the United States under favor of Section 4 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, to prevent and restrain the continuing violations of Sections 1 and 3 of the Act. Permanent injunction with adequate protection to prohibit the violations is sought.

The complaint charges, that the defendant and the co-conspirators entered into contracts, agreements and understandings to eliminate competition between themselves and with others, in the manufacture and sale of anti-friction bearings in all the markets of the world, including the United States. It recites that they allocated the respective territories in the world in which each party might manufacture and sell anti-friction bearings and that they prevented one party from selling or shipping anti-friction bearings into the territory allocated to any other party, except in completed articles of manufacture and for replacement bearings in those articles. It further charges that they fixed and agreed upon prices of bearings shipped into the territory allocated to any other party and that they fixed and agreed upon prices of anti-friction bearings sold and shipped to Russia. They allocated the use of the trade mark "Timken" to each of the parties in their respective designated territories and required that the co-conspirators not manufacture and sell bearings, except under the mark "Timken". The agreements required the co-conspirators to surrender to defendant the rights in the name "Timken" upon the termination of the contracts between them. It is claimed, in certain of the designated territories they entered into agreements with other manufacturers to regulate and allocate the sale of anti-friction bearings and they aided and assisted each other in restricting and eliminating in their respective territories competition from others in the manufacture and sale of anti-friction bearings.

It is alleged in the complaint that the combination and conspiracy resulted in unreasonable restraint of imports into and exports from the United States. It is further alleged that the current world shortage of anti-friction bearings and decreased European production caused by the war, has created large potential export markets for anti-friction bearings of American manufacture. Notwithstanding this, the continuation of the conspiracy and combination will restrain and prevent defendant from seeking and acquiring many world markets with the eventual consequence of reducing its production of bearings and employment of labor.

The factual and legal questions to be determined in respect of the charges of the complaint are posed by the Government as follows:

Within the purview of the Sherman Act is it illegal for the "defendant and two foreign corporations, which between them manufacture and sell a substantial portion of the world's production of anti-friction bearings, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce by private arrangements embodying the following restrictive practices"?

"(a) Allocation, by agreement, of trade territories throughout the entire world, each agreeing with limited exceptions, not to manufacture and sell in the other's territory;

"(b) Imposition by agreement, of price restrictions upon products sold by any party in the territory of another;

"(c) Agreement to exclusively exchange present and future know-how and inventions, patented or unpatented;

"(d) Use, by agreement, of a common trade mark 'Timken' in their respective territories, compulsory use of that mark by the foreign conspirators, prohibition against their dealing in products under any other name, and requiring that they cease using the name upon termination of the agreement;

"(e) Mutual co-operation and assistance to protect each others' markets and to eliminate the competition of outsiders;

"(f) Participation in foreign cartels which restrict exports by United States producers."

The defendant, The Timken Roller Bearing Co., is an Ohio corporation with its principal offices located at Canton, Ohio. It employs upwards of 16,500 employees at its various plants located in Ohio and in Colorado, in the United States and St. Thomas, Ontario in Canada. Its foreign sales are handled by two wholly owned corporations: Timken Roller Bearing and Service Limited and The Timken Roller Bearing Co., of South America, Canadian and Ohio corporations respectively. Defendant manufactures tapered roller bearings, alloy steel, seamless tubing and removable rock bits.

British Timken Limited, named a co-conspirator, (hereinafter referred to as British Timken) is a British Joint Stock Company which maintains its plant and principal offices at Birmingham, England.

On January 1, 1928, a "business agreement" consisting of three written instruments of the same date was made between defendant and British Timken, to be in effect for a period of ten years. Simultaneously all existing contracts between them were cancelled.

The agreement of 1928 followed generally the pattern of those which preceded it. The world was divided into respective territories for the manufacture and sale of bearings in this language: "For the purpose of this Agreement the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and all other countries of Europe and all colonies or dependencies of said United Kingdom and European countries except in or adjacent to North or South America shall be deemed to be the territory of the British Company and the rest of the world shall be deemed to be the territory of the American Company."

Exclusive license was granted to British Timken under existing or future patents of defendant for the duration of the agreement. In turn British Timken was to assign absolutely and for all time its existing and future patent rights in defendant's territory.

They agreed to inform each other in respect of all inventions and improvements regardless whether they were patented or not patented. Advice as to methods of manufacture was to be furnished by defendant, and British Timken was obliged to follow it.

Each party agreed not to sell bearings directly, or to others for shipment into the other party's territory, except as assembled component parts of completed articles manufactured in its own territory and for bearing replacement purposes in such completed articles. In the event such sales in or into the other party's territory were made, they were obliged to advise each other of the details of the sales and pay an amount of ten per cent of the net sales price.

They agreed to endeavor to maintain the distinctive character of the trade mark "Timken". British Timken agreed not to manufacture or sell bearings except under the trade mark and only in accordance with the provisions of the agreement, and to eliminate the name "Timken" from its corporate name and to refrain from its use as a trade mark upon the termination of the contract.

Early that year [1928] steps were taken by Dewar, with the consent and co-operation of defendant, to organize Societe Francaise Timken (French Timken) which accordingly came into existence in July of 1928. The ownership of its stock was divided between defendant and British Timken. Dewar, however, during the entire time under consideration, controlled its operations and supervised its business activities. French Timken purchased from S. M. G. the trade mark rights in the name "Timken" for 12,000 francs.

A "business agreement" was entered into bewteen British Timken and French Timken, on the model of the one between defendant and British Timken, allocating to French Timken France and her colonies, dependencies and mandates (except those in North and South America) as its exclusive territory for the manufacture and sale of anti-friction bearings.

Before the expiration of the 1928 contract, another agreement between defendant and British Timken became effective (on January 1, 1935) for sixteen years, which was substantially the same as the 1928 contract.

In it were found, however, the following provisions: "The American Company [Timken] in its territory may accept and execute orders for bearings for ultimate destination in the British Company's [British Timken's] territory for use for bearing replacement purposes in such completed articles of manufacture but such right shall not authorize sales to or known to be destined for manufacturers in the British Company's territory or sales at prices in conflict with the wishes of the British Company and the American Company from time to time will notify the British Company of the details of the sales authorized under this paragraph and will pay to the British Company an amount equal to five per cent (5%) of the net sale price thereof."

Conversely the same provision is made as to prices and payments to defendant for sales of replacement bearings by British Timken in defendant's territory.

Russia became the joint territory of defendant and British Timken. Business transacted there was conditioned as follows:

"The prices and terms at or upon which offers are made and orders are accepted shall so far as practicable be mutually agreed from time to time but nevertheless either of the parties hereto shall be at liberty to quote and accept orders at low prices and extended times for payment without the consent of the other party after having first submitted the prices and other terms to the other party for its consideration and remarks provided that any such quotation or acceptance shall not involve under cutting some quotation already made by the other party."

The present operations of defendant, British and French Timken in the world market of anti-friction bearings are carried on under the provisions of and subject to the restrictions of two contracts both dated November 28, 1938. They are, the "Tripartite Contract" between defendant, British and French Timken and the agreement between defendant, British Timken and Dewar, which is supplemental to the Tripartite Agreement. These are the final understandings which superseded all the numerous others and are to govern the conduct of the parties until the end of 1965.

The 1938 contracts are each entitled "Business Agreements" and contain substantially the same provisions present in the 1935 agreements.

To summarize their salient features, the contracts provided for exclusive marketing areas which prevented the parties from selling in each other's territories, fixed prices on all replacement bearings sold in each other's territories, fixed prices on bearings sold in Russia and compelled British Timken and French Timken to manufacture and sell bearings only under the terms of the agreements and under the trade mark "Timken".

The evidence is overwhelming and uncontradicted that defendant, British Timken and French Timken religiously adhered to their contractual obligations to make the territorial divisions inviolate. Indeed, in some instances they refused to disturb the allocated territories even where exceptions were made in the agreements.

Each of the parties refused orders for shipment outside of its territory, referring them to the company in whose territory they were to be used. During the period from July 1, 1945 to February 20, 1947, alone, defendant transmitted 402 inquiries or orders to British Timken and French Timken. In each instance the customer who placed the order was advised that either British or French Timken had the exclusive right to supply the bearings.

The steady and persistent effort to assure the exclusive right of each party to manufacture and sell in its own domain is emphatically illustrated in the various letters and memoranda of the officers of the contracting parties and particularly of the officers of defendant. They bear out the Government's contention that the respective trade provinces were to be preserved regardless of the unsatisfied demand for bearings in the various parts of the world. Over the entire span of years during which the restrictions existed, the parties did not deviate from their course of conduct. Even when the world gradually became engulfed in armed conflict, provisions were made to supply customers by specific arrangements so as to retain the trade division.

. . . the parties not only sought the preservation of their respective sales fields, but that they supported the agreements by the maintenance of price fixing arrangements. The protective discount policy insured the parties against competition from each other in replacement bearings. Defendant sold at a 70% discount for export in its own territory, but quoted prices representing a 50% discount from the American list on standard bearings in response to unsolicited inquiries from British Timken's territory.

The inhibition imposed by the contracts on British and French Timken, not to manufacture or sell tapered roller bearings, except under the name "Timken" was observed and both companies throughout the years before and after 1928, to date, have become identified as producers of "Timken" bearings. The goodwill they built up and the competitive position they acquired in the allocated territories was under the name "Timken." The retention of the goodwill and place of dominance in their business field depended on the continued right to use the name. The severance of contractual relations meant the termination of their ability to profit by the many years of experience in manufacture and successful business dealings with their customers. In turn no competitor of British or French Timken was permitted to use the trade mark "Timken."

In addition to dividing the world into restricted manufacturing and marketing areas, maintaining price fixing arrangements, and interchange of discoveries, know-how and inventions to the exclusion of others, defendant, British Timken and French Timken co-operated to shut out the competition of other dealers in tapered roller bearings.

The rigid territorial divisions were followed at all times except when adherence to such restrictions would result in the possibility of loss of business. They were made for the dual purpose of protection against each other and to eliminate the competition of other tapered bearing producers.

The collaboration of defendant, British Timken and French Timken to eliminate competition with each other and to eliminate the competition of other bearing producers was augmented by agreements of British Timken and French Timken with their competitors abroad, to share customers and sales in certain markets and to stabilize prices. Hess referred to the association resulting from the agreement as a cartel in reporting on its success to H. H. Timken (the founder and at the time president of defendant company).

Although the cartels were formed without defendant's execution of the actual agreements, they were the result of the understandings and co-operation of defendant with British and French Timken to bring them about. Defendant's territory was affected. It was the beneficiary of their operations. Its officials were in consultation with the officers of British and French Timken concerning them, they prompted and approved the agreements.

The cartel agreement between SKF and British Timken was not only an arrangement on prices of bearings and the percentage of the total bearings each was permitted to sell, but the parties agreed not to sell replacements of the other's bearings. The division of business as to specific customers was set up on a quota basis. When one of the parties exceeded its quota on a certain customer that party was required to raise its prices until there was compliance with the agreement.

The lengthy recital of letters, reports and memoranda paints such a clear picture of the conduct of the accused companies over the period of years, that the Court feels it serves the necessary purpose of pointing out the patent reasons for resolving the factual issues which are involved. It leaves no room for dispute or contradiction on the salient facts.

The evidence conclusively establishes to the satisfaction of the Court the assertions of the Government: that defendant, British Timken and French Timken have manufactured and sold during the period from 1928 to date a substantial portion of the world's production of anti-friction bearings and that they have imposed restraints on foreign commerce, by (1) allocating trade territories throughout the entire world each agreeing with limited exceptions not to manufacture or sell in the other's territory; by (2) fixing of prices on products sold by any party in the territory of the other party; by (3) mutual co-operation and assistance to protect each other's markets and to eliminate the competition of outsiders and by (4) participation in foreign cartels which restrict exports by United States producers.

The contentions that defendant stifled or eliminated competition and restrained trade, by exclusively exchanging present and future know-how and inventions, patented or unpatented, and by compulsory use of the trade mark "Timken" by British and French Timken, by prohibition against their dealing in products under any other name, and by requiring that they cease using that name upon the termination of the agreements, will be discussed later in this opinion.

The analysis of the evidence is susceptible of but one conclusion. It discloses an extensive and far reaching combination to smother all competition between defendant, British and French Timken and to stifle or suppress competition of other manufacturers by joint effort against them or by agreement with them.

It is readily seen that the present relationship of the parties is not only the culmination of the successive agreements beginning in 1928. The combination is, as well, the outgrowth of the principal agreements in 1909, when world markets were divided and competition was eliminated. Those contracts were not merely patent licenses for the manufacture of tapered roller bearings in limited areas, but they encompassed fields beyond the ambit of the existing patent rights. U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 333 U. S. 364, U. S. v. National Lead Co., 63 Fed. Sup. 513, 523, aff'd 332 U. S. 319, Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., 314 U. S. 488, Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. U. S., 309 U. S. 456. The territorial restrictions applied to markets where defendant had no patent rights. Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, 228. They included future development and inventions in the industry. U. S. v. National Lead Co., supra, Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. U. S., supra, Pope Manufacturing Co. v. Gormully, 144 U. S. 224.

After the expiration of the principal patents, the restrictions imposed continued. Without the benefit of the limited monopoly power of the patents the agreements followed the same pattern. They no longer revolved around the patents, but were without pretense contracts for the avowed purpose of suppressing competition. Duncan (Timken's London counsel) pointedly said in November 1927:

> "As we understand the position, the main advantage derived by the English Company under the Agreement will be the advice and information to be received from you, the right to use the name "Timken" and the absence of your competition. Do you not think that it would be better to accentuate these advantages in the Agreement, rather than leave them merely as incidents in a patent license?"

When in 1928 the American, British and French companies agreed to continue their activities, British and French Timken had grown from infancy in the bearing industry to a position of dominance and was a potential competitor with whom defendant had to reckon.

The relationship effected and maintained was not that which prevails between a manufacturer and its exclusive foreign agents for the distribution of its product. Each company was a manufacturer and distributor, independent of the others, but joined for the sole and only purpose of mutual benefits. It is not even contended that defendant, British Timken and French Timken ever competed.

The inflexible territorial limitations imposed by the parties on each other, which they violated only to prevent others from encroaching on the protected markets, were designed for the purpose of preventing competition and were reinforced by price agreements. The word "Timken" had become synonymous with tapered roller bearings. To lend support to the desire to eliminate the competition of other producers, defendant supplied British and French Timken, and them alone, with know-how in the production of bearings. It insisted that bearings produced and sold by them be identified by the name "Timken."

The cartel agreements in France, England and Italy were made by British Timken and French Timken with the knowledge, approval and co-operation of defendant to effectuate the plan of excluding competition of others in the territories of defendant, British and French Timken.

The extent to which they were successful in impeding competition is of no moment. It is sufficient that that was the end sought to be accomplished. Associated Press v. U. S., 326 U. S. 1, 12, U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., Inc., 310 U. S. 150. The French Anti-Friction cartel, the English SKF-British Timken cartel and the agreements with Bock and R. I. V. fortified defendant in the overall plan of suppressing competition in the sale of tapered bearings.

[Operation of the Sherman Act]

It is an imperative of the Sherman Act that all combinations in restraint of international trade and all agreements to restrict competition be condemned. U. S. v. National Lead Co., supra, U. S. v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271, 291, U. S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 Fed. (2d) 416. The very aim of all the antitrust laws is to ban conduct and practices which destroy free and unhampered competition. That postulate has been repeatedly announced by the courts even before the legislative enactment. Within the last decades the decisions reiterating it have covered thousands of printed pages. They have been regarded as inimical to economic freedom. The Government refers to the instant combination as an international cartel, which appellation is assailed by defendant. That name applied to the combination has no significance, other than to label it as a pool of "separate firms to maintain prices above a competitive figure." (Webster's New International Dictionary). It is merely descriptive of the combined relationship between defendant, British Timken and French Timken. If the term connotes vice or illegality it is clearly applicable.

The strict allocation of markets to the members of a combination of competitors in the various parts of the world and the eradication of competition among them violates the Sherman Act. U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, U. S. v. National Lead Co., supra.

The contracts by which it was agreed that in a particular area anti-friction bearings might be sold by only one of the members of the combination, necessarily were intended to and had the effect of eliminating competition. The Supreme Court repeatedly recognized the inherent danger of such agreements to our system of free enterprise, and held that agreements or arrangements for dividing markets were illegal under the Sherman Act. U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., supra, U. S. v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., supra, U. S. v. National Lead Co., supra.

The fact that defendant, British and French Timken were manufacturing and selling only tapered bearings does not immunize the combination against the operation of the antitrust laws. It is true that there is competition between tapered and other types of anti-friction bearings to the limited extent pointed out earlier. The prohibitions of the Sherman Act, however, are equally applicable to combinations in restraint of trade when only part of the commerce is stifled. As was said in Eastman Kodak v. Federal Trade Commission, 158 Fed. (2d) 592, 594, cert. denied 330 U. S. 828:

> "Hence it will not do to say that all film is in the same class. If a purchaser wants a color film he must be able to buy it from more than one manufacturer if there is to be 'free and open competition with commodities of the same general class'; that he can buy a black and white film will not serve to destroy the monopoly of the sole producer of color film."

and in U. S. v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, 225:

> "Hence it is enough if some appreciable part of interstate commerce is the subject of a monopoly, a restraint or a conspiracy."

and again in U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 225 (footnote 59), "And the amount of interstate or foreign trade involved is not material (Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38) since § 1 of the Act brands as illegal the character of the restraint not the amount of commerce affected."

The benefits of a competitive price system under the Sherman Act would be lost to the vast number of manufacturers whose machinery and equipment are geared to use only tapered bearings, if the operation of the Act were to be construed otherwise.

The practice of selling only at prices agreeable to the party into whose territory the sales were made and the provisions of the contracts for agreed prices on replacement parts and the other price fixing arrangements of defendant, British and French Timken must be condemned as violations of the Sherman Act. U. S. v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265.

In U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum, supra, the Supreme Court said:

> "Thus for over forty years this Court has consistently and without deviation adhered to the principle that price-fixing agreements are unlawful per se under the Sherman Act and that no showing of so-called competitive abuses or evils which those agreements were designed to eliminate or alleviate may be interposed as a defense.
>
> * * * *
>
> "Whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness. They are all banned because of their actual or potential threat to the central nervous system of the economy." (Footnote 59.)

In U. S. v. Line Material Co., 333 U. S. 287, it was said:

> "Price fixing in any form is perhaps the most powerful of all inducements for abandonment of competition. It offers security and stability; it eliminates much of the uncertainty of competitive practices; it promises high profits."

and again in U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U. S. 131, 143:

> "We start, of course, from the premise that so far as the Sherman Act is concerned, a price-fixing combination is illegal per se. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150; United States v. Masonite Corporation, supra. We recently held in United States v. Gypsum Co., 333 U. S. 364, 400, that even patentees could not regiment an entire industry by licenses containing price-fixing agreements."

Both the territorial sales limitations and price fixing constitute a menace to international trade in tapered bearings.

No less harmful and injurious to the unrestricted flow of commerce in tapered bearings was and continues to be the association of defendant, British and French Timken for the purpose of protecting each other's markets and the exclusion of outsiders from the tapered bearing market. Such conduct is denounced by the antitrust laws. Associated Press v. U. S., supra, Montague & Co. v. Lowry, supra, Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. U. S., 226 U. S. 20, U. S. v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U. S. 392.

The participation in the foreign cartels by defendant completed the circle within which the combination operated to forestall competition. The circumstances outlined above under which defendant took part in the operation of the cartels leave no room for escape for defendant from the prohibitions of the Sherman Act. The ban on restraints of imports and exports has been consistently enforced by the courts. United States v General Dyestuff Corp., 57 Fed. Sup. 642, United States v. Nord Deutscher Lloyd, 223 U. S. 512. What was so well said in United States v. National Lead Co., supra, 524, is equally pertinent when applied to the facts in this case:

> "The several agreements relating to manufacture and trade within the European markets are but some of the links in the chain which was designed to enthrall the entire commerce * * *."

Nor does the fact that the cartel agreements were made on foreign soil relieve defendant from responsibility. U. S. v. Nord Deutscher Lloyd, supra. They had a direct and influencing effect on trade in tapered bearings between the United States and foreign countries.

There is no charge made in the complaint that the parties engaged in the practice of exclusively exchanging present and future know-how and inventions, patented or unpatented. Evidence seeking to establish such claim was offered at the trial. Although it does not convincingly appear that either the exclusive exchange of know-how or the enforcement of the trade mark restrictions alone served as direct instruments to eliminate competition, they have been most helpful in buttressing other illegal conduct to achieve the desired result. They were integral parts of the general scheme to suppress trade.

[Defendants Contentions]

Are the contentions urged by the defendant sufficient to overcome such manifest violations of the Sherman Act?

[Restraints Are Reasonable]

The first contention of defendant is that even if the agreements between the three Timken companies for division of territory, and any incidental arrangements as to price contained therein were made, any restraint resulting therefrom to constitute a violation of the Act, must be found to be unreasonable. Defendant's position is that it undertook to extend its activities by the purchase of British Timken and the formation of French Timken with Dewar. It protests that it was not done for the purpose of eliminating competition and that it did not have that effect, that there has been no intent to unduly restrain trade but that it was done for good business reasons. Defendant says the division of markets between the companies was reasonably ancillary to the acquisition of British Timken and the formation of French Timken.

In advancing the argument that only such contracts or combinations are within the condemnation of the Act as prejudice the public interest by unduly restricting competition or obstructing trade, defendant concedes that:

"It would appear, superficially, that contractual provisions like those involved in the case at bar that American Timken will not sell bearings in the territories of British and French Timken, respectively, and vice versa, tend to prevent competition between the parties."

The contention made invites a discussion of the rule of reason doctrine applied by the courts to the Sherman Act. A vast body of decisions may be found dealing with the doctrine. For the present purpose, it will suffice to say, that it is now firmly established that the statutory provision, "Every contract, combination * * * in restraint of trade * * * is hereby declared to be illegal * * *" means that all unreasonable restraints of trade offend the Act. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, U. S. v. Columbia Steel Co., supra. It is equally well recognized that the determination of what constitutes unreasonable restraint is the province of the courts. Judicial construction of the law has declared certain restraints unreasonable. With but rare exceptions, since the decisions in the Standard Oil case and the American Tobacco case in 1911, activities which theretofore were stricken down as illegal restraints have been regarded since as unreasonable per se.

In view of the settled law and the facts, defendant's contention that the restraints were reasonable must be rejected as untenable. The restraints on commerce, here proved by abundant evidence, have been denounced as unreasonable per se.

Defendant seeks to draw a parallel between the instant facts and those in the Columbia Steel case, supra. By contradistinction from the facts in that case defendant, British Timken and French Timken are separate corporations who in their respective territories, both before and after their agreements, were potential competitors in the tapered bearing market. They were the largest dealers in tapered bearings in their respective territories. They occupied dominant positions in the entire anti-friction bearing industry. Defendant did not acquire British and French Timken.

[Combination for Good Business Reasons]

The defense that the combination was formed without intent to restrain trade, for good business reasons, was denied validity in numerous cases. If good business reasons and expressions of good intent would serve as justifications for restraining trade and stifling competition the Sherman Act would render no aid to the free flow of commerce. The Act aims to bulwark the national economy and insists that individual interests give way to the benefit of all. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. U. S., supra, 49, Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. U. S. supra; Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Association v. U. S., 234 U. S. 600.

There is nothing in the evidence to indicate a lack of intent to restrain trade. Indeed, all that the evidence discloses is an intent to form a smoothly operating combination to control commerce in the tapered bearing industry throughout the entire world.

In the face of the numerous agreements and the clear expressions of defendant's officers in the volumes of letters and memoranda offered in evidence, it is difficult to understand how anyone can disclaim a clear intent to restrict competition.

[Partnership or Joint Venture]

It is next urged by defendant that any restraints imposed by the agreements were ancillary to the creation of a close relation between it and Dewar, analagous to a partnership or joint venture. It is suggested that the purpose was to expand its bearing business in European markets, and necessarily involved the investment of large sums in the acquisition and development of British and French Timken and hence not in violation of law. In this connection defendant assumes that since the parties could lawfully agree to be excluded from each other's territories, they could lawfully agree also that any incursions into each other's territories should be made only at prices agreeable to the party in whose territory the sale was made. It says that such a provision was reasonably ancillary to prevent competition by defendant with the corporations through which the common undertaking was conducted.

Both the assumption made and the conclusion reached are wholly erroneous. The common undertaking was a joint venture only in the sense that they jointly undertook to continue the manufacture and distribution of bearings with all the limitations and restrictions which had theretofore been imposed. The joint venture was not ancillary to the agreement. Regardless of the descriptive term used to denote the affiliation, it did not constitute a legal basis for the avoidance of the consequences of the conduct which eliminated competition.

Throughout the trial great emphasis was placed on this phase of the defense. The record abounds with repetition of "joint venture," "partnership," "partnership in the layman's sense." All of the defendant's officers and employees took great pains to make reference time and again to "our joint venture" and to "our partners."

It will be recalled that the relationship of defendant, British Timken and French Timken in respect of the manufacture and sale of bearings did not originate with the agreement between defendant and Dewar. Ever since 1909 defendant had maintained the territorial market restrictions with the predecessors of British Timken, and in France with the predecessor of French Timken.

The agreements made in 1928 and the activities restricting commerce, were antedated by other agreements and activities of similar nature. Licensing of patents first served as the basis for the restrictions, but they were continued despite the expiration of the patents. Atlhough the question, whether the early agreements founded on patent ownership transgressed the law may not be in issue in this case, the fact that in their essence they set the pattern for the restraints, is of great and fundamental importance. The only substantial change in the relationship of the parties resulting from the Dewar-defendant contract was that defendant acquired a stock ownership in British Timken and French Timken. The execution of the 1928 contracts did not mark the beginning of new business contacts. They merely extended the restrictive arrangements which had existed for almost twenty years between potential competitors.

The only conclusion which may properly be drawn is that the restraints were not ancillary to the "joint venture." To the contrary, the arrangements were made to carry on effectively the combination to eliminate competition between the parties and to frustrate any competition of outsiders.

It is quite obvious . . . that even if the stock investment of defendant and the cooperation between them indicated a preexistent fiction of a "joint venture" or partnership in their own judgment, by 1934 neither believed that such relationship existed.

The facts are that defendant did not build plants in Europe or purchase subsidiaries abroad. It simply acquired substantial interests in a dominant manufacturer of bearings in England, participated in the formation of and invested in the stock of a potential competitor in France. The repeated assertion that it was in a joint venture or was a member of a partnership does not make it so.

Even if we were to assume, arguendo, that there was a "joint venture" between the parties and that an Ohio corporation could become partner in a business undertaking with a citizen of England or an English corporation (10 Ohio Jurisprudence § 632, § 857, Ohio v. Standard Oil Co., 49 O. S. 137), no immunity is afforded to defendant from the violations of the Sherman Act.

The argument is predicated on the oft quoted opinion of Judge Taft, later Chief Justice Taft, in Addyston Pipe and Steel Co., supra, in which restraints of trade resulting from a legal partnership agreement were held not to run afoul of the law. That decision does not uphold the type of conduct which is here attacked.

If a joint venture or partnership is formed for the purpose of a lawful business enterprise and restraints result from the right to protect established business interests no violation of law occurs. But if the association is formed for the purpose of continuing a combination to allocate exclusive sales territories in the world, to fix prices and to eliminate competition both within and without the combination, it cannot hide from the effects of the law under the cloak of a joint venture or partnership. Were it otherwise, an easy way could be found to circumvent the law by entering into agreements purportedly to protect a joint venture or partnership.

[Agreement to Furnish Know-How]

Defendant also asserts that any restraints imposed by the contracts were ancillary to its agreements to furnish know-how to British Timken and other Timken companies. It says that the covenants by which it agreed not to compete in the territory in which British and French Timken were to use this know-how and by which each of them in turn, agreed not to compete in defendant's territory were reasonably ancillary to the sale of the know-how under the contracts. It concludes that the law permits the restriction not to compete in each other's territory as a recompense for its contribution to the foreign companies of advice and instruction in the manufacture of bearings and the quality of steel used and information with respect to inventions, discoveries and practices whether patented or not.

In taking this position it principally relies on the Addyston Pipe case, supra. It is pointed out that the agreements "by the seller of property or business not to compete with the buyer in such a way as to derogate from the value of the property or business sold" and "by the buyer of property not to use the same in competition with the business retained by the seller" were held in that case to be ancillary restraints not in violation of the Sherman Act.

Defendant goes so far as to argue "that, due to the more restrictive nature of a patentee's monopoly, he is more restricted in the conditions which he may impose, than is the seller of unpatented property such as know-how, which is available to any member of the public who can discover it" and "that the legal principle which supports a patentee's agreement not to sell in the licensed territory is just as applicable to one who licenses or transfers know-how."

The precise legal basis for the argument so advanced is not disclosed. Analogy is drawn between Fowle v. Park, 131 U. S. 88 and Dr. Miles Medical Company v. Park & Sons Company, 220 U. S. 373 and the instant case.

It must be noted at the outset of the discussion of the problem, that the know-how furnished by defendant to the other companies was not a secret process for the manufacture of tapered roller bearings. Other manufacturers were admitted to the plants of British and French Timken, where they could observe all the know-how put into operation. In the extensive record of the testimony dealing with the assistance given by the officials and technical staff, there is no trace of any secret process which was imparted by them. No contention was made at any time that such was the case. The know-how consisted of designs, data showing how defendant manufactured its product, the advice of defendant's employees and help of like nature.

Reference is made to a patentee's right to impose restrictions in respect of the patented products.

The patent monopoly is so circumscribed as not to be an instrument in restraint of trade to a greater extent then is consistent with the privileges granted. The proposition of law has been firmly established that the patent does not empower its owner to restrain trade in processes or devices which are not embraced within the scope of his patent. U. S. v. Line Material Co., supra, Standard Sanitary Co. v. U. S., supra, U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum, supra. The law has too jealously guarded the benefits derived from a free flow of commerce to permit even the reward for the development of the useful arts and sciences to be greater than essential to encourage inventions.

The limitations imposed by the judicial opinions on the use of patents to restrain trade are too well-known to justify a lengthy discussion of them. Those opinions only serve as guide posts to resolve the question here presented.

In order to sustain the argument of defendant, this Court is asked to find that one who transmits his skill in the manufacture of a product to another is entitled to a greater reward than one who is instrumental in the advancement of science by his inventive genius. Such finding would be obviously wrong.

In Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. U. S., supra, 456, the court said:

"He may not, by virtue of his patent condition his license so as to tie to the use of the patented device or process the use of other devices, processes or materials which lie outside of the monopoly of the patent licensed."

During the existence of the tapered bearing patents defendant could not legally allocate markets on processes which were not within the ambit of its patent monopoly. Therefore, it defies all sense of logic to say that upon the expiration of the patents defendant could lawfully engage in like conduct and practices upon the theory of supplying know-how on unpatented processes.

One who possesses greater knowledge or superior skill in the manufacture of a product is entitled to be fairly and adequately compensated if he furnishes his knowledge or skill to others. He is not entitled, however, to exact as a price for such contribution, complete freedom from competition. The quid pro quo for furnishing of know-how cannot be an absolute license to avoid the provisions of the Sherman Act. The harm caused thereby would be too great a tribute to knowledge and skill when viewed in the light of public policy.

It would seem that after the lapse of years since the passage of the Sherman Act, every type of economic venture has been under the scrutiny of judicial eyes to determine whether it clashes with the mandate of the Act. The ingenuity of business enterprise, however, makes it inevitable that new practices be examined as they arise. So in this instance a phase of business conduct must be weighed in the light of the general principles of the antitrust laws without the benefit of specific decisions for guidance.

We are, here, confronted with a situation, wherein a patentee upon the expiration of its patent monopoly, seeks to justify the perpetuation of the favored position it enjoyed by virtue of the patent through the ingenious theory of furnishing know-how. If lawful restraints and monopolies could be predicated on the ownership of know-how they could last ad infinitum. This Court cannot subscribe to such unharnessed privilege.

The contracts to divide the world into exclusive marketing areas cannot be defended as ancillary to the transfer of know-how by defendant.

[Protection of Trade Mark]

The next contention advanced by defendant is, that if any restraints were imposed by the Business Agreements, they were ancillary to the licensing of the trade mark "Timken" to British and French Timken and therefore were not contrary to law.

Neither factual nor legal justification may be found to give merit to the contention.

Defendant maintains that the objectives which it desired in 1928 to achieve in respect of the mark were:

"(1) The affirmation of its equitable ownership of the mark in England and in various portions of the British Empire.

"(2) The disposition of the French and German trade-mark problems to the end that it would ultimately become the owner of the trade-mark registrations in those countries.

"(3) The removal of any possibility of challenge to it of its registrations in certain European countries wherein, as has been shown, they could be questioned on the basis of prior use.

"(4) The establishment of a reversionary right in it in the mark on termination of the contract with the British and French Companies."

It is readily discernible from the recital of these objectives that defendant had serious doubt of its ownership of the mark in 1928 in the various territories assigned to British and French Timken. In fact in some markets British Timken's predecessor was the owner of the mark. In France S. M. G. had registered it. In Germany one Prausnitzer was the sole owner of the trade mark "Timken." It is apparent from the testimony that defendant could not use the mark in a great portion of the world.

At that time defendant was primarily concerned, therefore, not in safeguarding the trade mark rights which it then possessed, but rather in acquiring the rights obtained by other manufacturers, as a consequence of the early patent license agreements, in areas where defendant had agreed not to manufacture and sell. Its own covenants not to make or sell bearings in territories allotted to others brought about the situation that the trade mark "Timken" was registered and owned by others.

Defendant's assertion that it was the sole equitable owner of the mark is unimpressive. The agreements attempted to remedy its dubious trade mark rights.

It is true that from the inception of the business dealings with foreign producers and distributors, defendant scrupulously guarded its right in the trade name. Every agreement contained a provision that on all bearings sold, the name "Timken" be affixed. It is also true that the officials of defendant impressed company counsel with the importance of the preservation of the trade mark. But the trade mark provisions of the challenged contracts were subsidiary and secondary to the central purpose of allocating trade territories, specifically recited in them as follows:

> "The Companies parties hereto for their mutual advantage and convenience in working have agreed to make arrangements for an interchange between them of information and facilities and in connection therewith to define their respective territories and for other purposes in manner hereinafter appearing."

The evidence conclusively proves that defendant entered into the agreements not for the purpose of exercising its right to protect the trade mark "Timken" from its unlawful use by British and French Timken nor to protect the public from British or French Timken passing off their products as those of defendant, but for the purpose of preventing competition in the sale of bearings. Through the years 1909-1924, defendant enjoyed freedom from competition, because of its patent monopoly. It now attempts to defend the extension of this right on the basis of granting British and French Timken the use of its trade mark.

Assuming that the restraints were reasonably ancillary to protect the trade mark and that the law sanctions such ancillary restraints, defendant's contention nevertheless is founded on the tenuous premise that it was the equitable owner of the mark outside of the marketing territory allocated to it.

Defendant did not and could not have a right to license a trade mark in markets where it did not own the mark.

Defendant maintains that the trade mark is its property; that the ownership of any property is in a limited sense monopolistic; that in the exercise of such a limited monopoly power, defendant has the right to exact as a consideration for the use of its property, an agreement with others not to compete.

[Sherman Act v. Patent Monopoly]

The conflict between the Sherman Act and the limited patent monopoly has been the subject matter of innumerable litigated cases. The courts have attempted to harmonize the opposing basic policies inherent in their respective economic concepts. They tried to fit the antitrust laws within the framework of the Constitutional grant of a patent monopoly. Whether within the provisions of the Sherman Act commerce may be restrained to the extent that it is reasonably ancillary to protect a trade mark has not been decided or discussed by the courts.

Trade marks in our economic system provide the method by which one seller may be enabled to distinguish his goods from those of another. Fundamentally the basic function of the law pertaining to trade marks is to safeguard the good will of one manufacturer or distributor against the sale of another's merchandise as his. Canal Co. v. Clark, 80 U. S. 311, Hanover Star Milling Co. v. Metcalf, 240 U. S. 403. The right to protect it is bestowed by the law not only to reward business enterprise and prevent piracy on successful and established ventures, but at the same time to prevent deception of the public into believing that they are purchasing one product instead of another.

The trade mark right as all other rights is not without bounds. The owner's rights are canalized within the exercise of the trade mark's accepted and defined functions. The law is replete with decisions which set out their functions and limitations.*

* Whatever extension of trade mark rights is encompassed in the Lanham Act (Title 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1051 et seq.), its enactment did not open the door to employ a trade mark as an instrument to undermine the antitrust law. This is borne out with transparent clarity by its legislative history.

Some of them are lucidly delineated in United Drug Co. v. Theodore Rectanus Co., 248 U. S. 90, 97, 98, as follows:

"The asserted doctrine is based upon the fundamental error of supposing that a trade-mark right is a right in gross or at large, like a statutory copyright or a patent for an invention, to either of which, in truth, it has little or no analogy. Canal Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall. 311, 322; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 254. There is no such thing as property in a trade-mark except as a right appurtenant to an established business or trade in connection with which the mark is employed. The law of trade-marks is but a part of the broader law of unfair competition; the right to a particular mark grows out of its use, not its mere adoption; its function is simply to designate the goods as the product of a particular trader and to protect his good will against the sale of another's product as his; and it is not the subject of property except in connection with an existing business. Hanover Milling Co. v. Metcalf, 240 U. S. 403, 412-414.

"The owner of a trade-mark may not, like the proprietor of a patented invention, make a negative and merely prohibitive use of it as a monopoly. See United States v. Bell Telephone Co., 167 U. S. 224, 250; Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 90; Paper Bag Patent Case, 210 U. S. 405, 424.

"In truth, a trade-mark confers no monopoly whatever in a proper sense, but is merely a convenient means for facilitating the protection of one's good-will in trade by placing a distinguishing mark or symbol — a commercial signature — upon the merchandise or the package in which it is sold."

In order to resolve the instant question all that need be said is that the trade mark right is not comparable to the right the owner has in a chattel or realty; it is not a right in gross or at large; it is not such a right as is awarded to an inventor in the product of his invention. U. S. v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265.

Even the patent monopoly is not broad enough to encompass the power to engage in conduct and practices to eliminate competition such as were employed by defendant, British and French Timken. U. S. v. National Lead, supra, U. S. v. Line Material Co., supra, Hartford-Empire v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386, 433, Mercoid v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, 665, Standard Sanitary Co. v. U. S., supra, U. S. v. Gypsum, supra, Ethyl Gas v. U. S., supra, U. S. v Masonite Corp., supra, Federal Trade Commission v. Beech-Nut Co., 257 U. S. 441, Interstate Circuit v. U. S., supra, U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U. S. 131, 143 (see note 12).

A trade mark is not the product of invention. The privileges which are accorded to the owner of a patent are predicated upon invention and are safeguarded to carry out the Constitutional intent to promote the progress of science and the useful arts. If a trade mark were to be given the power of monopoly, it would not be limited in time as in the case of a patent. The public would not benefit from an invention and there would not be the ultimate gain which flows from the disclosure of a patent. That is the foundation for the patent monopoly.

A trade mark brands a product as to its origin. The law empowers the owner or the originator of a mark to protect his wares against the imitator who seeks to palm off merchandise as his by the use of the same mark. He is given the right to enjoin such practices. The public interest is served by that protection which in the exercise of all rights is paramount. Deception is prevented.

The trade mark may become a detrimental weapon if it is used to serve a harmful or injurious purpose. If it becomes a tool to circumvent free enterprise and unbridled competition, public policy dictates that the rights enjoyed by its ownership be kept within their proper bounds. If a trade mark may be the legal basis for allocating world markets, fixing of prices, restricting competition, the unfailing device has been found to destroy every vestige of inhibition set up by the Sherman Act. The rights pertaining to trade marks and trade names were well known long before that legislative enactment was passed by Congress. It is certain that it was never intended that the consequences of violations of the antitrust laws may be escaped by the licensing of trade marks.

[Potential Competition in the International Market]

Defendant vigorously asserts its position, that since exports and imports of anti-friction bearings from and into the United States in foreign commerce over the years have been relatively insignificant, an injunction to prevent the alleged restraints would be a vain and needless gesture on the part of the Court. The basic purpose of the Sherman Act, it says, is to insure trade on a competitive price basis. The argument goes that inasmuch as there is no price competition in bearings imported into or exported from the United States, and since it is impossible for American manufacturers or foreign manufacturers to engage in the exporting or importing of bearings to each other's markets on a successfully commercial basis, the illegality which is essential to the granting of equitable relief does not exist.

Several days were devoted, in the trial of the case, to defendant's effort to sustain this contention. Tables of figures were offered in addition to the statements of defendant's officials, to prove that the volume of exports and imports in tapered roller bearings was negligible. Whether the absence of trade was the result of the competitive restrictions charged by the Government or of natural economic forces was not pointed out.

Several witnesses testified that the economic dislocation of world markets precipitated by the first world war, and the depression which followed, caused a near chaotic condition in foreign commerce. It was augmented, they said, by the policies of the various nations to encourage purchase of domestic goods. The "Buy British" slogan was mentioned as illustrative of this program, in which nearly all countries engaged. The tariff regulations, the formation of the sterling bloc, the fluctuation of currency values, the government restrictions against imports and exports also contributed to the net result, they maintained, that producers were unable to compete with foreign manufacturers on a profitable basis. They concluded that this condition has prevailed not only in the roller bearing industry, but it affected all industries.

In the consideration of this claim the question immediately arises: If all the impediments to foreign trade existed ever since 1914, which became more and more pronounced to the present day, why were the contracting parties, defendant, British Timken and French Timken so concerned about air-tight agreements to keep each one within its own commercial domain? The repeated and persistent provisions of the successive contracts, for territorial restrictions, contradict any claim of lack of ability to compete.

Local and national pride in domestic goods and sales resistance to foreign made products have always been obstacles to import and export trade. The ingenuity of the American businessman, fortified by the advantages of free competition in many instances has been able to penetrate the strongest tariff walls.

The evidence bears out the fact that there was and there is actual and potential competition in the international roller bearing market. The contracts were consummated for the very purpose of regulating and restricting it.

It is not purely conjecture to conclude, that had it not been for the rigid restrictions provided in the contracts and their strict enforcement in actual practice, the volume of business with foreign countries would have been considerable in size. The officers of defendant admitted that the need for bearings from the United States was continuously shown by the inquiries made by foreign purchasers. Small competitors of defendant in the United States were able to make shipments abroad on a relatively large scale. The last war accentuated the demand, but defendant adhered to its obligation as a member of the combination and refused to make sales. Forsythe's report to Klinedinst:

> "We have received definite orders from their sales territories, which upon being referred to British Timken were turned down at their instructions" is convincing evidence of the potential competition and the destructive effect of the combination.

Political and social changes have repeatedly caused fluctuations in international trade. Our own economy has always been affected by the currents of trade regulations abroad. But violent as the variations have been, commerce with foreign nations has remained one of the great influences on our own economic welfare. The provisions of the Sherman Act, pertaining to free competion with other nations, have not become a dead letter as a consequence of the world events of the past thirty-five years.

The evidence presented is convincing that defendant, British Timken and French Timken have formed a world cartel in tapered roller bearings. They have divided the world into exclusive sales territories. They have fixed prices. They agreed to and have effectively eliminated competition among themselves. They agreed to and did attempt to eradicate the competition of outsiders. They combined with competitors to fix prices. The defenses offered do not constitute justifications for such patent violations of the antitrust laws.

The Government is entitled to a decree. The exact nature of the needed remedy to prevent future violations will be determined at a hearing set for that purpose.

[¶ 62,381] Chicago Seating Company v. S. Karpen & Bros.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of the Eastern Division of Illinois. No. 48 C 1892, February 23, 1949.

Robinson-Patman Act

Treble Damages Action—Discriminatory Practices—Complaint Dismissed.—A "customer" of a furniture manufacturer brought action for treble damages on the basis of the latter's alleged discriminatory practices consisting of a refusal to sell specially designed furniture, at prices available only by quotation, to the plaintiff, while at the same time filling orders solicited by two universities. The manufacturer's motion to dismiss the complaint was granted on the ground that when it arranged with the universities for specially designed furniture it did not extend a service to its purchasers, even though such arrangement was made at its own expense. The negotiations were destined primarily to benefit the manufacturer, and any benefit accruing to its purchasers was purely incidental. The complaint was dismissed on the further grounds that the plaintiff does not qualify as a purchaser and that it is still permissible for a seller to select his own customers.

See the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2212.475, 2216.

For plaintiff: Byron M. Getzoff.

For defendant: Dawson, Ooms, Booth & Spargenberg.

Memorandum and Order

CAMPBELL, District Judge: Plaintiff brought this action under Section 2 (e) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. A. 13), seeking recovery of treble damages for the alleged discriminatory practices of defendant. That particular sub-section of the Act states:

> "It shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms."

The complaint alleges that subsequent to the time plaintiff had established itself as a customer of defendant, the latter induced the University of Oklahoma to solicit bids for furniture which was specially designed by defendant and prices for which were available only by quotation by defendant. Defendant then made these prices available to other purchasers, who were competitors of plaintiff, but refused to quote or sell to plaintiff. Subsequently, defendant induced the University of Illinois to solicit the same type of bid, and, on this particular bid, prices were quoted and materials were sold to plaintiff. Later the same university again solicited bids for similar equipment, but defendant refused to quote prices or sell the goods. After these alleged acts of discrimination, defendant accepted orders from plaintiff for defendant's regular line of merchandise.

Thereupon, defendant moved to dismiss the complaint on the following grounds: (a) that it does not show an unlawful discrimination within the meaning of Section 2 (e); (b) that it does not allege facts showing that plaintiff was a purchaser as to whom there was any unlawful discrimination; (c) that defendant did nothing more than select its own customers, as it was expressly permitted to do under Section 2 (a).

The principal issue to be determined in this cause is accurately stated by plaintiff to be, "Did the defendant by negotiating with the University of Illinois and University of Oklahoma for the said institutions to exclusively require the special designed products of the defendant thereby render a service?" The Court is unable to agree with plaintiff's contention that defendant either did, or intended to, extend a service to its purchasers when it arranged for the requirement of specially designed furniture, even though such arrangement was made at its own expense and without cost to said purchasers. The negotiations were designed primarily to benefit the defendant, and any benefit accruing to its purchasers was purely incidental. The distinction between this practice and those described in Corn Products Company v. F. T. C., 324 U. S. 726, and Elizabeth Arden v. Blass, 150 F. 2nd 988, should be readily apparent. In the former case, the manufacturer spent large sums of money for advertising the product of one of its purchasers; in the latter case, the manufacturer either furnished the services of a clerk or paid part of the clerk's wages disproportionately as to all its purchasers. The activities complained of here and the price-quoting appear to belong in a completely different category, and should not be classified as services.

Furthermore, plaintiff does not qualify as a purchaser within the meaning of the term as defined in the case of Shaw's Inc. v. Wilson-Jones Co., 105 F. 2nd 331:

> "The term purchaser means simply one who purchases, a buyer, a vendee. It does not mean one who seeks to purchase, a person who goes into the market-place for the purpose of purchasing. In other words, it does not mean a prospective purchaser, or one who wishes to purchase, as the appellant contends."

and further:

> "Past purchases or conversations in respect to possible future purchases are insufficient."

Despite plaintiff's contentions to the contrary, it is still permissible for a seller to select his own customers. Plaintiff asserts that this is true under Section 13 (a) but not under 13 (e), because the proviso is not contained therein expressly. However, the language of the proviso itself should be noted:

> "And provided further, That nothing contained in Sections 12, 13, 14-21, 22-27 of this title shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade."

Quite obviously, therefore, since subsection (e) is a part of Section 13, it is also included within the scope of the proviso.

Defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint is, therefore, granted, and the same is accordingly dismissed.

[¶ 62,382] Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. No. 9215. March 11, 1949.

Petition for Review of Order of Federal Trade Commission.

Robinson-Patman Act

Discriminatory Sales Held to Be in Interstate Commerce.—A company engaged in refining and distributing gasoline transported gasoline from its refinery in one state to its bulk plants in another state, and from there to its customers in the same state. In a suit charging discrimination between its customers, it was held that the company was engaged in interstate commerce, and that such commerce did not end at the bulk plants, even though different vehicles were used to transport the gasoline, but that the stream of commerce flowed continuously from the tanks at the refinery to the tankers on the lake, from the tankers to the tanks at the bulk plants, and from there into tank cars and tank trucks to the customers. The bulk plants were not like a warehouse where the goods awaited further sale and distribution. Although the gasoline was not brought to the bulk plants pursuant to orders already taken, the demands of the territory were fairly constant and could be accurately estimated, so the flow of the stream of commerce kept surging. Sales to the customers were held to be in interstate commerce subject to the price discrimination prohibitions of the Robinson-Patman Act.

See the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2212.170.

Robinson-Patman Act

Price Discrimination Made in Good Faith to Meet Competition Held No Defense.—When a company engaged in the business of refining and distributing gasoline and other petroleum products discriminates in price by selling gasoline to four wholesalers for resale at wholesale and through their own retail stations, at a price substantially lower than the prices charged retail purchasers in the same area for gasoline of the same grade and quality, the fact that such discrimination is made in good faith to meet competition is not a complete defense under Section 2 of the amended Clayton Act. Prior to amendment by the Robinson-Patman Act, Section 2 of the Clayton Act provided that a discrimination in price made in good faith to meet competition was a defense. The amended Section 2 (a) still declares it unlawful to make a discriminatory price, and it keeps as defenses the cost savings and other defenses of the old Clayton Act, but takes out of the defense category the provision for making a lower price to meet competition. Section 2 (b) of the Robinson-Patman Act provides that if a discrimination in price is shown, the burden of justifying it is upon the party making the discriminatory price, and he can meet this prima facie case by showing that he acted in good faith to meet the low price of competitor. That it is not intended as a defense is apparent from the Conference Report resolving the disagreement of the two Houses. Petitioner showed that it made the lower price for its gasoline in good faith to meet competition. The effect of such showing was to rebut the prima facie case made by the Commission's proof of the petitioner's discriminatory prices in the sale of its gasoline. But where the discrimination is between purchasers who are in competition, and the competition which is alleged and proved to be injured is among the retail customers of the favored purchasers and other retailers, the fact that the seller's discriminatory price was made to meet his own competition is not controlling.

See the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2213.05.

Federal Trade Commission Act and Robinson-Patman Act

FTC Order Modified as to Policing of Wholesalers and Sales at Peril.—A portion of an order of the Federal Trade Commission prohibiting a gasoline refiner from selling to wholesalers at prices lower than those to retailers where the wholesalers resell to their customers at less than the refiner's posted price, is modified. The refiner should not be required to police its wholesalers and to sell to them at its peril. The order is modified to prohibit the refiner from selling to wholesalers at prices lower than those to retailers where the wholesalers "to the knowledge of respondent [refiner] or under such circumstances as are reasonably calculated to impute knowledge to the respondent" resell to their customers at less than the refiner's posted price.

See the Robinson-Patman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 2212.370, 2212.5034, and the Federal Trade Commission Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 6125.508.

Modifying and enforcing a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 4389.

For petitioner: Weymouth Kirkland, Howard Ellis, W. H. Van Oosterhout, and Arthur J. Abbott.

For respondent: Walter B. Wooden and James W. Cassedy.

Before KERNER, MINTON, and DUFFY, Circuit Judges.

[Petition for Review of Order Sought]

MINTON, Circuit Judge: The petitioner seeks to review a cease and desist order issued by the respondent ordering it to cease and desist from discriminating in the price of gasoline of the same grade and quality among its customers in violation of Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. Sec. 13). The Commission asks the enforcement of its order.

[Petitioner's Contentions]

The petitioner contends that the order should not be enforced because, first, the Commission failed to find and could not have found under the undisputed evidence in this case, that either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination was in commerce; secondly, that the Commission treated as immaterial the petitioner's conclusive showing that the discrimination made in price was in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, which showing the petitioner asserts is a complete defense. Third, the petitioner contends that:

> "Paragraph 6 of the Modified Order directs Standard at its peril to prevent jobbers to whom it sells gasoline and who are in competition with Standard in the resale thereof from reselling to their retail dealers at prices less than Standard's price to its own retail dealers; requires Standard to police, maintain and regulate such competitor's prices on gasoline, title to which passed to the jobbers on delivery by Standard; and subjects Standard retroactively to punishment for contempt should a jobber-competitor fail to maintain such resale prices."

[Findings of Commission]

Substantial evidence in this record shows the following facts as found by the Commission. The petitioner's principal office and place of business is located in Chicago, Illinois. It is engaged in the business of refining and distributing gasoline and other petroleum products throughout fourteen states, principally in the Middle West. The petitioner has a refinery at Whiting, Indiana, to which it supplies crude oil from fields located in other states. One of the divisions in which it distributes its products is known as the Detroit Field, which embraces some thirteen counties in southern Michigan, including the city of Detroit. The Detroit Area, as distinguished from the Detroit Field, is confined to the city of Detroit and its suburbs. The petitioner has no refinery in Michigan, and almost all the gasoline it sells and distributes in the Detroit Field is transported by tankers from its refinery at Whiting through the Great Lakes to the petitioner's marine terminal at River Rouge, outside the city of Detroit. This terminal has a storage tank capacity of sixty-three million gallons. During the summer months, deliveries are made from Whiting weekly and sometimes twice weekly. In the fall, sufficient gasoline is delivered and stored to take care of the estimated requirements during the winter months when navigation on the Great Lakes is closed. The amount of gasoline used in Detroit is fairly constant and can be accurately estimated. During the years from 1936 through 1940, the years here in question, the petitioner supplied 16 to 17% of all the gasoline in the Detroit Area. In addition to the River Rouge tanks, the petitioner operated six bulk plants in the Detroit Area. Practically all of the gasoline sold in the Detroit Area passed through the River Rouge terminal, except that in some instances gas was delivered directly from Whiting by truck and also by the same means to commercial users. Deliveries were made from the River Rouge terminal by tank cars and tank trucks up to February 1, 1940, and thereafter by trucks alone. The delivery trucks were owned and operated or leased and operated by the petitioner through its employees.

The petitioner supplied gasoline to approximately 358 retail service stations, approximately two hundred of which the petitioner owned and leased, and eight of which it leased and subleased. The remaining 150 were independent operators who owned or leased their stations from someone else. The latter had agreements to purchase their entire requirements of Standard Oil gasoline only from the petitioner. While the former had no such agreements, they did not buy gasoline from anyone except the petitioner. The delivery to the retail customers was known as "tank wagon delivery" and was made at a price fixed in Chicago by the petitioner from time to time, known in the trade as the "posted tank-wagon price."

In addition, the petitioner supplied gasoline to four dealers in the Detroit Area, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company, hereinafter sometimes referred to as Citrin, Stikeman, Wayne, and Ned's. These customers were also known as wholesale customers. They had their own storage tanks and trucks for delivery and met the credit qualifications of the petitioner.

During the time in question Citrin, Stikeman, and Wayne sold a substantial portion of their gasoline purchased from the petitioner direct to the public through retail service stations owned and operated by them. Ned's was engaged entirely in the retail sale of gasoline to the public through its own stations. To these last four customers, known, as we have pointed out, as the wholesale customers, the petitioner has discriminated in price by selling its gasoline to them for resale at wholesale and through their own retail stations at a price substantially lower than the prices charged retail purchasers in the Detroit Area for gasoline of the same grade and quality. The petitioner's Red Crown gasoline, its largest selling brand and comprising about ninety per cent of its sales in the Detroit Area, was sold to those four wholesalers at 1½¢ a gallon lower than the prices charged by the petitioner for the same gasoline to other retail dealers in the Detroit Area.

Citrin, in addition to supplying its own stations which sold at retail, from January 1, 1938, to December 31, 1940, sold one million gallons of gasoline annually to Langer and Cohn, who run a chain of service stations, at 1½¢ a gallon less than the tank wagon price, and in addition sold another retail service operator at ½¢ a gallon less than the tank wagon price. For a time Citrin also issued special service cards which entitled the holder to a 2¢ a gallon discount on the purchase of gasoline from one of the retail service stations operated by Citrin.

There is no evidence that Wayne ever sold gasoline to retailers at a price lower than the posted tank-wagon price charged by the petitioner to its dealers or that Wayne ever allowed any discounts. The same is true of Stikeman.

Ned's, however, sold at retail exclusively, and it has been its practice since March 7, 1938, to sell to its customers below the prevailing retail service station price or to give premiums and discounts which result in a price below its posted price.

A lower price at one service station than at another is an important factor in the purchasing public's mind, especially in the price of the petitioner's advertised brands. Any difference in price between two stations selling the same brand of gasoline is very important in influencing the business. The margin of profit between the tank wagon price to a service station and the retail price is small, averaging since November 1, 1939, about 3.3¢ a gallon in the Detroit Area.

In 1937 Ned's was selling the petitioner's Red Crown gasoline to the public at approximately 2¢ a gallon below the prevailing retail service station price, which continued with variations until the latter part of 1939. In 1939 and 1940, when Ned's posted price was the prevailing retail price, it gave premiums and discounts under cover. It has from time to time given commercial discounts of 1 to 2¢ a gallon off the posted tank-wagon price. In 1939, Ned's also issued trading stamps with a value of 2¢ a gallon, which were redeemable in merchandise or gasoline at Ned's stores. Price cutting at Ned's stores has been almost continuous, and this company has been responsible for starting most of the retail price cutting in major brand gasolines in Detroit over a period of several years. This practice of Ned's has caused substantial damage to other retail service station operators selling the petitioner's Red Crown gasoline and also to retail service station operators selling other brands of gasoline.

The price discriminations granted to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman on gasoline sold by them at retail have given a substantial competitive advantage to these favored dealers in their retail operations over other retailers of gasoline, including retail customers of the petitioner. This competitive advantage is capable of being used and has been used by Ned's and to some extent by Citrin to divert large amounts of business from other gasoline retailers, including customers of the petitioner, with resultant injury to them and to their ability to continue in business and successfully compete with Ned's and Citrin in the retailing of gasoline. The effect of these discriminations in price allowed by the petitioner to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman has been and may be substantially to lessen competition and to injure, destroy, and prevent competition with each of these four dealers and with their respective customers in the retail sale of gasoline.

[Low Price in Good Faith; No Cost Savings]

There is substantial evidence in this record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that the petitioner made its low price to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor. The petitioner failed to show that the discriminatory price which it made these four dealers was justified on the basis of any cost savings.

[Petitioner's Discriminatory Sales Held to Be in Commerce]

The findings of the Commission based upon the substantial evidence above indicated are sufficient to support the Commission's conclusion of law that the discriminatory sales were in commerce. It is not disputed that the petitioner is engaged in commerce, but it is vigorously insisted that commerce ended at the River Rouge plant and the bulk plants in the Detroit Area and that the petitioner's transactions from there on were wholly intrastate. With this we are unable to agree. The break that occurred at River Rouge was a break in transportation but not in the constant stream of commerce that flowed from the Whiting refinery to the petitioner's customers in Michigan. The stream of commerce flowed continuously from the tanks at the refinery to the tankers on the lake; from the tankers to the tanks at River Rouge and the bulk plants in Detroit; and from there into tank cars and tank trucks to the petitioner's customers. There may have been several breaks in transportation in getting from one vehicle or receptacle to the other in completing the commercial transaction of getting the petitioner's gasoline from Whiting into the Detroit territory, but the stream of commerce was never broken, no matter how many receptacles were used on the way. The rest at River Rouge was not like a warehouse where the goods awaited further sale and distribution. Although the gasoline was not brought to River Rouge pursuant to orders already taken, the demands of the Michigan territory were fairly constant, and the petitioner's customers' demands could be accurately estimated, so the flow of the stream of commerce kept surging from Whiting to Detroit.

We think this case quite analogous to Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495, 42 S. Ct. 397, 66 L. Ed. 735. In that case, the livestock came by carrier interstate and intrastate into the receiving pens of the stockyards where the animals were fed, watered, and held until sales were consummated, either to the packers who drove them across the street to the packing house, or to the wholesale dealers or feeders who reshipped them. The transportation was broken at the yards. The animals came to rest, but the stream of commerce moved on to final destination; and the stockyards, with its holding pens, was held to be in commerce, just as here the various changes in the manner of movement may have slowed down the stream of commerce between Whiting and Michigan, but never stopped it. The tanks at River Rouge were similar to a "packaging house" on the way to market. The tank cars and trucks were the most convenient "packages" that could be used to complete the distribution of the gasoline. It is unlike Walling v. Goldblatt Bros., 128 F. 2d 778, where the warehouse was only a detached stockroom for retail stores of a retailer. There the stream of commerce ended at the warehouse for the most part. Here it reached at River Rouge only an intermediate stage preliminary to its final disposition to the petitioner's customers.

We decline, as the Supreme Court did in Stafford v. Wallace, supra, p. 519,

> " * * * to defeat this purpose in respect of such a stream and take it out of complete national regulation by a nice and technical inquiry into the non-interstate character of some of its necessary incidents and facilities when considered alone and without reference to their association with the movement of which they were an essential but subordinate part."

After all, as Justice Holmes said in Swift and Company v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 398, 25 S. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518, " * * * commerce among the States is not a technical legal conception, but a practical one, drawn from the course of business." The modern concept of commerce is one which gives full sweep to the commerce clause of the Constitution within the limits of the implementing statute, a liberal view of the Congressional purpose as expressed in the statute, and a realistic view of what business is doing as it moves across state lines to accomplish its purpose. The late cases support the view that the petitioner's operations are in commerce from the refinery to its customers. Walling v. Jacksonville Paper Co., 317 U. S. 564, 63 S. Ct. 332, 87 L. Ed. 460; Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291, 309, 44 S. Ct. 96, 68 L. Ed. 308; Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation v. Keen, 157 F. 2d 310, 314; Republic Pictures Corporation v. Kappler, 151 F. 2d 543, 545; Walling v. American Stores Co., 133 F. 2d 840.

[Good Faith Held No Defense]

Now as to the contention that the discriminatory prices here complained of were made in good faith to meet a lower price of a competitor. While the Commission made no finding on this point, it assumed its existence but held, contrary to the petitioner's contention, that this was not a defense.

Prior to June 19, 1936, when the Robinson-Patman Act went into effect, the Clayton Act, Section 2,[1] provided:

> "That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, * * * either directly or indirectly to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities * * * where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation, or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition * * * ."

[1] 38 Stat. 730 (1914), 15 U. S. C. Sec. 13 (1934).

Thus it will be seen that a discrimination in price made in good faith to meet competition was a defense under Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as was a showing that the discrimination was made because of cost savings, or proof of the other defenses given by the Act. But since large buyers could always get such price meeting by suppliers to justify a discrimination in price in their favor, the purpose of the Act to avoid such discrimination was easily evaded. Congress sought to change this bypass by changing the discriminatory price, made in good faith to meet the low price of a competitor, from a defense, as it then was, to a procedural aid to enable a seller to overcome the prima facie case made by showing a difference in price to customers in the same community for goods of the same quality. This was done by amending Section 2 of the Clayton Act by Section 2 (a) and (b) of the Robinson-Patman Act.[2] The amended Section 2 (a) still made it unlawful to make a discriminatory price, as before, and it kept as a defense the cost savings and other defenses of the old Clayton Act, but took out of the defense category the provision for making a lower price to meet competition. As to this, it was provided in Section 2 (b) as follows:

"Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

This amendment, it is clear, provided that if a discrimination in price were shown, the burden of justifying it was upon the party making the discriminatory price, and he could meet this prima-facie case by showing that he acted in good faith to meet the low price of a competitor. That it was not intended as a defense is apparent from the Conference Report resolving the disagreement of the two Houses. The purpose of Congress is so clearly set out in the Conference Report that we quote it as follows:

"The Senate bill contained a further proviso: 'That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition.' This language is found in existing law, and in the opinion of the conferees is one of the obstacles to enforcement of the present Clayton Act. The Senate receded, and the language is stricken. A provision relating to the question of meeting competition, intended to operate only as a rule of evidence in a proceeding before the Federal Trade Commission is included in subsection (b) in the conference text as follows:

" 'Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.' "

(Congressional Record, June 15, 1936, p. 9414.)

The Chairman of the House Conferees stated on the floor of the House as he presented the Conference Report:

"It is to be noted, however, that this does not set up the meeting of competition as an absolute bar to a charge of discrimination under the bill. It merely permits it to be shown in evidence. This provision is entirely procedural.

* * *

"If this proviso were construed to permit the showing of a competing offer as an absolute bar to liability for discrimination, then it would nullify the act entirely > at the very inception of its enforcement, for in nearly every case mass buyers receive similar discriminations from competing sellers of the same product."

[2] 49 Stat. 1526, (1936), 15 U. S. C. Sec. 13 (1946).

(Congressional Record, June 15, 1936, p. 9418.)

The intent of Congress is clear and the language used to express its intent, it seems to us, is not ambiguous. That Section 2 (b) is as the Conference Report says it was intended to be, seems to be the view of the Supreme Court as expressed in Trade Comm'n v. Staley Co., 324 U. S. 746, 65 S. Ct. 971, 89 L. Ed. 1338, which reversed this Court in A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 144 F. 2d 221, wherein we held the prima-facie case had been rebutted. Chief Justice Stone said (p. 752):

> "It will be noted that the defense that the price discriminations were made in order to meet competition, is under the statute a matter of 'rebutting' the Commission's 'prima-facie case.' Prior to the Robinson-Patman amendments, Sec. 2 of the Clayton Act provided that nothing contained in it 'shall prevent' discriminations in price 'made in good faith to meet competition.' The change in language of this exception was for the purpose of making the defense a matter of evidence in each case, raising a question of fact as to whether the competition justified the discrimination."

The showing made here by the petitioner that it made the lower price in good faith to meet competition, we assume, as the Commission apparently did, was made out. The effect of it was to rebut the prima-facie case made by the Commission's proof of the petitioner's discriminatory prices. If nothing further appeared in this record, the case might well have ended there. The reason for making the discrimination was effective to rebut the prima facie case in price discrimination, but it still remained a discrimination, and that discrimination affected competition on the retail level among the retail customers of the wholesalers to whom the petitioner has sold. The discrimination in price in favor of the parties in this case, which the petitioner had a right to make as against its competitors was then used by the petitioner's customers to work havoc among competitors on the retail level. The petitioner had given a club to its wholesalers which they passed on to their retailers to bludgeon their competitors. This is what the Commission is trying to stop, and it is towards the elimination of this evil that the cease and desist order is directed.

The Commission here considered the other evidence as to the effect on competition of this continuing discrimination and found, and it was justified in finding, that the discrimination not only may but did affect competition. There is substantial evidence in this record that the petitioner's favored wholesalers were in a position to do and did do injury to competition. Where as here the discrimination is between purchasers who are in competition, and the competition which is alleged and proved to be injured is among the retail customers of the favored purchasers and other retailers, the fact that the seller's discriminatory price was made to meet his own competition is not controlling. The discrimination continued here and its effect was direct and harmful to competition and was properly condemned by the Commission's order, notwithstanding the petitioner's discrimination in price was made in good faith to meet competition of its own.

The case of Samuel H. Moss, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 148 F. 2d 378, does not, as we understand it, hold that Section 2(b) is a defense in all events. It holds only that a lower price discrimination made in good faith to meet competition, standing alone, may be a defense. If there were no further showing that the lower price lessens or tends to prevent competition, the justification in the discrimination would be made out. But in the instant case, the Commission went further and showed that the petitioner's discrimination in price to its wholesale customers did have the effect to substantially lessen competition or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition. Note, however, that it would have been necessary for the Commission to prove only that such discrimination in price may have that effect. Trade Comm'n v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 68 S. Ct. 822, 92 L. Ed. 948. It is not actual injury alone, but the prospect reasonably to be expected of injury to competition which the statute seeks to prevent.

We agree with the Commission that the showing of the petitioner that it made the discriminatory price in good faith to meet competition is not controlling in view of the very substantial evidence that its discrimination was used to affect and lessen competition at the retail level.

[Prohibition as to Sales to Jobbers or Wholesalers Modified]

The petitioner objects to Paragraph 6 of the cease and desist order. This paragraph reads as follows:

> "6. By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler resells such gasoline to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer."

This paragraph is intended to eliminate the effects of the discriminatory price made to these customers, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman, who do a wholesale business. To avoid the force of this paragraph, the petitioner may do one of two things. First, discontinue selling to wholesalers at a price different than that made to retailers. The petitioner's three largest competitors in Detroit have found it agreeable to do so. The petitioner argues that this is an elimination of wholesalers. If this be true, it is elimination only where their existence cannot be justified except on the exploitation of a differential in price not justified by any cost savings to obtain that price. This does not impress us as either illegal, unwarranted, or unjust.

Secondly, the petitioner may under the right to choose its customers refuse to sell to wholesalers who sell to retailers below the price the petitioner makes to its own retailers. The petitioner does not have to make price control agreements with anyone. It has only to govern its own conduct to avoid the impact of an unlawful discrimination. To govern its conduct, the order makes the petitioner deal with its wholesalers at its peril as to what they might do with the gasoline in the future. The petitioner has no control and can have no control over the price of the gasoline after it is sold to the wholesalers. The latter may put any price on it they may choose. They may give it away if they like. The petitioner should not be required to police its wholesalers and to sell to them at the petitioner's peril. The petitioner should be liable if it sells to a wholesaler it knows or ought to have known is engaging in or intends to engage in the competitive practices condemned by this proceeding. Under the order as drawn, the petitioner would be liable if afterwards the wholesaler should resell at a price lower than the petitioner charged its retailers. If the petitioner is to be hailed into court for a violation of the Commission's order, the petitioner must be guilty of knowingly choosing a customer who is using or intends to use its price advantage to undersell the petitioner in its prices made to its retailers.

We would modify Paragraph 6 to read as follows:

> "By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler, to the knowledge of the respondent or under such circumstances as are reasonably calculated to impute knowledge to the respondent, resells such gasoline or intends to resell the same to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer."

[Order Enforced as Modified]

The order as modified will be enforced, and judgment thereon will be entered accordingly.

[¶ 62,383] Thomas B. Eastman, et al. v. Yellow Cab Company, et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. No. 9607. October Term, 1948, January Session, 1949. March 11, 1949.

On appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.

Sherman Act

Sufficiency of Complaint—Cab Business—Local Service Rendered to Interstate Passengers.—A taxicab company's action against other cab companies and the City of Chicago alleging, among other things, conspiracy to limit taxicab licenses and to prevent new operators from entering the business, is remanded to the trial court for further proceedings. Travel in local taxicabs by interstate passengers between railway stations may come within the definition of interstate commerce. Therefore, construing the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, the Court holds that it states a claim under the Sherman Act upon which relief can be granted.

See the Clayton Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.125.

For plaintiffs-appellants: Richard Wolff, M. E. Cedar.

For defendants-appellees: Philip E. Ringer, M. Lester Reinwald, Morris Sostrin, Benjamin S. Adamowski, Julius Jesmer, Weymouth Kirkland, Howard Ellis, John M. O'Conner, Jr.

[Allegations]

Before KERNER and DUFFY, JJ., and BRIGGLE, D. J.

DUFFY, J.: This is an appeal from an order of the district court dismissing the complaint before trial. Nine defendants are named, but Yellow Cab Company, Checker Taxi Company, Parmelee Transportation Company, and the city of Chicago and two officials thereof are the principal defendants. The cab and transportation companies will be referred to as "Yellow," "Checker," and "Parmelee," respectively.

The complaint and amendments herein are unduly prolix, covering 41 pages of the printed record. However, referring to matters discussed on this appeal and rearranging them in chronological order, the allegations of the complaint may be summarized as follows: (1) That this action was instituted under Sec. 15 of the Clayton Act; in part under Amendment V, the United States Constitution; in part under Sec. I of the XIV Amendment of the United States Constitution; and also under the act entitled "Provisions Relating to Radio" (Sec. 301, 48 Stat. 1081, June 19, 1934); (2) that plaintiffs are owners and operators of taxicabs for hire on the streets of Chicago (the complaint sets forth at some length that plaintiffs are veterans of the armed forces of the United States and frequently refers to them as "plaintiff veterans"), and that Yellow and Checker combined with the city of Chicago to restrain and prohibit the plaintiffs from operating their vehicles, pursuant to a conspiracy to maintain a monopoly of the taxicab service in the hands of said defendant cab and transportation companies; (3) that the city of Chicago is the terminus of a large number of railroads; that it is necessary for a great majority of train passengers, including those traveling from one State to another, to get off the trains on which they travel to Chicago and go to another station, from two blocks to two miles distant, and there board other trains in order to complete their journeys; that a substantial number of such passengers in interstate commerce use taxicabs operated by defendants and plaintiffs in transporting themselves and their baggage from station to station; that because of the conspiracy of the defendants to restrain competition an acute shortage of taxicabs exists in Chicago which causes interstate passengers to miss train connections; (4) that taxicabs of the defendants operate largely in the downtown area of Chicago while taxicabs of plaintiffs, especially those equipped with two-way radios, operate throughout the city and in the outskirts of the city and on trips to the airports, and that the shortage of taxicabs existing interferes with interstate travel by plane; (5) that for periods from six months to two years plaintiffs have been rendering taxicab service to the public, and in an effort to provide better facilities and transportation, plaintiffs formed associations and invested large sums of money in garages, gasoline stations and two-way radio transmitting equipment, and thus were able to fairly compete with Yellow and Checker; that defendants conspired to interfere with and prevent the operation by plaintiffs of their two-way radio-equipped taxicabs by interfering with the information of associations to which many plaintiffs belong and preventing the association name or the fact that the taxicab was radio-equipped from appearing by sign or insignia on such taxicabs, all resulting in an enormous loss of good will to plaintiffs, although taxicabs operated by defendant cab and transportation companies were permitted to and did continue to carry advertising necessary to maintain their own good will; (6) that a conspiracy commenced in January, 1929; that prior to said date, ordinances of the city of Chicago did not limit or restrict the number of taxicab licenses which might be issued, but that in September, 1929, the city enacted an ordinance providing that no taxicab licenses should thereafter be issued unless the Public Vehicle License Commission should, after hearing, declare that public convenience and necessity required the issue of such licenses; that in January, 1929, Yellow held 2,335 or 44% and Checker 1,750 or 33% of the outstanding licenses.

The complaint then refers to the ordinances enacted by the city of Chicago on May 18, 1934, and on December 22, 1937. The first of these, a comprehensive ordinance to regulate the operation of taxicabs in the city of Chicago, provided among other things for the issuance of licenses for a term ending December 31, 1940. Based upon this ordinance 4,108 taxicab licenses were issued, Yellow receiving 2,166 and Checker 1,500. The latter ordinance, passed on December 22, 1937, provided for a method of voluntary surrender of licenses to reduce the number outstanding to 3,000, and provided also that in the event the number of authorized licenses should later be increased above the 3,000 figure, said licenses should be issued to licensees ratably in proportion to the number voluntarily surrendered by such licensee. The ordinance further provided that authority to operate under the 1934 ordinance be extended to December 31, 1945, provided the licensee accepted the terms of the 1937 ordinance. Both Yellow and Checker did accept the terms, and Yellow surrendered 571 licenses (leaving it with 1,595) and Checker surrendered 500 (leaving it with 1,000).

On January 16, 1946, the City Council authorized the Public Vehicle License Commissioner to issue 250 permits for the operation of taxicabs, and provided that ex-service men were to be given preference and that the permits were to be issued only to individuals. On January 22, 1946, the Commissioner ordered Yellow to place in operation 234 of its licensed taxicabs which had not been operating, and Checker, 87 unoperated taxicabs, and directed that if this were not done within five days, the licenses for said cabs would be cancelled.

It is alleged that following March 18, 1946, 275 temporary one-year nontransferable licenses were issued to so-called "independents" with the consent of Yellow and Checker. In January, 1947, these temporary licenses were renewed for one year from their effective date. The complaint alleges further that 1,200 unlicensed taxicabs are being operated on the streets of Chicago and that the owners, including many of plaintiffs, are unable to obtain either regular or temporary taxicab licenses.

The complaint alleges that on February 5, 1947, the City Council found and declared that the demand for taxicab service in the city of Chicago was in excess of the 3,000 limit under the ordinance of December 22, 1937, and authorized Public Vehicle License Commissioner Gorman, one of the defendants herein, to issue sufficient additional licenses to bring the total to 5,500, under certain limitations and conditions however, which plaintiffs allege are discriminatory as to them and are a part of the conspiracy.

The complaint further alleges that the city of Chicago has arbitrarily ordered the plaintiffs and others like them to cease operation of their taxicabs on or before January 22, 1948, and that such order violates Sec. I of Amendment XIV, the Constitution of the United States.

The prayer of the complaint asks that the defendants be enjoined from interfering, hindering, or otherwise discouraging the plaintiffs and others like them from operating their taxicabs on the streets of the city of Chicago, and that such conspiracy in restraint of trade be adjudged unlawful, that the defendants be required to release and waive any rights they have under the ordinance of the city of Chicago dated December 22, 1937, and that licenses to operate their taxicabs be issued to the plaintiffs in like form as issued to drivers for defendant companies.

On February 13, 1948, the city of Chicago, and its officials listed as defendants herein, moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted; and on the 16th of February a similar motion was filed in behalf of the defendant cab and transportation companies. Thereafter, on March 4, the court permitted an amendment to the complaint, adding a number of additional parties plaintiff and one additional defendant. A second motion to dismiss by the defendant transportation companies was filed on March 9, 1948, on the same grounds as the first. Thereafter plaintiffs moved to amend their complaint so as to allege that an ordinance passed by the city of Chicago on February 6, 1948, was in furtherance of the conspiracy previously alleged in the complaint, in that it deprived them of the right to advertise on their cabs that they belonged to a certain association, and prohibited them from referring to certain of their cabs as being equipped with two-way radio, and that it discriminated against plaintiffs in other respects. The prayer of the amendment asked that the court declare the ordinance of February 6, 1948, null and void as being in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and more particularly of the Sherman Act, and it sought to enjoin defendants from interfering, arresting or otherwise discouraging plaintiffs and others like them from operating their taxicabs on the streets of Chicago.

Plaintiffs moved for a further amendment to the complaint to allege that Illinois Cab Drivers' Assn. for Discharged Veterans, composed of 103 negro veterans who are engaged in the operation of taxicabs in the city of Chicago, made application for licenses to defendant Gorman, as Commissioner of Licenses, but that not a single member of the association was granted a license even though he carried the requisite amount of insurance and possessed the necessary other qualifications; that, upon information and belief, the reason for the denial of such licenses was the fact that the drivers were negroes, and that such denial was due to discrimination because of color prejudice, in violation of the XIV Amendment, the Constitution.

On March 9, 1948, the court heard the motions for amendment to the complaint and also the motion of plaintiffs for a temporary restraining order. The court granted leave to file the amendments to the complaint, and then entered the following order:

> "Further ordered, that said complaint and the amendments thereto be and they are hereby dismissed for lack of jurisdiction."

It will be noted that the amended complaint was dismissed on the court's own motion "for lack of jurisdiction." Rule 12(h), F. R. C. P., provides:

> "* * * whenever it appears by suggestion of the parties or otherwise that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter, the court shall dismiss the action. * * *"

Although three motions were pending to dismiss the complaint on the ground that it failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, the matter that was before the court at the time the order of dismissal was entered was a motion of the plaintiffs for a temporary restraining order.

[Appeal]

The briefs filed by the parties on this appeal do not limit arguments to the question of jurisdiction as such, but discuss from a broader aspect the issue whether the complaint does state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Of course if an examination of the complaint reveals that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter, it follows that no relief can be granted.

In arriving at its decision to dismiss, the trial court apparently relied upon determinations made by other courts in various lawsuits involving the ordinances described in the complaint, as well as on the decision of the United States Supreme Court in an antitrust case (United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218) commenced by the United States government against the same defendants named herein, except the city of Chicago and its officials.

The ordinance of September, 1929, which first created the Public Vehicle License Commission, and which provided that no taxicab licenses should be issued thereafter unless the commission found public convenience and necessity required such proposed service, was declared valid by a three-judge district court. Capitol Taxicab Co. v. Cermak, 60 F. (2d) 608.

The ordinances of May 18, 1934, and of December 22, 1937, as extended, were sustained by the Supreme Court of Illinois as a valid exercise of the city's police power.

Yellow Cab Co. v. City of Chicago, et al., 396 Ill. 388, 71 N. E. (2d) 652. (The 1937 ordinance was due to expire on December 31, 1945, but was extended in June, 1945, for another five year period.) The suit was brought by Yellow and Checker against the city of Chicago, and the court held that the acceptance of the 1937 ordinance by Yellow and Checker constituted a contract, and that the city of Chicago was precluded from issuing taxicab licenses in excess of 3,000 without the consent of Yellow and Checker until it had first reissued to them licenses for those surrendered by them in 1938. The court also held that the ordinances did not create a monopoly in the taxicab business in the city of Chicago, but did point out that no taxi operator and no person who desired to enter the taxicab business had complained in that case about a monopoly.

In United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, the complaint, which sought to prevent and restrain alleged violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, was dismissed by the district court for failure to state a claim upon which relief might be granted (69 F. Supp. 170). The Supreme Court, dividing its decision into three parts, sustained in part and reversed in part the decision of the trial court. The court held in Parts I and II that the complaint did state a cause of action under the Sherman Act entitling the United States to a trial on the merits. Part I had to do with interstate purchases exclusively from one defendant of the replacements of some 5,000 taxicabs in four cities. Part II concerned the alleged existence of an agreement that Yellow and Cab Sales would not compete with Parmelee for contracts with railroads to transport passengers and their baggage between railroad stations in Chicago.

However, defendants herein rely strongly on Part III of that decision. In that case the complaint contained allegations similar to those contained in the complaint herein, as hereinbefore stated, and alleged a conspiracy to limit taxicab licenses in the city of Chicago, and the preventing of new operators from entering the cab business.

In order to understand just what the Supreme Court decided, it seems advisable to quote at some length from the opinion (332 U. S. 218, at page 230):

> "The interstate commerce toward which this aspect of the conspiracy is directed is claimed to arise out of the following facts. Many persons are said to embark upon interstate journeys from their homes, offices and hotels in Chicago by using taxicabs to transport themselves and their luggage to railroad stations in Chicago. Conversely, in making journeys from other states to homes, offices and hotels in Chicago, many persons are said to complete such trips by using taxicabs to transport themselves and their luggage from railroad stations in Chicago to said homes, offices and hotels. Such transportation of persons and their luggage is intermingled with the admittedly local operations of the Chicago taxicabs. But it is that allegedly interstate part of the business upon which rests the validity of the complaint in this particular.
>
> "We hold, however, that such transportation is too unrelated to interstate commerce to constitute a part thereof within the meaning of the Sherman Act. These taxicabs, in transporting passengers and their luggage to and from Chicago railroad stations, admittedly cross no state lines; by ordinance, their service is confined to transportation 'between any two points within the corporate limits of the city.' None of them serves only railroad passengers, all of them being required to serve 'every person' within the limits of Chicago. They have no contractual or other arrangement with the interstate railroads. Nor are their fares paid or collected as part of the railroad fares. In short, their relationship to interstate transit is only casual and incidental."

If the Supreme Court had chosen to say no more, we would have no hesitation to adopt this ruling as applicable, and hold that the case at bar did not fall within the ambit of the Sherman Act and that the relief prayed for thereunder could not be granted; however, the court did say more, for the opinion states (pp. 232-233):

> "We do not mean to establish any absolute rule that local taxicab service to and from railroad stations is completely beyond the reach of federal power or even beyond the scope of the Sherman Act. In Stafford v. Wallace supra, 528, the court made plain that nothing in the Knight case was authority for the proposition that 'if such an agency (local cab service) could be and were used in a conspiracy unduly and constantly to monopolize interstate passenger traffic, it might not be brought within federal restraint.' Likewise, we are not to be understood in this case as deciding that all conspiracies among local cab drivers are so unrelated to interstate commerce as to fall outside the federal ken. A conspiracy to burden or eliminate transportation of passengers to and from a railroad station where interstate journeys begin and end might have sufficient effect upon interstate commerce to justify the imposition of the Sherman Act or other federal laws resting on the commerce power of Congress.

"All that we hold here is that when local taxicabs merely convey interstate train passengers between their homes and the railroad station in the normal course of their independent local service, that service is not an integral part of interstate transportation. And a restraint on or monopoly of that general local service, without more, is not proscribed by the Sherman Act.

"It follows that the complaint, insofar as it is based on such local taxicab service, fails to state a cause of action under the Sherman Act. * * *"

For the purpose of testing the sufficiency of the complaint we must assume, without deciding, that the allegations thereof are true. We, therefore, must assume that in Chicago a shortage of taxicabs exists which burdens the journeys of interstate passengers, and that such burdens result from the alleged conspiracy. The Supreme Court says (United States v. Yellow Cab Co., supra, p. 233):

"* * * A conspiracy to burden or eliminate transportation of passengers to and from a railroad station where interstate journeys begin and end might have sufficient effect upon interstate commerce to justify the imposition of the Sherman Act. * * *"

In that case the court's attention was focused on taxicab passengers whose journeys began or ended at a Chicago railway station, in contrast to the complaint in the case at bar wherein the interference with the interstate journeys of passengers merely traveling through Chicago is given the most emphasis. Although Parmelee operates with somewhat different type of motor vehicles, and has a contract with the railroads, it is difficult to discern any substantial difference in the status of an interstate passenger who uses a taxicab to travel from station to station, and the interstate passenger who uses Parmelee facilities. Yet the Supreme Court has squarely held that such Parmelee passengers are in interstate commerce. The court said (United States v. Yellow Cab Co., supra, p. 228):

"The transportation of such passengers and their luggage between stations in Chicago is clearly a part of the stream of interstate commerce. When persons or goods moved from a point of origin in one state to a point of destination in another, the fact that a part of that journey consists of transportation by an independent agency solely within the boundaries of one state does not make that portion of the trip any less interstate in character. * * *"

Construing the complaint in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, we hold that it does state a claim under the Sherman Act upon which relief can be granted. It is of course no valid objection that all of the relief asked for in the complaint and the amendments thereto cannot be granted.

Likewise it is not a sufficient objection for defendants to urge that the travel in taxicabs by interstate passengers between railroad stations in Chicago has only a slight effect on interstate commerce. Quoting again from United States v. Yellow Cab Co., supra (p. 225),

"But the amount of interstate trade thus affected by the conspiracy is immaterial in determining whether a violation of the Sherman Act has been charged in the complaint. Section 1 of the Act outlaws unreasonable restraints on interstate commerce, regardless of the amount of commerce affected. (Citing cases) And Section 2 of the Act makes it unlawful to conspire to monopolize 'any part' of interstate commerce, without specifying how large a part must be affected. Hence it is enough if some appreciable part of interstate commerce is the subject of a monopoly, a restraint or a conspiracy. * * *"

[Equal Protection Clause]

We now reach for consideration that part of the complaint which alleges a violation of plaintiffs' rights under the XIV Amendment. The portion of Section I of said amendment here applicable reads:

"* * * nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Although plaintiffs make some argument that their claim arises under the due process clause, it is apparent that they mainly rely on the equal protection clause.

It must be conceded that the control and regulation of taxicabs used by the public is a valid exercise of the police powers of a city. The equal protection clause of the XIV Amendment permits a State, or a subdivision thereof, a wide discretion to classify in the adoption of police regulations. A classification which has a reasonable basis does not offend against that clause. To be condemned such classification must be clearly arbitrary and unreasonable. Bachtel v. Wilson, 204 U. S. 36, 41. The inequality prohibited is only such as is actually and palpably unreasonable and arbitrary. Frost v. Corporation Commission of Oklahoma, 278 U. S. 515, 522. He who asserts that a classification is arbitrary has the burden of proof that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis. Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U. S. 61, 78, 79.

The original complaint charges that the city's order directing plaintiffs to cease operating their taxicabs on or before January 22, 1948, was arbitrary and discriminatory and violated Section I of Amendment XIV, in that its adoption and other actions of defendants resulted in a failure to provide a uniform method of evaluation of the applications for licenses, arbitrary refusal to grant permits to qualified applicants, and failure to grant to successful applicants licenses equivalent to those held by Yellow and Checker, and that by reason thereof the plaintiffs were damaged.

In the amended complaint the ordinance of February 6, 1948, is alleged to be in furtherance of the conspiracy described in the complaint, and adopted for the purpose of prohibiting competition between plaintiff taxicab operators and the defendant taxicab companies, and various alleged discriminations are set forth which plaintiffs allege are in violation of their rights under the XIV Amendment. Emphasis is laid on the provision of the ordinance requiring each plaintiff driver obtaining a license to operate his cab independently while Yellow and Checker are permitted to much more economically operate their vehicles with relief drivers, and on the fact that Yellow and Checker may use and advertise their association name but that this privilege is denied to the plaintiffs. There are other allegations of discrimination. Based on all of them the plaintiffs in effect portray the situation of strongly entrenched taxicab interests keeping their competition unorganized so that they will be able to retain their present dominant position, and specifically of defendant taxicab companies not fearing competition so long as they can prevent concerted and organized effort on the part of any other competing persons or groups, and that this very situation does exist, as alleged in the complaint, by reason of the conspiracy between Yellow and Checker and the city.

Defendant city of Chicago contends that the courts have held the ordinances of 1934 and 1937 to be contracts with Yellow and Checker and that the provisions contained in the licenses held by them were by reason thereof necessarily granted. However, in view of the city having extended the expiration date of these ordinances on several occasions, we feel that even though the city be bound by contract with Yellow and Checker, that is no reason why the licenses which have been and are issued to others engaged in the same business should be limited by restrictions and conditions which are different and alleged to be discriminatory.

While the federal government does not have the right to regulate certain matters exclusively within the control of the State, it does have the right, by virtue of the XIV Amendment, to prevent any such regulation from being arbitrary and discriminatory. Power Manufacturing Co. v. Saunders, 274 U. S. 490; Adams v. Tanner, 244 U. S. 590; Glicker v. Michigan Liquor Control Commission, 160 F. (2d) 96.

Again liberally construing the complaint in favor of the plaintiffs, we hold that it contains sufficient allegations which, if true, set forth a claim upon which relief can be granted under the equal protection clause of the XIV Amendment.

Only the amendment permitted on the day the order of dismissal was entered remains now for consideration. This amendment alleged that the Illinois Cab Drivers' Assn. for Discharged Veterans is an association composed of 103 negro veterans; that members thereof made application for taxicab licenses to defendant Gorman, Commissioner of Licenses; that although they were interviewed they were thereafter notified to cease operating their cabs on the streets of Chicago (which cabs were then being operated without a license); that no member of the association was granted a license; that no reason was given for the failure to grant such licenses; that, upon information and belief, the only reason for the denial was the fact that such applicants were negroes; that the city acted arbitrarily and maliciously, in violation of the rights of such applicants under the XIV Amendment. Although defendant Gorman is not alleged to have taken affirmative action in granting or rejecting the applications, the amendment asks that his action be declared null and void, as violative of the Constitution of the United States.

The trial court might well have rejected this amendment. It does not allege that the members of the association are plaintiffs in this action (although it might be inferred that some of them are); it does not contain an allegation of a conspiracy or a monopoly; it makes no claim of any kind against defendants Yellow, Checker or Parmelee. It complains only of the inaction of defendant Gorman in not granting applications for licenses. There is nothing in the ordinances themselves which set up any discrimination based on color prejudice. We think that in its present form the amendment does not state a claim upon which these plaintiffs are entitled to relief.

The order of the trial court dated March 9, 1948, dismissing the complaint for lack of jurisdiction is reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

[¶ 62,384] Harry Norman Ball, Trustee, v. Paramount Pictures, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 2963. December 13, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Movie Industry—Decree Enjoining Antitrust Violations.—Conspiracies entered into by motion picture companies in order to monopolize the exhibition of first run pictures are declared to be illegal and in violation of the Sherman Act. The defendants are enjoined from monopolizing the exhibition of first run pictures, from performing any contracts between the distributor and the exhibitor having the effect of such monopolization, from conspiring to protect or perpetuate any such monopoly and from licensing their feature motion pictures for first run performance without giving the plaintiff an opportunity to negotiate for such pictures equal to and in all respects the same as the opportunity afforded any other exhibitor.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.597, 1220.273.

For plaintiff: Thorp, Bostwick, Reed & Armstrong.

For defendant: Schnader, Harrison, Segal & Lewis; Smith, Buchanan & Ingersoll; Reed, Smith, Shaw & McClay.

Decree

And now, to wit, December 13, 1948, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

1. The monopoly of exhibition of motion pictures on first run in the Borough of Ambridge, Pennsylvania, engaged in by the defendants and the conspiracies and attempts to bring about such monopoly and the contracts, combinations and agreements of the defendants, among themselves or with others, resulting in such monopoly and in the restraint of interstate trade and commerce as found by the Court are declared to be illegal and are enjoined as in violation of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the "Sherman Anti-Trust Act", as amended and supplemented by the Act of Congress of October 15, 1914, known as the "Clayton Act".

2. The defendants herein and each of them, and each and all of their respective parent, associated and subsidiary corporations, each and all of their respective officers and directors, each and all of their respective agents, servants and employees, and all persons acting or claiming to act on their behalf, or any of them, are enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly:

(a) Monopolizing or attempting to monopolize the exhibition of feature motion pictures on first run in the Borough of Ambridge, or from entering into, engaging in or consummating, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, by means of discrimination in prices and terms, or by any other means or device, any such monopolization or any such restraint of interstate trade or commerce.

(b) Enforcing, continuing, performing or acting under any provisions in existing contracts or license agreements between the distributor defendants and the exhibitor defendants having the effect of such monopolization, and entering into, executing or performing, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, any provisions in any other such license agreements, franchise or arrangements whatsoever having the same effect.

(c) Conspiring to protect or perpetuate any such monopoly in the exhibition of motion pictures on the first run in the Borough of Ambridge, or such restraint of, or agreement or conspiracy to restrain such interstate trade or commerce in motion pictures, or entering into, engaging in, accomplishing or consummating, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, and agreements or conspiracies having the effect of illegality.

(d) Licensing their feature motion pictures for first run performance in the Borough of Ambridge to any one or more of the defendants without giving plaintiff an opportunity to inspect and negotiate for said pictures equal to and in all respects the same as the opportunity afforded any other exhibitor.

3. This decree is final, but jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any party to move to modify any of the provisions of this decree other than those relating to damages or counsel fees.

4. The defendants shall pay the plaintiff the costs of suit.

[¶ 62,385] W. B. Griffin v. R. M. Vandegriff.

In the Supreme Court of Georgia. No. 16524. March 14, 1949.

Georgia Constitution

Restrictive Covenant in Employment Contract—Lessening of Competition—Constitutional Prohibition.—A covenant in an employment contract obligating an employee not to engage in the same business for a fixed period after his employment terminates, will not be enforced since it has the illegal effect of lessening competition.

See the Georgia Constitutional Provisions, Vol. 2, ¶ 8181.

For appellant: H. O. Hubert, Jr.

For appellee: E. A. Wright.

By the Court:

DUCKWORTH, Chief Justice. 1. "All contracts and agreements which may have the effect, or be intended to have the effect, to defeat or lessen competition, or to encourage monopoly, shall be illegal and void. The General Assembly of this State shall have no power to authorize any such contract or agreement." Constitution of Georgia, article 4, section 4, paragraph 1 (Code, Ann., § 2-2701).

2. A contract between an employer and an employee, fixing the terms of the employment, and containing a clause obligating the employee not to engage for himself or as an employee of another in the same kind of business for a fixed period after the employment terminates, has the effect of defeating or lessening competition and, hence, offends the above provision of the constitution and is void.

3. The petition of an employer seeking injunctive relief and damages against the employee because of an alleged breach of such a void contract set forth no cause of action, and the court erred in overruling the defendant's general demurrer thereto.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except HAWKINS, J., absent for providential cause.

[¶ 62,386] J. C. Pirkle Machinery Co., Inc. v. Robert V. Walters.

In the Supreme Court of Georgia. No. 16527. March 16, 1949.

Georgia Constitution

Restrictive Covenant in Employment Contract—Lessening of Competition—Constitutional Prohibition.—A restrictive covenant in a contract of employment is held to lessen competition and therefore is void as contravening the state constitutional prohibition against contracts which encourage monopoly.

See the Georgia Constitutional Provisions, Vol. 2, ¶ 8181.

For appellant: J. C. Bowden.

For appellee: O. J. Coogler, Newell Jones.

By the Court:

WYATT, Justice: J. C. Pirkle Machinery Company sought to enjoin Robert V. Walters, a former employee, from violating the negative restrictive covenants of an employment contract and to recover damages for the breach of the restrictive covenants. Held:

1. Under the ruling in Griffin v. Vandegriff, — Ga. — (Case No. 16524, decided March 14, 1949), the contract in question, in which an employee covenanted not to engage in a competitive business for a period of ten years, was void; and the trial judge did not err in sustaining a general demurrer to the plaintiff's petition.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

[¶ 62,387] American Amusement Company v. L. J. Ludwig.

In the United States District Court, District of Minnesota, Fourth Division. No. 2818 Civil. January 26, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Good Faith—Immaterial Allegations—Motion to Strike Allowed.—In an action to obtain a declaratory judgment as to the enforceability of a pooling agreement, a motion to strike out an allegation of good faith was allowed since it had no bearing on the existence of an antitrust violation. What is done under the contract, not whether the parties specifically intended to violate the Act, controls.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1640.689.

In support of the motion: Benedict Deinard (of Leonard, Street & Deinard), of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

In opposition to the motion: Joseph W. Finley (Bundlie, Kelly, Finley & Maun, of counsel), of St. Paul, Minnesota.

[Nature of Motion]

NORDBYE, GUNNAR H., Judge: Plaintiff has commenced against defendant an action for a declaratory judgment pursuant to Section 264(d) of the Judicial Code, 28 U. S. C. A. § 2201. Defendant now moves under Rule 12(f) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to strike Paragraph II and part of Paragraph VIII of the complaint upon the grounds that such allegations are immaterial.

Paragraph II alleges that the matter in controversy exceeds $3,000 exclusive of costs and interest. Both parties recognize that this allegation, read with the rest of the complaint, attempts to base jurisdiction upon the existence of a federal question under Section 1331 of the recent Judicial Code revision. 28 U. S. C. A. § 1331. Paragraph III of the complaint alleges that the action is one "arising under an Act of Congress regulating commerce and protecting trade and commerce against restraints and monopolies (to wit, Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Statutes 209, as amended 50 Statutes 693, 15 U. S. C. Sections 1 and 2)." This paragraph, as both parties recognize, alleges jurisdiction under 28 U. S. C. A. § 1337, which confers jurisdiction upon this Court in anti-trust cases. Defendant moves to strike Paragraph II as immaterial because, he claims, only Paragraph III can form the jurisdictional basis of this action.

Defendant moves to strike the last sentence of Paragraph VIII because it alleges that plaintiff in good faith entered into the pooling arrangement concerning which plaintiff now seeks a declaratory judgment as a result of anti-trust decisions by the Supreme Court. Defendant bases its motion upon the ground that good faith is no defense to an anti-trust liability and therefore is immaterial to this action.

1.

Should Paragraph II Be Stricken?

Plaintiff contends that the Court may entertain jurisdiction under both Sections 1331 and 1337 of 28 U. S. C. A. if jurisdiction exists under both. Assuming that may be correct, the real question is whether jurisdiction exists under both sections. Defendant contends that each section states an independent and mutually exclusive basis of jurisdiction. That is, defendant argues that the sections are not repetitious of each other in any degree and that each statute states a separate, not over-lapping basis of Federal District Court jurisdiction. Actions lying under one section do not lie under another, defendant claims. The soundness of defendant's claim becomes the issue on this part of the motion.

Well settled rules of statutory construction require that statutes pertaining to the same matters must be construed together. Sections 1331 and 1337, therefore, must be construed in the light of each other. For both relate to jurisdiction. Section 1337 is not limited in its scope in so far as any amount in controversy is concerned. Under it, actions involving more than $3,000 or less than $3,000 can be brought. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U. S. 341, 349; 35 C. J. S. 847. From its wording, the intent is to extend it to all actions arising under federal statutes regulating commerce and protecting against restraints and monopolies. Thus, Section 1337 covers a specific type of case and applies to all of them. Section 1331, however, covers a general field of cases. In terms it applies to all cases arising under federal laws and involving more than $3,000. To conclude that Section 1331—a general statute—supersedes, when applicable, a section specifically applying to actions arising under acts regulating commerce or restraints and monopolies would be holding that Section 1337 is limited to actions involving less than $3,000. Such a construction is contrary to the intent of that section and cannot be adopted. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U. S. 341, 349. To conclude that Section 1331 is concurrent with Section 1337 would be unsound with respect to cases involving less than $3,000, for Section 1331 applies only if more than $3,000 is involved, and it would make the sections repetitious of each other with respect to actions involving more than $3,000. A court cannot favor an interpretation which causes repetition unless such intent of the statute is clear. Such intent is not clear here. On the contrary, neither Section 1337 nor Section 1331 purports to be repetitious of the other. Section 1337 purports by its form and by its inclusion of "any" (all) actions arising under federal statutes regulating commerce or restraints and monopolies to be independent and exclusive. It is separate from Section 1331, thus being separate in arrangement as well as form. That its substance also was intended to be separate is apparent from the fact that the $3,000 jurisdictional amount required by Section 1331 need not exist in order for jurisdiction to exist under Section 1337. 35 C. J. S. 847. Moreover, Section 1337 is not the only provision which states a specific basis of jurisdiction in this Court under a specific law. For other sections like Section 1338 (patents, copyrights, trade marks, and unfair competition), Section 1339 (postal matters), Section 1334 (bankruptcy matters and proceedings), and others do the same thing. That Congress would not intend all the specific statutes to be concurrent seems quite clear from their very nature and existence. For then no real purpose for their existence would be apparent with respect to actions involving more than $3,000. No reason suggests itself why Congress would intend, without so indicating, that the specific statute should be limited to less than its terms. The recent revision of the Judicial Code was designed to clarify. If Congress had considered the specific statutes surplusage with respect to actions over $3,000, it undoubtedly would have indicated that.

Under all the circumstances, therefore, it seems reasonable to conclude that Section 1331 does not apply to anti-trust matters covered by Section 1337. The general rule that the specific limits the general must be applied here. Consequently, reading Section 1331 with Section 1337, as it must be, requires the conclusion that Section 1337 prevails over and limits Section 1331. Such an interpretation gives effect to each provision and achieves the purpose of interpretation—a harmonious statutory scheme. Plaintiff's contention would cause unnecessary repetition or unintentional limitation of specific sections. Defendant's motion to strike Paragraph II of plaintiff's complaint seems proper and should be granted. It is so ordered.

2.

Should the Paragraph VIII Allegation of Good Faith Be Stricken?

Courts have held often that good faith is no legal defense and has no bearing on the existence of an anti-trust violation. Paramount v. United States, (1930) 282 U. S. 30, 44; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 275. Consequently, an allegation of good faith is immaterial in determining if this pooling contract between plaintiff and defendant violated the Anti-trust Act. What is done under the contract, not whether the parties specifically intended to violate the Act, controls. Plaintiff contends that the question of good faith may become important. But no reason or fact is given for such a conclusion. Upon the facts now presented, no basis exists in support of the allegation's materiality. The situation is not one in which the contract is completely unexecuted and the recovery of money paid thereunder is sought. Plaintiff here seeks to determine the enforcibility of the contract and if it can refuse to perform without incurring liability to defendant for such refusal. Brashears v. Giannini, 22 Pac. 2d 47, cert. den. 290 U. S. 700, 54 S. Ct. 22, which concerned the National Prohibition Act, consequently is distinguishable. Neither does the plaintiff's claim that this situation is like one in which a new law is enacted after the making of a contract aid it. The statute was in effect when this contract was made. The mere fact that a decision of the Supreme Court may have indicated to plaintiff after the contract was made that it violated the Anti-trust Act does not mean plaintiff can plead good faith. That same situation confronts every person who, in good faith, seeks to plead good faith in an anti-trust action. If plaintiff's contention were sound, then no one need be very concerned about violating a statute until someone else has been apprehended for a similar violation and the court had held the violation to exist. In effect, the act of the court, not the legislature, would be what created the violation of the act, according to plaintiff's contention. The unsoundness of such a claim is obvious.

Although, as plaintiff notes, motions to strike must not be granted liberally, no reason appears here for permitting immaterial matter to continue in the pleading now or later. Striking the matter now will prevent confusion from arising and will avoid questions as to its propriety from retarding the actual hearing proceedings which assumedly will be held later. If the matter is immaterial to the anti-trust violation, it is immaterial now and immaterial later, in so far as the facts now before the Court establish. Defendant's motion to strike the last sentence of plaintiff's Paragraph VIII concerning good faith is proper and should be granted. It is so ordered.

An exception is reserved to the plaintiff.

Dated this 26th day of January, 1949.

[¶ 62,388] Willie Mitchell, doing business as Mitchell Cab Company v. Harold J. Gibbons et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, No. 13,820. March 7, 1949.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Taxicab Business—Conspiracy in Labor Disputes—Antitrust Violation Not Established.—An injunction to restrain alleged antitrust violations was refused in a cab company's action against labor officials when it was clear that their concert of action and intent was simply such concert as is necessarily implied in the existence of labor organizations and that the purpose of their action was to organize the company's drivers in a labor organization rather than to restrict the supply of the taxicab services for the public or to control the market or raise prices.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1280.275.

For appellant: Wayne C. Smith, Jr. (Boedeker & Weil, Edgar G. Boedeker and Justin J. Weil were with him on brief).

For appellees: Emily Cronheim and Francis Heisler.

[Allegations]

WOODROUGH, C. J.: This appeal is taken to reverse the decree of the District Court which dismissed the plaintiff's action with costs for want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of his amended complaint. The action was brought against C. I. O. local and national labor unions, officers and agents to enjoin them from continuing conspiracy to molest or interfere with the peaceful conduct of plaintiff's taxicab business in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, which plaintiff carried on under a franchise granted to him by the City. The business included transportation of occasional passengers in interstate commerce from St. Louis, Missouri, to East St. Louis, Illinois, and jurisdiction in the federal court was asserted on the ground that the alleged conspiracy of the defendants constituted violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Sections 1-7 inclusive, as amended by the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Sections 12-27 inclusive and Section 44, and that jurisdiction to enjoin its continuance was vested in the Federal court by the provisions of said Acts and of the Judicial Code, 28 U. S. C. A. Section 41, new Title 28 U. S. C. A. Sections 1331, 1336. The sufficiency of the amount in controversy was alleged and that irreparable damage was threatened for which there was no adequate remedy at law.

The defendants' motion to dismiss was on the ground, i. a., that the allegations of plaintiff's amended complaint presented only a labor dispute existing between plaintiff and defendants and acts growing out of such labor dispute and a suit for injunction governed by the restrictions upon the power of Federal judges to grant injunctions imposed by the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U. S. C. A. Sections 101, et seq., Taft-Hartley Act, 29 U. S. C. A. Sec. 151, et seq. It was not claimed in the District court, and is not contended here, that plaintiff's amended complaint stated a case for injunction within the restrictions of said Acts.

The lengthy amended complaint includes allegations to the effect that the plaintiff under the franchise granted to him to operate taxicabs for hire is engaged in the taxicab business as a carrier of passengers for hire and operates some thirty taxicabs of the value of $51,000 in carrying on the business, with storage facilities maintained therefor. The defendants are and have been attempting to unionize plaintiff's taxi drivers and to effect their object have resorted to threats, intimidation and violence towards said drivers and destruction of the property in their charge and threaten to and will, unless restrained, continue such unlawful conduct until plaintiff's business is destroyed. Particular instances of violence are set forth ascribed to the defendants generally and alleged to have been perpetrated in pursuance of and to effect the object of the conspiracy sought to be enjoined. The only fair inference from these allegations is that defendants' common object is simply to organize the plaintiff's taxidrivers in a labor union and that the plaintiff opposes and resists and there exists a labor dispute between plaintiff and defendants and controversies growing out of it where no injunction could be granted by the Federal court except as restricted by the Norris-LaGuardia and Taft-Hartley Acts.

But the amended complaint also contains allegations to the effect that the plaintiff in carrying on his taxicab business does not pay wages to the men who drive the cabs. He gets the work done by them and they get their compensation for their work under a plan of leasing the cabs to individual drivers who earn the difference between fares collected from passengers and the charges which plaintiff requires them to pay. The drivers work within the area of plaintiff's franchise without being restricted to districts and pick up passengers when and where they can and there is no immediate supervision over them as they make their various trips, and it is alleged as conclusion that the plaintiff is not the employer of the drivers and they are not his employees but that each of them is an independent contractor and therefore the controversies between the parties here do not grow out of a labor dispute. Plaintiff contended in the District Court and now contends that instead of a labor dispute the defendants' concert of intent and action should be deemed a conspiracy to directly restrain and prevent the intrastate and interstate commerce in violation of the Sherman Act as amended and outside the scope of the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

[Labor Dispute Involved]

We do not find facts stated in the complaint to support such holding. It is not shown how many men are required or engaged in driving the thirty taxicabs used in plaintiff's business, nor are any of the details of management and supervision of said business set forth, but clear allegations of the amended complaint establish that plaintiff's taxicab business for which he seeks protection by injunction is an integral unit of capital investment, management, supervision and labor carried on by him, and the cab drivers earn their living out of it solely by their labor—they perform the work of driving the taxicabs. That work is the same work commonly done in the same way as the work done for a living by all chauffeur members of defendant labor unions. They have no part in the capital investment nor in the management or control of the business. The plaintiff, as he alleges in the complaint, "operates the taxicabs" and the drivers are the hands or performers of work whose relations with plaintiff as to working conditions, compensation and self-organization are directly within the purview of the labor relations laws. Defendants' attempt to organize them and plaintiff's resistance result in the existence of a labor dispute.

Plaintiff has stressed the case of Columbia River Packers Assn. v. Hinton, 315 U. S. 143, as supporting a contrary conclusion. We think it does not. It was there asserted that what the court found to be "a dispute among business men over the terms of a contract for the sale of fish" was "a labor dispute" and the court decided that it was not. No such situation can be drawn from plaintiff's allegations in this case. Only one business is pictured and sought to be protected here and that business is carried on by the plaintiff. He can only carry it on with the labor of his taxi drivers, and the labor of human beings is not a commodity or article of commerce. The dispute is solely and entirely as to the terms and conditions on which the drivers shall work, the initial particular being the matter of union organization which has given rise to the suit for injunction. Appellant contends that although such holding may have been proper under the decision of the Supreme Court in N. L. R. B. v. Hearst Publishers, 322 U. S. 111, and that such "is the effect of the Hearst case", nevertheless a contrary ruling is required under the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947 amendatory of the Wagner Act in Title 29 U. S. C. A. Section 152 (9)[1] and Section 152 (3)[2]. But the amendments relied on do not justify refusal to apply the law to the facts pleaded here in accordance with the Supreme Court decisions in the Hearst case. The case was decided by the Supreme Court in full recognition of the principle that the relationship of employer-employee differs from that of independent contractors, and the conclusion there that a labor dispute existed upon facts analogous in principle to those here presented is binding on this court.

A divided court has held in the Seventh Circuit in Party Cab Company v. United States, — F. (2d) —, decided January 18, 1949, that a taxicab company operating through drivers who work on terms similar to those pictured here was not subject to Social Security tax in respect to the earnings of the drivers. It was pointed out that the company did not pay them wages and did not know the amount of their earnings derived in part from tips and that the public paid them such compensation as they received and it was concluded that they were not employees in respect to whose compensation the company could be taxed under the Act. But we do not consider the decision to be authority for the plaintiff's contention here that the present controversies do not grow out of a labor dispute.

[Labor Agitation not an Illegal Combination]

We think it is clear that the concert of intent and action alleged to exist among defendants here is simply such concert among them as is necessarily implied in the existence of their labor organizations which may not "be held to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade" by the express terms of the Sherman Act as amended. As this court said in Garment Workers Union v. Donnelly Garment Co., 119 F. (2d) 892,

> "Unless the intent of a union or the necessary effect of its activities in attempting the destruction of the interstate commerce of an employer by a secondary boycott or in any other way, in order to effect the [1] Section 152. Definitions.

When used in this subchapter—

(9) The term "labor dispute" includes any controversy concerning terms, tenure or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.

[2] (3) The term "employee" shall include any employee, and shall not be limited to the employees of a particular employer, unless this subchapter explicitly states otherwise, and shall include any individual whose work has ceased as a consequence of, or in connection with, any current labor dispute or because of any unfair labor practice, and who has not obtained any other regular and substantially equivalent employment, but shall not include any individual employed as an agricultural laborer, or in the domestic service of any family or person at his home, or any individual employed by his parents or spouse, or any individual having the status of an independent contractor, or any individual employed as a supervisor, or any individual employed by an employer subject to chapter 8 of Title 45 and section 225 of Title 28, or by any other person who is not an employer as herein defined.

unionization of his employees, is to control the market or to raise prices or to substantially diminish the supply of goods or otherwise to prejudice or injure the consuming public in some substantial way, such activities are not proscribed by the Sherman Act."

The amended complaint here makes it perfectly clear that the object of the defendants in this case is to organize the plaintiff's taxi drivers in a labor union and has no relation to the supply of taxicab services for the public or to control the market or raise prices and no case for injunction under the Sherman Act is stated against them.

This Court had occasion in Amalgamated Association, etc. v. Dixie Motor Coach Corporation, 170 F. (2d) 902, to consider the four Federal labor enactments (the original National Labor Relations Act; the National Labor Relations Act as amended; the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947; and the Norris-LaGuardia Act) and it appeared to us that "the terms of the four acts concerning labor relations and labor management relations and the limitations on the use of injunctive process at the instance of private parties in respect to such labor relations coincident with the powers conferred on the Labor Board to seek and obtain such process in the public interest, prescribe a consistent pattern to provide for a uniform administration of the labor relations laws in the public interest by public authority."

[Injunction Denied]

It is stated that the plaintiff in this action has instituted proceedings before the Labor Relations Board based upon substantially the same claims presented by his complaint here and that the proceedings are now pending. If so, and if dispute over the terms and conditions of work by plaintiff's taxi drivers give rise to proper occasion for injunctive relief, such relief may be accorded consistently with the pattern provided by the laws. The judgment of the trial court denying injunction here and dismissing the case is affirmed.

Affirmed.

[¶ 62,389] Fogel v. Bolet.

New York Supreme Court, New York County. Special Term, Part x. 121 N. Y. L. J. 1052, March 23, 1949.

New York Fair Trade Act

Injunction Refused—Violations by Plaintiff.—A photographic supply retailer's action against his competitor to restrain him from selling below prices fixed by fair trade agreements is dismissed since the aggrieved retailer had violated the said contract himself.

See the New York Fair Trade Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.817.

General Lack of Enforcement as a Defense—Hardship in Individual Cases.—The fact that a statute creates inequities is not a ground for a court's refusal to enforce it. Therefore, it is of no avail for the defendant to show that the various products in the photographic supply industry are sold without regard to any fair trade contracts, or to argue that should injunctive relief be granted it would cause irreparable damage to him without enforcing or carrying out the spirit or letter of the provisions of the Fair Trade Act.

See the New York Fair Trade Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.831.

Former Affiliation of the Plaintiff—Failure to Prosecute as a Defense.—Lack of diligence with which the complaining retailer may have policed the trade, in his former capacity as an officer of a fair trade committee of his trade association, is not germane to his individual right to maintain an action against his competitor for selling below established prices set by fair trade agreements.

See the New York Fair Trade Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.83.

Photographic Suppliers Retail Business—Suit Not a Conspiracy.—When a member and former official of a fair trade committee of a trade association, engaged in retail selling of cameras, brought action against his competitor for price cutting, it was held that the mere financing of a lawsuit and hiring counsel by an association does not create a conspiracy which invalidates any proceeding brought by one of its members in a court of equity to further the objectives of such organization in which the individual bringing the suit has a vital interest.

See the New York Fair Trade Act annotations. Vol. 2, ¶ 8604.05.

[Review of Pleadings and Facts]

ISIDOR WASSERVOGEL, Official Referee: This is an action brought by plaintiff pursuant to the Feld-Crawford Law (chap. 976, Laws of 1935), wherein he seeks an injunction permanently restraining and enjoining defendant from continuing the alleged breach of the terms of certain "fair trade contracts" and schedule of prices annexed to them.

Plaintiff and defendant are engaged in the business of selling at retail cameras and photographic products. In terms of distance, defendant is plaintiff's closest competitor; their stores are located approximately two blocks apart, at No. 68 Cortlandt street and at No. 92 Liberty street, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, respectively.

The action is based upon six "fair trade" contracts entered into by six manufacturers of cameras and allied photographic equipment. Such contracts fix the minimum retail price at which dealers are authorized by these manufacturers to advertise, offer for sale or sell any of the items listed therein to the public. It is defendant's "price-cutting" of the stipulated retail prices that plaintiff seeks to enjoin.

Evidence of defendant's alleged violations was obtained by shoppers employed by the Fair Trade Committee of the New York Guild of Photographic Dealers, Inc., of which plaintiff is an active member and former officer. Defendant does not deny violating the above fair trade agreements. He admits, rather, that underselling plaintiff and his other competitors on the fair trade products is an essential part of his business. Defendant contends, however, that plaintiff and other members of the Fair Trade Committee have combined, not for the purpose of enforcing fair trade contracts in order to protect themselves within the framework of the Feld-Crawford Law, but as part of a conspiracy to restrain and interfere with competition in the marketing and sale of cameras and photographic supplies in the City of New York by persons who, like defendant, are not members of said organization.

Defendant further contends that plaintiff, as well as other members of the Fair Trade Committee, advertised, authorized, offered and approved the sale of merchandise at less than the minimum retail price fixed by the manufacturers thereof, by reason of which, it is asserted, the benefits of the statute have been waived and abandoned, and that plaintiff comes into this court of equity with unclean hands, and is, therefore, not entitled to the relief which he seeks.

The fair trade statute, as the Feld-Crawford Law is commonly known, is incorporated in article 24a of the General Business Law, and the relief is particularly sought herein under section 369-b thereof, which provides that:

> "Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of section three hundred and sixty-nine a, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby."

[Ineffectual Price Maintenance]

Defendant has shown that all attempts to maintain retail resale prices in the City of New York in the camera and allied photographic fields have broken down and failed and that the industry, as a whole, is in a confused and chaotic state so far as pricing and price maintenance are concerned. Defendant has testified and the evidence warrants the conclusion, that the various products in this industry are sold throughout the city at open competitive prices without regard to any fair trade contracts and prices fixed therein. In view of these circumstances defendant contends that should injunctive or other equitable relief be granted to plaintiff it would cause irreparable damage to him without enforcing or carrying out the spirit or letter of the provisions of the Fair Trade Act.

[Purpose of Price Maintenance]

The desirability of uniformity in business practice and the principle of price maintenance as a method protecting a legitimate interest have long been recognized by both the Legislature and the courts of this state. The Fair Trade Act, adopted in 1935, was designed to meet these needs and to prevent destructive price wars among retailers, such conduct being considered unfair competitive practice and against the best interests of our economic system (Old Dearborn Co. v. Seagram Corp'n, 299 U. S. 183; Bourjois Sales Corp'n v. Dorfman, 273 N. Y., 167; Port Chester Wine & Liquor Shop, Inc., v. Miller Products, 253 App. Div., 188; Stockman v. Wilson Distilling Co., 175 Misc., 314, aff'd 261 App. Div., 969; Weisstein v. Freeman's Wines & Liquors, Inc., 169 Misc., 391).

The statute in its original enactment purported to protect trade mark owners, distributors, retailers and the general public against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of articles of a standard quality under a distinguished trade mark, brand or name (Unconsolidated Laws, sec. 2201, et seq.). Section 2 of the Fair Trade Act, upon which plaintiff relies, created a new cause of action in that it evinced a legislative purpose to have that action inure to the benefit of others than the producer of the product (Port Chester Wine & Liquor Shop, Inc., v. Miller Products, supra). The wisdom of permitting price-fixing arrangements and interdicting price-cutting competition were matters for the Legislature to determine. Once that body of lawmakers has enunciated the public policy of this state the fact that the statute creates inequities is not a ground for a court's refusal to enforce it (Nat. Distillers Products Corp'n v. Columbus Circle Liquor Stores, Inc., 166 Misc., 719; Port Chester Wine & Liquor Shop, Inc., v. Miller Products, supra).

Defendant's contention in the respect above referred to, therefore, cannot be sustained. The consequences of price-cutting by a retailer fall most heavily upon the competing retailer who, ostensibly, is observing his contract obligations. He is deprived of his sales and his good will in the neighborhood may be irreparably harmed as a result of the activities of his competitors. It is inconceivable that an individual retailer is to be regarded as responsible for conditions of the industry throughout the city or under an obligation to attempt to bring about compliance with the law by all of his competitors. No such burdens rest upon plaintiff as a condition to equitable relief herein.

[Legal Action by Association Not a Conspiracy]

I hold that the diligence or lack of diligence with which plaintiff may have policed the trade, in his former official capacity as a member of the trade association, is in no wise germane to his individual rights as a retail storekeeper to maintain the instant action. Defendant's affirmative defense that he is a victim of a conspiracy of his competitors, organized as a trade association, was considered by Mr. Justice Steuer at Special Term, Part III, of this court, in granting plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction (N. Y. L. J., February 2, 1949, p. 411). Likewise in a ruling by Mr. Justice Hofstadter, rendered at Special Term, Part I, of this court (N. Y. L. J., February 24, 1949, p. 688), upon defendant's motion to examine plaintiff and his employees before trial, item No. 3 of the examination, relating to the combination and conspiracy of plaintiff and members of the Guild, was denied to defendant. I hold that the mere financing of a lawsuit and hiring of counsel by an association does not create a conspiracy which invalidates any proceeding brought by one of its members in a court of equity to further the objectives of such organization in which the individual bringing the suit has a vital interest.

[Clean Hands Doctrine]

The principle expressed by the "clean hands" maxim of equity, which is also urged by the defense, is one of the elementary and fundamental conceptions of equity jurisprudence and furnishes one of the most important rules affecting the entire field of equitable relief (Farlon Realty Associates v. Woodsam Associates, 294 N. Y., 846; Wolfenstein v. Fashion Originators Guild of America, 244 App. Div., 656; Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, sec. 397 et seq.; 30 C. J. S., sec. 93).

In the instant action the record discloses that plaintiff is, himself, guilty of violations of the price maintenance agreements which he seeks to enforce herein. At the time of the argument of the motion for a temporary injunction, defendant presented, by way of affidavit, but one instance of a violation by plaintiff of the fair trade contracts here involved. As stated by Mr. Justice Steuer (supra):

> "A practice by plaintiff's employees of the same tactics would put a different complexion on the interpretation * * *."

Upon the trial of this action, evidence was given by one Biller, a former salesman and floor manager employed by plaintiff. His testimony negatives the contention advanced by plaintiff that the isolated instance of a violation referred to on the motion for a preliminary injunction was merely a breach of duty by one of the salesmen in his employ. The record demonstrates affirmatively that other sales of a similar nature were made by plaintiff and his staff below fixed prices. The witness Biller testified that plaintiff instructed his salesmen to try to adhere to the Feld-Crawford Act "if they possibly could on any sales, but not to lose a sale." Biller admitted making at least two dozen sales himself below the stipulated prices during 1948. The witness further testified as follows:

"Q. What were your instructions from Mr. Fogel as to sales below the Feld-Crawford prices? A. To be careful as to whom we were selling and to make sure we knew the account or the customer * * *. Q. And did he tell you, you could sell it below list price if you knew the customer? A. Yes * * *. Q. You were asked here with regard to sales below the list price. Did you ever tell your employer that you had made such sales? A. Yes. Q. Did you at any time during your employment in Mr. Fogel's store, sell camera items at below Fair Trade prices? A. Yes. Q. And did you at any time during your employ see any other employee of Mr. Fogel's store sell camera items at below Fair Trade prices? A. Yes. Q. Who made such sales? A. Mr. Goldberg. Q. Who else? A. Mr. Shapiro * * *. Q. Did you ever observe Mr. Fogel make such sales at below Fair Trade prices on camera items * * *? A. Yes * * *. Q. Can you recall the names of any customers that Mr. Goldberg sold to? A. Yes * * * Mr. Wolf—Bertram Wolf * * * Mr. Zalin—Maurice Zalin * * * Mr. Spingola * * * Louis Alverez. Q. What did he buy? A. He bought a Bell and Howell projector—he bought Bell and Howell projectors and Eastman-Kodak 35-millimeter cameras. Q. And did he get a discount below the list price? A. Yes—twenty per cent. on the Eastman-Kodak and fifteen per cent. on Bell and Howell. Q. Do you know any other specific sales? A. Yes—Mr. Arthur Field. Q. What did he buy? A. An Eastman-Kodak movie camera. Q. What was the list price? A. Approximately $187. Q. And what price did he buy it for—what price did he pay for it? A. Fifteen per cent, below the list price * * *. Q. Were you ever told by Mr. Fogel that when a sale was below list price, you were not to make out a sales slip to a customer—you are not to give a sales slip to a customer? A. Yes. Q. And can you tell us how many times that question was discussed? A. Two dozen times."

Plaintiff met this testimony by categorical denials by himself and by two of his salesmen, although one admitted violating a price-fixing agreement for which he was admonished by plaintiff. No reason has been shown why the credibility of the witness Biller should be questioned. As a salesman and manager of plaintiff's store, he had certain authority which he exercised in the consummation of sales of camera and photographic equipment. He testified, and plaintiff has not shown why his testimony should be doubted, that he reported most of his sales to plaintiff personally if they were below list price and if he thought they warranted plaintiff's attention. It might be inferred from this that only very unusual circumstances would warrant calling plaintiff's attention to particular sales, and that one below the fixed price evidently did not require any special comment. Biller was not an interested party to this action, nor has he any present connection with either plaintiff or defendant, having left plaintiff's employ under normal circumstances to assume a better position for higher wages. His testimony, was straight-forward, despite a seeming reluctance to testify. Although he supplied a number of names of customers to whom cut-price sales were made, none of them was called by plaintiff in rebuttal.

[Relief to Plaintiff Denied]

While a court of equity endeavors to maintain, promote, and enforce the interests of justice, it nevertheless stringently demands good faith, fairness, and uprightness from the litigant parties who come before it either as plaintiffs or defendants. Equity will not open its doors to one who seeks to enforce alleged rights arising from a contract which he himself has breached or violated (30 C. J. S., sec. 99, p. 497; Edward Thompson Co. v. American Law Book Co., 122 Fed., 922, Fav v. Lambourne, 124 App. Div., 245).

The fact that plaintiff has a relatively small business in comparison to defendant's, and could in no way affect the latter if they both continued to engage in price-cutting activities, is not here material. The requisite in determining whether a party comes into court with clean hands is not alone the actual or probable injury to him, but also his moral intent and good faith.

Upon equitable principles, therefore, and upon the evidence before me, I hold that plaintiff is not entitled to the relief he seeks in this action. Judgment is rendered for defendant dismissing the complaint on the merits. No costs are awarded.

Submit decree within ten days on three days' notice.

The foregoing are the facts found by me and constitutes the decision of the court as required by section 440 of the Civil Practice Act.

[¶ 62,390] United States v. Women's Sportswear Manufacturers Association, et al.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1948. March 28, 1949. No. 37.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Contract to Employ Only Association Members—Restraint upon Free Choice—Control of the Market.—In an action brought by the government against a trade association of stitching contractors, a contract whereby twenty-one jobbers promised to employ only association members in good standing with a named garment workers' union and to refrain from dealing with nonmembers ought to be cancelled, in the opinion of the Supreme Court. The manifest purpose and intent of the contract was to restrain the jobbers from free choice among stitching contractors and the effect of the agreement was to restrain competition and to control prices and markets.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1230.151.

Ready to Wear Industry—Activities of Jobbers—Interstate Commerce.—The women's sportswear industry is carried on by the activity of jobbers who engage in nation-wide competition for orders by means of traveling salesmen who solicit throughout the country. Upon receiving an order, the jobber cuts the material, sends it to a contractor who does the stitching and returns the completed garment to the jobber, who ships it to the customer. The cloth is obtained outside the state, it is manufactured into garments within the state, but the finished product is sold and shipped to customers outside the state. Thus the industry in Massachusetts subsists on a constant influx of cloth and outgo of garments. The resulting current of commerce is interstate in character.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.539.

Restraint at Intrastate Level—Effect on Interstate Commerce—Trade Association Contract Cancelled.—Even though a trade association of garment workers and its members might not themselves be engaged in interstate commerce, the court enjoined them from imposing restrictive conditions on jobbers in the industry in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Restraints to be effective do not have to be applied all along the line of movement of the interstate commerce. The source of the restraint may be intrastate, the application of the restraint may be intrastate, but neither matters if the necessary effect is to stifle or restrain commerce among the states.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1021.310, 1021.651.

Reversing the decision of the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, reported at 1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,650.

For appellant: Philip B. Perlman, Solicitor General; Wm. Amory Underhill, Assistant Attorney General; Robert L. Stern, Robert G. Seaks.

For appellees: Harry Bergson.

[Review of Proceedings]

MR. JUSTICE JACKSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

The District Court, after trial, has denied the Government's plea for an injunction, and other relief, against appellees under the Sherman Act.[1] 75 F. Supp. 112. The cause is brought here by direct appeal, as Congress has authorized.[2] Defendants below and appellees here are an unincorporated trade association, its officers and members. There is no serious controversy as to facts. Our review must determine whether or not they establish the Government's right to the relief which has been denied.

We first should be satisfied that the activities on which restraints are alleged to have been exerted constitute commerce among states. The industry involved is women's sportswear. It is carried on by jobbers, who maintain sales offices in New

[1] Section 1 of the Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1.

[2] 15 U. S. C. § 29; 28 U. S. C. § 2101.

York and engage in nation-wide competition for orders, chiefly by means of traveling salesmen who solicit throughout the country. Upon receiving an order, the jobber buys the fabrics and cuts them to the customer's fancy. In most cases he then sends the cut material to a contractor who does the stitching, puts on such accessories as the buttons and the bows, and returns the completed garments to the jobber who promptly ships them to the customer.

[Interstate Character of Jobber Industry]

That the jobbers maintain a current of commerce, substantial in volume and interstate in character, seems clear. The Boston area ranks fifth in this country's production of women's sportswear. Its jobbers obtain about 80% of the cloth used from sources outside of Massachusetts. At least 80% of the finished sportswear is sold and shipped to customers outside of that State. Thus the industry in Massachusetts subsists on a constant influx of cloth and outgo of garments which pass through the hands of the stitching contractors for an essential operation.

[Nature of Restraints]

Our next inquiry is whether the accused combination, which is made up of stitching contractors, has imposed upon this interstate trade restraints of a character and magnitude to violate the Sherman Act. The Association is made up of members who handle at least 50% of all sportswear produced in Boston. The cost of this contractor's operation is about 25% of the jobber's sale price, and its variations are reflected in wholesale and retail prices. The Association's executive director took steps to induce jobbers to enter into a written agreement, among other things, to employ only members of the Association, refrain from dealing with nonmembers, and accept no secret price rebates. When the jobbers hesitated, stoppage of production was threatened and when they refused because they were advised that it would violate antitrust laws, the Association ordered contractors to stop work for three jobbers, which was done, and work for them was not resumed until the jobbers obtained a state court injunction. The proposed agreement was then revised and ultimately was signed by twenty-one jobbers who handle a gross annual volume of about $8,800,000, that being a substantial portion of the Boston output.

The agreement in final form, together with the circumstances of its making, is alleged to constitute an illegal restraint of trade. Terms relevant to the issue require jobbers to give all of their work to available Association members who are in good standing with the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, provided such contractors are "comparable" as to price and quality of work with nonmember contractors having contracts with the same Union. The jobber is to furnish a written order specifying price and is forbidden to receive secret rebates. A jobber can give work to a nonmember only in continuance of an existing relationship. The jobber will give no new contract to any stitcher who ceases to be a member of the Association. The Association agrees to assist the jobber in getting sufficient contractors as the amount of his work "may equitably require," and the jobber agrees that he will divide his work "as equally and equitably as possible among the Association contractors engaged by him." The District Court found that one of the purposes of the Association was to maintain the standard of prices. The Government also recites evidence suggesting that the Association policed the membership to prevent price competition and excluded from membership "newcomers in the trade."

[Restrictive Intent and Effect]

In the light of its origin and the circumstances of the industry, it seems clear that the intent and effect of the agreement is substantially to restrict competition and to control prices and markets. It prohibits the jobbers from awarding work to others (with minor exceptions) unless their prices are not "comparable" to those of association members. It effects for Association members a virtual monopoly of work at "comparable" prices. Work given to members must be allocated "equitably," not by reference to price or quality of work. And it apparently contemplates boycott by the Association of jobbers who do not subscribe to these terms. That such a contract restrains trade in violation of the Sherman Act is obvious, even if the restraints in actual practice under it do not go beyond its express terms, which the evidence indicates to be likely.

[Effect of Labor Provisions in Monopolistic Contract]

It is argued that inclusion of the labor provisions makes the agreement immune from attack under the antitrust laws. The stitching contractor, although he furnishes chiefly labor, also utilizes the labor through machines and has his rentals, capital costs, overhead and profits. He is an entrepreneur, not a laborer. Cf. Columbia River Packers Association v. Hinton, 315 U. S. 143. The labor provisions were incorporated into the second proposal after the first was rejected as violating the antitrust laws and seem to give nothing to labor that it was not already getting for itself from other as well as from these manufacturers. The restraints here went beyond limiting work to Union shops; it limited it to those Union shops also members of the Association. The trial court found no evidence that the Union participated in making the agreement. And if it did, benefits to organized labor cannot be utilized as a cat's-paw to pull employers' chestnuts out of the antitrust fires. Allen-Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, 325 U. S. 797.

[Intrastate Restraints Have Interstate Effects]

The trial court appears to have dismissed the case chiefly on the ground that the accused Association and its members were not themselves engaged in interstate commerce. This may or may not be the nature of their operation considered alone, but it does not matter. Restraints, to be effective, do not have to be applied all along the line of movement of interstate commerce. The source of the restraint may be intrastate, as the making of a contract or combination usually is; the application of the restraint may be intrastate, as it often is; but neither matters if the necessary effect is to stifle or restrain commerce among the states. If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze.

[Contract Cancelled]

The manifest purpose and intent of the contract in question was to restrain the jobbers from free choice among stitching contractors on equal terms. The business affected by the restraint is interstate commerce. The volume affected is substantial. While the restraint of the final contract is more moderate than the one first attempted and its dollar-and-cents effect on the commerce might be difficult to appraise, it is sufficient to warrant judgment canceling the contract and enjoining carrying out of the plan it embodies.

The judgment is Reversed.

[¶ 62,391] Joseph Giboney et al. v. Empire Storage and Ice Company.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1948. No. 182. April 4, 1949.

Appeal from the Supreme Court of Missouri.

Missouri Antitrust Act

Antitrade Restraint Law Applies to Labor Activity—Agreement Not To Sell to Nonunion Peddlers—Constitutional Power To Issue an Injunction.—In an effort to compel a wholesale ice distributor to refrain from selling ice to nonunion peddlers, unionized retail ice peddlers picketed the distributor's place of business. Since the sole and immediate object of the picket was to coerce the wholesaler into a course of action which would violate the state antitrust law, an injunction against further picketing was issued. The Court upholds the constitutional power of the state to enforce its antitrust policy, of affording all persons an equal opportunity to buy goods, by issuing an injunction prohibiting this labor activity.

See the Missouri Antitrust Act annotations, Vol. 2, ¶ 8475.

For appellants: Clif Langsdale, Clyde Taylor.

For appellee: Richard K. Phelps, Gage, Hillix & Phelps.

Affirming 1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,611.

[Issue]

Mr. Justice Black delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case here on appeal under 28 U. S. C. § 1257 raises questions concerning the constitutional power of a state to apply its anti-trade restraint law[1] to labor union activities, and to enjoin union members from peaceful picketing carried on as an essential and inseparable part of a course of conduct which is in violation of the state law. The picketing occurred in Kansas City, Missouri. The injunction was issued by a Missouri state court.

[Review of Facts]

The appellants are members and officers of the Ice and Coal Drivers and Handlers Local Union No. 953, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Its membership includes about 160 of 200 retail ice peddlers who drive their own trucks in selling ice from door to door in Kansas City. The union began efforts to induce all the nonunion peddlers to join. One objective of the organizational drive was to better wage and working conditions of peddlers and their helpers. Most of the non-union peddlers refused to join the union. To break down their resistance the union adopted a plan which was designed to make it impossible for nonunion peddlers to buy ice to supply their retail customers in Kansas City. Pursuant to the plan the union set about to obtain from all Kansas City wholesale ice distributors agreements that they would not sell ice to nonunion peddlers. Agreements were obtained from all distributors except the appellee, Empire Storage and Ice Company. Empire refused to agree. The union thereupon informed Empire that it would use other means at its disposal to force Empire to come around to the union view. Empire still refused to agree. Its place of business was promptly picketed by union members although the only complaint registered against Empire, as indicated by placards carried by the pickets, was its continued sale of ice to nonunion peddlers.

Thus the avowed immediate purpose of the picketing was to compel Empire to agree to stop selling ice to nonunion peddlers. Missouri statutes, set out in note 1, make such an agreement a crime punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 and by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not more than five years. Furthermore, had Empire made the agreement, the ice peddlers could have brought actions for triple damages for any injuries they sustained as a result of the agreement under § 8308 of the Missouri Revised Statutes (1939).

About 85% of the truck drivers working for Empire's customers were members of labor unions. These union truck drivers refused to deliver goods to or from Empire's place of business. Had any one of them crossed the picket line he would have been subject to fine or suspension by the union of which he was a member.

Because of the foregoing facts shown either by admissions, by undisputed evidence, or by unchallenged findings, the picketing had an instantaneous adverse effect on Empire's business. It was reduced 85%. In this dilemma, Empire was faced with three alternatives: It could continue to sell ice to nonunion peddlers, in which event it would be compelled to wage a fight for survival against overwhelming odds; it could stop selling ice to nonunion peddlers thereby relieving itself from further conflict with the union, in which event it would be subject to prosecution for crime and suits for triple damages; it could invoke the protection of the law. The last alternative was adopted.

[Allegations in Trial Court]

Empire's complaint charged that the concerted efforts of union members to restrain Empire from selling to nonunion members was a violation of the antitrade restraint statute and that an agreement by Empire to refuse to make such sales would violate the same statute. It prayed for an injunction against the picketing. In answering appellants asserted a constitutional right to picket Empire's premises in order to force it to discontinue sale of ice to nonunion

[1] "Combinations in restraint of trade declared a conspiracy. Any person who shall create, enter into, become a member of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any person or persons in restraint of trade or competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, purchase or sale of any product or commodity in this state, or any article or thing bought or sold whatsoever, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and shall be punished as provided in this article." Mo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 8301 (1939).

And § 8305 provides that anyone violating § 8301 ". . . shall be adjudged guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by a fine of not less than five hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment." Mo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 8305 (1939).

peddlers. They contended that their right to do so was "guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments" because there was "a labor dispute existing" between appellants and appellee, and because the picketers publicized only the truthful information that appellee was "selling ice to peddlers who are not members of the said defendant union."

The trial court heard evidence, made findings and issued an injunction restraining the appellants from "placing pickets or picketing around or about the buildings" of Empire.

The State Supreme Court affirmed. — Mo. —, 210 S. W. 2d 55. It agreed with the findings of the trial court that the conduct of appellants was pursuant to a local transportation combination used to compel Empire to stop selling ice to nonunion peddlers and that the purpose of the picketing was to force Empire to become a party to such combination. It held that such activities were unlawful because in violation of § 8301 of the Missouri statutes and further held that the injunction to prevent picketing for such unlawful purpose did not contravene the appellants' right of free speech.

[Appellants' Argument]

In this Court appellants do not raise problems similar to those discussed in Near v. Minnesota, 283 U. S. 697, relating to censorship prior to publication as distinguished from sanctions to be imposed after publication, nor are there objections to the form, language, or scope of the injunction. See Milkwagon Drivers v. Meadowmoor Dairies, 312 U. S. 287, 297-298, also dissenting opinion, 299-303. Attacking the Missouri statute as construed and applied, appellants broadly challenge the power of the state to issue any injunction against their conduct since, they assert, the primary objective of their combination and picketing was to improve wage and working conditions. On this premise they argue that their right to combine, to picket, and to publish must be determined by focusing attention exclusively upon their lawful purpose to improve labor conditions, and that their violation of the state antitrade restraint laws must be dismissed as merely incidental to this lawful purpose.

[Constitutional Power To Prohibit Combining To Restrain Trade]

First. That states have constitutional power to prohibit competing dealers and their aiders and abettors from combining to restrain freedom of trade is beyond question. Watson v. Buck, 313 U. S. 387, 403-404. In speaking of the Missouri statutory antecedent of the statute here challenged, this Court said:

> "The purpose of such statutes is to secure competition and preclude combinations which tend to defeat it. . . . There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States which precludes a state from adopting and enforcing such policy. To so decide would be stepping backwards."

International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U. S. 199, 209. Agreements and combinations not to sell to or buy goods from particular persons, or to dictate the terms under which transportation will be supplied, are well recognized trade restraint practices which both state and national legislation can and do prohibit. Grenada Lbr. Co. v. Mississippi, 217 U. S. 433, 440-441; Eastern States Lbr. Assn. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 612-614; Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, 312 U. S. 457, 465; United States v. Freight Assn., 166 U. S. 290, 324-325.

[Union Not Immune from Antitrade Restraint Laws].

Second. It is contended that though the Missouri statute can be applied validly to combinations of businessmen who agree not to sell to certain persons, it cannot be applied constitutionally to combinations of union workers who agree in their self-interest to use their joint power to prevent sales to nonunion workers. This contention appears to be grounded on the guaranties of freedom of speech and press stemming from the Fourteenth and First Amendments. Aside from the element of disseminating information through peaceful picketers, later discussed, it is difficult to perceive how it could be thought that these constitutional guaranties afford labor union members a peculiar immunity from laws against trade restraint combinations, unless, as appellants contend, labor unions are given special constitutional protection denied all other people.[2]

[2] Appellants say, after quoting from a concurring opinion in United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U. S. 219, 243, "We believe, therefore, that it is perfectly clear that a state may not apply either statutory or common law policies concerning restraint of trade to illegalize com-

The objective of unions to improve wages and working conditions has sometimes commended itself to Congress and to state legislatures. To the extent that the states or Congress, for this or other reasons, have seen fit to exempt unions from antitrust laws, this Court has sustained legislative power to grant the exemptions. International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U. S. 199; Allen-Bradley Co. v. Union, 325 U. S. 797, 810-811; United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U. S. 219, 232-234; and see Tigner v. Texas, 310 U. S. 141. On the other hand, where statutes have not granted exemptions, we have declared that violations of antitrust laws could not be defended on the ground that a particular accused combination would not injure but would actually help manufacturers, laborers, retailers, consumers, or the public in general. Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, 312 U. S. 457, 467-468. More than thirty years ago this Court said (International Harvester Co. v. Wisconsin, supra, at 209): "It is too late in the day to assert against statutes which forbid combinations of competing companies that a particular combination was induced by good intentions. . . ." See also United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 220-221; Mandeville Farms v. Sugar Co., 334 U. S. 219, 242-243.

The foregoing holdings rest on the premise that legislative power to regulate trade and commerce includes the power to determine what groups, if any, shall be regulated, and whether certain regulations will help or injure businessmen, workers, and the public in general.[3] In making this determination Missouri has decided to apply its law without exception to all persons who combine to restrain freedom of trade. We are without constitutional authority to modify or upset Missouri's determination that it is in the public interest to make combinations of workers subject to laws designed to keep the channels of trade wholly free and open. To exalt all labor union conduct in restraint of trade above all state control would greatly reduce the traditional powers of states over their domestic economy and might conceivably make it impossible for them to enforce their antitrade restraint laws. See Allen-Bradley Co. v. Union, 325 U. S. 797, 810. More than that, if for the reasons here contended, states cannot subject union members to such antitrade restraint laws as Missouri's, neither can Congress. The Constitution has not so greatly impaired the states' or nation's power to govern.

[Injunction Not An Abridgment of Free Speech]

Third. It is contended that the injunction against picketing adjacent to Empire's place of business is an unconstitutional abridgment of free speech because the picketers were attempting peacefully to publicize truthful facts about a labor dispute. See Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U. S. 88, 102, and Allen-Bradley Co. v. Union, 325 U. S. 797, 807, note 12. But the record here does not permit this publicizing to be treated in isolation. For according to the pleadings, the evidence, the findings, and the argument of the appellants, the sole immediate object of the publicizing adjacent to the premises of Empire, as well as the other activities of the appellants and their allies, was to compel Empire to agree to stop selling ice to nonunion peddlers. Thus all of appellants' activities—their powerful transportation combination, their patrolling, their formation of a picket line warning union men not to cross at peril of their union membership, their publicizing—constituted a single and integrated course of conduct, which was in violation of Missouri's valid law. In this situation, the injunction did no more than enjoin an offense against Missouri law, a felony.

It rarely has been suggested that the constitutional freedom for speech and press extends its immunity to speech or writing used as an integral part of conduct in violation of a valid criminal statute. We reject the contention now. Nothing that was said binations among workingmen for the purpose of eliminating wage competition throughout a trade or industry." And petitioners further argue that a state may not "make it unlawful for an employer to acquiesce in union demands that he refrain from supplying goods to nonunion peddlers. . . ."

[3] In the International Harvester Co. case, 234 U. S. 199, the then Missouri statute was construed as inapplicable to combinations of purchasers and laborers. For this reason the statute was challenged as denying equal protection of the laws. Replying to the challenge, this Court said at p. 210: "Whether it would have been better policy to have made such comprehensive classification it is not our province to decide. In other words, whether a combination of wage earners or purchasers of commodities called for repression by law under the conditions in the State was for the legislature of the State to determine."

or decided in any of the cases relied on by appellants calls for a different holding.

Neither Thornhill v. Alabama, supra, nor Carlson v. California, 310 U. S. 106, both decided the same day, supports the contention that conduct otherwise unlawful is always immune from state regulation because an integral part of that conduct is carried on by display of placards by peaceful picketers. In both these cases this Court struck down statutes which banned all dissemination of information by people adjacent to certain premises, pointing out that the statutes were so broad that they could not only be utilized to punish conduct plainly illegal but could also be applied to ban all truthful publications of the facts of a labor controversy. But in the Thornhill opinion, at pp. 103-104, the Court was careful to point out that it was within the province of states "to set the limits of permissible contest open to industrial combatants." See Lincoln Labor Union v. Northwestern Iron and Metal Co., 335 U. S. 525, 536; Allen-Bradley Local v. Board, 315 U. S. 740, 748-751. Further emphasizing the power of a state "to set the limits of permissible contest open to industrial combatants" the Court cited with approval the opinion of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Duplex Printing Co. v. Deering, 254 U. S. at 488. On that page the opinion stated:

> "The conditions developed in industry may be such that those engaged in it cannot continue their struggle without danger to the community. But it is not for judges to determine whether such conditions exist, nor is it their function to set the limits of permissible contest and to declare the duties which the new situation demands. This is the function of the legislature which, while limiting individual and group rights of aggression and defense, may substitute processes of justice for the more primitive method of trial by combat."

After emphasizing state power over industrial conflicts, the Court in the Thornhill opinion went on to say at p. 104, that states may not "in dealing with the evils arising from industrial disputes . . . impair the effective exercise of the right to discuss freely industrial relations. . . ." This statement must be considered in its context. It was directed toward a sweeping state prohibition which this Court found to embrace "nearly every practicable, effective means whereby those interested—including the employees directly affected—may enlighten the public on the nature and causes of a labor dispute." That the general statement of the limitation of a state's power to impair free speech was not intended to apply to the fact situation presented here is further indicated by the cases cited with approval in note 21 of the Thornhill opinion.[4]

Appellants also rely on Carpenters Union v. Ritters Cafe, 315 U. S. 722, and Bakery Drivers Local v. Wohl, 315 U. S. 769. decided the same day. Neither lends support to the contention that peaceful picketing is beyond legislative control. The Court's opinion in the Ritter case approvingly quoted a part of the Thornhill opinion which recognized broad state powers over industrial conflicts. In the Wohl case, the Court's opinion at p. 775 found no "violence, force or coercion, or conduct otherwise unlawful or oppressive" and said that "A state is not required to tolerate in all places . . . even peaceful picketing by an individual." A concurring opinion in the Wohl case, at pp. 776-777, pointed out that picketing may include conduct other than speech, conduct which can be made the subject of restrictive legislation. No opinions relied on by petitioners assert a constitutional right in picketers to [4] Eastern States Lumber Dealers v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, was cited in note 21. In that case the lumber association was a combination of retail lumber dealers found by the court to have conspired to prevent wholesale dealers from selling directly to consumers of lumber. The sole basis for the injunction was the distribution and dissemination of truthful information by the association to its members in an official report. This Court sustained the decree which broadly enjoined the distribution of this truthful information.

---

The cases cited in note 21 of the Thornhill opinion include the following, strongly emphasizing states' powers to regulate their internal industrial and economic affairs and rejecting contentions that challenged regulations violated the Federal Constitution. Senn v. Tile Layers Union, 301 U. S. 468; West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U. S. 379; Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502; Dorchy v. Kansas, 272 U. S. 306; Aikens v. Wisconsin, 195 U. S. 194; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366. Another case cited in note 21 of the Thornhill opinion was Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436. It also involved a violation of the federal anti-trust laws, and once again this Court sustained the power of the Government to enjoin trade practices deemed in violation of those laws. The only other case cited in note 21, Labor Board v. New Port News, 308 U. S. 241, sustained an order against an employer which restrained it from using its influence over employees to interfere with their activities.

take advantage of speech or press to violate valid laws designed to protect important interests of society.[5]

We think the circumstances here and the reasons advanced by the Missouri courts justify restraint of the picketing which was done in violation of Missouri's valid law for the sole immediate purpose of continuing a violation of law. In holding this, we are mindful of the essential importance to our society of a vigilant protection of freedom of speech and press. Bridges v. California, 314 U. S. 252, 263. States cannot consistently with our Constitution abridge those freedoms to obviate slight inconveniences or annoyances. Schneider v. State, 308 U. S. 147, 162. But placards used as an essential and inseparable part of a grave offense against an important public law cannot immunize that unlawful conduct from state control. Virginia Electric Co. v. Board, 319 U. S. 533, 539; Thomas v. Collins, 323 U. S. 516, 536, 537, 538, 539-540. Nor can we say that the publication here should not have been restrained because of the possibility of separating the picketing conduct into illegal and legal parts. Thomas v. Collins, supra, at 547. For the placards were to effectuate the purposes of an unlawful combination, and their sole, unlawful immediate objective was to induce Empire to violate the Missouri law by acquiescing in unlawful demands to agree not to sell ice to nonunion peddlers. It is true that the agreements and course of conduct here were as in most instances brought about through speaking or writing. But it has never been deemed an abridgment of freedom of speech or press to make a course of conduct illegal merely because the conduct was in part initiated, evidenced, or carried out by means of language, either spoken, written, or printed. See e. g., Fox v. Washington, 236 U. S. 273, 277; Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U. S. 568. Such an expansive interpretation of the constitutional guaranties of speech and press would make it practically impossible ever to enforce laws against agreements in restraint of trade as well as many other agreements and conspiracies deemed injurious to society.

[State Regulation of Trade Paramount]

The interest of Missouri in enforcement of its antitrust laws cannot be classified as an effort to outlaw only a slight public inconvenience or annoyance. The Missouri policy against restraints of trade is of long standing and is in most respects the same as that which the Federal Government has followed for more than half a century. It is clearly drawn in an attempt to afford all persons an equal opportunity to buy goods. There was clear danger, imminent and immediate, that unless restrained, appellants would succeed in making that policy a dead letter insofar as purchases by nonunion men were concerned. Appellants' power with that of their allies was irresistible. And it is clear that appellants were doing more than exercising a right of free speech or press. Bakery Drivers Local v. Wohl, 315 U. S. 769, 776-777. They were exercising their economic power together with that of their allies to compel Empire to abide by union rather than by state regulation of trade.[6]

[5] Both parties here rely on the Ritter case. Empire contends that this Court affirmed the action of the Texas courts on the basis of the state's antitrust law. Appellants argue that this Court upheld the Texas injunction on the ground that the business picketed did not bear a sufficiently close relation to the labor dispute to justify picketing at that place. Since the Court relied on this ground, appellants contend that the Court impliedly rejected the contention that the injunction was justified because of an alleged violation of the antitrust laws. This Court's opinion in the Ritter case, as well as the dissents, did emphasize questions other than the antitrust act contentions. The Court of Civil Appeals of Texas had not mentioned the Texas antitrust laws in its first or second opinion in the Ritter case. 138 S. W. 2d 223, 149 S. W. 2d 694. A third opinion, denying rehearing, did make reference for the first time to the state's antitrust laws, but did not definitely point out in what way the picketers' conduct violated any specific provision of these laws. 149 S. W. 2d 694, 699. Under these circumstances nothing that was said in the Ritter opinion stands for the principle that speech and writings, utilized as a part of conduct engaged in only to break a valid antitrade restraint law, render that course of conduct immune from state control.

[6] "Picketing by an organized group is more than free speech, since it involves patrol of a particular locality and since the very presence of a picket line may induce action of one kind or another, quite irrespective of the nature of the ideas which are being disseminated. Hence those aspects of picketing make it the subject of restrictive regulation." Bakery Drivers Local v. Wohl, supra, at 776-777.

The opinion in Thomas v. Collins, 323 U. S. 516, 537-538 stated: ". . . When to this persuasion other things are added which bring about coercion, or give it that character, the limit of the right has been passed. . . . But short of that limit the employer's freedom cannot be impaired. The Constitution protects no less the employees' converse right. Of course espousal of the cause of labor is entitled to

What we have said emphasizes that this is not a case in which it can be assumed that injury from appellants' conduct would be limited to this single appellee. Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U. S. 88, 104-105. Missouri, acting within its power, has decided that such restraints of trade as petitioners sought are against the interests of the whole public. This decision is in accord with the general ideas underlying all antitrade restraint laws. It is not for us to overrule this clearly adopted state policy.

While the State of Missouri is not a party in this case, it is plain that the basic issue is whether Missouri or a labor union has paramount constitutional power to regulate and govern the manner in which certain trade practices shall be carried on in Kansas City, Missouri. Missouri has by statute regulated trade one way. The appellant union members have adopted a program to regulate it another way. The state has provided for enforcement of its statutory rule by imposing civil and criminal sanctions. The union has provided for enforcement of its rule by sanctions against union members who cross picket lines. See Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, 19; Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, supra, at 465; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 242. We hold that the state's power to govern in this field is paramount, and that nothing in the constitutional guaranties of speech or press compels a state to apply or not to apply its antitrade restraint law to groups of workers, businessmen or others. Of course this Court does not pass on the wisdom of the Missouri statute. We hold only that as here construed and applied it does not violate the Federal Constitution.

Affirmed.

[¶ 62,392] Atlas Imperial Diesel Engine Co. v. Lanova Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the District of Delaware. Civil Action No. 980. August 24, 1948.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Licensing Agreement Not Prohibitory—Motion for Declaratory Judgment—Motion to Dismiss Granted.—In an action against its licensor, an engine manufacturer alleged that its licensing agreement, which limits its production to certain types of engines of given specifications, is contrary to the antitrust laws. The Court granted the defendant's motion to dismiss when it held that the license agreement between the parties was not invalid as being in restraint of trade or competition.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1270.101.

For plaintiff: C. S. Layton (of Richards, Layton & Finger), of Wilmington, Delaware.

For defendant: Hugh M. Morris and S. Samuel Arsht (of Morris, Steel, Nichols & Arsht), of Wilmington, Delaware, Denis B. Sullivan, of New York, New York, and Arthur H. Boettcher, of Chicago, Illinois.

[Nature of Claim]

LEAHY, District Judge: This is an action in which the plaintiff, a Diesel engine manufacturer, seeks a judgment declaring a certain license agreement with defendant invalid; declaring that no claim of any of the 39 patents under license is infringed by plaintiff's engines of a design upon which plaintiff has paid royalties to defendant under the license agreement; and further declaring that each of the 39 license patents is invalid. In addition, plaintiff seeks a judgment requiring defendant to refund all monies paid to plaintiff as royalties plus interest from date of payment. Plaintiff also prays for an injunction enjoining defendant from charging plaintiff or its customers with infringement of the license patents or from bringing suit against them under the patents.

---

no higher constitutional protection than the espousal of any other lawful cause. It is entitled to the same protection."

A concurring opinion in Thomas v. Collins, at 543-544, stated this: "But once he uses the economic power which he has over other men and their jobs to influence their action, he is doing more than exercising the freedom of speech protected by the First Amendment. That is true whether he be an employer or an employee. But as long as he does no more than speak he has the same unfettered right, no matter what side of an issue he espouses."

Plaintiff and defendant are both Delaware corporations and jurisdiction is asserted under the patent laws "concerning the validity of Letters Patent of the United States and the question of their infringement by the plaintiff." It is also alleged that jurisdiction is conferred by the Declaratory Judgment Act.

Plaintiff claims that the license agreement is invalid because it "prohibits" plaintiff from manufacturing high speed types of Diesel engines having a piston displacement of more than 1,000 cubic inches, or aeroplane and passenger car engines and that such prohibition is in violation of the antitrust laws. The part of the license contract which Atlas calims supports this provision provides:

> "* * * said license being limited to stationary, marine, industrial and automotive engines with a piston displacement of not more than 1,000 cubic inches, aeroplane and passenger car engines excepted."

To this complaint defendant filed a consolidated motion. The components of such motion are that the complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted or for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter; or summary judgment should be entered in favor of defendant and that if the complaint be not dismissed, to strike specified parts of it; for a more definite statement or bill of particulars and for an order of inspection of documents and engines made by plaintiff.

[Defense]

More specifically, defendant argues that the complaint is based on the assumption that the license agreement "prohibits" and since it does not prohibit, there is no cause of action stated. The defendant also urges that this suit, being one to set aside or cancel a license, is not a suit under the patent laws and hence the court is without jurisdiction since there is no diversity of citizenship. In support of its motion to dismiss, defendant filed an affidavit of its President. The affidavit states defendant has not at any time charged plaintiff with infringement of any claim of any of the 39 patents and it has no knowledge that plaintiff has ever manufactured or sold Diesel engines of any type or design other than those covered by the license agreement. The averments of the affidavit have not been refuted or counteracted.

To the claim of plaintiff for declaratory judgment as to whether engines of high speed type larger than 1,000 cubic inches displacement or for aeroplane or passenger automotive uses would infringe any claim of the license patents, defendant asserts that there is no allegation in the complaint that plaintiff has made or sold such an engine or that it intends presently to make or sell such engines and the allegation that it "is desirous" of making and selling such engines is insufficient to raise a controversy within the meaning of the Declaratory Judgment Act.

To the allegation that such license patents were procured by fraud because the patentee knowingly claimed more than that of which he was the original inventor, defendant urges that plaintiff is not free to attack the patents within the scope of the license and no facts are alleged showing a controversy outside the scope of a license.

It should be pointed out that two weeks prior to this action defendant brought an action in the Superior Court of New Castle County, Delaware, against plaintiff, to recover unpaid royalties due by plaintiff to defendant under the license agreement. In the State action special pleas to the declaration were demurred to. In sustaining the demurrers, Judge Carey held that the license agreement did not "prohibit" and that the contract did not restrain trade or competition. See Lanova Corp. v. Atlas Imperial Diesel Engine Co., Del., 55 A. 2d 272. No final judgment has been entered in the State action.

[Motion to Dismiss Granted]

Since I have concluded that the motion to dismiss should be granted, it is not necessary to consider the other problems raised by the consolidated motion.

The matter is now here at the pleading stage and I am not unmindful of the admonition of Judge Biggs in Federal Telephone and Radio v. Associated Telephone and Telegraph, 3 Cir., — F. 2d —, that when a case is at the pleading stage "the allegations of the complaint must be tested on a broad basis". I think, however, that even thus tested a motion to dismiss must be granted here. There is nothing to show that the license is invalid and plaintiff, as licensee, can not attack the license patents within the scope of the license. Since no final judgment has been entered in Lanova Corp.

v. Atlas Imperial Diesel Engine Co., supra, at this time there can be no application of the doctrine of res judicata. Nevertheless, the Delaware Court held that the license agreement between the parties here did not "prohibit" and that it was not invalid as being in restraint of trade or competition. I take the same view of the license agreement and I think the matter is reenforced by the circumstance that Atlas did not seek to amplify their allegations in the instant case after the Delaware Court rendered its decision. Accordingly, I assume that nothing more can be alleged. Therefore, I think that the license agreement is valid and that it does not violate the anti-trust laws.

[Licensee Estopped from Attacking License Patents]

The case of Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Co., 317 U. S. 173, relied on by plaintiff, is not in point here. In that case the license contained a provision forbidden by the anti-trust laws if not justified by a valid patent, whereas in this case the license contains no such provision. I do not understand that the Sola and other recent cases have demolished the rule that a licensee is estopped from attacking the license patents within the license area. The paragraphs which allege that the patents are invalid are, therefore, irrelevant.

[Lack of Jurisdiction]

Moreover, although perhaps not strictly necessary to the decision of the case, this court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter. There is no diversity of citizenship. I do not think this case is one properly brought under the patent laws. Therefore jurisdiction is lacking because obviously the provisions of the Declaratory Judgment Act create no substantive rights and do not enlarge the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States. Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. v. Zeigler, 3 Cir., 151 F. 2d 784. A suit involving a license agreement is not necessarily a suit under the patent laws even if a patent or claims have to be construed in such a suit. MacGregor v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 45 F. Supp. 236, aff'd, 3 Cir., 130 F. 2d 870;[1] Pratt v. Paris Gas Light & Coke Co., 168 U. S. 255, 260. The Courts of the State are the proper forums to decide the questions relating to the validity of a patent license even though subsidiary questions as to the scope and validity of the license patents are involved. And the presence of such subsidiary questions does not convert the controversy into one arising under the patent laws.

[No Justiciable Controversy]

In the field not covered by the license, plaintiff bases its claim to relief upon the allegation that it "is desirous of manufacturing and selling in interstate commerce its said high speed type engines of a size larger than one thousand cubic inch displacement and for aeroplane and passenger automotive use of a design which defendant has and now is contending comes within the scope of its said patent monopoly." It is obvious that the allegation does not establish a justiciable controversy. Cf. dictum in Dewey & Almy Chemical Co. v. American Anode, 3 Cir., 137 F. 2d 68, 70. The existence of "desire" does not establish an "immediate intent" to engage in the enterprise. Further, plaintiff does not charge that defendant has given notice to it or any of its customers of an intent to charge it or them with infringement of any claim of any of defendant's license patents. The unrefuted affidavit of the President of defendant denies such notice. The affidavit further avers that defendant has no information with respect to any act of Atlas upon which defendant could base any such claim of infringement against plaintiff or any of its customers. Accordingly, in the field outside the license there is obviously no actual controversy between the parties.[2]

I am accordingly of the opinion that the complaint should be dismissed.

---

[1] Nothing that was said in MacGregor v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 329 U. S. 402, adversely affects this Circuit's view.

[2] The case is easily distinguishable from Federal Telephone and Radio v. Associated Telephone and Telegraph, 3 Cir., — F. 2d —, where there were advertisements which could be construed as threatening plaintiff or its customers with infringement suits.

[¶ 62,393] Warren O. Englebrecht, doing business as Warren's Grocery v. Ernest Day, Mrs. Ernest Day and John Doe Day.

In the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma. No. 33869. July 5, 1949. (An opinion of March 29, 1949, was withdrawn, and this substitute opinion adopted.)

Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act

Advertising Below Cost—Repugnant Clauses—Act Unconstitutional.—A retail grocer successfully defended an action brought against him by another grocer who sought an injunction to restrain his advertising merchandise below cost, by attacking the constitutionality of the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act, under which the action was brought. The Court holds that by declaring that intent to injure is not an essential ingredient of the offense of selling below cost, the Legislature has violated the due process clause of the state and federal constitutions, and the Act is therefore unconstitutional and void. The Court finds that there is nothing to displace the presumption that the Legislature would have adopted the Act with the words "or effect" omitted, and that after severing the repugnant clause, the Act is not enforceable as law. At common law the individual has the right to dispose of his property at such price as he and his purchaser may agree upon. Any act of the legislature which restricts that right is in derogation of the common law and must be strictly construed.

See the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act, Vol. 2, ¶ 8688.

For plaintiff: R. M. Mountcastle, Muskogee, Oklahoma, George Miskovsky, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

For defendants: Kelly Brown, Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Amicus Curiae: Hal F. Rambo, Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Syllabus

1. An act of the Legislature which makes it a crime, or declares it to be contrary to public policy so as to call for injunctive relief for a retail or wholesale merchant to advertise, offer to sell or sell any item of merchandise at less than cost thereof to the seller, with intent or effect of inducing the purchase of other merchandise or of unfairly diverting trade from a competitor or otherwise injuring a competitor, impair and prevent fair competition or injure public welfare, is unconstitutional and void as violative of the due process clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States and violative of the due process clause, Section 7, Article II of the Constitution of the State of Oklahoma.

2. The unconstitutionality of a portion of an act of the Legislature does not defeat or affect the validity of the remaining provisions unless it is evident that the Legislature would not have enacted the valid provisions with the invalid provisions removed, if with the invalid provisions removed the rest of the act is plain and fully operative as law.

3. The effect of a provision in an act of the Legislature that the invalidity of any sentence, clause or provision in the act shall not affect the remaining portions, is to create a presumption that, omitting the unconstitutional portions, the remaining portions would have been enacted by the Legislature.

4. Where an act in contravention of public policy of the State as declared by one section of an act is made a crime by another section of the same act, the striking out of any material part of the section which declares the public policy, works a change of that policy so as to defeat the basis for declaring the act a crime and renders the act unconstitutional.

5. That part of subdivision (e), 15 O. S. 1941 § 592, which reads:

> ". . . and purchases made by retailers and wholesalers at prices which cannot be justified by prevailing market conditions within this State shall not be used in determining the cost to the retailer and cost to the wholesaler."

is invalid and unconstitutional as too indefinite and uncertain to establish or prescribe a rule of conduct.

[Review of Facts, Allegations and Arguments]

O'NEAL, J.: This is a proceeding in equity by Warren O. Englebrecht, doing business as Warren's Grocery, hereinafter referred to as plaintiff, against Ernest Day and others, hereinafter referred to as defendants, for an injunction restraining alleged violation by defendants of the Oklahoma "Unfair Sales Act", 15 O. S. 1941 §§ 591-597, inc.

Plaintiff is engaged in the retail grocery business in Muskogee, Oklahoma. Defendants Ernest Day and Mrs. Ernest Day are husband and wife and are also engaged in the retail grocery business in Muskogee, Oklahoma. Defendant "John Doe" Day is a brother of defendant Ernest Day and was acting as manager of the retail grocery store owned and operated by defendants Ernest Day and Mrs. Ernest Day.

Plaintiff filed his petition in the District Court of Muskogee County April 7, 1948, and therein alleges that defendants did on April 5, 1948, advertise for sale, offer for sale and sell at retail certain articles of merchandise (nine in number) separately named, at less than cost to the retailer as defined in said Act. Plaintiff further alleges that defendants had stated that they would continue to advertise for sale, offer for sale and sell at retail the foregoing items of merchandise and other items in their store in violation of the terms, restrictions and provisions of said Act. He further alleges that the items referred to were advertised for sale, offered for sale and sold at prices which cannot be justified by prevailing market conditions within the State of Oklahoma, and that said items of merchandise were advertised for sale, offered for sale and sold to the general public as "bait" with the intent or effect of inducing the purchase of other merchandise; that defendants specifically intended to violate said Act in resorting to what is commonly known as "bait" or "loss leader" merchandise with the hope of deceiving the public by luring them with this "bait" or "loss leader" merchandise into their store, hoping thereby that unsuspecting customers thus lured into the store would purchase other merchandise at unreasonably high mark-up, and that said advertising for sale, offering for sale and selling were made with the intent or effect of inducing the purchase of other merchandise and with the intent of unfairly diverting trade or otherwise injuring the plaintiff who is a competitor, and with the intent or effect to impair and prevent fair competition and injure public welfare and with the intent to substantially lessen competition and unreasonably restrain trade.

A temporary restraining order and later a temporary injunction were issued.

Defendants filed a general and special demurrer to the petition. The special demurrer attacked the constitutionality of the Unfair Sales Act as a violation of the Federal and State Constitutions. The demurrer came on to be heard and, pending the hearing on the demurrer, plaintiff asked and was granted leave to amend his petition by striking out the words "or effect" wherever they were used in the petition in connection with or following the words "with the intent", so as to make the petition charge that the alleged advertising for sale, offering for sale and selling said items of merchandise were with the intent of inducing the purchase of other merchandise and with the intent to impair and prevent fair competition and injure public welfare.

After the petition was so amended, defendants refiled their demurrer thereto. After further hearing the court sustained the demurrer on the ground that the Act, (15 O. S. 1941 §§ 591-597, inc.) under which the cause was instituted and prosecuted, is unconstitutional and void for the reason that section 593 contains language rendering the same unconstitutional by setting out the clause "or effect" after the clause "with the intent". Plaintiff excepted and elected to stand upon the petition as amended, whereupon the cause was dismissed and plaintiff appeals.

Four assignments of error are presented under two propositions. The first is that the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act, 15 O. S. 1941 §§ 591-597, inc., is constitutional.

Plaintiff, conceding that although the general policy of an Act of the nature of the one herein involved is for the Legislature to pass upon and not a proper subject for consideration by this court, goes quite at length into the question of the desirability of such legislation and its beneficial effects and evils of the practice of selling merchandise at less than cost to the seller and "loss leader" practices. In this connection plaintiff quotes from an article by the late Justice Brandeis, published in 1913, entitled "Cut-Throat Prices, the Competition That Kills."

In reply thereto defendants go somewhat at length into the alleged history and general purpose of such legislation and assert in substance that such legislation, now adopted in some 32 states, and its enforcement, has in a general way been promoted by groups such as Retail Merchants Associations for their protection and that such legislation generally tends to prevent competition and protect merchants already in business and especially members of such associations against newcomers who enter the field as their competitors. Defendants further assert that such legislation has all the earmarks of monopoly or intended monopoly. In reply to the argument of plaintiff, including the quotation from the article by Justice Brandeis, defendants quote from the Yale Law Journal, January, 1948 issue, to the effect that several years' experience under such statutes, reveal them as particularly undesirable and that while the courts have generally agreed that they were intended "to prevent monopoly" or "to prevent anarchy in commerce" the record has not shown their sanction to protect small sellers from large scale campaigns of under-selling, but to the contrary the laws have been used primarily by trade associations and larger units in order to prevent local price cutting and to enforce a disciplinary system of price leadership which these units desire to establish; and "Moreover, there is some evidence that the acts have been utilized as a means of raising prices."

[Court Not Concerned with Public Policy of Statute]

But in this case we are not concerned with the question of policy or the exigency of such acts generally. Some of the earlier acts in some of the states were held to be unconstitutional as restrictive of the right of the individual to sell his property at whatever price he could agree upon with his purchaser. Other acts were declared unconstitutional because the business regulated was not affected with the public interest, such as operating public utilities. But since the decision in Nebbia v. New York, 78 L. Ed. 940, 89 A. L. R. 1469, it is generally recognized that there is no closed class or category of business affected with the public interest and that the function of courts under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Federal Constitution is to be determined in each case whether under the circumstances the regulation is a reasonable exertion of governmental regulations, or is arbitrary or discriminating and that the phrase "affected with the public interest" as used in decisions upholding public regulation of business affected with the public interest means only that an industry for adequate reasons is subject to control for the public good.

Nebbia v. New York, supra, holds:

> "So far as the due process requirement is concerned, a state is free to adopt and enforce whatever economic policy may reasonably be deemed to promote public welfare, whether by promoting free competition by laws aimed at monopolies, or by curbing harmful competition by fixing maximum prices.
>
> "The Constitution does not secure the liberty to conduct a business so as to injure the public at large or any substantial group."

Nebbia v. New York, supra, deals only with the statute which authorizes the State of New York to create a commission with power to fix a maximum and a minimum price for which milk can be sold to consumers in that state.

After the decision in Nebbia v. New York, supra, a number of states have enacted statutes generally intended to prevent the sale of merchandise by wholesalers or retailers at less than cost to the seller and declaring such practice to be contrary to public policy and unfair competition. It is now generally held that:

> ". . . With the wisdom of the policy adopted, with the adequacy or practicability of the law enacted to forward it, the courts are both incompetent and unauthorized to deal . . ." 89 A. L. R. 1483."

A number of the earlier statutes on the subject were declared unconstitutional, not because of the lack of authority or power of the Legislature to regulate such matters, but because of some specific provision or omission of the Act.

The Act here involved is Title 15, Chapter 14, Session Laws 1941, and contains seven sections exclusive of the emergency clause and is the same as 15 O. S. 1941 §§ 591-597, inc.

It is because of the provisions of section 3 of the Act (15 O. S. 1941 § 593) that the trial court held the Act unconstitutional. Said section provides:

> "It is hereby declared that any advertising, offer to sell, or sale of any merchandise, either by retailers or wholesalers, at less than cost as defined in this Act, with the intent, or effect, of inducing the purchase of other merchandise or of unfairly diverting trade from a competitor or otherwise injuring a competitor, impair and prevent fair competition, injure public welfare, are unfair competition and contrary to public policy and the policy of this Act, where the result of such advertising, offer or sale is to tend to deceive any purchaser or prospective purchaser, or to substantially lessen competition, or to unreasonably restrain trade, or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

Section 594 makes a violation of the Act by any retailer or wholesaler a misdemeanor punishable by fine not to exceed $500.00. Section 595 provides for injunctive relief in an action by any person who is damaged or who is threatened with loss or injury by reason of a violation of the Act. Section 595 exempts from the provisions of the Act some eight classes of sales, none of which is herein involved. The particular words or clause which the trial court held rendered the Act unconstitutional is an inclusion of the words "or effect" immediately after the words "with the intent" in section 3 of the Act, section 593, 15 O. S. 1941, so as to make sales by retailers or wholesalers at less than the cost to the seller as defined in the Act contrary to public policy, and a violation thereof a crime, and to constitute a tort subject to injunctive restraint, where such sales are made with the effect of inducing the purchase of other merchandise or unfairly diverting trade from a competitor or otherwise injuring a competitor, impair or prevent fair competition, injure the public welfare or with the effect of inducing the purchasing of other merchandise etc., although there be no such intent on the part of the seller. But in either event the result of such advertising for sale, offering to sell or selling must be to tend to deceive any purchaser or prospective purchaser or to substantially lessen competition or to unreasonably restrain trade or to create a monopoly in any line of trade.

In Daniel Loughran Co., Inc., et al. v. Lord Baltimore Candy & Tobacco Co., Inc., et al., (Md.), 12 Atl. 2d 201, the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature of the State of Maryland containing in almost identical language all of the essential provisions in the Act here under consideration was in question.

Therein it is said:

"At common law the right of the individual to dispose of his property or his services at such price as he and the purchaser may agree upon is firmly established, and inasmuch as the Act now under consideration is in derogation of that common right, it must be strictly construed. . . ."

But under our law 12 O. S. A. § 2, and 25 O. S. A. § 29, statutes in derogation of the common law shall be liberally construed to promote their object.

The Act here under consideration, and particularly section 3 thereof (§ 593, 15 O. S. 1941) changes or modifies the common law rule or public policy as to the right of the individual to dispose of his property or service at such price as he and the purchaser may agree upon. As to sales by retailers and wholesalers, it establishes or declares a public policy contrary to and in derogation of the common law rights and therefore must be liberally construed.

The section of the Maryland Act declaring the public policy of that state contained the words "with the intent, effect, or result" etc. In the Lord Baltimore Candy & Tobacco Company case, supra, the Act was held unconstitutional, apparently upon the ground of uncertainty of a provision relating to the determination of cost identical to that appearing in subdivision (e), 15 O. S. 1941, § 592, which provides:

". . . purchases made by retailers and wholesalers at prices which cannot be justified by prevailing market conditions within this State shall not be used in determining the cost to the retailer and (or) cost to the wholesaler."

The Maryland Act was also held unconstitutional because of the inclusion of the words "effect, or result" after the words "with the intent,". Later the Maryland Act was amended by striking out the provisions with reference to market conditions in the state in connection with determination of cost and omitting the words "effect, or result" after the words "with the intent," in the section declaring the public policy of the state so as to limit sales condemned by the Act to sales, etc. made with the intent to unfairly divert trade, etc. .

Under liberal construction the uncertainty of the provision relating to the determination of cost, hereinafter discussed, still exists.

In People v. Victor, (Mich.), 283 N. W. 666, an Act which made it unlawful for any person in the State engaged in the manufacture, distribution or sale of bakery products or petroleum products with the intent to injure or destroy a competitor, to give, offer to give or advertise the intent to give away any commodity for the purpose of promoting the sale of any other product, was declared unconstitutional, but the question of "with intent or effect" was not there involved.

In Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Ervin, Atty. Gen., et al., (Minn.) 23 Fed. Supp. 70, a Minnesota statute containing many provisions similar to the provisions of the Oklahoma statute was declared unconstitutional on six different grounds.

In McElhone v. Geror, (Minn.) 292 N. W. 414, the Supreme Court of Minnesota upholds a later Act of the Legislature amending the Act condemned in Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Ervin, Atty. Gen., et al., supra. The Act as amended prohibited sales at less than cost for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition. With respect thereto, the court in McElhone v. Geror said:

> "The present statute prohibits sales at less than cost for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition. Intent to injure is not essential to violation. This is not fatal to the Act. Sales below cost which have the effect of injuring competition may be prohibited regardless of intent."

In State ex rel. English v. Ruback, (Neb.), 281 N. W. 607, the Supreme Court of that state held invalid a statute which contained a section making it unlawful to sell or advertise for sale any article or product or service or output of a service at less than the cost thereof to the vendor, or to give, offer to give or advertise the intent to give away any article, product or service or output of a service trade where the effect of such sale etc. "may lessen, injure, destroy, prevent, hinder or suppress the competition of competitors.", and the sale etc. condemned was made unlawful without either "intent" or "effect". With respect thereto the court said:

> ". . . Does the language of section 3 of the unfair practices act possess the requisite definiteness to properly define a legal offense? It contains no definition of criminal intent, or of evil or criminal purpose, or of guilty knowledge. It is to be remembered that innocence must always be presumed. Under the terms of such section 3, criminality must be determined and punishment inflicted wholly without reference to the intent, purpose or actual knowledge of the seller, solely because, as a result of what is done, such act 'may lessen, injure, destroy, prevent, hinder or suppress the competition of competitors.' "

In said cause the Court quoted with approval from Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, 274 U. S. 1, 10, 47 S. Ct. 506, 508, 71 L. Ed. 893, 52 A. L. R. 163, the following:

> " 'It is not permissible to enact a law which, in effect, spreads an all-inclusive net for the feet of everybody, upon the chance that, while the innocent will surely be entangled in its meshes, some wrongdoers also may be caught.' "

Said Act was condemned for the further reason that the provision "may lessen" etc. includes a mere possibility. It was held that this provision rendered that section of the Act indefinite, uncertain and void and insufficient to sustain a prosecution thereunder. In effect, the decision in that case is that intent is a vital element of any statute creating or defining a crime and that "effect" without intent is insufficient.

In State v. Packard-Bamberger & Co., Inc., 123 N. J. L. 180, 8 Atl. 2d 291, the Supreme Court of New Jersey held that the Unfair Sales Act of that state was unconstitutional, but the question of "intent or effect" was not therein involved. The Act was held unconstitutional on other grounds.

In Serrer v. Cigarette Service Co., (Ohio), 74 N. E. 2d 853, the Supreme Court of Ohio held the Unfair Sales Act of that state unconstitutional on various grounds, but not including the question of "intent or effect."

Plaintiff cites Rust et al. v. Griggs, (Tenn.), 113 S. W. 2d 733, and asserts that the court in that case sustained the Tennessee Act which contains almost identical language as that contained in section 3 of the Oklahoma Act, including the words "to lessen cost as defined in this Act with intent or effect of inducing the purchase of other merchandise" etc. Examination of that case will disclose that the Act there under consideration was assailed as unconstitutional on some seven or eight grounds, but the "with intent or effect" provision was not one of them. That provision was not assailed and was not discussed or passed upon. The only place it appears in the opinion is a quotation from the section which contains the words. It can hardly be said that the question was an issue or decided by that court.

Plaintiff also cites People v. Pay Less Drug Store, (Calif.), 153 P. 2d 9: Associated Merchants of Montana v. Ormesher, (Mont.), 86 P. 2d 1031; and State v. Langley, (Wyo.), 84 P. 2d 767. These cases go only to the question of policy of the Act and method of ascertainment of cost. The question of "intent or effect" was not in any of said cases.

[Intent a Necessary Ingredient]

From all of the cases cited it appears that wherever the statute contained the words "with intent or effect" or "with the intent, effect, or result" etc. and the constitutionality of the Act was challenged on that ground or on that ground with others, such Act is generally held to be unconstitutional. The apparent exception is McElhone v. Geror, supra, wherein the Supreme Court of Minnesota said:

> ". . . Intent to injure is not essential to violation. This is not fatal to the act. Sales below cost which have the effect of injuring competition may be prohibited regardless of intent."

We are unwilling to agree with the Supreme Court of Minnesota in that statement.

[Inclusion of Words "or effect"]

The trial court did not err in holding the Act, 15 O. S. 1941, § 591-597 inc. unconstitutional because section 593 contained language setting out the clause "or effect" after the clause "with intent". The reason is that said provision is violative of the "due process" clause of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States and is also violative of the "due process" clause, section 7, Article II, of the Constitution of the State of Oklahoma.

Under the second proposition plaintiff contends that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the petition as amended by striking out the words "or effect" wherever they appear therein after or in connection with the words "with intent."

[Severability Rule]

It is asserted that under the separability section, section 7 of the Act, (15 O. S. 1941 § 597) the words "or effect" may be stricken or eliminated and the remaining part of the Act still be valid and fully operative and enforceable. The rule is:

> "The unconstitutionality of a portion of an act of the Legislature does not defeat or affect the validity of the remaining provisions unless it is evident that the Legislature would not have enacted the valid provisions with the invalid provisions removed if with the invalid provisions removed the rest of the act is fully operative as a law." Sterling Refining Co. v. Walker, 165 Okl. 45, 25 P. 2d 312.

In Sterling Refining Co. v. Walker, supra, this court also held:

> "The effect of a provision in an act to the effect that the invalidity of any part or portion thereof shall not affect the remaining portions is to create a presumption that, omitting unconstitutional portions, the remaining portions would have been enacted by the Legislature."

[Intention of Legislature]

Under these rules, if it is not evident that the Legislature would not have adopted the Act omitting the objectional words "or effect", and the Act omitting said words is plain and enforceable, then the Act must be sustained as though said words were not included. The separability section creates the presumption that the Legislature would have adopted the Act with the words "or effect" omitted. We find nothing in the record to overcome that presumption. Therefore, we hold that it is not evident that the Legislature would not have enacted the Act in question had the words "or effect" been omitted therefrom wherever they followed or appeared in connection with the words "with the intent."

[Statute Not Enforceable]

The question arises, would the Act as written except with the words "or effect" omitted wherever they appear after or in connection with the words "with the intent" be enforceable and fully operative as law? We think not.

[Review of Sections]

As noted before, section 3 of the Act, section 593, 15 O. S. 1941, goes only to the declaration of a public policy of the State of Oklahoma differing from the public policy at common law. Section 4 of the Act, section 394, 15 O. S. 1941, and section 5 of the Act, section 595, 15 O. S. 1941, provide for the enforcement of the Act. Section 594 makes it a misdemeanor for any retailer or wholesaler in contravention of the public policy as declared in the Act to advertise, offer for sale or sell any item of merchandise at less than the cost thereof to the retailer or wholesaler as the case may be as defined in the Act. Section 595 provides the remedy of injunction to prevent and restrain a violation of the Act. It is not made an offense to advertise, offer for sale or sell any item of merchandise at less than cost to the seller alone. It must be "in contravention of the policy of this Act." That means the policy of the Act as declared in section 593 as written and enacted by the Legislature. To change the public policy by changing section 593 by omitting the words "or effect" would be to declare a public policy different from that declared by section 593, and, therefore, what would be left would not be the public policy necessary to base a criminal prosecution on, and would not be fully operative and enforceable as a law.

[Ruling on Section for Guidance of the Legislature]

It is not urged by defendants that subdivision (e), 15 O. S. 1941 § 592 is unconstitutional. But defendants' demurrer searches the entire record and in view of the fact that the Legislature may desire to amend and re-adopt the Act, we deem it advisable to consider said subdivision (e). That part of said subdivision which provides:

> ". . . And purchases made by retailers and wholesalers at prices which cannot be justified by prevailing market conditions within this State shall not be used in determining the cost to the wholesaler."

has been held unconstitutional where challenged, especially in Daniel Loughran Co. Inc. et al. v. Lord Baltimore Candy & Tobacco Co. Inc. et al., supra.

[Trial Court Decree Affirmed]

We think the reasons given in that case for holding said provisions unconstitutional are sound. Therefore, in addition to affirming the decree of the trial court, we hold that part of subdivision of 15 O. S. 1941 § 592, quoted above, unconstitutional and void.

Affirmed.

Concur: Davison, C. J., and Welch, Corn, and Luttrell, JJ.

Dissent: Arnold, V. C. J., and Gibson, Halley, and Johnson, JJ.

[¶ 62,394] United States v. Phillips Screw Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. Civil No. 47C147. March 28, 1949.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Consent Judgment—Patents for Cross-Recessed Screws—Monopoly Practices Enjoined.—A consent judgment entered in an action charging screw and screw driver manufacturing companies and a patent holding company with conspiring to restrain interstate trade enjoins the defendants from making or performing any contract which fixes prices, allocates customers or markets, limits imports or exports, limits production, or restricts sales. The defendants agree to refrain from methods unilaterally dictating the price of cross-recessed head screws or drivers, and from quoting domestic prices on any other basis than F.O.B. at the actual place of manufacture. License agreements relating to patents are terminated and defendants are ordered to grant non-exclusive licenses to manufacture cross-recessed head screws and drivers on a reasonable royalty basis.

See the Sherman Act annotations, Vol. 1, ¶ 1530, 1530.50, 1590.

For plaintiff: Otto Kerner, Jr., Willis L. Hotchkiss, Jr.

For defendants: T. A. Reynolds, Winston, Strawn & Shaw; John Lord O'Brien; Beverly B. Vedder & Ferris E. Hurd; Pope & Ballard; Cranston Spray; Special Appearance Wm. A. McAffee, Cleveland, Ohio; George J. O'Grady, Daily, Dines, White and Fiedler; Gardner, Carton & Douglas; Moore, Olson & Trexler; Snyder, Chadwill & Fagerburg; Lord, Bissel & Kaydk.

Final Judgment

Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on January 16, 1947; all the defendants herein (except Scovill Manufacturing Company) having appeared and filed their respective answers to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; and all the parties herein, by their respective attorneys herein, having severally consented to the entry of this final judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party in respect of any such issue,

Now, THEREFORE, without any testimony or evidence having been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and on consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby

ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

I.

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all parties hereto, and the complaint herein states a cause of action against the defendants under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies", as amended.

II.

[Definitions]

The following terms shall, as used in this judgment, have the following meanings.

A. The term "Phillips" means the defendant Phillips Screw Company.

B. The term "American" means the defendant American Screw Company.

C. The term "Cross-recessed Head Screws" means screws and bolts having a cross-shaped recess in the center of the screw or bolt heads. The term includes blanks which have the same type of recess punched into the heads thereof as the completed products but which are not threaded or otherwise completed.

D. The term "Cross-recessed Head Drivers" means driving tools the tips of which are shaped to fit the recesses in the heads of Cross-recessed Head Screws. The term includes such tools either in the form of hand drivers, in the form of detachable bits for use in power drivers, or in the form of blades or bars the tips of which are shaped to fit the recesses in Cross-recessed Head Screws but which have not otherwise been finished into hand drivers or detachable bits.

E. The term "Defined Patents" means United States letters patent and patent applications, as follows: (1) the letters patent and patent applications listed in Appendix A hereof; (2) all divisions, continuations, reissues and extensions of any of the foregoing patents and patent applications; (3) all patents issued on such applications; and (4) all patents relating to Cross-recessed Head Screws or Drivers acquired or applied for by Phillips or American within five years from the date of this judgment.

F. The term "Technical Information" means the methods and processes used by American at the date of this judgment in its commercial practice under the Defined Patents.

G. Reference herein to any defendant shall be deemed to include such defendant, its successors, subsidiaries, assigns, officers, directors, agents, members, employees, and each person acting or claiming to act under, through or for such defendant.

III.

[Acts Enjoined]

A. Each defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly entering into, adhering to or maintaining any contract, combination, agreement, undertaking or arrangement among themselves or with any other manufacturer of Cross-recessed Head Screws or Drivers relating to Cross-recessed Head Screws or Drivers:

(1) to fix, establish, determine or maintain prices or other terms or conditions of sale with respect either to initial sales or with respect to resales;

(2) to allocate customers, markets, sales quotas or territories;

(3) to limit or prevent imports into or exports from the United States, its territories or possessions;

(4) to limit production through quotas or otherwise;

(5) to restrict sales; or

(6) to refrain from manufacturing any type of Cross-recessed Head Screw or Driver.

B. Each defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained for a period of three years from the date of this judgment from:

(1) publishing any price list specifying, or otherwise systematically suggesting, resale prices on Cross-recessed Head Screws or Drivers; and

(2) by any other means or methods unilaterally dictating, regulating or attempting to dictate or regulate the price or terms or conditions of sale at which any person other than itself sells Cross-recessed Head Screws or Drivers.

C. Each defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from publishing, printing, quoting or charging domestic prices for Cross-recessed Head Screws or Drivers on any basis other than (1) F.O.B. at the actual place of manufacture or origin of shipment of said products or (2) on a basis, which at destination at no time shall be higher than the said F.O.B. price plus actual transportation and other delivery charges, with every purchaser having an option to purchase F.O.B. at the actual place of manufacture or origin of the product.

IV.

[Cancellation of License Agreement]

A. Each of the license agreements between American and any of the defendants relating to any of the Defined Patents is hereby cancelled and terminated, provided, however, that any rights to monetary payments which shall have accrued thereunder at the date of the entry of this judgment shall be unimpaired by anything in this judgment.

B. Phillips and American are hereby severally enjoined and restrained from performing, enforcing or threatening to enforce any provisions of any license agreement under any of the Defined Patents with any person not a defendant herein (1) prohibiting export or sale for export, (2) relating to selling prices or other terms or conditions of sale, (3) preventing or impeding the manufacture, use or sale of screws or drivers other than those manufactured pursuant to said agreements, or (4) inconsistent with the provisions of Section A of Article III of this judgment.

C. Phillips and American are hereby severally ordered and directed to send, within thirty days after the entry of this judgment, to each person who is not a defendant herein and who is licensed under any Defined Patent or under any foreign patent corresponding thereto, a copy of this judgment.

D. Phillips and American are hereby severally ordered and directed to use reasonable efforts to cause to be cancelled all existing license agreements under any of the Defined Patents between either of them and any person who is not a defendant herein and to join in the cancellation of any such agreement with any such person desiring same.

V.

A. The license agreements referred to in the complaint herein between Phillips and/or American and Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds, Ltd., and between Phillips and/or American and The Steel Company of Canada, Ltd., are hereby cancelled and terminated. Phillips and American are hereby severally enjoined and restrained from adhering to, performing, reviving or renewing said agreements.

B. Phillips and American are hereby severally ordered and directed forthwith to initiate and carry on in good faith and with diligence negotiations to accomplish, and in fact to accomplish within one year from the date of the entry of this judgment, the cancellation and termination of the license agreements referred to in the complaint herein between Phillips and/or American and J. Osawa & Co.

C. In any event, Phillips and American are hereby severally enjoined and restrained from claiming or asserting that any license or right received by Phillips or American under any of the agreements referred to in this Article V is exclusive, and from performing, enforcing or attempting to enforce any provisions of any of said agreements which (1) prohibits export or sale for export or (2) relates to selling prices or other terms or conditions of sale.

D. Phillips and American are hereby severally enjoined and restrained from enforcing or attempting or threatening to enforce:

(1) any rights under any foreign patent corresponding to any Defined Patent to prevent the sale or use in or import into another country of Cross-recessed Head Screws or Drivers lawfully made in the United States, its territories or possessions; and

(2) any rights under any Defined Patent to prevent the sale or use in or import into the United States, its territories or possessions of Cross-recessed Head Screws or Drivers lawfully made in another country under any foreign patent corresponding to such Defined Patent.

VI.

[Suit for Patent Infringement Enjoined]

Phillips and American are each hereby enjoined and restrained from instituting or threatening to institute, maintaining or continuing any suit or proceeding for acts of infringement of any of their respective patents or patent rights relating to Cross-recessed Head Screws or Drivers alleged to have occurred prior to the date of this judgment.

VII.

[Granting of Non-Exclusive Licenses Ordered]

A. Phillips and American, depending on which has the right to grant licenses thereunder, are hereby severally ordered and directed to grant to any applicant therefor, a non-exclusive license to manufacture, use and sell Cross-recessed Head Screws and Drivers under any, some or all of the Defined Patents, without any limitation or condition whatsoever, except that:

(1) a reasonable charge, in the form of a royalty or otherwise, and non-discriminatory as between such applicants, may be made in respect of any patents so licensed;

(2) reasonable provision may be made for periodic inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor or any person acceptable to the licensee who shall report to the licensor only the amount of money due and payable thereunder;

(3) the license may be non-transferable; and

(4) the license must provide that the licensee may cancel the license at any time after one year from the initial date thereof on sixty days' notice in writing to the licensor.

B. At the request of any applicant for a license under the provisions of paragraph A of this Article VII, the licensor shall include a non-exclusive grant of immunity from suit under every foreign patent, to the extent the licensor has or acquires the power to do so, corresponding to every United States patent included in the license, for any product manufactured, used or sold pursuant to the license.

C. American is hereby ordered and directed on request to supply, without charge, Technical Information to every licensee under this Article VII who shall manufacture under such license.

